Qu. Lyra. But why did not David enquire of God the cauſe of this famin, till the third yeare? and by what meanes did he enquire? R. Solomon, ſaith Lyra, yeildeth this reaſon. The firſt yeare hee enquired not, becauſe hee thought, that the drought and famin might come of naturall cauſes, the ſecond yeare ſeeing it ſtill to continue, hee thought that the Idoll of Michah, which yet continued in the land might bee the reaſon, wherefoae hee deſtroyed that, and the third yeare ſeeing that this judgement ceaſed not, he enquired. But Toſtatus better, ei- Toſtatus. ther hee enquired at the firſt, but had no anſwer till the third yeare, or God tooke away the heart from David to enquire, till now, that his judgements might have their full courſe, and bee the more remarkeable againſt the breaking of ſo ſolemne and publique an oath. For David certainely never look't to ſecondary cauſes onely in the time of any calamity, but to God; and for the Idoll ſuppoſed to bee by him deſtroyed, it is without all ground, and againſt reaſon, that ſuch an abomination ſhould bee ſuffered to ſtand all Samuels time, yea it is expreſly ſaid 1 Sam: 7. 3, 4. that at his exhortation the people did put away the ſtrange Gods, that were amongſt them. For his asking of the Lord, it was moſt probably by the High-prieſt, becauſe that was the moſt ordinary way of conſulting with God.

V. 3. David being certified, that the cruelty of Saul againſt the Gibeonites was the cauſe of this famin, called for them, and asked what would ſatisfie them, wherewith the atonement might be made, that they might bleſſe the inheritance of the Lord. Meaning, that whereas now they ſighed and prayed out of their miſery for revenge upon thoſe, by whom they had beene ſo greatly wronged, Note. they would pray for them. A paſſage moſt remarkeable, that Gentiles and Amorites, who had been before appointed to deſtruction, ſhould by their prayers avert a judgement and bring a bleſſing downe upon Iſraelites. But they were herein a figure of the Gentiles under the Goſpell converted to the faith, when the Iſraelites were hardened and ſuffered by Gods great judgements, who pray now for their converſion and ſalvation. And forſomuch, as God ſhewed himſelfe to have ſo great regard to theſe diſtreſſed ſtrangers ſighing unto him, that for their ſakes hee puniſhed his owne people ſo ſeverely, wee may ſee how compaſſionate hee is to any being in miſery, and ſpecially to ſuch, as of what Country or Nation ſoever they bee, embrace the true faith, and doe that with care and diligence in his ſervice, which is required at their hands, as theſe Gibeonites did, ſerving under the Levites, as they were appointed, in hewing of wood and drawing of water to the whole Congregation for their ſacrifices, and without any reluctingthat we read of to this day, to the ſhame of the Iſraelites, who could never bee kept long in obedience to that, which was required of them.

The Gibeonites anſwer firſt negatively, wee will neither have ſilver nor gold, &c. whence the Rabbines gather that David offered them money at the firſt, and hereupon they replyed thus, but it may as well bee gathered, that hee offered to put ſome to death in Iſrael which had wronged them, becauſe they added, neither ſhalt thou for us kill any man in Iſrael.

V. 5, 6. Then hee demanding, what they would have done for the expiation of this ſinne, they anſwered, The man that conſumed us, &c. let ſeven of his ſonnes bee delivered unto us, and wee will hang them up to the Lord in Gibeah of Saul, whom the Lord did chooſe. The Vulgar Latin, to theſe words, the man that conſumed us, adde, wee ought ſo to deſtroy, as not to leave one of his ſtocke in all the borders of Iſrael. Whereupon Lyra and Peter Martyr and others ſay, that they at Lyra. Peter Martyr. the firſt propounded the utter rooting out of all Sauls poſterity, but in the next words they limit their requeſt to ſeven of his ſonnes, which ſome thinke they did, becauſe David replyed, (although it bee here omitted) that hee could not grant this, becauſe hee had ſworne to Saul not to root out his poſterity, and to Jonathan to ſhew kindneſſe to his.

Yet Martyr rendreth the words according to our tranſlation, and Junius making making no mention of the rooting out of Sauls ſtocke, but of Sauls going about to root them out, that none of them ſhould remaine in all the Coaſts of Iſrael. The Hebrew word is נשמדנו which may well bee rendred, wee will deſtroy, and the next word, that there may bee no remainder, but of whom is not expreſſed, but left to be underſtood. And therefore I rather preferre the Vulgar Latin herein. They would hang them up, that the judgement might bee the more remarkeable, they being thus expoſed to the ſight of all that paſſed by, that all might know, what a ſacred band an oath is, and not dare hereafter to breake it, and what a care the Lord taketh even of ſtrangers embracing the true faith, that none might bee diſcouraged from comming unto it. And they hanged them up in Gibeah of Saul to his greater ignominy, of Saul, the choſen of the Lord, that is, as the Vulgar Latin expreſſeth, ſometime choſen, but now reprobated for his wickedneſſe, and ſo the more worthy in reſpect of that ſingular favour of God abuſed, to bee put to this ignominy in his poſterity.

V. 7, 8. To this demand of the Gibeonites David preſently yeilded, and delivered to them the two ſonnes of Rizpah, Sauls concubine, and the five ſonnes of Michal the daughter of Saul, whom ſhee had brought up for Adriel the ſonne of Barzillai the Meholathite: of Rizpah ſee before, ch: 3. 7. and of Adriel, 1 Sam: 18. 19. hee had Merob Sauls daughter to wife, of whom hee begat theſe five, but they are ſaid to bee the ſonnes of Michal Sauls other daughter, who was Davids wife, becauſe ſhee having no children of her owne, adopted them for her ſonnes, ſo Lyra and others. But this is not ſo eaſily reſolved, becauſe Hebr: it is, which ſhe bare unto Adriel, and ſo the Vular Latin rendreth it, and Junius ſupplying another word thus, the five ſonnes of the ſiſter of Michal, and if it bee not read ſo, then he ſaith, the word ילך rendred properly ſhee bare, muſt bee taken μεταληπτικῶς for ſhee tooke, and brought them up, and for this hee ſaith, is Aben Ezra. Peter Martyr alſo will have it underſtood likewiſe, and whereas a queſtion may bee made, whether a woman might adopt, ſeeing by the lawes of the Romans it was not permitted, but onely in caſe that ſhee had loſt her ſonnes in the war fighting for their countrey, hee anſwereth, that more anciently they might adopt, for Pharaohs daughter adopted Moſes, and ſo Michal might adopt the children of Merob her ſiſter being dead for her owne greatly ſolace, ſeeing ſhee had none herſelfe; or elſe ſhee that was called Merob, might otherwiſe bee called Michal alſo. Yet ſome, ſaith hee, thinke, that Michal is put for Merob, by the miſtaking of the ſcribe. Of all theſe ſolutions the firſt is moſt probable, touching Michal her bringing of them up, unleſſe we ſhall acknowledge ſome errour in the writing, which is not much materiall, ſeeing any reader might eaſily know that by Michal here Merob was meant.

Lyra.

V. 9, 10. Then the Gibeonites hanged theſe ſeven men, and the time when is noted to have beene at the beginning of barly harveſt, how long, untill water dropped upon them out of Heaven. For ſo long Rizpah is noted to ſpread haire-cloath to keep the Birds from preying upon them by day and the Beaſts by night. Lyra ſaith, that it is to bee underſtood, that of this haire-cloath ſhee made her a Tent neare to theſe dead bodies, and therein watched them night and day, that nothing might devour them; not herſelfe alone, for that was impoſſible, but this was done by her and her ſervants at her appointment. If this ſhall ſeeme to bee againſt the law, that they ſhould bee ſuffered to hang day and night, ſeeing Deut. 21. it is commanded, that at the going downe of the Sunne ſuch ſhould bee taken downe, Hee ſaith, ſo indeed it ought commonly to bee done, but in this caſe Nathan the Prophet had directed David to ſuffer them to hang, till that by the falling of raine upon the earth it ſhould appeare, that the drought ſo long continuing and famin cauſed hereby was brought upon the land for the wrong done to the Gibeonites, who being ſatisfied, an end was put to this judgement.

Peter Martyr.

The reaſon, ſaith Martyr, of that Ordinance Deut: 21. was, leſt the land ſhould bee defiled, as is there expreſſed, wicked men pollute the land, whilſt they are living, and therefore being dead, they are ſoone to bee taken away from polluting it when they are dead. 2. Becauſe hanging is puniſhment enough for a malefactor, therefore the Lord would not have the ignominy of ſuffering them to hang ſtill night and day added hereunto. But this caſe being different as R: Solomon noteth, theſe were ſuffered to hang many dayes, that the Gentiles paſſing by that way, and learning hereby, what a care the God of Iſrael had of the Gentiles converted to the faith, might bee induced to turne to it alſo. The time that they hung, is deſcribed by the harveſts beginning, and the barly harveſt, becauſe in that country it was firſt and the wheat harveſt afterwards, the whole time according to the Hebrewes account being 6 months, viz. from March till Septemb. The ſackcloath which Rizpah uſed ſhe is ſaid to have ſpread it for her upon the rocke, that is, by making her a Tent thereof, wherein ſhe might ſee that performed, which ſhe deſired to theſe dead corpſes, for her care was ſuch, that ſhee would not referre it to the care of her ſervants onely, and ſhee tooke ſackcloath, as fitteſt for mourning, thus Martyr, but the ſackcloath, which ſhee ſpread, is thought by other to bee to lie upon, the Tent being left to bee underſtood. And this was told unto David, who diſliked it not, for when the time was come, hee cauſed them to bee taken downe, and beſtowed upon them the honour of buriall in the ſepulchre of their fathers. And hee tooke this occaſion alſo to tranſlate the bones of Saul and of Jonathan from Jabeſh to bury them together more honourably, the place where they were laid before, ſaith Lyra, not being ſo fit for perſons of their ranke and quality. This as a point of love and goodneſſe Martyr commendeth in David, who diſdained not to imitate a woman in ſhewing kindneſſe to the dead, to the ſhame of many inferiours to David, who ſcorne to follow their inferiours in any thing, although it bee good, when as indeed wee ought to learne to do good even of the pooreſt little creatures, as of the Piſmire, and the Crane, Stork and Swallow. How God liked of Davids proceedings is ſhewed in the next words, hee was entreated for the land; to puniſh wickedneſſe is as a ſacrifice expiatory to turne away Gods anger, but after ſeverity uſed in ſuch caſes, wee may learne by Davids example, that it is pleaſing to God to ſhew kindneſſe, and not to rage againſt dead bodies, except there be further cauſe, but not meerely becauſe they were our deadly enemies whilſt they lived. For it is not to bee doubted, but that David ſhewed this kindneſſe the rather, to ſhew that hee loved his enemies, and thoſe that hated him, according to the Evangelicall precept.

Note.

Moreover the Philiſtims had yet warre againe with Iſrael, &c. that is, as is generally thought, according to the order, wherein they are ſet downe, after that the famin ceaſed. That which put the Philiſtims on to theſe battles may ſeeme to bee the confidence, which they had in their new Champions, Giants, who Goliah-like, thought that none were able to ſtand againſt them, but they being four fell all in four battles, God in his providence having a further end in theſe warres, viz. that the ſtate of that kingdome might be left quiet and peaceable to Solomon. The Vulgar Latin, to make the time more plaine, hath it, after theſe things, and Joſephus ſaith, after the famin ended David ſet upon the Philiſtims againe.

V. 15.

In this warre David fainted, then Iſhibenob a Giant being about to ſlay him, Abiſhai reſcued the King and ſlew the Giant. This Joſephus ſaith, was done, when the enemies being put to flight David purſued them before all others, and being ſeene now to waxe faint, the Giant whom hee calleth Armon, the ſonne of Araph, turned backe, and had undoubtedly ſlaine him, but that Abiſhai comming on prevented it, and ſlew the Giant. By Davids waxing faint it appeareth that this was done in his old age, hee being now about 65, and therefore they would not have him to goe forth to battle any more, leſt hee quenched the light of Iſrael, whereby they meant that the glory of all his former victories would bee in danger to be obſcured, if at any time hee ſhould bee ſlaine in warre. Wherefore they would rather henceforth content themſelves to enjoy his direction, counſell and prayers keeping at home, then that his perſon ſhould be hazarded by going to warre abroad.

The Vulg Lat. alſo for Giants hath Araphah, according to the word in Hebrew, but Araphah ſignifieth a Giant.

V. 17.

Peter Martyr.

Some expoſitours, ſaith Martyr, hold that contrary to what was ſaid before, theſe battailes with the Philiſtims were fought before the 3 yeares famin, and not in the order, wherein they are ſet downe for time, becauſe it was a thing decreed in the time of Abſaloms rebellion, that David ſhould not be adventured to the warre in his owne perſon, and becauſe 1 Chron: 20. 4. the three laſt of theſe warres are related immediately after the victory obtained over the Ammonites. But theſe reaſons be of no force, not the firſt, for in the time of Abſaloms rebellion David was kept from going out to the warre, becauſe the Rebels would principally aime at his deſtruction, after that hee might ſtill goe to warre againſt other enemies, till this time of his debility through old age appearing: nor the ſecond, for the writer of the Chronicles omitteth whatſoever elſe happened betweene the ſubduing of the Ammonites, and theſe warres againſt the Philiſtims, yea and the firſt of theſe alſo, therefore it cannot be gathered by his placing of theſe next to that againſt the Ammonites, that they followed next after, but becauſe his numbring of the people is placed there next unto theſe warres, that theſe were the laſt memorable geſts of David before that unhappy numbring. Whereas it is objected, that the laſt three warres at the leaſt muſt needes bee before, becauſe David was kept from going to warre after the firſt of theſe foure battailes, he anſwereth although he went not to warre in perſon, yet he went by his forces.

This Giants ſpeare is ſet forth by the weight, as Goliahs, 1 Sam: 17. 7. it weighed 300 ſhekels of braſſe; what weight this was may be gathered by that, which I have written upon that place: and hee was girded with a new ſword, whereupon the Hebrewes ſay, that it was the firſt time of his comming forth to warre, and that hee was girt with a ſword in token of ſome Captaines place, which hee had in the army, and that to purchaſe him the more credit at the Note. firſt, he did thus ſet upon the King, ſeeing him to wax feeble. But God, that never faileth thoſe that put their truſt in him, preſerved David in this great danger, by ſuddenly bringing Abiſhai to reſcue him, for which, and ſo many victories more following, hee compiled that Pſalme of praiſe ch: 22.

V. 18. The ſecond battle was in Gob, 1 Chron: 20. 4. it is ſaid to have beene in Gezer, of which Gezer, ſee 1 Chron: 14. 16. it was a City in the Tribe of Ephraim Adricom. poſſeſſed by the Philiſtims, happily by them called Gob. Vatablus hath it Nob, and Adrichomius ſaith, that Nob and Gob was all one City in the Tribe of Benjamin, but becauſe this was the ſame with Gezer, that City could not be meant.
In this battle Saph a Giant was ſlaine by Sibbecai an Huſhathite. 1 Chron: 20. 4.
Joſephus. for Saph is Sippai. Joſephus calleth Sibbecai an Hittite, and ſaith that hee ſlew many, that boaſted themſelves to bee Giants, hee was one of Davids worthies, 1 Chron: 11. 29.

V. 19. The third warre was alſo in Gob, in which the brother of Goliah was ſlaine by Elhanan, the ſonne of Jaare Oregim, here the word brother is ſupplyed out of 1 Chron: 20. 5. where he is called Lahmi the brother of Goliah, and Elhanan is ſaid to be the ſonne of Jair a Bethlehemite. But becauſe hee is ſaid here to have ſlaine Goliah, and his ſpeare is ſaid to bee as a Weavers beame, as the ſpeare of that Goliah, 1 Sam. 17. and Elhanan, who ſlew him, is ſaid to bee of Bethlehem, of which City David was, the Hebrewes, as Jerom ſheweth de tradit: Hebr: will have David to be meant by him, and this Goliah to bee the ſame ſpoken of before, for which v: 22. it is ſaid, theſe foure fell by the hand of David and of his ſervants, and accordingly his tranſlation goeth, for Elhanan the ſonne of Jaare Oregim, having Adeodatus, filius ſaltus polymitarius; which hee applyeth to David thus, hee was ſent of God, and was the ſonne of the forreſt as it were, becauſe he kept ſheepe there, and is called Polymitarius, a maker of curious workes, as Oregim ſignifieth, becauſe by his mother hee was of the kind of Bezaleel, to whom God gave the ſpirit of wiſedome to make curious works in braſſe for the ſanctuary. And with this conceit are carried away Lyra, Comeſtor, Gloſſ: Ordin; and Toſtatus ſometime, and divers others, but it may bee called their common deluſion, wherein one followed another againſt ſenſe, becauſe it was not Goliah, whom David ſlew, that is here ſpoken of, but his brother, as is expreſly ſaid, 1 Chron: 20.5. which was written after this to make all things more plaine, which were too briefly ſet downe in theſe bookes, neither doth the time agree at all, ſeeing that battle was above 40 yeares before this. And this Elhanan, to put it out of doubt, that he was not David, but one of his worthies, is numbred ſo 1 Chron 11 1. 26. next after Aſahel, and is called the ſon of his uncle, the Bethlehemite, in our tranſlation, the ſonne of Dodo, but becauſe hee is here ſaid to bee the ſonne of Jaare, or Jair, the word Dodo is better rendred by Jerom, of his uncle, as it ſignifieth, and taken not as a proper name, but as an appellative. Laſtly whereas v: 22. is alledged, theſe foure fell by the hand of David and of his ſervants, Martyr ſaith well, they fell by the hand of David, although he himſelfe in perſon ſlew none of them, becauſe they went out under him and by his appointment, that ſlew them, & they fell by the hands of his ſervants, becauſe they were his inſtruments, by whom they were ſlaine.

Toſtatus.
Joſephus.

And there was yet a battle in Gath, &c. This battle Toſtatus conceiveth to have beene made to recover Gath taken by David from the Philiſtims, 1 Chr: 18.1. They had now for their Champion a Giant of greateſt ſtature, Joſephus ſaith, 6 Cubits, that is, 9 foot high, and for his fingers and toes hee was monſtrous, having 24 in number, and not unlike Goliah hee defied Iſrael, and then Jonathan Davids brothers ſonne ſlew him. What words hee uſed is not ſaid, but moſt probably hee ſpake much like as Goliah had done, 1 Sam: 17. This Giant ſaith Joſephus, Jonathan ſlew in ſingle combat, and ſo the victory being obtained, the Philiſtims durſt not make warre any more with Iſrael afterwards. Myſtically by the Giants ſlaine in theſe warres, the principall cauſe whereof, was Davids hand, our victories over our Giantlike ſpirituall enemies were ſet forth by the power of our David Chriſt Jeſus, that wee may not bee afraid of them, ſeeing wee fight under ſuch a King, and prevailing aſcribe all the praiſe to him by whom onely wee are enabled to theſe conqueſts.

CHAP. XXII.

V. 1.

AND David ſpake unto the Lord the words of this ſong, in the day that the Lord had delivered him out of the hands of all his enemies, and out of the hand of Saul. By all Davids enemies are meant the Philiſtims, who were laſt ſubdued, ch:21. and Sheba, ch:20. and Abſalom and Achitophel, and the Edomites, Ammonites, and Moabites, the Jebuſites, and Iſhboſheth with Abner, and before all them Saul, who ceaſed not to perſecute him from the 10 yeare of his raigne, as long as he lived, who is named in particular, becauſe hee was longeſt and moſt endangered by him, and he is named laſt, becauſe hee acted his part againſt him long before his other enemies, who were more freſh in minde and therefore named firſt. This is put amongſt the Pſalmes, being the 18, committed to the chiefe Muſitian to be ſung to the praiſe of God in the Congregation. And it is called a ſong, becauſe in Hebrew it is metricall, and it was a point of ſingular commendation in David, that in his old age, (for he is thought now to have beene 67.) when hee was free from all trouble of enemies, that hee ſtudied how to ſet forth the praiſe of God beſt by compiling this, and as may bee well conjectured, many other heavenly ſongs, and ſpent not his time now in reſt and idleneſſe, and ſetting up, as others doe, ſome trophees of his victories to his owne praiſe. And the ſingular providence of God towards David in exempting him from warre and troubles, whereof hee was full all his life time before, is moſt remarkeable, that in his old age hee might the more quietly prepare for his end, by ſetting his minde upon things heavenly, by giving inſtructions to his ſonne Solomon and to his Princes for the better eſtabliſhing of his kingdome, and by diſpoſing his worldly treaſures to the building of a Temple to the honour of God.

The 18 Pſalme hath one Verſicle before this, I will love thee O Lord my ſtrength, and then followes, The Lord is my Rocke, in him will I truſt. It is the ſame almoſt verbatim with Pſ. 18. ſaving that for theſe words, my God, my ſtrength in whom I will truſt, my buckler and the horne of my ſalvation and my high tower, v: 2. of Pſal. 18. here it is, the God of my rock, in whom I will truſt, hee is my ſhield and the horne of my ſalvation, my high tower and my refuge, and my Saviour, thou ſaveſt mee from violence. But this, and whatſoever ſmall difference there is more ſhall bee conſidered in expounding that Pſalme amongſt the reſt, to which the explanation hereof doth properly belong, and therefore here omitting it I haſten to the next Chapter.

CHAP. XXIII.

V. 1. THeſe are the laſt words of David. David the ſonne of Iſhai ſaid, The man, who was ſet on high, ſaid, The anointed of the God of Jacob, and the ſweet ſinger of Iſrael. This is a propheſie, as all both Jewiſh and Chriſtian Expoſitors hold touching Chriſt, and is ſet forth by this title, The laſt words of David; becauſe Peter Martyr. that after the ſong before-going compiled, and all other Pſalmes, which hee made in his laſt old age, he uttered this, and left it as the laſt confeſſion of his faith for the comfort of all the faithfull, which loved his houſe, of which Chriſt was to come, and for the terrour of all the wicked enemies to him and his. For it is not to be underſtood ſo, as if hee dyed without ſpeaking more after theſe words ſpoken, for he cauſed the people to be numbred after this, Chap. 24. and appointed by word of mouth Solomon to bee his ſucceſſour in the kingdome, 1 King. 1. and gave him many inſtructions, Chap. 2. unleſſe we ſhall ſay, that thoſe things were done before, though placed after, that this might come next to other matter of the like kinde. But granting all to bee ſet downe in order, theſe are called his laſt words, both becauſe they are of things to come to paſſe in the laſt times, and the laſt words of praiſe to God which hee uttered, as Lyra. Lyra hath it, or the laſt propheticall words. Jonathan the Chald. Paraphraſt, Chald. Parap. hereupon ſaith thus; Theſe are the propheticall words of David, which hee propheſied to the end of the world, to the times of comfort which were to come, that is, of the kingdom of the Meſſiah promiſed to David and to all the holy Fathers, they were ſpoken, and ſhall be performed in due time.

This propheſie beginneth with the titles of David, which are four: 1 David the ſonne of Iſhai hath ſaid; hee ſetteth downe his parentage, as not being aſhamed of it, although hee were a great King. 2 The man, that was raiſed up on high, that is, from a keeper of ſheep, to bee King over Iſrael. 3 The anointed of the God of Jacob, for both theſe the vulg. Latine hath theſe words: Dixit Lyra. vir, cui conſtitutum eſt de Chriſto dei Jaacob, that is, ſaith Lyra, to whom a firme promiſe was made, never to bee revoked, concerning Chriſt of the God of Jaacob, who is ſo called, becauſe Jaacob ſpake of him, Gen. 49. 10. Hebr. it is, the man ſaid, that was ſet up, of the Chriſt of the God of Jaacob, Junius hath it, the anointed of the God of Jaacob, Junius. expounding it of his doing herein like Jaacob when he Geu. 49. was now ready to die, and like Moſes holding that this was uttered by him laſt Deut. 32. 33. of all, when he had made an end of giving inſtructions to his ſonne Solomon, 1 King. 2. and of praying for him, Pſal. 72. and for the word rendred, cui conſtitutum eſt, both hee and Martyr have it, as in our tranſlation, the man that was raiſed or ſet up on high, which I thinke to bee the beſt, but becauſe in the next words there is the prepoſition על of, I preferre herein the vulg. Latine, to which the Chaldee Paraphraſe agreeth. The laſt title is the ſweet ſinger of Iſrael, for hee compiled many ſweet and heavenly Pſalmes for the publike uſe of the Church of God, and ſet them to Inſtruments of Muſick, and did himſelfe ſing and play ſo ſweetly, that hee drove away hereby the evill ſpirit from Saul. And that the giving of himſelfe theſe titles might not ſeeme to come from vaine glory, and that the propheſie following might bee the better marked by V. 2. all the faithfull, it is added, Verſ. 2. the ſpirit of the Lord ſpake by mee, and his words were in my tongue, ſo that by the Spirit of God breathing upon him hee ſpake thus, as all Prophets did, 1 Pet. 2. 19. and therefore theſe words were not his owne, but both the matter and very words came from the Spirit of God.

V. 3.

The God of Iſrael ſaid, the rock of Iſrael ſpake unto me, hee that ruleth over men muſt bee juſt, ruling in the feare of God; the vul. Latin, he that ruleth over men, the juſt ruler in the feare of God, and this is according to the Hebr. and ſaith Lyra, they be all the titles of God, and of him it is ſaid, ruling in the feare of God, becauſe he ſtriketh into men, in whoſe hearts he ruleth, the feare of God, not a ſervile but filiall. Pellican followeth the ſame tranſlation, yet diſtinguiſheth the ſentence thus, the ſtrong God, that is, the Almightie promiſed me who ruleth over the ſonnes of men, being called juſt, becauſe hee ruleth moſt juſtly. Laſtly, he ſaid, that he would one day ſet up a King, which ſhould be the Meſſiah, who ſhould be ſetled and rule with the feare of God, that is, whoſe kingdome is ſetled not by any other ſtrength or firmeneſſe, but by the feare of God, it being a kingdome of beleevers and of ſuch as doe worſhip and feare the true God onely. Martyr having mentioned the firſt expoſition, ſaith, there is another expoſition more agreeable to the words following thus: This rock of Iſrael ſaid of mee to Samuel, that I ſhould bee a juſt ruler, ruling in the feare of God, and taking care for the reſtoring of his worſhip, and this was performed partly in David, who yet by reaſon of his inbred corruption was not altogether ſo juſt in all things, but in the Meſſiah, who came of David perfectly, becauſe hee alſo hath power to work in the hearts of men the true feare of God, which David had not, although hee taught it unto them. And this I thinke to bee the beſt, to underſtand the laſt words, as the thing ſpoken by the rock of Iſrael to David by the ſpirit of the Meſſiah. For ſo the ſentence will bee perfect, one word, is, being ſupplyed, the ruler over men is juſt, ruling in the feare of God, that is, hee of whom I ſaid before, that I was about to ſpeake, viz. the Meſſiah or Anointed.

V. 4.

And hee ſhall bee as the light of the morning when the Sunne riſeth, &c. the vulgar Latine, as the light of the morning, when the Sunne ariſeth, without theſe words connecting it with the former Verſe, and hee ſhall bee, and therefore it is by Lyra applyed to the manner of Gods ſpeaking unto David, and by him Verſ. 2. as if it were meant, that his ſpeaking was not obſcure and as it were, clouded, but cleare and perſpicuous, as a morning, wherein the Sunne ariſeth cleare. And whereas the next words may ſeeme not to agree to this, as graſſe groweth out of the earth by raines, that hee applyeth to Chriſt, to ſet forth whoſe comming of a Virgin the compariſon is uſed, becauſe as the ground is barren and bringeth forth no fruit, but by the rain falling upon it, ſo that virgin could not have brought forth a Sunne, but by the Spirit of God making her fruitfull. Pellican following R. David applieth it to Davids kingdome thus, as the morning light ariſeth, and the Sunne alwayes increaſing and ſhining, ſo ſhall or let my kingdome bee alwayes faire and never troubled with clouds, becauſe if the morning bee cloudy, one while cleare and then rainy, it never profiteth ſuch things, as grow out of the earth. Hugo Card applyeth it to the word of Chriſt, thus his word is like the morning light, which illuminateth and maketh fruitfull, ſo as that his riſing againe is like the morning riſing without any clouds of infidelitie, and hee ſhone by miracles and made the ground of beleevers hearts fruitfull, as the raine the earth, by the preaching of the Word. Peter Martyr expounding this and the next Verſe together underſtandeth it of the kingdome of the Meſſiah, of which it is hereby propheſied, that it ſhould bee cleare, as the faireſt day, as the Sunne ſhining in his ſtrength overcommeth and annihilateth all cloudineſſe, ſo overcomming all that oppoſed themſelves againſt it, and ſuch was the covenant of God made with him touching it. And for the other ſimilitude of the raine, hereby hee ſaith was meant, that perſecutions notwithſtanding ſhould ariſe, but they ſhould bee improved as raine to the making of the earth fruitfull, yet hee ſaith, that his houſe ſhould not bee thus, becauſe the raine falling upon the earth produceth fruits that are fading, but the fruit of this covenant ſhould bee everlaſting, becauſe of the Kingdome of the Meſſiah there ſhould bee no end; but of the laſt word, becauſe he ſhall not make it to grow, he ſaith nothing, and ſo leaveth all indeed obſcure. Junius having expounded the former of theſe Verſes of them, that hee ſhould rule over, for hee ſupplyeth theſe words, and they ſhall bee as the morning light,

&c. hee rendreth this, as the reaſon of the next words, although my houſe be not ſo, that is, although it bee not ſo cleare without clouds of ſinne, yet Gods covenant with me is firme and ſure, when hee maketh it not to grow, that is, when for ſinne my houſe for a time ſhall not injoy ſuch proſperitie. There are alſo divers other tranſlations, as in the vulg. Latine, Verſ. 5. Neither is my houſe ſo great with God, that hee ſhould make with mee an everlaſting Covenant, &c. Neither is there any thing of him, that ſhall not bud. The Geneva tranſlation, after theſe words, the morning without clouds, hath it thus, Verſ. 4. ſo ſhall my houſe bee, and not as the graſſe of the earth is by the bright raine, ſupplying all theſe words, ſo ſhall my houſe bee, and not, which are not in the Hebrew, Verſ. 5. the laſt words, therefore all my health and whole deſire is, that hee would not make grow ſo, where ſo, againe is ſupplyed, not being in the Hebrew. Our new tranſlation followeth V. 4. Junius. Hebr. it is, And as the light of the morning, the Sunne, hee ſhall ariſe, the morning, not clouds, the tender graſſe from the earth from the ſhining after raine, for V. 5. my houſe is not ſo with God, and then the laſt words, for all my ſalvation and all my love, for he ſhall not make it grow. For the meaning, Iunius giveth the beſt light into it, for ſome words muſt needs bee ſupplyed in ſuch an abrupt and conciſe kind of ſpeaking, that the ſenſe may bee attained to, thus going forward here to propheſie of the Meſſiah, under the name of a juſt ruler, hee further ſaith, that hee ſhall bee as the Sun, the light of the morning, which is cleare and without all clouds, for he is called the Sun of righteouſneſſe, Mal. 4. for his glory, wherein hee excelleth the Sunne, and for a more ſuperexcellent ſpirituall light comming from him, the tender graſſe, that is, hee is alſo as the greene graſſe, which the bright Sunne cauſeth to ſhoote out apace after a large raine; becauſe his kingdome encreaſed ſo faſt, the Goſpel being received and Churches planted in ſo many countreys farre aud wide over all the world in a ſhort time. For my houſe is not ſo with God, that is, my houſe I grant is but meane, and not of that greatneſſe, that God ſhould out of it bring ſuch a ruler, for I was at the firſt but a ſhepheard, yet God out of his meere grace & mercy towards me, hath made a firm Covenant with me, and given me a ſure promiſe, that cannot be broken, but ſhall ſtand for ever, that ſuch a ruler ſhall come of me, and this is my ſalvation and delight, for by him I hope to be ſaved eternally. For he ſhall not make to grow, or although hee ſhall not make, &c. for thus alſo may כי the word here uſed bee expounded, that is, as Iunius before, although my houſe flouriſh not conſtantly in my poſterity, but bee ſometime ſo cruſhed, as that it may ſeeme to bee without all poſſibilitie of growing up to ſuch a glorious kingdome, yet that which hath beene ſaid, ſhall bee verified: ſo that theſe words ſeeme to bee added, as pointing at the deſperate ſtate that the houſe of David ſhould bee in under the Babyloniſh captivitie, and afterwards through Herods tyranny, to denote which and yet to give hope of the Meſſiah, Eſa. 11. 1. it is ſaid, a branch ſhall come out of the trunke or root of Ieſſe, that is, his houſe cut downe, as it were, to the roots.

V. 6. But the ſonnes of Belial ſhall bee all as thornes thruſt away, becauſe they cannot be taken with hands. But the man that will touch them muſt bee fenced with iron and the ſtaffe of V. 7. a ſpeare, and they ſhall bee utterly burnt with fire in the ſame place, the vulg. Latine comburentur uſque ad nihilum, Hebr. בשבת ad ceſſationem, i. ad nihilum. This, Lyra. ſaith Lyra, is to be underſtood of the wicked Jews, who were as thornes to thoſe that handled them, that is, to Chriſt and his Apoſtles, wherefore they were by the Romans deſtroyed by force of Armes, and many of them with their Citie and Temple burnt with fire, and after that, becauſe they died in infidelitie, they were burnt everlaſtingly in hell fire. Others generally underſtand this of all the wicked compared to thornes, becauſe they beare no good fruit, but pricks to hurt thoſe that meddle with them by way of inſtruction or reprehenſion, wherefore as a man dealeth with thornes, ſo they ſhall be dealt withall, that is, powerfully proceeded againſt, and finally burnt in the place where they ſtand, that they may do no more hurt to ſuch as come near them. Yet Martyr Peter Martyr. in this bringeth the Jewes alſo for example, who were deſtroyed by Titus Pellican. and Veſpaſian in their owne Citie. Pellican will have Antichriſt and his adherents, rents, the greateſt enemies of Chriſt underſtood, whom hee ſhall conſume by the breath of his mouth, as by fire. I hold with Lyra, becauſe it is a propheſie of things moſt remarkable happening about the kingdome of the Meſſiah, that his greateſt enemies and firſt oppugners, the Jewes, are particularly meant, who were therefore juſtly deſtroyed by the Romans. And morally wee may note, what the end of all the incorrigibly wicked ſhall bee, viz. deſtruction for ever in hell fire.

V. 8.

Theſe are the names of the valiant men, which David had. As the ſacred hiſtory doth firſt and chiefly ſet forth the geſts of King David, as being a man ſingularly choſen of God, ſo it ſeemed good to the Spirit of God, that the valiant men about him with their worthy geſts ſhould be put upon record for their honour, whereby is implied that they were not onely moſt valiant but faithfull alſo both to God and the King, and godly, for Joab who murthered two men moſt treacherouſly, Abner and Amaſa, and preſumptuouſly tranſgreſſed againſt the Kings charge touching Abſalom, is not for theſe his wickedneſſes named amongſt them, nor Amaſa, who had rebelled with Abſalom againſt the King, but onely ſuch, as conſtantly followed him in adverſitie and proſperitie, and helped him both in the time of his perſecution under Saul, and againſt Iſhboſheth the ſonne of Saul to obtaine the kingdome, to which God had choſen him, being for this purpoſe extraordinarily aſſiſted with valour and might to ſubdue the enemy, and obtaine unto him a very large dominion over all the neighbouring nations, who had hitherto poſſeſſed a great part of the Land, which was given for inheritance to the children of Iſrael; ſome yet ſtand for Joab to bee meant by him ſitting in the chaire: but Hugo, Rupert and Martyr hold, that hee was excluded from his ill deſerts before ſpoken of.

The Myſtery.

And herein David was a figure of Chriſt, who had alſo his worthies, the Apoſtles, and 72. more Diſciples, whom he ſent out and inſtructed with power extraordinarily to conquer for him, by ſhewing ſignes and working miracles, and the putting off the names of Davids worthies upon record in holy Scripture, figured out the writing of the names of Chriſts faithfull Miniſters in heaven, as Martyr partly noteth, that wee all might bee incouraged to fight manfully under Chriſts banner, and never for any danger bee made to ſhrinke from him; for the valour of any faithfull ſervant of God in this kind ſhall aſſuredly be regiſtred, and hee ſhall not loſe the praiſe thereof at Gods hands, as it is ſaid of the Jew within, that his praiſe is not of men but of God. And in that David kept ſuch men about him, who were both valiant and godly, it is commended hereby to other Kings and Princes to doe the like, and not to keepe about them vaine and vicious perſons to the corrupting and weakning of their ſtates and kingdomes.

Rom. 2. 29.

Of theſe worthies of David here are reckoned up 36. and yet Verſ. 39. they are ſummed up 37. Joab alſo, ſaith Junius, being underſtood, although hee be not named. Comeſtor numbreth David for one, as the head of them all, and ſo maketh up 37. and this hee groundeth upon the vulg. Latine, where it is, David ſitting in the chaire was moſt wiſe, but Hebr. there is no mention made of David any more, but that theſe were the valiant men, that David had, and then it is ſaid, ſitting in the chaire, the moſt wiſe, the head of the three, hee was Adino the Eznite, or as in our new tranſlation rather, the Tachmonite ſitting in the chaire, he was Adino, for the word rendred, the moſt wiſe, Hebr. is תחכמוני which, although חכם ſignifieth wiſe, cannot well bee rendred moſt wiſe, but rather Tachmonite, as ſetting forth the place, of which hee was, as the Eznite doth his family. But Junius for ſitting in the chaire, &c. hath it, Joſcheb baſſchebeth Tachcemonites, huic gratum fuit haſtato una vice invadere 800. taking the two firſt words for his proper names, which are commonly rendred, ſitting in the chaire, and Adino according to the ſignification (which is commonly taken for a proper name, but onely in the vulg. Latine, where it is expounded by tenerrimus) for gratum ei, it was delightfull to him, and עצנו being armed with his ſpeare, which is commonly rendred Eznite. The Hebrews will have David deſcribed here, as the chiefe of the moſt valiant, becauſe it is for Kings and Maſters to ſit in

Junius.

Lyra. in chaires, and he, ſaith Lyra, is called moſt tender, becauſe hee was gentle to his friends, although terrible to his enemies, for which is added ligni vermiculus, as the vulg. Latine rendreth העצני because as the worme eateth into the hardeſt wood, ſo hee pierced his ſtrongeſt enemies by his might and deſtroyed them. But becauſe Davids worthies and not David himſelfe are here propounded to bee numbred, neither doe wee read that ever hee ſlew 800. enemies at once, it is certaine that ſome other man and not David is meant. Some thinke that Joab is thus deſcribed, becauſe hee was Captaine of all the Army, but this is not probable for the reaſon before rendred, why hee is not put into this Catalogue at all, or according to others becauſe his geſts were ſufficiently ſet forth before, and the purpoſe of the Spirit here was not to reckon up any, but ſuch valiant men of David, as either had hitherto been paſſed over in ſilence, or without any hint giving of their valour, or although ſomething were ſpoken hereof, yet not the geſt moſt memorable: for ſo Sibbecai, whoſe killing of a Giant is ſpoken of Chap.21. is here omitted, and Elhanan and Jonathan onely curſorily named, that wee might gather, when wee recount their valiant geſts before ſet forth, what the reſt of the 30. who are onely named were, but Abiſhai there ſpoken of is here againe commended for another moſt valiant act of his, viz. ſlaying 300. at once. Verſ.18. It ſeemeth to mee, that Sibbecai ſpoken of, Chap. 21. but here omitted, is alſo to be underſtood, who being added, as hee may well be from thence, maketh up the number of 37. and indeed without underſtanding him the ſecond ternary is imperfect, there being in it but two expreſſed, Verſ.18,19,20. And for the former words, ſitting in a chaire, they may beſt bee referred to David thus; theſe are the valiant men, which David ſitting in the chaire of State had, and thus the Tygurin tranſlation rendreth it: the Tachmonite, who was the chiefe of the three, hee was otherwiſe called Adino the Eznite, &c. That of Junius doth not arride me, becauſe if Adino bee rendred gratum ei, the word הוא is redundant, and there is no reaſon to take the two firſt words for a proper name contrary to the ſtreame of all interpreters.
1 Chron. 11. And for the making up of this number of 37. that Sibbecai is to bee underſtood may bee gathered from 1 *Chron.*11. where hee is alſo named: but there are many more alſo named, ſo that the Catalogue here is imperfect, and theſe 37. were not all Davids worthies, for there are named about 13 more, theſe were all, that it pleaſed the Spirit of God to ſet downe here, the reſt being reſerved to bee regiſtred in that place, happily becauſe they came not all unto him ſo ſoone as theſe 37. but when hee was in Hebron, and Iſhboſheth Sauls ſonne was now dead, for then many more of great valour of all the Tribes are alſo named, 1 *Chron.*12. But 1 *Chron.*11.11. it is Jaſhobeam, the Hachmonite, who is firſt mentioned, but he is generally held to bee the ſame, although called by another name, and whereas there it is ſaid, that hee ſlew 300. at once here 800. by Joſephus 900. ſome thinke, that 300. of theſe 800. were ſlaine by his ſpeare, the reſt otherwiſe, but others better, that hee did that valiant act at another time. If any man ſhall thinke it incredible, that one man ſhould in one day ſlay ſo many in a battell, he muſt remember, how Sampſon alone ſlew 1000. men with the Jaw-bone of an Aſſe, and Jonathan and his Armorbearer alone ſet upon the whole Army of the Philiſtims and brought confuſion to it, and Gedeon with his 300. men overthrew the Army of the Midianites being as the Graſhoppers for multitude. The Lord promiſed to ſuch as ſerved him, that one ſhould chace a 1000. the enemy ſeeing the valour of this man might bee ſo aſtoniſht through feare, as to become feeble and unable to reſiſt, or to flee from him wounding and killing them, as the beaſts are ſaid to fall downe for feare before the Lion purſuing them neare. Now for the method here uſed in making this Catalogue. 1 Here are two ternaries of the moſt valiant, together with their moſt memorable geſts. 2 An enumeration of the names of 30. more, and the ſame method is followed, 1 Chron. 11. Touching the two ternaries, the firſt three are ſaid to bee ſuperiour to the other three, and yet thoſe other three of wonderfull valour alſo.

V. 9. The ſecond was Eleazar the ſonne of Dodo, which word ſignifieth his uncle, and ſo it is by ſome rendred, but it is more commonly and better taken for a proper name, hee is ſaid to have been of that valour, that hee ſlew the Philiſtims till his ſword did cleave to his hand, and then the people which before were fled from him for feare of the Philiſtims returned onely after him to take the ſpoyle.

V. 12. The third was Shammah the ſonne of Agee, who defended a piece of ground full of Lentiles againſt a troope of the Philiſtims, when all others fled from the Philiſtims for feare, and obtained a great victory. The hiſtory touching theſe two differeth much from this, 1 Chron. 11. 12, 13. where that is aſcribed to Eleazar, which is here tō Shammah, no mention being made of Shammah, but implicitly. Hee was with D*avid* in Padammim, and the Philiſtims were gathered together to battell, where there was a parcell of Barley, and when the people fled from before the Philiſtims, they ſet themſelves in the midſt of the parcell and delivered it and ſlew the Philiſtims To reconcile this difference ſome thinke, that the Hiſtory of Shammah is quite omitted, 1 Chron. 11. rendring therefore the plurall, they ſtood in the midſt of the parcell by the ſingular, hee ſtood, as the Septuagint, and Toſtatus, and becauſe it was in a parcell of a Barley field where Eleazar fought, but of Lentils, where Shammah, and it ſeemeth to bee onely a more full deſcription of the valiant act of E*leazar*, the occaſion of his fight being but in part ſet forth here, but in the other part there, and the name of the place, where hee was, when hee entred into this fight, Paſdammim, which is here omitted. For the plurall uſed there, it may bee reconciled, that ſome of his men ſeeing him to defend that ground alone were gathered unto him againe, but it was his valour alone, by which this was done. Some others thinke, that the hiſtories of both theſe are conjoyned in the Chronicles, and whereas Lentils are ſpoken of here, but there Barley, there might bee ſtacks of both, which the Philiſtims would have burned. Lyra ſaith, becauſe Eleazar was the chiefe in defending that ground, hee onely is mentioned, but Shammah alſo implyed in that the plurall number is uſed. And this is the more probable, becauſe Verſ. 15. it is ſpoken of three, that together did alſo another moſt valiant act in breaking through the hoaſt of the Philiſtims for water, when as two onely had beene expreſly named before, intimating, that the third was left to bee underſtood from 2 King. 23. Whereas Verſ. 9. it is ſaid, when they defied the Philiſtims that were there gathered together, ſome thinke rather it ſhould bee read, when the Philiſtims defied and objected cowardize unto them, but the word חרפם ſignifieth alſo their expoſing of themſelves to danger, as Pagninus hath it, and the word rendred the Philiſtims, is בפילשתם againſt the Philiſtims; wherefore Junius, when they expoſed their lives to danger againſt the Philiſtims, and this is beſt, becauſe it is not likely, that they would reproach the Philiſtims, and then flee away from them, and the words agree not to the other reading, the Philiſtims reproached them.

V.13. And three of the thirty went downe to David, &c. here by thirty is to be underſtood the whole number of D*avids* valiant men, who might bee ſo called although they were more, becauſe happily ſo many were by D*avid* choſen at the firſt, and had the name of the thirtie worthies given unto them, and authoritie and command over others accordingly, but ſome others afterwards alſo ſhewing great valour were joyned unto them, but they were ſtill called by the name of the thirty, as the 12. Apoſtles. Theſe three came to D*avid* to the Cave of Odullam in the time when hee was perſecuted by S*aul*, a Garriſon of the Philiſtims being then at Bethlehem, and when D*avid* longed for ſome of the water of the well of Bethlehem, which was a well, that of old hee happily had uſed to drinke of, for hee was of that City and knew it to be very good, theſe three adventured to fetch him ſome water thence, &c. and this is noted to have beene done in the harveſt time, when it was hot, and when it was brought hee would not drinke thereof, but conſidering that they with perill of their lives had fetcht it, hee poured it out for a drinke drinke offering to the Lord for the health and ſafetie of theſe three, ſaith Pellican: hee offered it for a drinke offering, ſaith Martyr, in way of thankſgiving to God, who had given him ſuch worthy men, and preſerved their lives in this great danger, and hee called it the blood of thoſe men, becauſe gotten with danger of their lives, as the wine in the Sacrament is alſo called blood figuratively: a notable example for Princes and Captaines to bee tender over the lives of their ſervants, to bee prodigall of their blood is tyranny. And their readineſſe to give content to their Captaine ſerveth to commend ready obedience to all ſervants, although not in imitating deſperately this example, when there is no ſuch great need: but in time of neceſſitie for the ſafetie of the King, and the Commonwealth, ſubjects ought to put themſelves upon apparent dangers. Some thinke, that David bade them fetch this water to try their valour, but his aſtoniſhment, when he ſaw, that they had done it, plainly manifeſteth the contrary. Kimhi aſcribeth this fact to the next three, but this is againſt the order of the hiſtory, yet Hugo will have theſe three to be Abiſhai, Sobbecai and Jonathan, following the vulgar Latine, Nec non ante deſcenderant tres, qui erant de 30. and following Jerom hee ſaith, that Davids being in the Cave of Odullam in Sauls time is not meant here, but after his ſinne with Bathſhebah, and that the water being brought, which hee ſo greatly deſired, hee being thirſty yet would not drinke it, to teach his ſouldiers fortitude and conſtancy. Lyra contrariwiſe ſaith, that it cannot bee underſtood of any but of the firſt three, becauſe it is concluded, theſe were the three moſt valiant, and hee ſaith, that David by ſacrificing this water ſhewed, that who ſo indanger themſelves by fighting againſt infidells, doe offer unto God a moſt acceptable ſacrifice. Junius illuſtrateth the fact of theſe three the more by ſaying, that the Garriſon of the Philiſtims kept the way to this well. Hugo in affirming theſe three to bee the ſecond followeth Jerom in Tradit. Hebr. So likewiſe doth Dionyſius and Toſtatus, but enough hath been ſaid by Lyra already to confute this.

V. 18. Pellican. Sallianus.

Abiſhai the brother of Joab was alſo chiefe among three. Thus it is ſaid alſo, 1 Chron. 11. but here are two worthies onely named, hee and Benajah, how then ſhall this number of three be made up? Pellican thinketh, that hee is ſaid to bee the chiefe of the three with relation to two more mentioned, Chap. 21. who alſo ſlew two Giants, thus alſo Lyra and Hugo annumerating to him Sobbecai and Jonathan; but ſo there will not bee three but foure. Wherefore Sobbecai or Sibbecai, as I ſaid before, may moſt probably bee underſtood and not Jonathan, as ſome would have him, for hee is named afterwards, Verſ. 32. unleſſe that bee another Jonathan, becauſe hee is called the ſonne of Jaſhen, and not of Shammah, Davids brother, as Ch. 21.21.

V. 20. Joſephus. Theodoret. Toſtatus.

And Benajah the ſonne of Jehojada, the ſonne of a valiant man of Kabzeel: Of Jehojada mention is made 1 Chron. 12. 27. that hee was Captaine of 3700. Aaronites, which came to David to helpe him, and of this Jehojada Benajah ſeemeth to bee the ſonne, and ſo Joſephus accordingly calleth him a Prieſt, as all the Aaronites were: Cabzeel, of which hee was, was of the tribe of Judah, for which cauſe Theodoret will have him of that tribe and ſon to Davids brother. Touching Benajah it is ſaid, firſt, that he ſlew two Lionlike men of Moab, Hebr. two lions, but it is generally held, that they were men for their valour called Lions. 2. Hee ſlew a Lion in the time of Snow in a pit, the Lion, ſaith Joſephus, being deceived by the Snow that covered the pit fell into it, and roaring there ſo, as that the people neare were ſcared, hee went valiantly thither and ſlew the Lion. This by ſome is called in queſtion, whether it were true valour or temerity, becauſe although to ſlay a Lion, when a man is inforced to fight with him, be valour, as in Samſon and David, yet when there is no neceſſitie to do it, it is raſhneſſe, and by the Roman Lawes ſuch as fought with beaſts cauſeleſly onely for oſtentation of their ſtrength, were cenſured as infamous, and this they ſay was the caſe of Benaiah. But the commemoration of this in ſacred writ to his praiſe doth ſufficiently cleare him from all ſuch calumnies, hee did it to deliver the country from that feare, in which they were, as Davi do deliver his Lambe from the Lion caught him by the beard and ſlew him. 3. He ſlew an Egyptian, a goodly man, having a ſpeare in his hand, 1 Chron. 11.23. hee is ſaid to have beene of great ſtature, and his ſpeare like a Weavers beame, but Benaiah had onely a ſtaffe in his hand, and therefore plucking through his great valour his ſpeare out of his hand hee ſlew him with his owne ſpeare. This and the former fact of his are by the Hebrews expounded of Joab, who they ſay, was meant by the Lion, and Shimei meant by this Egyptian, for Benaiah ſlew them both: but neither the time nor circumſtances doe agree, wherefore it is onely mentioned by expoſitors and rejected as a putid comment; and becauſe Jerom hath it de tradit. Hebr. it is queſtioned, whether that booke were his or no. And for theſe his valiant geſts David ſet him over his guard, that is, as hath been ſaid before, over the Cherethites and Pelethites. Hebr. it is משמעתו rendred in the vulg. Latine, auricularium a ſecreto, his Privy Counſellour, Martyr, ad auditum ſuum, that is, ſaith hee, over his Privy Counſell, but hee approveth rather of the other expoſition, over his guard, who are ſet forth by his audience, becauſe they were alwayes at hand to heare his commands to execute them.

Next followeth Aſahel, who was before commended from his ſwiftneſſe of foot, hee was ſlaine being but a young man by Abner, then Elhanan the ſonne of Dodo, Chap. 21.19. the ſonne of Jare Oregim, of which names ſee there; it is probable, that he is not ſet after Aſahel, of whom no ſuch famous exploit is commemorated, but onely for honours ſake to Aſahel, who was neare a kin to David.

Myſtically by Davids longing after water out of the well of Bethlehem may bee underſtood his longing for the Meſſiah that ſhould bee borne there, who was made a ſacrifice for our ſinnes, and by his blood, as by water poured out, cleanſeth us from them, ſo many as beleeve in his name: thus the Ordin. Gloſſe applying alſo morally his refuſing to drinke of this water to his penitency for his unlawfull deſiring of the wife of Uriah, for according to the Gloſſe following Joſephus, hee is underſtood to have beene in Jeruſalem at that time in the fort of Zion, after his ſinne committed with Bathſhebah, but this agreeth not with the Scripture, wherein he is ſaid to have been then in the Cave of Odullam.

CHAP. XXIV.

1 Chron. 21,

AGaine the anger of the Lord was kindled againſt Iſrael, that hee moved David to ſay, goe and number Iſrael and Judah,* 1 Chron. 21.1. Satan ſtood up againſt Iſrael, and provoked David to number Iſrael. By comparing theſe two together wee ſee, that by the fury of the Lord Satan is meant, whom hee uſed in his wrath to ſtirre up David to ſinne, that hee might therefore bring a judgement upon the people, with whom hee was offended for their ſinnes. Hee brought one judgement of a three years famine, 2 Sam. 21. for the ſinne committed amongſt them in the matter of the Gibeonites, now they had alſo greatly ſinned otherwiſe, although it bee not here ſpecified, for which hee brought the judgement of the Plague in this Chap. Martyr conjectureth, that after that famine plenty being reſtored, and the people living in peace they were much corrupted in their manners, as is uſuall by ſuch meanes: and wee may adde, that all their enemies being ſubdued, they moſt probably grew ſecure, and having ſuch worthies, and they being ſo many, they truſted to their own ſtrength, and hereby the Lord was provoked thus to abate their number. And whereas it may ſeem, that if their ſinnes were the cauſe of this judgement, hee might have brought it upon them without Davids further ſtirring him up by numbring the people, it is true, but becauſe they had greatly ſinned againſt David alſo, whom he had choſen, by being ſo ready to follow other uſurpers as Abſalom and Sheba in rebelling againſt him; it ſeemed good unto the Lord to permit him thus to offend, that through him they might be puniſhed, who had alwayes forborn himſelf to take revenge upon them, that it might appeare, that God is the avenger of wrongs, and not avenge our ſelves, but commit it to him, as hee hath commanded. And that all may take notice, how farre ſtretching the ſinne of a King is, and therefore pray for their wel-doing above all others, as 1 Tim.

2. 1. They were before judged for Sauls ſinne, of which they were doubtleſſe guilty by giving aſſent thereunto, and now they are judged againe for Davids ſin, to which they were alſo acceſſary, by being together puft up by their great multitudes, and invincible forces. But if it were a ſin in David to command Qu. the people to bee numbred, it may juſtly both bee inquired, wherein that ſin lay, and alſo how God is ſaid to move him hereunto, ſeeing hee is the author of all good, but not of any evill? To the firſt of theſe it is generally anſwe-red, that pride was his ſin, for being puft up in beholding the catalogue of ſo many valiant men, which hee had, hee thought it would adde much to his glory to have a Regiſter made of all his other men alſo throughout his whole kingdome. Some thinke that hee ſinned, becauſe in numbering the people, Joſephus. hee cauſed not the tribute to bee gathered of each man for the ſanctuary, as Exod: 30.12. was commanded to bee done, when the people were numbred, that no plague might bee ſent amongſt them; for the Lord would have this one end alwayes of numbring the people, that an oblation might bee made for them, for the Titus Livius. reconciling of Gods favour towards them. And thus the heathen Romans, when the number of the people was taken, which was once in five years, ordained that a ſacrifice ſhould be offered for their health, of a ſow, a ſheep, and three bulls; and happily they learned this from the Hebrews. But David thought not upon this law, onely hee would have the people numbred for no other end, but that hee might know the number of them to bee lifted up the more. And if he had propounded this end, viz. to raiſe a tribute for the ſan-R. Kimbi. ctuary, ſaith R. Kimbi, unleſſe hee had had ſome other lawfull end of num-Teſtatus. bring, it had not been juſtifiable, for God would not have his people oppreſſed with tributes. To the ſecond, that God is not the author of any evill, as it is ſimply evill, but he ſuffereth it ſometime to bee done for a puniſhment of precedent ſinnes; as here, Satan by his ſuggeſtion moved David to number the people, as 1 Chron. 20. but the anger of God is ſaid to have done it in this place, becauſe hee being offended with Iſrael for ſinne, permitted Satan to work thus in David and gave him not the grace to withſtand ſuch a ſinfull motion: V. 2. but of this ſee more at large in my comment upon Rom. 9. Touching the number of the people, it is committed to Joab to bring it in, going through the V. 3. whole land from Dan, which was north, to Beerſhebah, which was ſouth. This hee was unwilling to, as knowing it to come from vaine-glory and therefore tending to the provoking of God to anger, but the King being reſolute, hee did it, and in nine moneths brought in the number of all, that were able to goe to warre: whereby wee may gather, that none were numbred under 20. and none above 60. which happily might bee as many more. And that none under 20. were appointed to bee numbred is expreſly ſaid, 1 Chron. 27. 23. becauſe the Lord had promiſed, that they ſhould bee innumerable, as the ſtarres of heaven. But it is ſaid, that not onely Joab, but the rulers of the people 1 Chr: 21.2. alſo were appointed to goe and number them, of which rulers it ſeemeth to be ſpoken, 1 Chron. 27. 16. that they were 12. of each Tribe one; and 2 Sam. 24.
V. 5,6. 4. The Captaines of the hoaſt are ſaid to have gone with Joab to number, which were 12. others, 1 Chron 27. 1, 2. The way that Joab went with the Captaines V. 7. was firſt over Iordan to begin with the Reubenites and Gadites firſt, which were fartheſt off eaſtward, then they came to Dan Iaan, and Zidon north; and laſtly, by the Cities of the Hivites and Canaanites weſtward to the ſouth of Iudah and Beerſhebah. And they finiſhed their numbring and brought in the number of all Iſrael 800000. and of Iudah 500000. at the end of nine moneths and twenty dayes to Jeruſalem; but 1 Chron. 21. 5. of Iſrael 1100000, and of Iu- dah 470000. For the reconciling of which difference, it is to bee underſtood, Teſtatus. that the divers Rulers of the Tribes had their ſeverall books, into which the people numbred were written, and out of them they were againe all written, or ſhould have been written into one book for the King: but becauſe the fact ſeemed abominable to Joab, hee brake off from ſetting down all the numbers into the Kings book, and no more came in to that, but 800000 of Iſrael, as in this place; but the Writer of the book of the Chron: gathering the whole number out of thoſe ſeverall books without cutting off any, ſet downe 1100000. And whereas hee maketh fewer by 30000 of the Tribe of Judah, then 2 Kings 24. Toſtatus thinketh, that ſo many were left out, becauſe they were unfit for war, being not ſo valiant; and this is the more probable, becauſe 1 Chron. 21. 5. to the men of Judah, the number of whom is there ſet downe, it is added, which drew the ſword, but not 2 Sam. 24. Or it may be thought, that not onely the men of Judah, which came of Judah, are numbred, 2 Sam. 24. but alſo Proſelytes of other Countries dwelling amongſt them and ſerving David, 1 Chro. 21. 5. they are left out, for there might be of theſe 30000. as Sallianus hath it. Peter Martyr thinketh, that Ioab gave up a leſſe number to David, becauſe the Tribe of Levi was left out of the number, and it may bee Ieruſalem was not yet numbred, nor the Kings bands. But if ſo, the number of Judah ſhould rather have been increaſed, 1 Chron. 21. whereas it is made leſſe, and it is ſaid expreſly of Iſrael, that they were 1100000. Levi and Benjamin not being numbred. Some thinke the difference to bee nothing, becauſe the leſſer number is contained in the greater, but who ſo being asked what number ſuch a man mentioned, ſhall ſay 8. for 11. cannot bee juſtified. Some thinke, that ſo many of the Tribe of Judah were ſmitten by the plague, and ſo were left out, 1 Chron. 21. and ſome, that 500000. are mentioned, 2 Sam. 24. although there lacked 30000. ob rotunditatem numeri. Jerom reſolveth it, that Joab found a greater number, but gave up a leſſe to the King, that hee might bee the leſſe puffed up. And when I conſider ſeriouſly that 1 Chron. 21. 6. The Tribe of Levi and of Benjamin hee numbred not, it ſeemeth to me to bee ſpoken in this ſenſe, hee put not the number of them into the booke exhibited to the King, the number indeed of all Iſrael, as it was taken in divers bookes, was 1100000. and of Judah 470000. but he cut off the Levites in that account and all Benjamin, which together might well bee 270000. that is, 300000. more to Iſrael, but 30000. leſſe to Judah, becauſe ſo many of the tribe of Levi might bee numbred amongſt them, 2 Sam. 24. but 1 Chron. 21. put in their proper place, that is, amongſt thoſe of Iſrael. And the rather may wee reſt ſatisfied in this reſolution, becauſe 1 Chron. 27. 24. it is ſaid, that Joab began to number, but left off becauſe of the Plague, neither was the number put into the Kings Chronicles, that is, the full number, as it goeth in the booke of the Chronicles.

Peter Martyr.

Afterwards Davids heart ſmote him, when hee had numbred the people, &c. Nine moneths and twenty dayes were firſt paſt, ſaith Martyr, wherein hee lay in this ſinne, which was double; 1 of pride, 2 of forgetting the Law of levying a tribute for the ſanctuary. But now it repenteth him greatly, by what meanes hee was brought to this is not ſaid, but that his heart ſmote him, the Spirit of God doubtleſſe working in his conſcience to make him conſider his great vanity and to bee humbled for it, which when hee was doing this thing hee conſidered not, as being a while left unto himſelfe, to ſhew what the very beſt are, if they bee not continually aſſiſted by the grace of God. In our new tranſlation it is, Verſ. 11. For when David was up in the morning the Prophet Gad came unto him, whereby it may bee gathered, that by his comming hee was put in minde of his ſinne and repented. But in the Hebr. it is not for, but and. Some thinke, that hee was ſmitten by ſome inward terrour ſent by the Lord to ſtirre him up. Howſoever, it is to bee noted, with what quietneſſe of mind and immunitie from trouble and pleaſure ſo ever, ſinne is committed, trouble and perplexity will come for it afterwards, and this ſweet will end in bitterneſſe, for the conſcience will not alwayes ſleepe, but at length awake and ſmite the ſinner, as it did our firſt parents alſo.

V. 11.

And David roſe in the morning, and the word of the Lord came to Gad, Davids ſeer, &c. that is, at the ſame time that hee cauſed Davids heart to ſmite him, that Joſephus. night he ſpake thus by viſion to Gad, who came unto him the morning following, and not before, by his admonitions to bring him to repentance, as Joſephus, who ſaith, that the Prophets admoniſhed him of his ſinne, and then hee repented, and prayed for forgiveneſſe. And the Lord uſed Gad to ſpeake unto him, and would not ſpeake immediately to him, as before hee had uſed Nathan, although David alſo was a Prophet, to ſhew his anger the more, as a father being offended with his childe dealeth with him by interlocutors to humble him the more, when hee ſeeth his fatherly affection thus eſtranged from him. Whereas 1 Chron: 21. 7. it is ſaid that God ſmote Iſrael and then David confeſſed his ſinne, and Gad came to him, v. 8. it is Hyſteron-proteron, or firſt in briefe it is ſhewed, that Iſrael was ſmitten, and then the order of Gods proceeding againſt them more at large.

V. 13. Gad then offered to David to chooſe one of theſe three judgements, either to flee three months before his enemies, or to ſuffer by famin ſeven yeares, or by a peſtilence of three dayes. Now this offer was made in mercy upon Davids repentance, to lenifie the ſuffering the more, becauſe when wee are conſtrained to endure miſery it is more grievous, then when wee voluntarily ſuffer it. For ſeven yeares famin, 1 Chron: 21. 11. it is three yeares famin, which is by Junius and others thus reconciled, here becauſe three yeares of famin had lately beene ch: 21. and now it was moſt likely was the fourth, wherein although God beganne to ſend raine, yet preſently there followed not fruitfulneſſe, ſeven yeares are ſpoken of, as including theſe and three more: but there becauſe no mention had beene made of thoſe three yeares famin before going, three yeares onely are named. Martyr and Pellican ſay, that ſeven a certaine number is put for an uncertaine, many being meant hereby. I preferre that of Junius, becauſe although no ſuch exact reckoning bee made, yet if three yeares more of famin had beene ſent now ſo ſoone after the other, it had beene of ſeven yeares continuance reckoning from the beginning to the end. Moreover for a three dayes peſtilence, 1 Chron:21.12. it is, three dayes the ſword of the Lord, even the peſtilence in the land, the angell of the Lord deſtroying throughout all the Coaſts of Iſrael; more expreſly noting, of what nature the peſtilence was, as in the execution of this judgement, is further declared, viz: deſtruction comming from the immediate hand of God and his Angels.

V. 14. David being thus put to it, anſwereth, Let mee fall into the hands of God, for his mercies are great, and not into the hands of man, and hereby, as expoſitours generally hold, hee meant, let us be ſmitten with three dayes peſtilence, and not with famin or ſword of the enemy, becauſe although even deſtruction by enemies may bee ſaid to be Gods hand, yet it is not ſo immediate, but men are uſed, as inſtruments; and although famins are ſent by God, yet hereby occaſion is given to ſeeke to men of other countries for reliefe, amongſt whom the Jewes were likely to bee miſuſed, as being of a religion differing from other Nations, and to heare their God reproachfully ſpoken of, as not able now any longer to ſuſtaine them in the country, to which he had brought them. In anſwering thus, David is thought by Martyr to have ſhewed both piety towards God, and love to his country. For by any of the other two judgements there could not but bee danger of great diſhonour to redound to God, by the blaſpheming of enemies, and Kings commonly can provide well enough for the feeding of themſelves in the time of famin, and for the ſafety of their owne perſons in time of warre, and their Subjects onely for the moſt part, and that the meaner ſort are ſwept away by either of theſe judgements. But when the immediate hand of God ſmiteth, as in peſtilences, the King is in danger as well as the Begger. Wherefore although his choice were given him, hee conceiving his ſinne to be the cauſe, voluntarily ſubmitted himſelfe to ſuch a judgement, as whereby he might be endangered as well as his people, a certaine token of a true penitent, patiently to beare even to the loſſe of life the Lords chaſtiſement. And hee ſhewed alſo a great deale of confidence in Gods goodneſſe, although hee had offended him, that wee might learne to truſt in Gods mercy, and hereby comfort our ſelves in our greateſt miſeries, for he preferred falling into Gods hands

Peter Martyr.

Note.

although hee ſaw that hee ſaw him, to be full of wrath againſt him.

Qu.

But how doth this ſaying agree with that 1 Sam. 2. 25. if a man ſinne againſt God, who ſhall plead for him, and Heb. 10. 31. It is a fearefull thing to fall into the hands of God? Anſw: it is meant when God puniſheth in wrath the obſtinate ſinner againſt the knowne will of God, not when the end of his puniſhing is mercy, as it is alwayes to the penitent, and this was Davids caſe.

V. 15.

So the Lord ſent a peſtilence, and there dyed from the morning to the time appointed 70000 men. Here becauſe it is not ſaid in three dayes expreſly, but from the morning to the time appointed, ſome gather, that it is meant, till the evening ſacrifice, becauſe the word עתמועד is commonly uſed to ſet forth that time, ſo the Hebrewes, and Vatablus, Rupertus, Comeſtor, Sa, Toſtatus ſaith it is the common opinion, that although a peſtilence of three dayes was propounded, yet out of Gods mercy to the penitent it continued but one day, ſo likewiſe Martyr, and Lyra, yea ſome make the time leſſe, ſaying that it continued but till dinner time, which was meant by the appointed time, ſo Joſephus, and after him Origen, Theodoret and Ambroſe, hereby extolling the mercy of God, who abridged a plague of three dayes into ſix houres, which was but the 24 part thereof. But Junius will have three dayes meant by the appointed time, becauſe that was the time ſet for this deſtruction, and Sallianus argueth ſtrongly for this, and by our Collect for a time of plague it ſeemeth, that this appointed time was ſo underſtood by the compilers thereof.

For my part, I cannot but aſſent rather to the moſt, 1. Becauſe at the entreaty of David God commanded the deſtroying Angel to ſtay his hand, therefore he ſuffered not the plague to deſtroy all the time that was ſet, for without bidding, the Angell would then have ceaſed. 2. Becauſe Gad came to David the ſame day to bid him build an Altar, and to ſacrifice, v: 18. that the plague might ceaſe. For the ſhorter time ſtood for by Joſephus, &c. there is no reaſon, becauſe the word here uſed is never found to ſet forth any ſuch time. If it bee urged againſt the other, and for the three yeares continuance, this was the time ſet, and if God varyed herefrom, he is mutable. Lyra anſwereth well, in all threatnings it is to bee underſtood, that it ſhall be ſo, unleſſe by repentance Gods wrath bee lenified, as towards Nineveh, yet alwayes temporall puniſhments are not averted, although there be repentance, as in another caſe of Davids ſinning, 2 Sam 12. Moreover here was no abſolute decree propounded of a peſtilence to endure three dayes, but onely it was put to Davids choice, and becauſe he ſo humbly ſubmitted to the ſtroake of God, and ſhewed himſelfe to have ſo great confidence in his mercy, it was none other like, but that God would deale with him in mercy in abridging the time of this judgement. Now for the manner how the people were deſtroyed by this peſtilence, Joſephus ſaith, they were conſumed divers wayes, ſome dying with vehement paine and bitter torment, ſome with leſſe paine even in the hands of the Phyſitians, who went about to cure them, others, as it were, being choaked, and darkeneſſe comming upon their eyes, and others, even as they were burying their dead ſuddenly. It is ſaid indeed, that an Angel was ſeene with a ſword in his hand, but this viſion or apparition, was only for a ſigne, to ſhew that they who died were ſlaine by Gods Angel, but not through the ſmiting of any viſible ſword, but of ſome mortiferous poiſon injected to their hearts, and preſently killing them, as if they had beene thruſt into the heart by a ſword. So that this peſtilence was not like other plagues, which come from the infection of the aire, but killed immediately by the miniſtry of Gods Angel.

Joſeph. lib: 7. c. 10.

For the number of 70000 ſaid here to be ſlaine, the Hebrewes have 270000 to make good that their reconciliation of the different numbers before ſpoken of, there being ſo many miſſing in Samuel of the number 1 Chr: 21, that the cauſe of this difference was, that in Samuel ſuch as dyed are left out, but in Chron: reckoned alſo, but they are herein contrary to all ſcripture, wherein, it is but 70000. And all theſe were men deſtroyed all over Iſrael, from Dan to Beerſheba, as the numbring had gone. The Hebrewes except Benjamin and Levi, of which Tribes, they ſay none were ſmitten, becauſe they were not numbred, but ſeeing the numbring alone was not the cauſe of this evill, but the peoples ſinnes, as was before ſhewed, it is not to be doubted, but that if theſe Tribes were guilty, ſome of them were deſtroyed alſo. If it be demanded, whether any Peter Martyr. beſides wicked men were now deſtroyed? Martyr anſwereth, that happily ſome who fell amongſt others, were not of the wicked, becauſe all are ſubject to the ſtroake of death, but becauſe Ezek. 9. the godly are marked to be ſpared, when Gods Angels deſtroyed others, I thinke it more probable, that the Angell was alſo now directed ſo, as that they were ſpared. And if it bee demanded whether all theſe were men onely that fell, it is anſwered, yes, for both men onely were numbred, and not women or children, and they onely had formerly rebelled against their King.

V. 16. 1 Chron. 21. 15. And when the Angell ſtretched out his hand upon Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, the Lord repented him of the evill, &c. 1 Chr. 21. 15. And God ſent an Angell to Jeruſalem to deſtroy it, and as hee was deſtroying, the Lord beheld, and repented, &c. Here it is not properly to bee underſtood, that God repented, for repentance is not incident unto him, 1 Sam. 15. 29. but it is ſaid thus, after the manner of men, becauſe when a man ſaith, that hee will doe any thing and doth it not, it is becauſe he 1 Sam. 25. repenteth, as David againſt Nabal, ſo when God altereth his purpoſe upon the repentance of men, hee is ſaid to repent per anthropopatheian, and this ſheweth, that the peſtilence threatned for three dayes continued not ſo long, but determined the firſt day, for otherwiſe how could God be ſaid to repent of the evill, but that he ſuffered not the deſtruction to extend ſo long as he had threatned?
Whereas it may ſeeme by the words here, that at the firſt comming of the Angell to Jeruſalem to deſtroy, the judgement ceaſed and ſo Jeruſalem eſcaped without any deſtruction, it is made plaine, 1 Chr. 21. 15. that the peſtilence deſtroyed there alſo, for it is ſaid, as the Angell was deſtroying there, the Lord repented of the evill, that is, to ſee ſo many cut off ſo ſuddenly, and although the men of Jeruſalem rebelled not with Sheba, yet they rebelled with Abſalom, V. 17. and ſo were as worthy to bee puniſhed. And it is added, v: 17. David ſpake unto the Lord when hee ſaw the Angell ſmite the people, ſo that the people in Jeruſalem were ſmitten alſo, 1 Chron: 21. 16. it is ſaid before this. David ſaw the Angel of the Lord ſtanding betweene heaven and earth with a ſword ſtretched over Jeruſalem, and hee and the elders of Iſrael being cloathed with ſackcloath fell upon their faces, v: 17. then David ſaid, Is it not I that commanded the people to bee numbred? it is I that have ſinned, but theſe ſheepe what have they done? let thy hand be againſt me, &c. He thought that God ſmote them onely for his ſinnes, and therefore hee ſpeaketh thus of the people, as being innocent, but, as was ſhewed before, God tooke occaſion onely upon his numbring to ſend this judgement, but hee had beene provoked before to wrath by their ſinnes which he now thus puniſhed. It ſhewed Davids great love and tender affection over the people committed to his government, that he ſpake thus for them, and all Kings ſhould from him take example to be likewiſe affected with the grievances and miſeries of their people. But what is it, that he prayeth that Gods hand might bee againſt him and his fathers houſe? was not his fathers houſe neareſt of all unto him? Anſw. He meant if the ſtriking of him would not ſuffice, his puniſhment ſhould be aggravated in cutting off his kindred alſo, who being about him, were more acceſſary to this ſinne then others; or he ſpeake by an Hyperbole.

V. 18. And Gad came that day to David, 1 Chron: 21. 18 The Angell of the Lord commanded Gad to goe to David, and he came and ſaid, Goe to the threſhing floore of Ornan, here it is Araunah the Jebuſite, and ſet up an Altar there, &c. the difference is nothing, God commanded by his Angell, or the Angell of God commanded, and the ſame man was called Araunah and Ornan. David muſt ſet up an Altar and ſacrifice thereon, that the peſtilence might ceaſe, a propitiation for ſinne being thus made, as ſometime a plague conſuming the people, Numb. 16. 47. Aaron tooke incenſe and went and ſtood with his cenſer betweene the living and the dead, and ſo the plague ceaſed. The Hebrewes ſay, that Zadok offered upon this Altar, but it is rather to bee thought, that it was Abiathar, becauſe Zadok miniſtred before the Tabernacle in Gibeon, but Abiathar before the Arke at Jeruſalem. But what need was there of ſacrificing now, when as the Lord had bidden the Angell before to ſtay his hand? Anſw. It is to bee underſtood, the humiliation of David and the Elders being premiſed, this direction being firſt given and ſacrifices being offered, then the deſtroying Angell was forbidden to ſmite any more, and not before, although it bee firſt placed, the hiſtoriographer making haſt to write of the compaſſion wherewith God was moved, and then ſhewing by what meanes, and in what order.

But why muſt David goe to the poſſeſſion of a Jebuſite, an heathen, and one of the ſeven nations appointed to bee deſtroyed before Iſrael? Kimbi contendeth, that hee was none of theſe Jebuſites, but of the kindred of Abimelech; howſoever, it ſeemeth that hee was a faithfull perſon, and a true hearted ſubject to David, and one, as ſome thinke, that holpe him to get the poſſeſſion of Zion. Davids being ſent to his floore, figured out the faith amongſt the Gentiles to whom the Jewes muſt come by beleeving in like manner, if ever they will be ſaved, for he that beleeveth with the Gentiles in Chriſt, ſets up an Altar amongſt them, ſeeing the Altar ſerved to figure out Chriſt, ſo Martyr, & the place, where Araunah his threſhing floore was, being mount Moriah, the Lord did now ſhew, that hee would have his houſe built there, and that this was the place choſen for the Arke to reſt in perpetually, 2 Chro. 3. 1. before David came to ſet up his Altar, 1 Chro. 21. 20. it is ſaid, that Ornan ſaw the Angell of God, and his foure ſons with him hid themſelves. Of the people of Iſrael it is not ſaid, that any ſaw the Angell but David, only Ornans eyes and his ſonnes were opened to ſee him, to ſhew, that the Gentiles ſhould be inlightned to ſee the Angell of the new Covenant, Chriſt Jeſus, but the eyes of the Jews ſhould be held from ſeeing, except ſome few ſelected ones. His ſonnes being terrified with the viſion hid themſelves, but it is ſaid, that hee was threſhing Wheat, and ſeeing David to come towards him hee went out of the floore to meet him; although ſome ſay, that both hee and his ſonnes hid themſelves; David then telling him the cauſe of his comming, viz. to buy the floore of him to build an Altar upon it to offer ſacrifice thereon, that the Plague might bee ſtayed, hee offered to give it him, and Oxen for ſacrifice, as a King. Hebr. Araunah, a King, whereupon Vatablus and others gather, that hee was King of the Jebuſites, and now a tributary to David, and a Proſelyte imbracing the true Religion. Some Hebrewes gather from this that David would not build an Altar upon his floore, but being firſt bought of him, that hee was an Idolater of the heathen, and this was the cauſe why he would needs buy it. But it is more probable, as was ſaid before, that having lived ſo neare unto David now about 30. yeers hee was a convert, or otherwiſe, David would not have ſuffered him; moreover his liberall offer ſhewed his goodneſſe and deſire to further this ſervice of God, which David came about for the good of the people, unto whom hee was united by imbracing the ſame Religion. And becauſe David knew, that this floore muſt be perpetually uſed for the ſervice of God and for the building of a Temple there, and not at this time onely, there was good reaſon that hee ſhould buy it. Moreover it is ſaid, Prov. 3. 7. Honour God with thy ſubſtance, and Eccleſ. 34. 24. hee that ſacrificeth of the ſubſtance of the poore, is as one that ſacrificeth the ſonne before the father. And it was for Davids ſin and the peoples, that ſacrifice was now to bee made, therefore it muſt bee his coſt, and not a ſtrangers. And it is ſaid, that Araunah offered not onely the floore, but the Oxen, that is, ſaith Junius, the Oxen, which troad out the Corne which were at hand, and the threſhing inſtruments, and other inſtruments of Oxen for wood, that is, the wood workes, wherewith the Corne was threſhed, and which were uſed about the Oxen in this labour, for wood to burne the ſacrifice withall, becauſe they were both there ready and moſt apt to burne as being dry and ſeare, 1 Chron. 21. 23. it is added, and Wheat for the meat-offering, for beſides burnt-offerings there were peace offerings, in which fine flowre was uſed.

CHAP. I.

V. 1. NOW King David waxed old, and they covered him with cloathes, but he gat no heate.] 1 Chron. 22, this being omitted and what elſe followeth in this chapter, it is ſhewed, how David provided for the building of the Lords houſe, and ſpake of the youth of Salomon his ſonne and of the greatneſſe of this worke, &c. for all related in that chapter and thenceforth to the end of 1 Chron. muſt needs be yeelded to have been done after the inauguration of Salomon to the Kingdome, becauſe David ſpeaketh of Salomons building the Temple, which was not made known to the people till after the ſaid inauguration, the manner of which is ſet forth here. For although David had long before determined, and God had ſo appointed, that Salomon ſhould reigne after him, yet hereby it appeareth, that the very Princes knew not of it, becauſe Ioab and Abiathar went with Adonijah to make him King, as thinking that of right it belonged to him, as to Davids eldeſt ſonne then living, and not knowing any thing to the contrary.

To begin then with the hiſtory of this chapter, as being firſt in order, David is here ſaid to have been old, viz. 70. as may be gathered from 2 Sam. 5.4,5. But touching his coldnes at this age, becauſe it was extraordinary, divers conjecture diverſly. The Rabbins ſay, that it was a puniſhment layd upon him, that no cloathes could keepe him hot, becauſe he once cut off the lap of Sauls garment. Toſtatus, that he had the palſie; ſome that this coldneſſe came upon him, when he ſaw the Angel with his ſword ſtretched over Ieruſalem: others impute it to the loſſe of his blood in warre, and ſome to the old age of his parents, when he was begotten. But the true cauſe indeed was partly his great paines taken in his youth, and the hardſhip which he endured in body, when he fled from Saul, and lived ſometime in one place, and ſometime in another ten yeeres together, enduring the brunts of many warres; partly the trouble of his minde being often in great ſtreights, and much perplexed for his childrens wickedneſſe; partly many ſickneſſes, as we may gather from divers of his Pſalmes, all which together waſted and dryed up his radicall heat, whereupon this coldneſſe enſued. But though he were cold in body, his underſtanding continued good ſtill, as appeareth by his wiſely ordering of every thing about the Temple, and the ſpeeches made by him to his ſonne Salomon and to his Princes before his death, although the coldneſſe of old age is generally obſerved by the Phyſitians to be a duller of the wit, whereby they, that are very aged become fooliſh and doting. But as Martyr noteth, not onely David was kept from this, but alſo many others, who were very wiſe and judicious in age. Plato wrote at 80 yeares of age, and Iſocrates at 95. and Pythagoras, Xenocrates, and Democritus; and Sophocles; likewiſe Themiſtocles in his old age grieved that he muſt dye, when he began to be wiſe.

Lyra yeeldeth 3. of theſe reaſons, his loſſe of blood, when in warre he received many wounds. 2. his feare at the ſight of the angel. 3. his offence in cutting off his Lords garment in the cave.

V. 2, 3. His ſervants ſeeing that no clothes could heat him, propounded another way that is, a young Virgin to be brought unto him to lye in his boſom, and ſo Abiſhag a faire Virgin was brought unto him, and ſhee miniſtred unto him, &c. These his ſervants are generally held to be his Phyſiti[illegible] who being carefull of his good, would have this remedy provided againſt hi[illegible]ordinary coldneſſe. If it be demanded, whether it were lawfull? It is anſw[illegible]that without doubt he took her to wife, for he had put away his concubines ev[illegible]e Abſaloms defiling of them, and his wife Bathſhebah and others, whom he had formerly taken, were probably too old to ſupply this his defect by lying with him. Yet Jerom holding it abſurd to underſtand this to bee done according to the letter, expoundeth it altogether allegorically, of wiſedome, which in his old age hee had, and the heat of zeal warming him, when his body was ſo cold. But both Lyra, and Martyr and other Expoſitours confute this, because Adonijah afterwards deſired this woman to wife. And it is added, the King knew her not, to ſhew that although ſhe lay in his boſom and cheriſhed him, yet nature being now ſpent, he had no carnall knowledge of her, but only he took her for his neceſſitie to wife, and this ſheweth, that ſhe was a true woman according to the letter. That he took her to wife is the opinion of all Expoſitours, but onely of Toſtatus, who ſeemeth to be of another minde, but whether this fact be juſtifiable in David is doubted; becauſe it was an injury to the woman, foraſmuch as he was not now able to do the office of an huſband. Martyr ſaith, that if ſhe knowing the caſe conſented, ſhe was not injured, and it might be thought, that by phyſicall helps having her he might come to more heat and ſtrength. Laſtly, it was for the good of the kingdom.

V. 5. Then Adonijah the ſon of Haggith advanced himſelf, and ſaid, I will be king, and prepared him chariots and horſemen and 50. men to run before him. He trod in the very ſteps of Abſalom, and accordingly was ſoon cut off, as he was well worthy for his ambition. The thing that put him on to this ambition, was his fathers indulgence,

V. 6. who it is ſaid never reproved him, v. 6. and his priority in age, for he was the eldeſt now living, being next to Abſalom, and beautifull as he. When Ely was thus indulgent to his ſonnes, the Lord dealt more ſeverely with him, but their wickedneſſe indeed was greater to the bringing of Gods ſervice into contempt. But it was doubtleſſe a ſinne in David to wink at his ſonnes wickedneſſe, for he could not be ignorant of his ambitious proceedings, although ſome think that he knew not of it, becauſe v. 11. Nathan ſaid to Bathſhebab, Adonijah reigneth and David is ignorant of it. But although he knew not of that particular, it proveth not, that he was ignorant of his preparations of chariots and horſemen, &c. For although he came not abroad, it is moſt probable that ſome about him told him of it. Whereas ſome excuſe David, although he knew of it, ſaying, that being his eldeſt ſon he might permit him this pomp, not ſuſpecting to what it tended: for so ſoon as he heard of his uſurping the kingdom, he oppoſed him. It is anſwered by

Martyr, and others, that he ſhould have called him in queſtion about it, eſpecially ſeeing that Abſalom had made the like preparations before to the ſame end. The

V. 7. aſſiſtants of Adonijah were chiefly Ioab, and Abiathar; Ioab the Captain of the Lyra. Hoſt took part with him, becauſe he feared, if he ſtayed, till David appointed his ſucceſſour in the Kingdom, it would go ill with him in reſpect of his great wickedneſſe againſt the will of the King in ſlaying Abner, Abſalom and Amaſa, to prevent which he thought it his wiſeſt way to provide for his own ſafetie by ſetting up another King, whoſe favour he might by this means make ſure unto him. But on Gods part, he permitted it, that Ioab at length might come to the puniſhment which he had deſerved. Abiathar the high prieſt alſo took part with him, becauſe, as the Hebrews ſay, ſince the time of Abſaloms conſpiracie, the Lord had not given anſwer by him, wherefore he feared that he ſhould be put down from the high-prieſthood, if another King were made without him. But on Gods part, he permitted it, that his threatning againſt the family of Ely, of which he was, might be fulfilled; occaſion being hereby taken to remove the prieſthood from him to Zadok. Moreover they ſaw that David was now ſo feeble, that they thought he could make no reſiſtance to their proceedings, and Solomon, if they knew of the Kings determination to make him King was ſo young, that they feared not him, he being now, as the Hebrews ſay but 12. years old. Yet by Gods providence there was a diviſion amongſt the great ones of the land, for Nathan the Prophet, and Zadok and Benajah, V. 8. and other mightie men of David were not for Adonijah with them, and ſo they were diſappointed of their purpoſe, as hereafter is ſhewed.

V. 9. And Adonijah ſacrificed oxen and ſheep, and other fat things by the ſtone of Zoheleth near to En Rogel, V. 10. and he invited all his brethren the kings ſons, and the men of Iudah the kings ſervants; except Nathan, &c. and Solomon. Of En Rogel ſee before, 2 Sam. 17. 17. it was not farre from Ieruſalem. Adonijah for the more proſperous beginning of his raign pretended pietie by ſacrificing, but God abhorreth Prov. 15. 8. ſuch ſacrificing, and by feaſting the people with him he ſought to win the more love. But ſuch as he ſuſpected would not conſent to his proceedings, he invited not unto it, as Zadok, Nathan, Benaiah, &c.

V. 11. And Nathan ſaid to Bathſhebah Solomons mother, &c. Here follow the means, whereby God overthrew all the preparations of ambitious Adonijah, and advanced Solomon the ſooner to the Kingdom, which he had promiſed him. It was not by the means of men of might, but by Nathan a prophet and Bathſhebah, a woman, weak inſtruments, and ſuch as he and his companie doubtleſſe contemned, accounting her no better then an adultereſſe, and Solomon for whom ſhe and the prophet ſtood, no better, then the ſon of one infamous for whoredom and unworthy to reign over them. But they knew well enough, that they did but kick againſt the pricks, in ſeeking to fruſtrate Gods determination, of which it appeareth, that they were not ignorant, becauſe amongſt all his brethren Adonijah left Solomon alone out, as a competitour of the kingdom, when, he invited them; for the appointing of Solomon to be King is expreſly mentioned, 1 Chron, 22. 9. See here as Martyr ob- P. Martyr. Note. ſerveth, how God by weak means confoundeth the mightie, and worketh for the accompliſhment of his own will, and the more the wicked enemies of ſuch as God loveth labour to hinder their advancement, by his over-ruling power their contrary endeavours are made to work for the haſtening thereof. But what did Nathan ſay to Bathſhebah? V. 12, 13. he counſelled her to go in to the King, and to tell him of Adonijah his uſurping the kingdome, and to urge him with his oath, whereby he had ſworn unto her, that her ſon Solomon ſhould be king after him. When David took this oath, it is no where ſaid, but it is plain, that he did, for he acknowledgeth it v. 30. Of the Rabbins conceit hereupon ſee before, 2 Sam. 12. 24. The reaſon why Nathan was ſo carefull for Solomon, was becauſe he knew it to be the will of God, that he ſhould be king, and happily Bathſhebah had told him of Davids oath made unto her, and it is thought, that Solomon was by David committed to his tuition, that he might by the inſtructions of ſo holy a man be the better fitted to manage ſuch weightie affairs, as he was deſtined unto. Pellican thinketh Pellican. that he having fore-told unto the King, that Solomon, whom he was ſent to call Iedidiah, ſhould reign after him and build God an houſe, David the King thereupon making that oath, was now ſent to remember him of theſe things, that he might do accordingly.

V. 15. Bathſhebah then going in to the King, after due reverence done ſpeaks unto him, V. 22, 23, 24, &c. as Nathan had directed her, and hereupon Nathan alſo came in and ſeconded her, ſo as that the king ſware again, that Solomon ſhould reign. Then Bathſhebah doing low reverence the ſecond time prayed, that the king might live for ever, that is, as Pellican, in the world to come, for ſhe ſaw that he could not live long in this; for although the everlaſting life be but little ſpoken of in the old Teſtament, yet it is not to be doubted, but that the faithfull then had the hope thereof, as we now have.

V. 31. 33. Then the King commanded to call unto him Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah, and he ſaid, take the ſervants of your Lord, and ſet Solomon my ſonne upon my mule, &c. By the ſervants of their Lord he meant the Cherethites and Pelethites, which were his guard, of whom Benaiah was Captain, 2 Sam. 8. 18. and therefore when they went according to Davids direction to anoint Solomon King, it is ſaid, Then went Zadok, Nathan, Benaiah, and the Cherethites and Pelethites, verſ. 38. ſee the ſame phraſe alſo, 2 Sam. 20. 7. Solomon to anoint him, was Gihon, and the ſame, ſaith Pellican, was alſo called Shiloh, where waters ran continually, and to this place he would have him brought to be anointed, to ſhew the perpetuitie of his kingdom, as the waters there did run perpetually; and he muſt be anointed by the prieſt and the Prophet, as Samuel had before anointed Saul and David, both to ſhew the graces of the ſpirit, with which the king muſt be indued, and alſo that he ſhould be ſubject and ready to hearken to the prieſts and prophets inſtructions, who could beſt inform him of the will of God. And he would have him to ride upon his own mule, and to be guarded by his ſervants to ſhew, that it was done by his authoritie, that all the people might take notice of it, and the more readily obey and follow him; for it was unlawfull for any man to ride upon the Kings mule, but onely for the King. And to the ſame end he would have the trumpet ſounded, and laſtly acclamations added, God ſave King Solomon; The grace of God which was needfull for him for the good of the kingdom, being thus deſired by all. Martyr by his anointing in this place, where the waters come from the foot of mount Sion, and are ſaid to run ſoftly, underſtandeth the condition of a King to be ſet forth, he ſhould govern mildely as much as may be. And for the anointing of Kings, he ſaith, it was a ſacrament inſtituted of God, and when it was rightly uſed, hereby guifts were given, whereby Kings were the better inabled to their office. None were anointed, that we read of amongſt the Iews before Saul, and after him David; but there had been no need, ſaith R. Kimbi, and Levi, that his ſon ſhould have been anointed alſo, had it not been for Adonijah, the competitour of the kingdom, becauſe the father was anointed not onely for himſelf, but for his poſteritie, but this is onely their conceit.

According to the Kings directions they did; and Solomon was made King and ſate upon Davids throne. But of what age he then was, is not agreed amongſt Expoſitours. The Hebrews, whom many follow, ſay that he was but 12. and to this Ierom ſeemeth to aſſent, becauſe David ſaid of him, that he was young and tender. And whereas it is objected, then he muſt have begotten Rehoboham at 10. or 11. years of age, becauſe he was 40. when Solomon died, and Solomon by this account was at his death but 52. He anſwereth, that although in the common courſe of nature one cannot beget a childe ſo young, yet extraordinarily at ſome time it may be ſo done, when God will have it; as he ſaith in his time a Nurſe was gotten with childe by a boy of 10. years old, whom ſhee laſciviouſly provoked unto it, for the diſcovering of her ſo great wickednes. Others yet hold, that Solomon was not ſo young, when he entred upon this royall dignity, but 18. or 20. years old: for Toſtatus upon that ſpeech of David to him, 1 King. 2. 9. thou art a wiſe man, ſaith that Solomon was now 17. or 18. years old; Lyra that he was 20; ſome that he was 24. In the ſacred hiſtory there is nothing ſaid of his age, when he began to reign, or when he died, but onely that he reigned 40. years, and that in his old age, his wives turned his heart away ſo as that he ſerved idols; which implieth, that he was an old man, before he died, and therefore certainly 60. at the leaſt. And Ioſephus ſaith nothing of his age when he was made King, but moſt erroneouſly of his age, when he died, that he was 80. But we may well conjecture, that he could not be ſo little as 12. when he began his reign, although both Ierom held ſo, and Euſeb. ex Eupolemo, Iſidor. de vita ſanctor. Ignatius Epiſt. ad Magneſ. &c. for they all took it from the Rabbins, and did not ſo duly examine it: Firſt, becauſe, as was ſaid before, otherwiſe he could not have been ſaid by his father to be a wiſe man, and one that of himſelf knew what was beſt to be done. 2. Becauſe he was old ſome years before he died. 3. Becauſe he begat Rehoboam 41. yeares before the end of his raign, which if it had been at 11. it could not bee without a miracle, and it agreed not with the diſcretion of his father to marry him ſo young, or with his ſanctimony to be then ſo libidinous. Laſtly, the courſe of the hiſtory from the time of his birth hitherto evinceth, that he was much above 12. For Amnon was hated of Abſalom for the abuſe offered to Thamar 2. years after his birth; then he ſlew him and fled and ſtayed at Geſhur 3. yeares, after that he lived apart at Ieruſalem 2. years, then by Ioab being brought to David he muſt needs have 2 yeares at the leaſt for preparation before his rebellion; laſtly his rebelling and being ſubdued, and the Kings returning again to Ieruſalem could not be be leſſe then 1 yeare, which altogether make 10 yeares. After this followed Shebah his rebelling and being ſubdued and a famine of 3 yeares; then 4 battels and victories over the Philiſtians 4 yeares: after which, David being at reſt, compiled a ſong unto God, and made great preparations for the temple in 2 yeares at the leaſt; then the people were numbred and plagued; after all which he being old and cold, for a time his ſervants ſought to heat him otherwiſe, but at length brought Abiſhag to him, and when he had kept in thus a year, Adonijah rebelled, and Solomon was ſet up againſt him, being by this computation full 20. whereas it is objected that he was young and tender, it is anſwered, he was ſo indeed, although of this age, in reſpect of that office, which he now came unto, and the weighty buſineſſe to be done of building the Temple. V. 41. When Solomon was anointed King, there being great ſhouting & rejoycing, and the ſound of trumpets, Ioab & they with Adoniiah heard it; and enquiring the reaſon, and underſtanding, that David had made Solomon King, they were afraid, and fled every man to his own and left Adoniiah, who alſo fled and laid hold upon the hornes of the Altar. He that brought the newes to Adoniiah and his company, was Ionathan the ſonne of Abiathar, the ſame man that was uſed as an intelligencer before for David, 2 Sam. 17. 17. He was moſt probably left behind by his Father, if there were any occaſion, to come after and certify; as he now did. Then Ioab whom it concerned moſt to hearken after any tumult ariſing, becauſe he was the generall, entertained Ionathan with flattering words ſaying, that he was a good man and brought good newes; wherein he ſpake, as he hoped, and would have had it, remembring alſo the good newes brought by him in times paſt unto David. But Ionathan denyed that hee came with good newes, and then he told all that had been done; whereupon they were ſo diſmayed, that they fled, and Adoniiah fled to Gibeah, for there the tabernacle was, and the altar, ſo taking ſanctuary for feare of Solomon, in danger to be cut off; by whom he knew, that he was for his uſurping of the Kingdome. Lyra. This altar was not that of incenſe, to which the Prieſts onely might come: but the other which was for ſacrifices, whereunto the people might come ſometimes. Hee that being in danger fled hither was ſometimes protected, as in a city of refuge: as we may gather, Exod. 21. 14. wherefore Adoniiah, his caſe growing deſperate, ſought to this place, but in vain, had not Solomon the King in ſome other reſpect ſpared him; for he cauſed him to be brought from thence, and Ioab afterwards who fled thither alſo and ſlew him, 1 King. 2. 30. not fearing to doe ſo to a guilty perſon for the ſanctimony of the place, ſeeing holy places were for the protection of ſuch as offended unwittingly, but not otherwiſe: as hath been before ſhewed upon Exod. 21. 14. Note. Adoniiah in flying to Gods houſe in time of danger, but without benefit; doth not unaptly ſet forth ſuch as come to God by prayer at ſuch times, whom to ſerve they never regard at other times, but it is to be feared, that they all ſhall ſpeed no better then he did and Ioab. V. 51. Solomon hearing where Adoniiah was, ſent to fetch him thence, and he requiring that the King would ſweare unto him, that he would not ſlay him, Solomon promiſed by his meſſengers that if hee would ſhew himſelfe a worthy man, there ſhould not one haire of him fall to the ground; but contrariwiſe, if wickedneſſe were thenceforth found in him: P. Martyr. for ſo it muſt be underſtood, becauſe he deſired ſaying, Let King Solomon ſweare unto me this day; that is, ſay the Hebrewes, remitting what hath been paſſed before this day, that hee will not ſlay me for that. The new King was eaſily intreated, as being willing to begin his reign with ſhewing mercy, and promiſed, that not a haire of him ſhould fall to the ground; that is, that he ſhould not have the leaſt hurt for his former ambition, ſo that hee refreined from all ambitious courſes for time to come. V. 53. And thus Adoniiah was brought from the altar, not by force, but by perſwaſion; and came and did Homage to Solomon, the elder brother younger, as Ioſephs elder brethren had to the worſhipped him, The myſtery. the ſubmiſſion of the greateſt in the world unto Chriſt, who was at the firſt neglected and contemned, (as Solomon had been) being herein typified. And hereby Martyr will have the Popes deiection at the laſt figured out; when the trumpet of the Archangell ſhall ſound, who hath uſurped the Kingdome, and feaſted with his flatterers and followers, not regarding Gods faithfull ſervants, but neglecting them, as hereticks, as Adoniiah did Zadok, Nathan, and Benaiah. Then Solomon ſaid, goe to thine houſe, meaning, that he ſhould thenceforth lead a private life, and not intermeddle with ſtate matters, or ſhould hold ſuch pompe of horſes and chariots, and men to run before him as [illegible] he had done.

CHAP. II.

HEre is ſet forth firſt the death of David and his exhortation made to his ſon Solomon before his death. But before this and after Solomons Coronation, there are divers other memorable paſſages recorded. 1 Chron. 22. &c. which becauſe they are wanting here, bee there ſupplyed; as 1. His providing of workmen and materials for the building of the houſe of God, v. 2, 3, 4, 5.

1 *Chron.*22.2. 3, 4, 5.

The chapter beginneth with theſe words, then David ſaid, this is the houſe of the Lord and the altar of burnt offrings for Iſrael, and he commanded to gather together the ſtrangers that were in the land of Iſrael, &c. To whom ſaid he thus? doubtleſſe to his Princes and Elders of the people aſſembled together after Solomons inauguration, that they might take notice of his ſucceeding his Father in the Kingdome and be obedient unto him, although this bee not expreſſed; for verſe 6. hee called for Solomon and ſpake unto him, and v. 17. to the Princes, and ch. 23. 1, 2. it is expreſſely ſaid, that he gathered together all the Princes, Prieſts, and Levites, after that he had made Solomon King; and they ſpake to him and to them, ch. 28. and 29. and that which is ſpoken in this chapter, could not be before he was made King, becauſe nothing was known thereof, till the day that it was done. It was then moſt probably at that time, all the ceremonies about Solomons inauguration being ended, and many comming voluntarily upon this occaſion to the Court, that David ſpake ſo unto them: after which, there was an aſſembling of all the Princes generally, as ch. 23. He being aſcertained, as was before ſaid, that the threſhing floore of Arunah was the place choſen of God, ſignified the ſame to all about him; and he called it the houſe of God becauſe his houſe ſhould be built there. Some think that this was ſpoken before Solomons Coronation, immediately after the ſigne given there by fire from heaven, and after he ſpake; as v. 5, 6. &c. and immediately prepared for the building of the Temple there, gathering together for this purpoſe workmen in abundance, even all the ſtrangers in the land, of whom the Maſons only are here ſpoken of, but chap. 28. 21. all manner of skilfull workmen, and 2 Chron. 2. 17. their number is ſet downe 150000. and 3600. who theſe ſtrangers were, ſee 1 Kings 9. 20. 21. the children of the Amorites, Canaanites, and Perizzites, &c.

whom the children of Iſrael could not caſt out, a poore and contemptible ſort of people, theſe were imployed in the work of Gods houſe to figure out the deſpiſed Gentiles gathered together under the Goſpell to make the ſpirituall Temple, none of the Iewes being ſet to this work, but made men of warre, Princes, Rulers of his Chariots, and Captaines, &c.

And he prepared yron in abundance, and braſſe without weight, to make the brazen ſea and other veſſels of braſſe, and it is ſaid to be without weight by an hyperbole, to ſhew the wonderfull great abundance thereof, and abundance of Cedar wood, and v. 5. it is ſaid præparavit omnes impenſas, vulg. lat. yet 2 Chron. 2. 8. Solomon ſends to Hiram for Cedar trees.

and v. 14. having ſpoken of timber that he had prepared, he ſaith, and thou maiſt adde thereto: hereby it appeareth, that the number of Cedars uſed about the Temple was exceeding great, ſeeing when David had provided ſo many, Solomon yet had need to provide many more. And he would have the Temple built with Cedars, becauſe it was a wood incorruptible, to ſhew the incorruption of the Church.

Then David exhorted the Princes of the people to help his ſon Solomon in this work, &c. Notwithſtanding the great preparations which he had made, the work was ſo great and ſumptuous, that he thought not all this ſufficient for it, but requi-

V. 1. 2. 1 Chr. ch. 23. David growing nearer and nearer to his end, after the coronation of Solomon, having before ſpoken ſomewhat touching the intended building of an houſe for God, now cauſeth all the Princes, Prieſts, and Levites to be aſſembled together unto him, that he might appoint to every one his office about this houſe, and the things thereof; and that the Princes being before prepared might bring in their contributions toward this work, that every one knowing what he was to doe, might be ready to performe it: and ſo without delay after his death, this building might goe forwards. And firſt they who are named laſt, were numbred; viz. the Levites, and their offices diſtinguiſhed; then the Prieſts, ch. 24. and laſtly, the Princes; ch. 27.
V. 3. The Levites are ſaid to be numbred from 30 yeares and upward, yet v 24. and 27.
Pellican. from 20 yeares old. For the reconciling of which difference, ſome ſay that there was a fault in the writer, 30 being put for 20. ſome, that to theſe words from 30 Sallianus. yeares old and upward, is to be underſtood olim, in times paſt; but now by a new way of numbring, to which David was directed by divine inſpiration, they were numbred from 20, as then from 30, Num. 4. 30. The Vul. lat. followed by Lyra and Hugo hath it in both places, from 20 yeares old and upwards. I doe not think it ſafe to yeild, that there was any corruption in the text, but rather the meaning is, that being numbred as was of old appointed from 30. their number was 38000 but now after the building of the temple, the labour of carrying the Ark from place to place being no more impoſed upon them, to which they were thought unfit, before they attained to the age of 30, David appointed that they ſhould hereafter be numbred from 20. and come in to helpe in this ſervice. Of this number 24000 V. 4. were appointed to the miniſtery of the houſe of the Lord; 6000 to be Rulers and Iudges, 4000 doore-keepers, and 4000 ſingers. The ſervice about the houſe of God, Lyra. wherein theſe 24000 were imployed, was as Lyra hath it, the excoriating and Dyoniſ. Caietan. waſhing of beaſts for ſacrifice, and divers other things; ſo likewiſ: Dioniſ. and Caietan.
Toſtatus. But Toſtatus better; they were to take the ſacrifices to waſh and bring them to the Preiſts, they were alſo to prepare floure, wine, oyle, ſalt, and frankincenſe, and to ſee that wood and water might never be wanting, when the Gibeonites had firſt hewed the wood and drawne the water, according to the office appointed unto them, and to be at hand to ſerve the Preiſts in their miniſtery, as they ſhould require them. For the excoriating of beaſts belonged properly to the Preiſts, and not unto the Levites; but when extraordinarily neceſſity required their help herein, as we may gather from 2 Chron. 29. 34. the Preiſts were few, ſo as that they could not excoriate the beaſts, but the Levites helped them herein. Touching the 6000 Pellican. Rulers and judges, theſe Pellican will have to be as Rectours of Churches throughout the kingdome, inſtructours of the people in the lawes and ordinances of God, and ſome of them inſtructours of the junior Levites, and ſome as Iudges to reſolve Lyra. the right according to the law in divers caſes: Lyra ſaith, that ſome will have the Rulers, or Prepoſiti, to be ſuch as were ſet over the holy veſſels or treaſures, to keep them; and the Iudges teachers of the people: but according to others, they were both one. Viz. Teachers, and more probably the Porters were ſome of them keepers of the treaſures of the temple, locking up and making faſt the doores wherein they lay, and opening them as occaſion ſerved. Ioſephus ſaith, that theſe Rulers and Ioſeph: antiq. l. 4. Iudges were the ſame, the firſt word ſetting forth the dignity, and the other the
c. 8. office; and they were joyned two to every Iudge in leſſer cauſes, in every city of Iſrael; that by their aſſiſtance, they telling what the law of God was, hee might proced in judgement rightly, which is not improbable, but withall it is to be underſtood, that they were teachers of the people in their Synagogues alſo. Touching the 4000 Porters, they were not only to watch and ward at the gates and doors of the temple, to keep unclean perſons from comming in, and to open and ſhut them, but alſo, as was ſaid before, to keep the treaſures, holy veſſels, end veſtiments. And whereas ſo great numbers might ſeem too many, it is to be underſtood, that the

Porters and others, that miniſtred about the temple, ſerved there by courſe, ſome retiring home to their own houſes, and others comming in their roomes continually, wherefore, v. 6. David is ſaid to have diſtributed them by their courſes.

Touching the 4000 ſingers, it is ſaid that they ſhould ſtand morning and evening to ſing praiſes to God at the times of ſacrificing, and on the Sabbaths and new Moones, &c. v. 30, 31, 32, and to play upon inſtruments of muſick, ch. 25. 6. and they were divided by their courſes, v. 9. which were 24. This ſinging and muſick whilſt the ſacrifices were offering, was to ſtirre up mens minds to praiſe God, and to grace this part of Gods worſhip, which otherwiſe might ſeeme to have been but a butchering and dreſſing of meats. Over the ſhew-bread, and the ſacrifice of fine floure and unleavened bread; and every weight and meaſure. The Vulg. lat. before V. 29. theſe words hath it, But the Preiſts over the ſhew-bread, and v. 30. but the Levites to ſtand and ſing. Which words Toſtatus ſaith, were added for further explication; becauſe to offer the ſhew-bread, belonged to the Preiſts. Levit. 21. 6. leaſt it ſhould Toſtatus. be thought now contrary to the law to be otherwiſe appointed. But without this addition it may well be underſtood, that the Levites were to make this bread and to bring it to the Prieſt to be ſet before the Lord, and to take them away when new was to be ſet on; and to look that the fine floure were pure, and the juſt weight and meaſure: bringing it alſo to the Prieſt, that he might offer it. See chap. 9. 32. Here are 5 ſorts of Levites ſet forth, Miniſters, Iudges and Rulers, Porters, Singers, and Prieſts, which ſerved about the temple: in imitation whereof, Lyra. there are in the Church of Rome. 1. Preiſts, that offer the bread and wine in the Sacrament. 2. Deacons, who carry it to the people. 3. Sub-deacons, who prepare it, by putting it into the holy veſſels. 4. Acolithites, who make it. 5. Exorciſts, who caſt out evill ſpirits, as Iudges do malefactours. 6. Doore-keepers, who keep out unbeleivers and excommunicated perſons out of the Church. 7. Readers. Thus Lyra; but for all theſe we read only in the nevv Teſtament, of Prieſts, and Deacons.

The Levites being diſtinguiſhed, as before, ch. 23. into Miniſters, Iudges, Porters and Singers; and touching thoſe that miniſtred about the ſacrifices, vvho vvere 24000, it being ſhevved only in generall, that they vvere diſtinguiſhed by their courſes, v. 6; Novv followveth the diſtinction of the Prieſts by their courſes in particular, and of ſome principall Levites, vvho vvere next in honour to the Preiſts in generall, and over all the reſt. v. 20. The Preiſts were diſtinguiſhed by Eleazar and Ithamar, the tvvo ſonnes of Aaron, the eldeſt of each family being from generation to generation, the cheifeſt of all the Preiſts of that family; and at this preſent Zadok was the cheifeſt of Eleazars, and Abiathar, or Abimelech (for one and the ſame man was ſet forth by both theſe names) of Ithamars. Now becauſe there vvere many more of the family of Eleazar then of Ithamar, that had 16 courſes, and Ithamars 8. And the names of the cheife of every of theſe courſes are ſet dovvne, it being left to be underſtood, that all the other Prieſts ſerved in their courſes under them, a like number being aſſigned to each one in his courſe to aſſiſt him in the execution of his Prieſtly office, reſpect being ſtill had, that they onely were appointed to ſerve in the courſes of thoſe of the family of Eleazar, that vvere of his familie, and they in the courſes of the family of Ithamar, that were of his familie. Touching the meanes uſed to diſtinguiſh theſe courſes vvho ſhould have the firſt, vvho the ſecond and third, &c. It is ſaid to have been done by lots, the names of all the chiefe of their houſes being written in 24 ſeverall pieces of paper and put in one veſſell by themſelves, and the courſes being vvritten in 24 papers and put in another veſſell, then they being ſhaken together, one was appointed to put one hand into one veſſell and to dravv a name vvithout ſeeing, and another into the other veſſell, and to draw a courſe likewiſe; and looke what number was written upon it, that was his courſe, whoſe name was drawne together with it. And the Prieſts of the firſt courſe were to ſerve but one week at a time beginning at the Sabbath in the evening and continuing about the Temple till the evening of the next Sabbath; at what time they departed to their own houſes, and the 1 Chr. 9. 25. next courſe came and ſerved likewiſe, and then the third and fourth; till that all the 24 having ſerved in their courſes, they began again. And during the time of their ſervice, there were chambers about the courts of the Lords houſe, wherein they lodged.

V. 20. For the Levites next named, it is to be underſtood, that they were not of the common ſort, but Princes as is expreſſely ſaid of Ieſias, Prince Ieſias, v. 21. and they were of 2 families, Kohath, and Merari, [illegible] their courſes alſo by lot, ver. 31. Of theſe it is not ſaid, what the office was, [illegible] moſt probably they were cheife next unto the Preiſts of whom one was alwayes about the temple, as Prince of that courſe, which ſerved them according to the order wherein they were placed.

Here followeth the diſtinction of the Levites, who were to ſerve in the temple by ſinging and playing upon inſtruments of muſick, the cheif fathers of whom were 3. Aſaph, Iduthun, &c. Heman, who came of the three ſons of Levi. Heman of Kohath, Aſaph of Gerſhom, and Iduthun of Merari, as is moſt probable from 1 Chron. 6. 33, 34. &c. where Heman and Aſaph are expreſſely ſaid to be of Kohath & Gerſhom, and for Iduthun Ethan of Merari, whereby it ſeemeth that theſe were two names of one and the ſame man. Of theſe ſome were ſo famous for wiſdom, that Ethan

1 Kings 4.31. and Heman are ſpoken of in comparing the wiſdom of Solomon. The Sons of theſe were 24. according to which number the courſes of the ſinging Levites were diſtinguiſhed, as the Preiſts were, and theſe 24 were appointed one to be the cheife in one courſe, and another in another; ſo that the firſt courſe came in and went out with the firſt courſe of the Preiſts, and likewiſe the other in their order. The cheifs of theſe did both direct the reſt, and by the ſpirit compoſed ſome divine ſongs to be ſung to the praiſe of God. The cheife are ſaid to be 288. that is, 12 to every courſe of the 24. for 24 times 12 make 288. Now for the uſe of ſinging and muſick in the temple, it was to ſtirre up mens minds to praiſe God, and when they did ſing and play, a ſacrifice of praiſe was offered.

Next unto the ſingers the Porters are diſtinguiſhed by the 4 gates of the temple, Eaſt, Weſt, North, and South, and one Prince is appointed to be over one gate, and one over another, 4 over all, that kept the 4 gates by courſe, v. 14. For it is not to be doubted, but that the Porters being 4000. were diſtinguiſhed into 24 courſes as well as the ſingers and Preiſts, comming and going upon every Sabbath, as they did which is alſo expreſſed; 1 Chron. 9. 24. And therefore here are 24 named in the beginning of the chapter, which may well be underſtood to be the cheife of theſe 24 courſes. And of Obed Edom, it is noted in ſpeciall, that there were more of his houſe, then of any other; becauſe the Lord bleſſed him, v. 5. wherein Expoſitours generally think, that reſpect is had to the time, when the Arke abode at his houſe, 2 Sam. 6. For then it is ſaid God bleſſed Obed Edom, and all that he had, one way of which bleſſing was by encreaſing his houſe, and giving him many children. And the 24 hitherto named were of the poſterity of Kohath and Merari. Now beſides theſe and their brethren of their courſes there were ſome Levites of Gerſhom, that were ſet over the treaſures of the temple, and the ſpoiles of the enemy,

V. 29. which were dedicated by David, Samuel, Saul, Abner, and Ioab, &c. See before, ch. 9. 28. Laſtly, for works without, they are named who were over the 6000 that were appointed to be rulers and Iudges of the people in matters concerning God and the King, that is, in teaching and inſtructing the people in their Synagogues, and ſitting with the Iudges in particular cities to judge in criminall cauſes.

After the diſtinction of the Preiſts and Levites, here followeth the diſtinction of the Princes, and firſt of thoſe, that were over the men of warre, who are diſtinguiſhed by the 12 months of the year, each one having under him 24000 valiant men, of theſe one with his 24000 attended upon the King one month, and the other another; ſo as that each Prince with his men was at liberty to return and attend upon their own domeſtick affairs eleven months in the year, except extraordinary occaſion of warre required the ſervice of them altogether. The end ſeemeth to be for the ſafety of the King, and the appeaſing of tumults, if any ſhould ariſe, and that ſo great a numa number being exerciſed in armes at the leaſt one month in the year (for we muſt not think that they lived idly about the court in the month of their attendance, but were exerciſed in military diſcipline) the King might never be unprovided of a ſufficient Army upon ſhort warning to fight againſt his enemies. And by this meanes it is not unlikely, that Solomon came to enjoy ſo peaceable a reigne all his dayes, there being no enemy that durſt ſtirre againſt him, who was continually ſo well provided of men [illegible] munition to quell his proudeſt enemies. And whatſoever King ſhall take the ſame courſe, it is not to be doubted, but with Gods help he ſhould have a very ſafe kingdome.

V. 16. Then the Princes are named, who were over the ſeverall tribes, there being of each tribe one, but over the Levites and Preiſts, two and two, over the two halfe tribes of Manaſſeh, becauſe of their ſeparated dwellings.

V. 23. But David numbred not them that were under 20 yeares, becauſe the Lord had ſaid, that he would multiply the Iſraelites, as the ſtarres of heaven. Ioab had begun to number, but he finiſhed it not &c.

It was ſaid before that the Levites were numbred from 20 years old and upward. Now in ſpeaking of others that were of the other tribes & of the numbers that were under the 12. Princes of Davids Armies, becauſe nothing hath bin ſaid hitherto from what age they were numbred, that is here inſerted, that according to the law, Num. 1. 3. they alſo were numbred from 20 years old and upward, but not under; a generall reaſon being yeilded, why they under 20 were not reckoned from Gen. 15. viz. the promiſe of God to Abraham that his children ſhould be as the ſtars in multitude, that is, innumerable; if all without exception of any age ſhould be numbred, the numbers would be ſo great, as that it would exceed all count. Wherefore to attempt a numbring of them thus, could not but be a great ſin, both becauſe it was againſt the law of God, and a preſuming to goe about the diſproving of that which God had ſo confidently affirmed, who moſt probably to provent it, had limited the age from which at any time they might be numbred. Thus much for Davids not numbring of any under 20. now it is further added, that Ioab had begun to number by Davids command, and finiſhed it not, becauſe wrath therefore fell upon Iſrael; it being meant, that although David had been moſt cautelous, and his Captain Ioab not to number, but according to the law; yet when this was done, God ſent a plague of peſtilence, ch. 21. whereby it came to paſſe, that neither then the numbers were perfected, nor now when the number of all the Levites was taken, durſt they adventure to number all Iſrael alſo for feare of Gods wrath again to break out againſt them; and therefore the ſinne of the children of Iſrael is not ſet downe as of Levi here; and this was the cauſe of commemorating this thing in this place.

V. 25. Now beſides the Princes of the tribes before mentioned, there were others alſo ſet over the goods and chattels of the King, as over his treaſures in Zion and Ieruſalem. 2. In the villages, fields, cities, and towers. 3. Over his husbandry. 4. His vineyards. 5. His wines. 6. Over his olives and figges. 7. His oyles. 8. His heards. 9. His Oxen. 10. His Cammels; over which was an Iſhmaelite, becauſe the Iſhmaelites had moſt skill about theſe. 11. His aſſes. 12. His ſheep, over which was an Agaren, one of that nation, which uſed to dwell in tents, which might be removed from place to place. Lyra.

V. 32. Laſtly, his Counſellours are named, whereof two are ſaid to have been with the Kings ſonnes; that is, according to the Hebrewes, to inſtruct them, then Achitophel is named, into whoſe place, when he had hanged himſelfe, Benaiah came, and Ioab was generall of all the Armies. Whereby it appeareth, not onely what a well ordered common wealth this was, but well alſo the Kings peculiar eſtate was ordered and managed.

The numbring of the Princes, Preiſts and Levites, being ended, here followeth the oration which David made unto them ſtanding up, that he might be the better heard. And herein he ſheweth what his intent was about building an houſe to the Lord, and how he had prepared; but God had appointed Solomon his ſon to do this great work and denied it unto him, as ſometime Moſes was denied to enter into the land of Canaan, which he much deſired; and Ioſhuah was ſet up to lead the people in thither. Some think that his riſing up was from his throne; but according to other more probably it was from his bed, and he called the houſe which he would have built, the houſe for the Arke, and his footſtoole, that is, the mercy ſeat which was, as it were, the ſeat of God. Concerning [illegible], and the Lords holding him from building, ſee before, ch. 22. 7, 8. A[illegible] them the more willing V.4,5,6. to ſubmit themſelves to Solomon, as their Ki[illegible] commemorateth 1. Gods electing of the tribe of Iudah before all othe[illegible] Of his Fathers houſe before all the families in Iudah. 3. Of him before any other in that houſe. 4. Of Solomon before all his other ſonnes, together with Gods ſpeech touching Solomon, he ſhall build me an houſe, and I will be to him a Father, and I will eſtabliſh his V.8,9. throne for ever, if he continueth ſtedfaſt in my precepts; &c. whereupon he exhorteth both them and Solomon his ſonne ſo to do, threatning him, if he did otherwiſe, that God would reject him for ever, which is not to be underſtood of reprobating him to periſh in hell for ever, becauſe 2 Sam. 7. 14. 15. he had promiſed if he ſinned againſt him, to correct him, but not take his mercy from him for ever: but what ſhould be done for the continuing of the kingdome to his poſterity, ſhould not be out of reſpect unto him, but unto David; with whom he had made a covenant unalterable, and upon him there ſhould remain a blot for ever; ſhewing Gods eſtranging of his fatherly affection from him, when for his ſinnes 10 tribes ſhould be rent away from his heires, and ſo his kingdome ſhould be irreparably diminiſhed unto them for ever.

V.11. Then David gave unto Solomon the pattern of the Porch and Temple, &c. ſaying, that all came written to him with the hand of the Lord, which according to Pellican. ſome Hebrewes, is to be underſtood, ſaith Pellican, by the direction of Samuel, by Lyra. others, of Nathan the Prophet; Lyra ſaith, that it may be he had all revealed unto Cajetan. him by God. Caietan, that theſe things were by God written in his mind, and Toſtatus. not in a book, but he deſcribed them by writing unto Solomon for his direction. Toſtatus contrarily that he had them delivered unto him by God ready written, as Moſes had the commandments. That of Caietan ſeemeth more probable, becauſe *v.*12 it is ſaid, which David thought in his heart, ſo that Gods writing of this form was in his mind by internall revelation. And David ſpake thus to Solomon, that he might not adventure to varie from this pattern, and to commend the fabrick as being of Gods deviſing, and not of mans; and he might not feare to goe about this great work, to the deviſing of the doing whereof rightly, all the wit of man would not ſuffice, becauſe the platforme was ſet by God himſelfe in every thing.

Chap. 29.

V. 1. And David ſpake to all the congregation, &c.] Happily the congregation being a while diſſolved, and then meeting againe, becauſe the Kings ſtrength would not ſuffice to ſay any more at that time, he ſpake again in commending the building of the temple unto them, ſetting forth the greatneſſe of the work, as whereunto all that he had hitherto ſpoken of would not ſuffice. Wherefore he both addeth 3000 talents of moſt pure gold, and 7000 talents of ſilver to cover and guild over the walls of the moſt holy place, and exhorteth the Princes to a liberall contribution. The reaſon, why he would have them alſo to contribute, when as he alone had provided all things ſufficiently, was according to ſome, that their treaſures being exhauſt, they might be the leſſe able to rebell againſt Solomon, if any of them were ſo minded, but this had been to make a gaine of godlineſſe; a better reaſon therefore hath been already yeilded, ch. 22. 17. and it is to be noted, that in exhorting them to a liberal contribution, he uſeth the phraſe of filling their hands and offering, which uſed to be ſpoken of ſacrificing, to ſhew that it was a ſacrifice moſt acceptable unto God to give of their goods to this work.

V. 6. Then the Princes and Nobles, &c. offered willingly 5000. talents of gold, and 10000. drachmaes, whereof 12000. ſaith Iunius, make a talent, and of ſilver 10000 talents, &c. that is, they ſet down each man ſo much to be given, as together amounted to theſe ſums to be afterwards gathered by collectours appointed by the King. All which if it be compared with Davids guifts Ch. 22. 14. is nothing, for he gave 100000. talents of gold, and 1000000. of ſilver.

Then

V. 10. Then David ſeeing their cheerfulneſſe in offering, bleſſed God thorefore, and acknowledged all, which he and they had offered, to come from God, beſeeching him to continue this minde in them, as knowing the mutability of men; and laſtly, he prayeth for Solomon his ſonne, that God would give him a perfect heart, that he might do all things commanded, and having exhorted them to bleſſe God, likewiſe they did it by bowing themſelves, and then bowing to the King they gave him thanks for all the benefits, which they had enjoyed under his government; although Iunius will have their worſhipping of the King to be underſtood of Solomon.

V. 21. Joſephus. 1 King. 3. 2 Chron. 29. Then the day following in token of their thankfulneſſe to God, they ſacrificed 1000. bullocks, 1000. rams, and 1000. lambs, and they feaſted together and made and anointed Solomon King the ſecond time. The ſacrifices, ſaith Ioſeph. were holocauſts, & after theſe ended were many thouſands more ſlain for peace-offerings, wherewith the people feaſted, but becauſe no more are here ſpoken of, it is rather to be thought, that ſome of theſe only were holocauſts & the reſt peace-offerings, for we never read of ſo many beaſts, or near ſo many, wholly burnt at one time, in any age. When Soloman ſacrifieed afterwards in Gibeon, a moſt ample ſacrifice, he offered but 1000 burnt offerings, and Hezekiah but 70. Bullockes, 100. Rams and 200. Lambs. And now they anointed not only Solomon King, but alſo Zadok for Prieſt, that is, high Prieſt in the room of Abiathar, who had conſpired with Adonijah: and thus the word of the Lord againſt Ely's family began to be fullfilled; how the Prieſt was anointed, ſee Levit. 8.

V. 24. Lyra. Comeſt. Toſtatus. Joſephus. And all the Princes and ſonnes of the King gave their hand to Solomon, &c.] that is, ſware fidelity unto him, and this was the cauſe why he was anointed for King the ſecond time, that it being done by the conſent of all the Princes, he might the more peaceably reign over them, and peace being thus ſetled, he might the better go on in building the temple: for when he was anointed before, they were divided. For thoſe that anointed him, becauſe Zadok the Prieſt and Nathan the Prophet did it before, it is not to be doubted, but that they anointed him now again. And here Ioſephus bringeth in David ſpeaking again to his ſonnes, and exhorting them to be obedient to Solomon, and not to envie him, although a younger brother, becauſe God had choſen him to be King, as he did before himſelf, before his brethren, who were elder, yet none of them envied him this honour.

V. 26. Here the Authour of the Chronicles haſteneth to ſet forth the death of David, and how long he had reigned over Iſrael and Iudah, but becauſe 1 King. 2. from which we have hitherto digreſſed, doth more fully declare his death, and ſpeeches uſed before it to his ſonne Solomon, let us now look back to the ſaid 1 King. 2. 1.

1 King. 2. 1. When the dayes of David drew near, that he ſhould die, he commanded his ſonne Solomon, ſaying, &c.] The charge, which he gave him, was to keep Gods laws, that his throne might be eſtabliſhed, to which effect he was brought in ſpeaking before, 1 Chron. 28. 9. and 1 Chron. 22. 12, 13. Onely here is a charge added, firſt touching Ioab, v. 5.

V. 5. Pellican. Theod. Thou knoweſt, ſaith he, what he did unto me, and to the two Captains of Iſrael, Abner and Amaſa, &c.] The Hebrews, ſaith Pellican, think by that, which he did unto him, was meant the ſhewiug of his letters to others, which he wrote for the bringing of Vriah to his death, which was greatly to his diſgrace, ſo that he was not faithfull to him, and how treacherouſly he ſlew Abner and Amaſa, when he pretended friendſhip, was notoriouſly known. Wherefore David ſpake of him, as a man, that ought not to be ſuffered to live, becauſe, if he were ſuffered, he might unawares ſlay Solomon alſo, and thus interrupt his peaceable reign. The conceit of the Rabbins is uncertain; but that he diſobeyed Davids expreſſe charge about Abſalom, and imperiouſly threatned him to cauſe him to come forth and to ceaſe mourning when he had ſlain Abſalom, is certain; for which his diſloyaltie to his ſoveraign, he was worthy to die. Theodoret alſo addeth, for his taking part with Adonijah, whom David could not be without all fear, that he would ſeek to ſet up again, and ſo to make a diviſion in the Kingdom. And the rather, becauſe he being privie to Davids dealing with Vriah, that he might obtain Bathſhebah, of whom Solomon came, never loved Solomon, as thinking him unworthy to reign for his ſcandalous birth. Whereas David did not himſelf execute juſtice againſt Ioab before, it ſeemeth to have been, becauſe Ioab being Captain of the Hoaſt had been hitherto too powerfull; but now he being aged, and Iehoiadah being of great power, by reaſon that he was over the Cherethites and Pelethites, and Ioabs power being weakned by the Armies falling from him, as it ſeemeth, becauſe he fled to the horns of the Altar and not to his ſouldiers, David wiſely thought it a fit time to execute juſtice upon him, which had been hitherto deferred.

V.7. 1 Sam.17.

But to the ſonnes of Barzillai ſhew kindneſſe, &c.] Becauſe it is the part of a good King to be no leſſe carefull to ſhew thankfulneſſe to ſuch, as deſerve well of him, then to puniſh evill doers, David provideth thus for the requitall of Barzillai: what he did for Machir and Zob, who alſo ſhewed him the like kindneſſe, is not ſaid; what is to be thought hereof, ſee 2 Sam. 19.40.

V.8. Pellican.

Thou haſt alſo with thee Shimei, &c.] How David could without prejudice to his oath appoint Solomon his ſon to provide, that he might not come in peace to his grave, ſee 2 Sam. 19.23. And Davids oath bound him no longer then he lived, his ſucceſſour in the kingdome was free, notwithſtanding this oath to do juſtice upon him according to his diſcretion. Moreover David doubtleſſe ſtill perceived, that he was ill-affected to his houſe, and adhered to the houſe of Saul, and ſo might afterwards become troubleſome to the State, wherefore he juſtly committed him to be dealt withall by Solomon according to his wiſedome.

V. 10. 1 Chron. 29.28. Iſidor. Joſephus l. 7.

Then David ſlept with his fathers, &c. and the time that he reigned over Iſrael was 40. years, &c.] Of theſe times of his reign and his age, when he began to reign and when he died, ſee before upon 2 Sam. 5.5. and 2 King. 1.1. For the place of his buriall it is ſaid to be in his own city, that is, not Bethlehem, as ſome have thought, but Zion, where the Kings his ſucceſſours might afterwards be buried alſo. Ioſephus ſaith, that his ſonne Solomon buried him magnificently in Ieruſalem, and that into his Sepulchre were put very great riches: for out of it 1300. years after Hyrcanus took 3000. talents to give to Antiochus to remove his ſiege, and after that Herod took out much money out of another Cell. And Benjamin a Iew in his Itinerary telleth of two workmen, who digging up the ſtones of an old wall eſpied a den, and entering into it, ſaw a Pallace with pillars of marble and a table of ſilver before it with a ſcepter and crown of gold upon it, but when they attempted to go into that pallace, they were ſmitten with a whirlwinde down dead, and having lien ſo till night they were revived again and then heard a voice ſaying, ariſe and go out of this place. Wherefore that hole was by the command of the Patriark ſtopt up again, none daring to enter into it any more. And here an end of David, who many wayes was a figure of Chriſt; firſt in his tribe Iudah and city Bethlehem. 2 In his favour, for Chriſt alſo was comely, vox ſuavis & facies decora. 3 He chaſed away the evill ſpirit from Saul, killed a Lion and a Bear, ſo Chriſt caſt out devils and deſtroyed their power. 4 He lived obſcurely 30. years as Chriſt did. 5 He ſlew Goliah not by force of armes but with a ſling. 6 His brethren envied him and Saul ſought to ſlay him. 7 He having given a dowry of 200. fore-skins for Merob had her not, but Michol: ſo Chriſt had not a Spouſe of the Iewiſh Church but of the Gentiles. 8 David was thrice anointed King, ſo Chriſt had a threefold right to reign; firſt, as God; ſecond, as Davids ſucceſſour in his line; third, becauſe as God and man all power was given unto him. 9 He ordered the Prieſts and Levites, ſo Chriſt the Apoſtles. 10 He prepared matter for the Temple, &c.

V. 12. Pellican.

Then Solomon ſate upon the Throne of David his father, and his kingdome was greatly confirmed] That is, after the ſlaughter of three Rebels hereafter ſpoken of, viz. Ioab, Adonijah, and Shimei, for although they durſt yet attempt nothing, yet afterwards ſome ſtirs might have been made by them, but now were prevented.

V. 13.

And Adonijah the ſonne of Haggith came to Bathſhebah the mother of Solomon, &c.] Here is ſhewed upon what occaſion Adonijah the competitour of the kingdome was cut off, and immediately after Ioab, and Abiathar put down from the High-Prieſthood. Adonijah as Expoſitours generally think, by their counſel ſought to have Abiſhag to wife, who was wife to his father David, which was both contrary to the law of God, and as Pellican hath it, it was not lawfull for any in that Common-wealth to marry her, that had been the wiſe of a King, unleſſe he himſelf were a King. Wherefore Adonijah in ſeeking this, ſought to come as near to the kingdom, as he could, and having the chief captain Ioab and the chief Prieſt Abiathar on his ſide, he was not without hope by this means to attain unto it, at the leaſt his ambitious mind might be fed with ſuch a conceit. This Solomon through his wiſedome ſaw into, but his mother not; but when by his ſpeech ſhe perceived it, moſt probably ſhe was content to have her requeſt denied. Some call in queſtion Solomons juſtice for putting Adonijah to death upon this occaſion, and that without being firſt tried, as Theodoret and Procopius; and Caietan ſaith, that he knoweth not how it may be excuſed, and that it ſeemeth to have been done unjuſtly, ſeeing no treaſon againſt the King did evidently appear herein. But Lyra and Pellican and others, juſtifie Solomon in this fact, becauſe he knew by his wiſedom, that he went about thus to make a way to the kingdom, and in ſuch evident caſes it had been the manner of David before, without further proceedings to give ſentence immediately againſt offenders; as againſt him, that brought him Sauls crown, and againſt Rechab and Baanah. And Adonijah his former ambitious cauſing of himſelf to be made King made it plain, that he had ſtill the ſame minde within him, for which it was juſt with Solomon now to cut him off, although he had ſpared him hitherto, ſeeing it was but upon condition, if he did ſhew himſelfe worthy. Ch. 1.52.

And to Abiathar the Prieſt, the King ſaid, go to Anathoth thy field, for thou art worthy to die, &c.] Anathoth was a city of the ſonnes of Aaron, Ioſh. 21. 18. here the ſamily of Abiathar dwelt, and to this place he was now confined, and not permitted any more to remain or to come to the city of David; that being removed from the Court, there might not be any danger afterwards of his conſpiring againſt the King any more. In that he was thus cenſured at this time, it appeareth, that he was guilty of a ſecond conſpiracy with Adonijah, as alſo Ioab, whoſe judgement followeth next. God ſuffered them both to fall again, that Solomon might have juſt occaſion of proceeding againſt them; both that the word of God againſt Ely's family might be fulfilled; as is noted in the next words, v. 27. and ſo great wickedneſſes as Ioab had formerly committed might not go unpuniſhed. Here ſome make a queſtion, how the King, could cenſure the high-Prieſt, ſeeing he was not ſubject unto him? Toſtatus anſwereth, that under the old Teſtament he was ſubject, becauſe the ſpirituall and temporall powers were not then diſtinguiſhed. But Sallianus according to Theodoret, that the ordinance of God did intervene, of which Solomon was onely the executer; and it is probable ſaith Sallianus, that it was done with the conſent of Zadok, for in the caſe of life and death, the Prieſt onely hath power to judge of the Prieſt, and to puniſh him; becauſe Paſhur the chief Prieſt committed Ieremiah to priſon, thus he. But let every ſoul be ſubject to the higher powers, and let theſe powers be deſcribed by bearing the ſword, as Rom. 13. and then this queſtion falleth utterly to the ground; not onely temporall but ſpirituall perſons, have been and now are ſubject to the King: and if the chief Prieſt had power over Ieremiah to commit him, it was but a power derived from the King, as they that have commiſſions from him in our land have power.

V:28.

When Ioab heard this, he fled to the Tabernacle of the Lord, and took hold of the hornes of the Altar, &c.] Becauſe he knew himſelf to be guilty of the ſame conſpiracy with Adonijah and Abiathar, he, hearing how the King had dealt with them, feared his own life and therefore took Sanctuary as Adonijah had done before, ch. 1. 50. where I have ſhewed, who were to be protected there and who not. About the former words of this verſe, there is a difference from the Hebrew in the vulgar Latin. For whereas it is Hebr. The report came to Ioab, for he had gone after Adonijah, although he went not after Abſalom. The vulgar Latin hath it, A meſſenger came to Solomon, that Ioab went after Adonijah, but not after Solomon; thus in the tranſlation followed by Lyra: but in others it is corrected, in the laſt place there being Abſalom, for Solomon. But it was not Solomon, that heard now of Ioabs conſpiring with Adonijah, for he knew that long before, but Ioab heard what Solomon had done to the man, that he ſought to advance, plotting now the ſecond time for him, and finding by his proceedings againſt Abiathar, that it was not hidden from Solomon, he deſpaired of all favour, becauſe he thought, that the King would eaſily gather, that his heart was quite eſtranged from him, ſeeing that in Davids time, when Abſalom ſought to be King he would not take part with him but ſlew him; but now Adonijah ſeeking the kingdom and to put down Solomon, not once but twice, he conſpired both theſe times with him.

V. 29. And when it was told King Solomon, that Ioab was fled to the Tabernacle, &c. Solomon ſent Benaiah, ſaying, fall upon him, &c.] Here by anticipation is ſet forth, what Solomon laſtly commanded Benaiah to do. For firſt, as is ſhewed in the next words, he went to Ioab and ſaid, thus ſaith the King, come forth; and when he refuſed, the King being certified bad ſlay him there. Lyra. Lyra ſaith, that Rab. Solomon yeildeth this reaſon, why Benaiah ſlew him not at the firſt: viz, Becauſe Ioab ſaid unto him, that when he had ſlain Abner, David curſed him to ſuffer by the Leproſie, the Gout in his feet, and the want of bread; wherefore if now he were puniſhed by death, it would be unjuſt, unleſſe Soloman would take theſe curſes upon himſelf and his poſterity. Then Benaiah returning this anſwer to the King, he took theſe curſes upon him, and ſent again and ſlew Ioab there; that is, as is moſt probable, being taken away by violence from the Altar, as is commanded, Exod. 21. 14. and accordingly, he ſaith, it fell out: for Vzziah had the Leproſie, Aſa the Gout in his feet, and Hezekiah being beſieged, wanted bread. But this is ſo vain, that it is not worth the naming; for thoſe Kings were thus puniſhed for other faults; and Ioab deſerved to die alſo for ſlaying Amaſa: and it cannot be imagined that Solomon would take curſes upon himſelf. Laſtly, David had given Solomon a charge to ſlay Ioab: therefore it is not to be doubted, but juſtly, ſeeing that charge came from ſo holy a King. Pellican. Of all Expoſitours, Pellican onely juſtifies Ioab to have been a moſt faithfull ſervant to David, and ſeemeth to take it, as a point of ingratitude in David towards him to appoint him to be ſlain; by his example warning all Courtiers of their uncertain condition. But Ioab certainly now received according to his deſerts for his bloud-ſhed and faction, which muſt not go unpuniſhed. Whereas it is ſaid, v. 34. that he was buried in his own houſe in the deſart, the Hebrews ſay that this houſe was an Hoſpitall, which he built in the way for the harbouring of poor paſſengers; and becauſe he did ſuch a deed of charity, they gather that although he was puniſhed in this world, yet his ſoul was ſaved. P. Martyr. But as P. Martyr ſaith, of this we cannot judge, becauſe the Scripture ſaith nothing of it, and therefore it is to be left unto God. For his houſe in the deſart he noteth out of Kimhi, that it is not onely called a deſart, which is uninhabited, but alſo which is not tilled but uſed for foreſts and paſtures, and in ſuch a place moſt probably Ioab had an houſe, where he kept cattle.

V. 35. Abiathar being put down from the high-Prieſthood, and Ioab ſlain, Zadok is put into the place of the one, and Benaiah of the other. Of his commendation that was now made high Prieſt ſee before, 1 Sam. 2. 35. where he who ſhould be advanced thus in Ely's ſteed is deſcribed, but not named.

V. 36. Then the King ſent and called Shimei, and ſaid unto him, build thee an houſe in Jeruſalem, and dwell there, and go not out, for the day that thou goeſt out & paſſeſt the brook Kedron, thou ſhalt ſurely dye.] Shimei was the third man, touching whom David gave a charge unto Solomon for his curſing and railing upon him, when he fled from Abſalom, not to ſuffer him to come to the grave in peace. But becauſe he could not juſtly ſlay him for that, ſeeing David had promiſed him that he ſhould not die, the wiſe King beginneth with him, as reaſon required, by confining him to Ieruſalem, and reſtraining him from going to his own city Bahurim, to come unto which a man muſt go over the Brook Kedron; becauſe if he were permitted to dwell amongſt thoſe of his own tribe of Benjamin, there might be ſome danger of his exciting to rebellion, forſomuch as he had formerly declared himſelf to be ill-affected to the houſe of David, which danger would be avoided by keeping him to Ieruſalem. The propoſition of the King Shimei liked well, as one that feared that he ſhould have been dealt worſe withall, and therefore, as it appeareth afterwards, this decree was confirmed by oath, Shimei approving it. And ſo he came and dwelt in Ieruſalem three yeares without going forth. But after this, his ſervants running away from him, and he hearing that they were in Gath, perſued them thither, and returning ſuffered death therefore. But forſomuch as the brook Kedron lay eaſtward from the city and Gath weſt, how could Shimei be condemned to dye, ſeeing he went not over contrary to the Kings charge? Anſw. The meaning was not preciſely, that he ſhould not paſſe over that brook onely, but no way elſe go out of the city: and he was expreſſely commanded, dwell in Ieruſalem and go not out either hither or thither, and Kedron onely was mentioned as the way, that he would moſt probably go, becauſe his lands and poſſeſſions lay in Bahurim, and this was the way thither. Thus by a ſingular providence it was brought about, that Shimei did bear the puniſhment of his wickedneſſe at the laſt, although he eſcaped long, and ſo ſhall all the wicked.

CHAP. III.

IN the laſt verſe of the former chapter, having ſaid, that the kingdom was eſtabliſhed to Solomon after the death of Ioab, Adonijah, and Shimei, and the putting down of Abiathar from the high Prieſthood, ſo that no enemies now remained to the endangering of his eſtate; here it is added, that he ſought further to eſtabliſh his kingdom by contracting affinity with Pharaoh, a mighty neighbour king, by marrying his daughter. V. 1. Pellican. He was ſure ſaith Pellican, by the promiſes of God, that his kingdom ſhould ſtand firm, yet humane meanes were not to be neglected, and without doubt he being ſo zealouſly affected to the true God, did not take her but to inſtruct and convert her. P. Martyr. And Martyr ſaith, that Expoſitours agree, that a covenant of her embracing the true religion did intervene, and ſo ſhe was a type of a Church to be gathered out of the Gentiles to become the ſpouſe of Chriſt: yet entring upon a long diſpute, whether a marriage may be made betwixt thoſe, that are of divers religions, and having brought reaſons pro and contra, he concludeth, that Solomon had done better, if he had not married an Egyptian daughter, becauſe Pharaoh King of Egypt was not better then Ahab, with whoſe daughter yet when Ioram the ſonne of Iehoſhaphat married, it was reproved, and he was thereby corrupted; and ſuch kinde of marriages are rather ſnares then marriages. In his diſpute, he handleth two queſtions; firſt, whether a beleever may marry with an infidell? Secondly, whether one that holds the true faith with an heretick? To the firſt he ſaith, that infidels are either of Canaan or of other nations: with the daughters of Canaan, no marriages might be made for fear of being corrupted, Exod. 23. Deut. 7. and ch. 12. and becauſe they all were adjudged to deſtruction without ſparing any, for their great abominations. But with the daughters of other nations, *Deut.*21.11. ſome circumſtances obſerved they might ſometime marry, as when one was in love with a fair woman taken captive, ſhe having firſt her hair ſhaved, &c. by deforming her thus, if it might be, the heat of his love being cooled towards her. *Deut.*23.3. And with the Ammonites or Moabites in the tenth generation, with the Edomites and Egyptians in the third. V. 7. Yet becauſe we reade of Salmon marrying Rahab a Canaanite, and Boaz Ruth a Moabite, and David the daughter of the King of Geſhur, he determineth, that if any heathen woman did turn and embrace the true religion, ſhe might by a particular diſpenſation be taken to wife; otherwiſe it was to yoak an oxe and an aſſe together, which was unlawfull. Cyprian Epiſt. de lapſis. Hieron. contra Iovin. l. 1. Ambroſ. epiſt. ad Vigilium. Cyprian lamented this deteſtable vice in Chriſtians, ſaying, that the Members of Chriſt were thus proſtituted to the Gentiles. And Jerom, that thus Chriſtian parents did proſtitute their members to idols, and that Chriſtian women were thus made ribs of the devill. Ambroſe bringeth two arguments againſt theſe marriages; firſt, becauſe the married ſhould receive their bleſſing under the ſacerdotall veil, which, if one were heathen, they could not do. Secondly, becauſe they ſhould oftentimes pray together, and therefore he affirmeth that it is no marriage, which is againſt the decree of God. Tertullian againſt ſuch marriages alledgeth the ſaying of the Apoſtle, let her marry in the Lord, and affirmeth them to be nullities, and therefore that they who marry ſo, are guilty of whoredome. Moreover he ſaith, that no good ſubject will be familiar with his Kings enemy, therefore the enemy of God is not to be placed in ones boſome. And by the old law a ſervant might not marry without the conſent of his maſter, and if any woman married a ſervant, ſhe came hereby into the ſame condition to be his ſervant alſo; likewiſe chriſtians may not marry but according to their Lords will, and if they do with thoſe of another religion, who are the devils ſervants, they are hereby made the devils ſervants alſo. In other things the ſaying is, tu tibi ſume parem, therefore in marrying it ſhould be done likewiſe. For the ſecond Concilium Agathenſe forbad not onely marrying with infidels, but alſo with Hereticks; Likewiſe Concilium Vrbanenſe & Laodicenſe, and Tit. 3. 10. it is ſaid, Avoid an heretick after one or two admonitions, and Ioh. 4. the Iews medled not with the Samaritans. Thus farre Martyr. But I do think with the common ſtream of interpreters, that Solomon offended not in this marriage; both becauſe he is commended here v. 3. for walking in the ſtatutes of God, and Pſal. 45. Pharaohs daughter is ſet forth, as a type of the Church, and in the ſong of Solomon; wherefore ſhe did doubtleſſe embrace the true religion, and the motion to take her to wife came of God, as before it is ſaid of Samſon taking a Philiſtims daughter. Nicholaus de Lyra juſtifying this marriage of Solomon, anſwereth theſe objections. Firſt, that an Hebrew might not marry with one of another nation, ſaying, that this is indeed to be underſtood of all ſtrange nations, and not of the Canaanites onely; becauſe Ezra 10. he cauſed them that had married ſo, to put away their wives. But this was the difference between the Canaanites and thoſe of other nations, theſe might be taken if they left their ſuperſtition, thoſe not only in this caſe, but upon ſome other ſingular cauſe added to this, as Rahab was taken by Salmon to wife, becauſe ſhe had ſo well merited of the Hebrews by ſaving their ſpies. Secondly, that Solomon is blamed for loving women of other nations, ch. 11. 1. and in particular Pharaohs daughter, ſaying, that this is not a thing recited there by way of reprooſe, but his marrying ſtrangers, that turned him to idolatry: ſhee being onely reckoned up firſt, becauſe his love was cheifly to her; and therefore when it is ſaid, v. 8. that he built abominations to all his ſtrange wives, it is not to be underſtood without exception, for it was onely to ſuch, as offered incenſe to idols, as is there expreſſed; and therefore Pharaohs daughter being before converted, was none of them.

Only the people ſacrificed in high places, becauſe the houſe was not yet built to the name of the Lord.] That is, ſaith Iunius, in that at Gibeon, the reaſon whereof is rendred; 2 Chron. 1. 3. and in Zion where the Ark was, v. 17. For Solomon loved the Lord, v. 3. wherefore he would not ſuffer the people to ſacrifice elſewhere, but in the places where David his Father had ſacrificed. Lyra contrarywiſe following the vulg. lat. but the people ſacrificed in the high places, v. 3. but Solomon loved the Lord, Saith, that this is mentioned as a fault in Solomon, wherein he came ſhort of David: for although it was lawfull till the building of the Temple, yet he ſhould rather have followed the example of David in reſtreining the ſacrifices only to the threſhing floore of Araunah in Zion, where the Arke was; ſeeing God had ſhewed unto David that this was the place which he had choſen; P. Martyr agreeth with Lyra, holding that they ſacrificed in any high place, and not only where the Arke and Tabernacle were, which yet hee denieth not to have been lawfull before the building of the Temple. Pellican agreeth with Iunius, and I with them, that nothing is here ſpoken to detract from Solomon, for he is immediately commended for his love to the Lord, and ſaid to have walked in all the precepts of David, except his ſacrificing in the high place, which is not mentioned as a fault in him, but becauſe in this particular he varied from him, who after he had begun in the threſhing floore of Araunah, never ſacrificed any where elſe. For to Gibeon where the Tabernacle of Moſes was, and the Altar, Solomon came purpoſely in greateſt devotion, to honour God, and God ſhewed how well he liked hereof, of, becauſe he appeared there unto him. But it may ſeem ſtrange that three yeares being now expired ſince the death of David, Solomon did not yet begin to build the Temple, ſeeing all things were before prepared by David, for he began not to build it, till the 4 yeare of his reigne, ch. 6. 1. For this it may be conceived, that ſtill more preparation of materials was to be made, as is ſhewed, ch. 5. about which ſo many thouſands are there ſaid to have been imployed, and ſent over into the countrey of Tyrus to work there, that the levying of men, ſending Embaſſadours to that King, the cutting down of Cedars and Firre-trees, and making the ſtuffe ready, that no knocking or hewing might be at the building, and the tranſporting thereof, could not take up leſſe time; and happily becauſe the work was ſo great, and required extraordinary wiſdom in him that ſhould undertake it, hee thought himſelfe not yet ſufficient for it, and therefore ſtayed till that he had obtaine wiſdome of God, as is ſhewed that he did in this chapter.

Then the King went to Gibeon, to ſacrifice there, for that was the great high place, and there he offered 1000 burnt offerings. 2 Chron. 1. 3. Hee went with all the multitude to the high place at Gibeon, where was the Tabernacle which Moſes the ſervant of God made in the wilderneſſe, v. 5. &c. and the brazen Altar which Bezaleel made, &c. Comeſtar following Ioſephus ſaith, that by Gibeon no particular high place was to be underſtood, but onely an high place, as the word ſignifieth; and that the high place to which Solomon now went was in Hebron; but the Chronicles make it plaine that Gibeon is a proper name here, both becauſe it is ſaid the high place at Gibeon, and deſcribed by the Tabernacle there, and the Altar, which was the reaſon why Solomon was drawne thither, to offer ſacrifice; and Zadok who was made high Preiſt inſteed of Abiathar, miniſtred th[illegible]. The thouſand burnt offerings which he offered here, were according to the Hebrewes, either offered in divers dayes, or which he offered there in all his time, but the firſt is moſt probable. Although this his going to Gibeon to ſacrifice be ſpoken of after his marrying of Pharoahs daughter, yet ſome think that it was before, becauſe ſo holy a man would not doe any other act of great conſequence before that he had ſought wiſdome, whereby to be directed. And in the book of Wiſdom he ſaith, that he ſought wiſdome in his youth, ch. 8. and as it ſeemeth, ch. 9. at the beginning of his reign. To this, that hee ſought wiſdome in the firſt yeare of his reigne, I aſſent, although the relation hereof cometh after Shimei his death, which was when Solomon had reigned 3 yeares, and it is not improbable, but that he married Pharoahs daughter in the firſt year alſo. For to the end, that all the hiſtory of the deſtruction of Davids enemies might be ſet forth together, the deſtruction of Shimei alſo was ſet forth before this marriage, although it hapned after. But that his ſacrificing at Gibeon was before this marriage, I can yet ſee no reaſon of force to perſwade, and both the text and Ioſephus are for another order, placing the marriage before his ſacrificing. He went then after this marriage ſolemnized to Gibeon to ſacrifice, that he might the better proſper in this eſtate, by thus ſeeking Gods bleſſing, and to be the better prepared to the great work of building the temple, to which hee thought it now time to addreſſe himſelfe.

In Gibeon the Lord appeared to Solomon in a dream by night and ſaid, aske what I ſhall give thee, 2 Chron. 1. 7. That night the Lord appeared to Solomon, &c.] When Solomon had preſented the Lord ſo liberally with ſacrifices, thus earneſtly ſeeking his favour, the Lord did him this grace to appeare unto him, and then he diſcovered the end of his ſo great devotion to be to obtaine wiſdome, and herein he prevailed; and for worldly riches and glory alſo, ſo that there is nothing loſt by being profuſe in honouring God, but much gained.

Then Solomon ſaid, thou haſt ſhewed mercy to thy ſervant David my Father, as he walked before thee in truth and righteouſneſſe, and uprightneſſe of heart.] Hee knowing ſaith Lyra, that God made him this offer for Davids ſake, ſpake thus: the truth whereby he commends David, is by Martyr expounded of the uprightneſſe of his heart, the righteouſneſſe of his juſt dealing, and the uprightneſſe of his true care in all things to walk according to the commandements, for which he is ſaid to be righteous before God, becauſe he was by him accepted for ſuch, although he ſometime ſinned greatly.

And

V.7. And now thou haſt made me to reign, who am a child, &c.] of what age Solomon was when he began to reign, hath been before diſcuſſed upon ch. 1.39. and hee ſaith, that he knew not how to go in and out, that is,to mannage the weighty buſineſſes of the Kingdome. He craveth therefore an underſtanding heart, and this is neceſſary for all Kings, becauſe that if any King wanteth wiſdom, although his councell be wiſe, there will be great danger of being miſled to his owne, and the hurt of his ſubjects. And it is not Solomons caſe alone to aske this wiſdome and obtaine it, but whoſoever asketh it in faith, hath a certaine promiſe, *Iam.*1.5. that he ſhall obtaine it. The prayer of Solomon for wiſdome is more largely ſet forth in the book of wiſdome, ch. 9. ſee alſo Eccleſiaſt. 51. 18. 19. &c. With this petition of Solomon God was ſo pleaſed, that he gave him both wiſdome exceeding that of all others before and after him, and riches and honour, and promiſed him long life alſo, if he continued to walk in his commandements. But is it meant, that in wiſdome he ſhould excell all other men? Was he wiſer then Adam, Moſes, the Prophets and Apoſtles, and then Chriſt Ieſus? And did he excell all Kings without exception, in riches and glory, as Crœſus, Xerxes, Alexander, and Nebuchadnezzar? Sol. Ieſus Chriſt was not onely man but God, and therefore he cannot come in queſtion in this compariſon: as for Adam alſo before his fall, without doubt he was as wiſe as Solomon both in naturall and divine things: the compariſon therefore is made between Solomon and all other meer men, ſince the fall. In things naturall none was ever ſo ſuddainly made ſo wiſe as he in youth; for *Eccl.*7. he ſaith, that it was given unto him to know the conſtitution of the world and elements, and the nature of beaſts, trees, plants, &c. but in divine things no doubt, but the Prophets and Apoſtles excelled him. It is meant therefore, firſt for naturall and politick wiſdome enabling to govern, there was none like unto him: ſecondly, for all kinde of wiſedome no King was ever comparable to him, and the compariſon is expreſly made betwixt him and all other Kings: laſtly, for riches and glory no King of Iſrael was ever like him; and for other Kings, taking all three together, wiſedome, riches and glory, there was never any, thar might be compared unto him in any countrey. For although one might have a larger dominion, and more riches, yet he came ſhort of Solomon in wiſedome, which is the greateſt glory. Whereas long life is promiſed him, if he kept the commandements: herein it ſeemeth, that God fore-ſeeing his foul falling into idolatry, ſpake thus; and the event anſwered the prediction, for he died before he was very old, viz. about 60. according to the Hebrews, at 52.

And whereas he promiſeth nothing of victories over his enemies, and power to deſtroy them, it may be thought alſo, that this was omitted, becauſe God foreſaw the rebellion of Ieroboam, who eſcaped his hands. Some think, that Solomon asked all kinde of wiſedome not onely to govern, but alſo to underſtand all divine myſteries and all naturall things, becauſe his underſtanding was enlarged herein, and yet in the grant God doth not expreſſe this, but other things, which he asked not he expreſſeth; whereby is intimated, that this was asked. But the text is plain, that he asked onely wiſdome to govern, and to manage the great affairs committed unto him; but God, who is wont to give more to his faithfull ſervants, then they ask, gave him a moſt large underſtanding in all other things alſo. Yet it is not to be thought, that he had ſuch a knowledge of heavenly myſteries, but that others

Dionyſ. eſpecially under the Goſpell were more enlightened herein, for theſe were hid-

V.15. And when Solomon awaked, behold it was a dream, &c.] But by the ſpirit of God, which ſent it, he knew that it came from God, and was no illuſion, as dreams commonly are, and he found it to be true by experience, for that his heart was by and by enlarged with underſtanding, and hereof a proof was given, at his return to Ieruſalem, v. 16. 17. &c. Thus Martyr. Lyra, he knew that it was a dream, that is, that it was true, becauſe God uſed to reveale himſelfe by dreames. And immediately he returned to Ieruſalem, and offered more ſacrifices before the Arke in way of thankfulneſſe for this ſingular mercy, and with part of the peace-offerings he made a royall feaſt.

Then

V.16. Then came there two harlots and ſtood before the King, &c.] Vatablus for harlots hath victuallers, becauſe the word ſignifieth either, and it is not likely, that they were harlots, becauſe either ſuch conceived not, or if they did, they deſired rather the death, then the life of their children. But Ioſephus ſaith, that they were women that made a gaine of playing the harlots, and both the Sept. and Vulg. lat. render it harlots. But the Chalde paraphraſt, victuallers, and Peter Martyr, either victuallers or waſhers of clothes, holding it improbable that they were harlots, becauſe ſo godly a King would never have ſuffered a whore to live in Ieruſalem contrary to the law of God, ſo likewiſe Pellican. Iunius ſaith, that they were victuallers, and ſuch as ſecretly played the whores, becauſe it is not probable that they durſt in the time of ſo godly a King make publick profeſſion of ſuch wickedneſſe, or as harlots to have appeared before him, and to this do. I ſubſcribe. A caſe moſt difficult is by Gods providence now brought before the King to try his wiſdom for none but a moſt wiſe man could judge rightly of it, both plead for one infant, the one affirming it to be hers, the other hers, and that another infant which dyed by being overlaid in the night, belonged to neither of them. What the truth was, there was no witneſſe to prove their ages, one being born but 3 dayes before the other, could not diſtinguiſh them, and it ſeemeth that there was no mark to doe it, that any neighbours took notice of. The wiſe King therefore having a while heard them both began to conſider that a true mother who loveth her child, as it ſeemeth either of theſe did, through her naturall affection would not ſuffer any hurt to be done unto it. Wherefore he called for a ſword, and commanded the living child to be divided between them, and then it ſoon appeared which was the true mother of the child, and it was given unto her. And agreeably to this it is ſaid, Wiſdome 7. that by the wiſdome given unto him, he knew the thoughts of men. Ioſephus ſaith, that he commanded the dead child to be divided alſo, but becauſe it exceeds the relation of the holy Scripture, this is not to be beleeved, and becauſe there was no reaſon why it ſhould be divided, ſeeing they did neither of them deſire any part in it. If it ſhall ſeem to have been a matter too mean to be brought before the King, happily ſaith Martyr it was firſt brought before ſome other judge, but he for the difficulty not being able to decide it, it came before the King, as matters moſt difficult ſomtime before Moſes. When Solomon began to enter into this way of exploration, to finde out the true mother, it is ſuppoſed that the Courtiers ſtanding by, firſt derided him in their hearts, as being about to do childiſhly, but in fine they perceived the depth of his underſtanding, and feared him; that is, the juſt reverenced him for his ſingular endowments, conceiving that they ſhould have juſtice done them, although they had to deal with ſubtle adverſaries; and the wicked feared him, as conceiving they could not lye hid, but ſhould ſurely be found out having a King of ſuch ſagacity, and ſo bear the puniſhment of their evill doings.

CHAP. IIII.

HAving ſhewed a proof of Solomons wiſedome in the caſe of the two Harlots in the former Chapter, this is ſpent in ſhewing his riches and glory, his gift of wiſdom being further amplified alſo, that it might appear to be ſo done unto him, as the Lord had there promiſed. For to his Kingly glory pertained this, that he reigned over all Iſrael, v. 1. and had ſo many noble Princes under him, v. 2, 3, &c. the multitude of his ſubjects, v. 20. the extent of his dominion, v. 21. and the large proviſion ſpent daily in his court, v. 22, 23. together with the great multitude of his chariots, and horſes, v. 26. 2 Chron. 1. 14. Touching his riches, what here is omitted, is ſhewed 2 Chron. 1. 15. they were ſo great, that gold and ſilver were as plentifull as ſtones in the ſtreet in his dayes. Laſtly, that his wiſedome might the more appear, it is extolled v. 29, 30. above the wiſedome of all the wiſe of the Eaſt and of the Egyptians, &c. And for a further proof, it is ſhewed v. 32. his great number of proverbs and ſongs, and diſcourſes of the nature of all things are mentioned.

And

V. 1. And Solomon was King over all Iſrael.] That is, there being no diviſion of Iudah from the reſt, as had been in Davids time; nor conſpiratours to trouble his univerſall reigne.

V. 2. Theſe are the Princes which he had, Azariah the ſonne of Zadok the Preiſt.] Here becauſe no office is aſcribed to Azariah, as is to all that are named after him, ſome have thought that the word Preiſt is to bee underſtood of him, as if it had Dyoniſius. been ſaid, Azariah the Preiſt the ſonne of Zadok holding him to have been the Kings houſhould Chaplaine, and this reading is followed by Lyra, Verſio aldina, & Regia; and in 8 manuſcripts, as ſaith Francis Lucas. But both the Vulg. lat. Iunius. Pagnin, and Vatablus joyne it to Zadok thus, Zadok Sacerdotis. Iunius rendreth the word tranſlated Prieſt, preſident; and ſaith, that he was the ſon of ſome other Zadok, and not of the Prieſt Zadok. Toſtatus and Cajetan think that he was one of the Kings ſcribes, and therefore referre the word ſcribes both to him, and to the P. Martyr. other two named next after him. But I hold with P. Martyr that he was not one of his Scribes, for David had but one; and therefore if Solomon had two, it is not to be thought that he had more, and the verſe wherein he is named, is diſtinguiſhed from that wherein the other two are named. Moreover the word כוהן doth plainly ſhew that he was his Preiſt, for ſo it moſt commonly ſignifieth; and not a preſident, as Iunius would have it: and this is plaine alſo, becauſe his father was a Preiſt; neither can I ſee any reaſon why he ſhould ſay that it was ſome other Zadok, ſeeing we read of none of this name before, but the high Preiſt only: yet with the Hebrew Expoſitour it is to be held that he was not his immediate ſonne, but the ſonne of his ſonne Ahimaaz. He would have a peculiar Prieſt ſaith Martyr, to offer prayers dayly for him, and when he came before the Lord in publick to offer his ſacrifices by themſelves, and not amongſt thoſe of the people.

V. 3. Elihoreph, and Ahijah the ſonnes of Siſa Scribes.] What the Scribes office was, ſee before 2 Sam. 20. 25. where Sejah is ſaid to be Davids ſcribe, whom Martyr thinketh to be the ſame with this Siſa; and if ſo, his ſonnes continued in the ſame office in Solomons time. Touching the offices of Iehoſaphat alſo, and of Benajah who are named next; ſee 2 Sam. 20.25. But whereas Zadok and Abiathar are ſaid to be Preiſts, when as Abiathar was at the beginning of Solomons reign put down from the Preiſthood; occaſion is given hereby of divers conjectures, ſome thinking that he ſerved ſtill upon requeſt made to the King as an ordinary Prieſt, ſome that he at ſometimes executed the office of the high Preiſt when he was unclean; as R. L. Ben Gerſon: ſome that he was another man of the ſame name, as Kimhi. Others that he is ſo called ſtill, and had onely the title, but executed not the office; P. Martyr. and this laſt I think with Martyr to be moſt probable. For if he had been imployed as an ordinary Preiſt, why ſhould he be named with the high Preiſt Zadok more then any of the reſt? and if in the caſe of uncleaneſſe happening at any time unto Zadok, he executed the high Preiſts office; why was there not one provided from the beginning in the like caſe to doe the like: and touching another of the ſame name, it is a meer conjecture.

V. 5. And Azariah the ſonne of Nathan was over thoſe that attended upon the King.] that is, thoſe of his houſhold, but whether he were the ſonne of Nathan the Prophet, or of Nathan the Kings brother is uncertain, but moſt think, that he was the prophet Nathans ſon, with whom Solomon had been brought up, and therefore he favoured him ſo much, as to preferre him before others, that were about him. And Zabud the ſonne of Nathan the Prieſt, the kings friend. This man alſo is by the moſt held to be the ſonne of Nathan the prophet, by his familiarity with Solomon in his youth, with whom he was brought up in his fathers houſe, attaining to this friendſhip; whereas he is called a prieſt, it is not to be underſtood, as if he were of the tribe of Levi, but as other princes are ſometimes called by this name כוהן, which ſignifieth a prieſt or prince, 2 Sam. 9. 4. as Iunius divideth the chapter, but according to the common dividing, 2 Sam. 8. 18.

V. 6. Abiſhar was over his houſe, and Adoniram the ſon of Abda over the tribute.] Of Adoram, who was over the tribute in Davids time ſee before, 2 Sam. 20.24.

V. 7. And Solomon had 12. Princes over all Iſrael, who made proviſion for the King and his houſe, every one a moneth in the year.] Theſe twelve were ſo ſeated, as may be gathered from the deſcription of their countries here following, as that each one of them might moſt conveniently furniſh the King from his countrey with proviſion for his moneth, and it was aboundance which was ſpent in his court every moneth, as will afterwards appear v. 22, 23. ſo as that there was need to gather it from all parts of his kingdom. But it is not to be thought, ſaith Martyr, that this proviſion was taken up without paying a juſt price therefore, ſeeing if otherwiſe the people had been exacted upon, they would have groaned under the burden whereas now they are ſaid to have bin eating and drinking and rejoycing, v. 20. If any man ſhall wonder, how ſuch aboundance of proviſion ſhould be ſpent daily in Solomon's court, it is to be underſtood that he had not onely his houſhold ſervants to maintain, but many men for the warres, and to defend his kingdome; and the retinue of wives and concubines with their attendants, was exceſſive. Whereas two amongſt theſe Princes are ſaid to have married two of Solomons daughters, it is to be underſtood as ſpoken by anticipation, becauſe hee could not yet have daughters marriageable being himſelf ſo young, but it is meant, that afterwards when they were grown up, they took them for their wives.

P.Martyr.

V. 20. Iudah and Iſrael were many as the ſand upon the ſea ſhore.] This is ſpoken hyperbolically to ſet forth their exceſſive number to the greater glory of their King, to whom it is a glory to have a multitude of ſubjects.

V.21. Solomon reigned over all kingdomes from the river to the land of the Philiſtines, and to the border of Egypt.] By this river Iunius underſtandeth Euphrates, from whence to the Philiſtines land which lay South, ſeemeth to be the latitude of the countrey; or if Paleſtine lay Weſt, the longitude: and then the latitude was from Egypt South, to mount Libanus, North. P. Martyr.

V. 22. And the proviſion for Solomons houſe for one day, was 30. Cores of fine flowre, and 60. Cores of bread corn.] A Core was 10. Ephaes or buſhels, but according to Budeus, an Ephah was a buſhel and a peck, according to others, a buſhell wanting a pottle. If it be taken for a buſhell and a Core was 10. then 30. Cores amounted to 300. buſhels, and 60 to 600. all together 900. And foraſmuch as an Ephah contained 10. Omers, and an Omer was allowed for one perſon for a day, when they were fed with Manna and nothing elſe, but with other meat, as now they were fed, half ſo much would ſuffice, there could not be fewer then 20. fed with an Ephah, and with 900. Ephaes then were fed eighteen thouſand at the leaſt, which ſheweth the greatneſſe of Solomons court. Lyra makes theſe meaſures a great deal leſſe, that it may ſeem the more credible, ſaying, that a core was but 30. meaſures, and that a meaſure was but a little quantity, ſeeing Ruth carryed away from Boaz his threſhing floor 6. meaſures of barley. And Sallianus, who acknowledgeth that a Core containeth 10. Ephahs, addeth, or 30. meaſures, ſaying that a meaſure ſufficed a day for one perſon, and therefore 90. cores being 2700. meaſures, there were no more perſons fed with this proviſion but 2700. But it being granted, that a Core contained 10. Ephaes, not 3. but 20. perſons might well be fed with an Ephah and other meat together, ſeeing it is plain, that an Ephah was 10. Omers, and then the whole number muſt needs be 18000. at the leaſt, as was ſaid before. Now in theſe large daily expences of proviſion, it is not to be thought, as Martyr ſaith, that Solomon ſinned by exceſſe, for it is ſpoken to his commendation and the ſetting forth of his glory; and God by his example would teach that the riches of this world are at his diſpoſing; and when it ſeemeth good unto him, he can extraordinarily inrich his ſervants; and naturall men will not be taught this but by example; for when in the primitive Church chriſtians were poore, the heathen ſaid ſurely their God was a weak and poore God, becauſe otherwiſe he would have inriched them. And that in all this expence there was no exceſſe may be gathered, becauſe there is no mention made amongſt all his proviſions of wine, which amongſt thoſe that exceed is wont to be moſt plentifull. Other great Princes are noted in hiſtories to have been unreaſonably profuſe in their feaſtings, as Lucius Verus a Roman the ſonne of Marcus Antoninus, who ſpent at one feaſt 6000 Seſtertii, and one Seſtertium was 7 pound 16 ſhillings 3 pence, which Antoninus hearing ſaid, that that the common wealth of Rome ſhould ſuſteine great loſſe if another ſuch feaſt were made. Caligula would have his bread guilded to ſpend the more, and M. Antonius contended with Cleopatra, in prodigall ſpending upon a banquet.

V. 24. For he reigned over every place beyond the river from Thizpah to Azzah, &c.] Here the extent of Solomons kingdome is ſet forth in other termes then before, v. 21. for there it was bounded by the river at one end, and the Philiſtines countrey at the other, but thereby was meant onely the kingdomes inhabited by Iudah and Iſrael in the land of Canaan, here the whole length is ſet forth beyond the river Iordan alſo, where not onely Iſraelites but other nations inhabited to Azza or Gaza, which was of the Philiſtines, and this Thizpah ſaith Ierom, lay Eaſtward, and Azzah Weſtward; although Toſtatus ſaith, North and South. Thizpah, ſaith Iunius is otherwiſe by hiſtorians called Taphach lying at the river Euphrates, being ſince called *Amphipolis. Plin.lib.5.nat.hiſt.c.*24. ſo that hereby we may gather his kingdome to have been exceeding great. The Hebrewes, ſaith Pellican, will have by theſe two the uttermoſt parts of the world meant, holding that Solomon reigned over all countries of the whole world. This indeed is true touching Chriſt, who was by Solomon figured out, but his limits were not ſo large, and as the people of Iſrael then enjoyed peace, which is ſet forth in the next words.

V. 26. And Solomon had 40000 ſtables of horſes, and 12000 horſes.] 2 Chron. 1. 14. it is ſaid, he had 1400 Chariots, and 12000 horſemen. It is to be underſtood, that many of the horſes before ſpoken of were for theſe chariots, and the reſt for others of his retinue to ride upon. 2 Chron. 9. 25, It is ſaid, that Solomon had 4000. ſtables of horſes, here 40000. This difference may thus be reconciled, here the partitions in the ſtables are to be underſtood, there ſtanding in one but one horſe, as is the manner in the ſtables of many great perſons; there the whole ſtables, whereof every one contained 10. ſuch partititions, ſo Lyra and Iunius. If any man ſhall ask what Solomon did with ſo many horſes, it is anſwered, that he uſed ſome of them for the defence of his kingdome, ſome for carriages and ſome for his ſervants to ride upon; they being placed for theſe ends in ſeverall parts of the kingdom.

V. 29. But God gave Solomon very much Wiſdome and underſtanding, and largeneſſe of heart, as the ſand upon the ſea ſhore.] Some, ſaith Martyr, will have the largeneſſe of Solomons heart compared to the ſea-ſhore, becauſe as that comprehends innumerable grains of ſand, ſo his heart comprehended innumerable notions of all ſorts; others, becauſe the moſt vaſt ſea is terminated with the ſhore, ſo all knowledge was contained within the heart of Solomon. But he ſaith, that the compariſon is made in reſpect of the largeneſſe of the ſea ſhore, it being a ſpacious plain, that compaſſeth the ſea round about. I think, that nothing elſe is meant, but that as the ſea-ſhore abounds with innumerable ſands, ſo did his heart abound with all kindes of knowledge, none that lived abounding herein like unto him, which is further expreſſed in the compariſons and declarations here following, as no place abounds with ſands like the ſea-ſhore: Thus alſo Pellican, who applying this to the true Solomon Chriſt Ieſus, ſaith, it was aboundantly verified in him, becauſe in him were hid all the treaſures of wiſdome.

V. 20. And the wiſdome of Solomon excelled the Wiſdom of all the men of the Eaſt, and of the Egyptians.] By the wiſe men of the Eaſt are meant the Magitians, Chaldeans and Aſtrologers, and all that were the finders out of the nature of things: for to attain this knowledge many travailed farre, as Pythagoras, Empedocles, Democritus, Plato, &c. And to ſhew that the Eaſt was the place, where wiſe men, who were ſeen into greateſt ſecrets, were, it is ſaid Matth. 2. that when Chriſt was born there came wiſe men out of the Eaſt. For the wiſe men of Egypt here alſo were Magitians, whom Pharaoh called for, to do by their skill ſuch wonders as Moſes did. Theſe were greatly ſeen into the ſecrets of nature, and if there were any skill in picture-making aptly to repreſent things, they had it. But Solomon excelled all theſe, as being of more exquiſite underſtanding, then they, as Daniel afterwards excelled the Chaldeans of the king of Babylon, and herein chiefly he excelled them all, becauſe his knowledge was joyned with the knowledge of the true God, and with the fear of him, as theirs was not. Thus farre Pellican. He was wiſer, ſaith Lyra, then the men of the Eaſt, who ſtudied the courſe of the ſtars and then the Egyptians, who ſtudied Philoſophy. Martyr in ſpeaking of this compariſon ſaith, that the wiſe men of the Eaſt did firſt finde out the courſe of the ſtars, for which and other rare knowledge they were moſt famous, and that Abraham and Iob and his friends had this skill, but afterwards they degenerated into the ſtudy of evill arts, ſouth-ſaints, divinations and execrations, for which the Iſraelites were reproved by Eſay in theſe words, They have filled themſelves more then the children of the eaſt, with vain ſciences, &c. Some becauſe Solomon is compared unto them, not conſidering this diſtinction of times have held Solomon to have been ſuch, as they were ſince, viz. one that knew and exerciſed theſe evill arts, and Exorciſmes, and Ioſephus followeth this opinion, telling a ſtory of one Eleazarus, who before Veſpaſian the Emperour putting a ring with a certain root therein to the noſtrils of a man poſſeſſed, drave out the evill ſpirit. But foraſmuch as God gave unto Solomon his wiſedome, it cannot be, that he ſhould exerciſe it in ſuch evill arts as are by him condemned. And for the effect wrought by a root, it was by colluſion of the evill ſpirit with that exorciſt.

V. 31.

Alſo, hee was wiſer then any man, yea then Ethan the Ezrahite, and Heman and Chalcol, and Darda the ſonnes of Mahol, &c.] This, ſaith Martyr, is to be reſtreined to the men of thoſe times, or rather in reſpect of his knowledge in things naturall. But for this ſee before, ch. 3. 12. Touching the wiſe men here named, they were Iſraelites, who becauſe ſome of them were inſpired of God were wiſer then any of other nations. Of Ethan it is ſpoken Pſal. 89. as endited, by him. And of Heman Pſal. 88. who is alſo called there the Ezrahite; it ſeemeth that they were chief ſingers, and inditers of Pſalms to the praiſe of God, being of the ſonnes of Chorah of the tribe of Levi, and therefore they had a moſt excellent ſpirit of wiſdome in them, and ſuch as they, were alſo the other two their brethren. And it is moſt probable, that all theſe foure were the ſonnes of one man, although it may ſeem that Ethan was not, becauſe he alone is here called the Ezrahite, for ſo is Heman alſo called, Pſalm 88. many therefore hold Mahol to have bin otherwiſe called the Ezrahite, having the name Mahol from Chorus a dance, as the word ſignifieth, becauſe he inſtructed his daughters in muſick and dancing. Thus Martyr and R. L. Ben Gerſon, but Pellican writeth thus; the Hebrews ſay that theſe four were the ſonnes of Serah the ſonne of Iudah, others by them underſtand Adam, Abraham, Moſes, and David, but upon what ground I cannot ſee; and for Heman, one of theſe four he is reckoned up as a Levite, 1 Chron. 25. 4. and therefore Lyra followeth this opinion alſo, that they were Levites and Singers in the houſe of God. Yet Iunius is for the other, that they were all the ſonnes of Zerah, whom Iudah had by Thamar, becauſe 1 Chron. 2. 6. four bearing theſe names are reckoned up in enumerating the ſonnes of Zarah or Zerah, from whom might come the name Ezrahite, but for Darda there is Dorah, and it was ſo long agoe ſince they lived, that it is not likely that they ſhould be meant but ſome living about the time of Solomon, and famous then for divine wiſdome; wherein it is certain that Ethan and Heman excelled both by the Pſalmes which were of their inditing, and becauſe one of them is expreſſely ſaid to be a ſeer, 1 Chron. 25. 5. wherefore I hold with them rather, that take them to be Levites.

He ſpake 3000 proverbs, and his ſongs were 5000.] Lyra obſerveth that in all the book of the proverbs there 915 verſes, and ſometimes 2 verſes or more make but one proverb, therefore all that he ſpake, are not recorded. He uttered them at divers times and in divers places, but wrot them not, onely others that were about him wrot them, as memorable ſayings; and afterwards the cheiſe and more ſacred of them were gathered together, the reſt being left out, and the like is to be held touching his verſes or ſongs: ſo likewiſe Iunius who thinketh that all the reſt were alſo written and kept amongſt his monuments, as is intimated chap. 11. 41. but afterwards terwards they periſhed; as Lyra thinketh in the time of the Babylonian captivity under Nebuchadnezzar. For 5000 ſongs in the Greek, and Vulg. lat. the Hebrew verity hath it 1005. and Martyr hath obſerved, that in the book of ſongs called a ſong of ſongs, which only is now extant there are but 117 verſes, and for his ſentences or wiſe ſayings, which are here ſaid to be 3000. beſides 915 verſes numbred in the book of the proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes hath only 222. Theſe ſayings and ſongs of his ſaith he alſo, that were loſt, were not loſt without a providence; for a ſparrow falleth not to the ground without the will of our heavenly father, he doubtleſſe ſaw them to be profitable for thoſe times, but not for ours; and the like he ſaith of the book of Enoch, and of the warres of the Lord, which are loſt alſo. *P. V. 33. And he ſpake of trees from the Cedar of Libanon, even to the hyſſop, that groweth out of the wall, &c.] that is, ſaith Pellican, from the greateſt unto the leaſt, both of trees and plants; and of all kinds of beaſts, fowles, fiſhes and creeping things, but what he ſpake of them was either not written, or periſhed. Hee ſpake ſaith Lyra, of their natures and qualities, and of what uſe they were for men. And from hence Martyr gathereth, that the ſtudy and knowledge of naturall things agreeth well with divine knowledge. And for other ſciences of Mathematicks, Grammar, Rhetorick, and Logick; although nothing be ſaid hereof, yet it is not to be doubted, but that he had the knowledge of theſe alſo: foraſmuch as in diſcourſes and arguings, there is ſo much uſe of the three laſt; and to perfection of knowledge, the firſt is requiſite alſo. Pellican. Lyra. *P. V. 34. And they came from all kingdomes to heare the wiſdome of Solomon, and from all Kings of the earth, who had heard of his wiſdome.] The fame of his extraordinary wiſdome was ſoon ſpread abroad into all parts, and hereby many deſirous to learn of him came from all countries about to his court, as to a moſt famous ſchools, and Kings that could not come in perſon, ſent to learn of him, that their knowledge being thus improved, they might be the better able to govern and inſtruct their people. From whence Martyr rightly gathereth, what a good thing it is for Kings to be learned, and that it is commendable to travell into forreign parts to get knowledge & learning, for thus of old they did who were deſirous of wiſdom; and laſtly, that Solomon hid not his light under a buſhell, but communicated it unto all commers, teaching all ſuch as excell in knowledge to doe the like, remembring that ſaying, Scire tuum nihil eſt niſi te ſcire hoc ſciat alter. And to his Antitype Chriſt, they did alſo flock from all parts to heare and learne of him, and ſo muſt all ſuch as would be indued with wiſdome to ſalvation, to the Preachers of his Goſpell. CHAP. V.

V. 1. 2 Chron. 2. 3. AND Hiram the King of Tyrus ſent his ſervants to Solomon, for he had heard that they anointed him King over Iſrael, &c.] 2 Chron. 2. 3. this being omitted, it is ſaid that Solomon ſent to Hiram to deſire Cedars of him for the building of the houſe of God, but it is to be underſtood, that Solomons ſending to him was the ſame with that here commemorated, v. 2. after that Hiram had ſent unto him to congratulate his inauguration to the kingdome. Ioſephus ſaith that Solomon ſent unto Hiram by the ſame meſſengers. Touching this King, there was both Tyrus and Zidon, two rich cities; over both which he reigned ſaith Martyr, they ſtood neer unto the land of Iſrael, and upon the Sea coaſt, whereby their riches were ſo greatly increaſed, their ſituation being rocky and barren. Hiram is ſaid here to have been friend unto David all his dayes, but Pſ. 83. 8. the men of Tyre are numbred amongſt the enemies of Iſrael. It ſeemeth therefore that this freindſhip between them began after that; and that which is here ſaid is then to be underſtood, after that they had contracted freindſhip, it continued as long as David lived. Or rather that Pſalme was propheticall being compiled by Aſaph, to ſhew the combinations of the enemies to come againſt Iſrael, and how they ſhould therefore be deſtroyed, as they were in the dayes of Iehoſaphat; 2 Chron. 20. thus Martyr: but becauſe there is no mention of the men of Tyre there but of other nations, it is rather to be referred to ſome other time, when the Aſſyrians alſo came againſt Iſrael. It is moſt probable alſo ſaith Martyr, that this King Hiram had the knowledge of the P. Martyr.

true God, which he might attaine unto by his familiarity with David, and accordingly he ſpeaketh moſt piouſly in his anſwer to David, v. 7. Touching the time of Hirams ſending to David, it is to be underſtood, that he being a neare neighbour deferred not long this his ſending, but did it at the beginning of Solomons reigne, onely it is here commemorated occaſionally, the intercourſe between theſe two Kings being ſet forth, and therefore Junius rendreth it, Miſerat Hiram, Hiram had ſent. The reaſons why Solomon ſought to him for Cedars rather then to any other King, are manifeſt, [illegible]. The great freindſhip between them, and between Hiram and his father [illegible] 2. This embaſſage ſent by Hiram unto him. 3. The skilfulneſſe of the Ty[illegible] working curious works beyond thoſe of other nations. And it is to held, tha[illegible] diſpoſed ſo of it, that the Tyrians, Gentiles, ſhould be imployed about the work of this Temple, to prefigure the vocation of the Gentiles, and their future helping to build up the ſpirituall temple. In which allegory Pellican goeth further, noting that the Sidonians and Proſelites amongſt the Iewes being the workmen, but the rulers of the work Iſraelites, did figuratively ſhew that the ſpirituall temple ſhould be built by Diſciples amongſt the Gentiles, but the Apoſtles who were Iſraelites, ſhould be the cheife workmen and governours therein. And Hirams voluntary ſending to Solomon to ſeek his freindſhip, foreſhewed the ready comming of the Gentiles to the knowledge and religion of the true God. And there is good ground for this allegory, ſeeing that the faithfull are called the temple of God, 1 Cor. 6. Eph. 2. 20. And Chriſt ſpeaketh of his body, as of a Temple[illegible]ying, deſtroy this Temple, he was therefore ſaith Beda figured out by Solomons Temple alſo; for he was the Temple of God, becauſe the Godhead dwelt in him bodily; we, becauſe the ſpirit of God dwelleth in us.

And Solomon ſent to Hiram ſaying, thou knoweſt that David my Father could not build an houſe to the name of the Lord his God, for the warres, &c.] Unto v. 6. which being omitted, 2 Chron. 2. 3. he ſaith onely in his meſſage unto him; As thou didſt by David my father, and ſenteſt unto him Cedar wood to build him an houſe to dwell in; ſo doe to me, that I may build an houſe to the name of the Lord my God, and conſecrate it to burn incenſe before him, &c. The houſe that I mean to build is great, for great is our God above all Gods, therefore who is able to build him an houſe, if the heaven, and heaven of heavens cannot contain him; &c.] unto v. 10. The ſending of Solomon to Hiram was by letters, as it ſeemeth by the copy of a letter ſtill extant amongſt other ancient monuments, as Eupolemus hath it thus, King Solomon to Suron the King of Tyre and Sidon, and Phœnice greeting. Know thou that I have received the kingdome from David my father, by the benefit of the great God, who hath alſo commanded that I ſhould build a Temple to God who hath made heaven and earth, and that I ſhould alſo write to thee that thou ſhouldſt ſend to me of thy people, who may be with me whilſt the work of God is perfected, as he hath commanded me. I have written alſo to Galilee, Samaritis, Moabitis, and Ammonitis; to ſend in neceſſaries; &c. Thus, there the name Suron being put for Hiram. There is alſo a copy of Surons letters to Solomon, and of Solomons letters to Paphra King of Egypt, to the ſame effect; and of his anſwer to Solomon. In Solomons writing to Hiram, both the hiſtories conſidered together, both that 1 King. 5. and 2 Chron. 2. he maketh no mention of Davids ſhedding of blood, which elſewhere is ſpoken of, as an impediment to his building of an houſe unto God, but onely that becauſe he had continuall warres, he wanted time and leiſure to doe it, and indeed God had otherwiſe diſpoſed of it, that not he, but his ſonne ſhould build this houſe. But now he by Gods bleſſing injoying peace, entended to build; for he aſcribeth not this peace to Davids ſubduing of all his enemies, but unto God by whoſe power it ſo came to paſſe. Hereby was ſhewed that the ſpirituall Temple is not built in diſſention and bloodſhed, but in peace, neither are bloody perſons fit inſtruments for this work, but the peaceable and meek. Wherefore Satan laboureth what he can to hinder this building, by ſtirring up diſcord in the Church of God, and he that is a true freind unto it, ſhould labour what he can to beat it down, and to make peace. The trees, which Solomon deſired of Hiram to build the Temple withall were Cedars, and 2 Chron. 2. 8. Firre-trees, and Almug-

Pellican. make 480. Pellican aſcribeth no yeares to Ioſhuah, becauſe they are not ſet down, nor to Samuel, but ſaith, they are included in the years of others, Ioſhuahs in Othniels, and Samuels in Sauls. Touching the ſpeech of Iephtah, which may ſeem to make againſt it, ſee before upon Iudg. 11. and what is to be thoght of the time, that Ioſhuah ruled, Ioſh. 23. and Ioſh. 24. 32. Vnto this reckoning agreeth Lyra, P. Martyr, and others. Onely Ioſephus differing from the holy hiſtory here, as in many other places, for 480 hath 500. yeares, and according to ſome interpreters of his more, reckoning the yeares of the Iſraelites ſervitudes, beſides the years of their judges. But they are all included within the yeares of their judges, as was before ſhewed, Ioſh. 24. 32. Now this computation of the time is made here, ſaith Pellican, becauſe after this the reckoning was to be made from the building of the Temple, to the deſtruction thereof, which Ioſephus ſaith was 470. yeares, 6. moneths, and 10. dayes after. The cauſe, why Solomon began to build the temple no ſooner, hath been already ſhewed to be for that ſo great preparation was made before. For the moneth Ziph, which is ſaid to be the ſecond moneth, it is not to be underſtood, according to ſome, of the ſecond moneth of Solomon's fourth year, but of the ſecond moneth of the year; and that not, as ſome would have it, beginning the year in Autumn, according to the firſt common reckoning, but as the civill year is appointed to be begun, Exod. 12. 2. c. 13. 4. in the moneth Abib or Niſan, which anſwereth to April, and Ziph to May. And the building began not till the ſecond moneth, becauſe the Paſſeover was kept in the firſt. Some determine alſo the day, as Scaliger the 29, Capellus the 8, Sethus the 6. But to leave this, as uncertain, the place, where, which is not here ſpoken of, is ſaid 2 Chr. 3. 1. to be mount Moriah, in the threſhing-floor of Araunah; which was ſhewed to David. This mount, according to Adriconius, ſtood on the Eaſt ſide of the city Ieruſalem near unto the wall, and was rocky, ſaith Ioſephus; towards the Weſt of it, was mount Zion, Northward mount Bezetha, and Southward mount Acra, and mount Calvary. And it ſeemeth, that all together was called Moriah at the firſt, becauſe the Lord bad Abraham go into the land of Moriah and ſacrifice his ſonne upon one of the mountains, that he would ſhew him there; but after the Lords appearing to Abraham there, this mount onely carried this name of Moriah or viſion. And it was within the tribe of Benjamin according to ſome, but according to others of Iudah, the reaſon of which difference is, becauſe ſometimes it is ſpoken of in holy Scripture, as being in the one tribe and ſometime in the other. Some therefore hold, that this mount was divided by a line between theſe two tribes, and ſo part of the temple ſtood in the one tribe, and part in the other. Whereas the temple is ſometime ſpoken of, as ſtanding upon mount Zion; it is becauſe mount Moriah was contiguous unto it, and it was more known, and therefore under that name Moriah is to be underſtood as an appurtenance to it.

And the houſe which King Solomon built unto the Lord, was 60. cubits long, 20. cubits broad, and 30. cubits high, v. 3. and the porch before it was 20. cubits long, and 10. broad.] The height of it here omitted, is ſaid 2 Chron. 3. 4. to be 120. cubits, ſo that the porch ſtood as an high tower farre above the temple; wherein, ſaith Pellican, there were chambers to keep the treaſures of the temple. This porch ſtood Eaſtward, and the moſt holy place; towards which they prayed, Weſt: which was ſo ordered, ſaith Martyr, that they might not in praying be like unto heathen idolaters, who worſhipped Eaſtwards the Sun riſing, for which cauſe they amongſt the Iſraelites, who worſhipped with their faces to the Eaſt are taxed, Ezek. 8. 16. and Cicero and Vitruvius do teſtifie, that the heathen worſhipped towards the Eaſt. But chriſtians have alwayes their temples ſo built, that they might worſhip towards the Eaſt, and herein they were ſo farre from being blame-worthy, as that Baſil ſaith, he thinketh, that they were directed thus to do by the tradition of the Apoſtles; firſt, to ſhew their deſire to come into Paradice, and ſecondly, to ſhew that the God whom they worſhipped, was Lord of the Sun, which riſeth there. For the dimenſions of this houſe, Martyr ſaith, it held a proportion with the tabernacle, and yet ſpeaking of them in particular, he ſaith, that the moſt holy place in it was but 10. cubits long, the holy place 20. but this is ſaid to be 60. And who ſo ſhall look back to Exod. 26. ſhall finde, that in every dimenſion the tabernacle was much leſſe; as indeed the neceſſity of that time required, when it was to be carried from place to place. Whereas the porch is ſaid to be 120. cubits high, and the houſe it to be ſo high within, but without upwards 20. cubits more; which together make 50. and another ſtory above that forty, and a third thirty, being all together Joſeph.antiq. l.8.c.2. 120. likewiſe. Ioſephus ſaith, that the temple was 60. cubits high, and above that another building of 60. cubits, making together 120. But that of Lyra is more Lyra. probable, that next unto the firſt ſtory of 30. cubits, there was another of 30. and a third above it of 60. cubits; the two upper buildings ſerving to lay up the holy veſtments and treaſures of the temple. And to ſhew this to be the height of the whole building, both of the porch and holy place, he alledgeth 2 Chron. 3. where the height of the temple is not mentioned ſeverally, but onely the length and breadth; and then ſpeaking of the porch, the text ſaith it was 20. cubits long, and then is added in the vulgar Latin, moreover the height was 120. cubits, and Hebr. and the height 120. which may be referred to the porch and temple alſo. And the V. 17. temple was 40. cubits long and 20. cubits broad unto the moſt holy place; which V. 20. was 20. cubits broad, 20. long, and 20. high. So that, as was ſaid at the firſt, when 2 *Chron.*3.8. the height of the temple is ſaid to be 30. cubits, but afterwards 120, the firſt is to be underſtood of the loweſt ſtory, where incenſe was burnt, the laſt of the whole fabrick comprehending both it and the chambers above, of which nothing is ſaid, but onely of the lower ſtory, becauſe thoſe upper rooms were not for any religious uſe, but for ſtowage onely. But I reſt in the firſt, as Pellican.

V. 4. And he made windowes in the houſe,] But becauſe v. 5, 6. galleries are ſpoken of, which were made againſt the wall of the houſe, round about, that is, on the North and South ſides and the Eaſt end, and of theſe there were three ſtories, each one being 5. cubits high. The windowes of the Lords houſe could not but be above 15. cubits high, from the pavement to the nethermoſt part, and theſe windowes were broad within and narrow without; although Hebrew Expoſitours affirm the contrary, becauſe the temple had no need of the light to come in by the win-Pagnin. dows, ſeeing there were in it lights alwayes burning. Pagninus rendreth it open Junius. within and ſhut without, that is, narrow. Iunius ſhut, that is, with glaſſe, according to R. Iehuda, a moſt ancient Writer. Wherefore he rendreth it proſpectus ac-commodas clauſas, according to the ſignification of the word, שקפים

V.5,6. Touching the galleries made round about againſt all the parts of the temple, but onely the Eaſt end where the entrance was, there were of them three ſtories, each one being in height 5. cubits, and for the breadth of the loweſt it was 5. cubits, the middlemoſt ſixe, and the higheſt ſeven, which might ſo be made, as is conceived by making the wall of the temple, which was ſix cubits broad, one cubit narrower againſt the middle ſtory, and two againſt the higheſt, and theſe galleries were devided into 30. chambers, twelve on the South ſide, twelve on the North, P. Martyr. and ſixe on the Eaſt. But ſome, ſaith Martyr, imagine, that between the loweſt and the middle ſtory, there was a ſpace of 7. cubits and an half, and likewiſe between the middle and the higheſt, in which ſpace there being open galleries to walk in, the windowes of the temple ſtood, and ſo the top of the higheſt ſtory, was equall with the top of the temple; but he diſliketh this, and holdeth rather, that this whole building was but 15. cubits high, and that the windowes were all made above it, becauſe the ſacred hiſtory ſaith nothing of ſuch ſpaces, and if there had been ſuch, the light could not have come into the tepmle, ſo well. Thus Martyr, who yet juſtly maketh a queſtion whether any chambers were built at the Weſt end, where the moſt holy place ſtood, becauſe Ezekiel ſpeaketh only of chambers on the two ſides, the ſouth and the north, placing 15. on the one ſide, and 15. on the other.

V. 7. Here is one thing moſt remarkable in the building of this houſe ſet forth, the ſtone-work was all ſo prepared, that when they came to be joyned together to make the wals, neither hammer nor hatchet nor any iron tool was heard, that is, P. Martyr. ſaith Martyr, either in ſawing, or poliſhing, or carving, for otherwiſe it was impoſſible, that all things ſhould be put and faſtened together, without knocking; this ſerved myſtically to ſhew, that there ſhould be no contentions in the church Pellican. of God, but peace, and conſent. Pellican and others think, that the ſtone-work onely is meant, which was with ſuch skill prepared in the mountains, that there was no noiſe made by knocking when they were joyned together in the wals, to ſhew, that although here the ſpirituall temple in the living ſtones thereof be pierced with the ſawes and iron tools of afflictions, yet hereafter we ſhall be diſpoſed according, to grace and mercy, all afflictions ceaſing.

V. 28. The door of the midle chamber was on the right ſide of the houſe, unto which they aſcended by ſtaires, and from thence to the third.] Here the hiſtory returneth again to ſpeak more of the galleries on the ſide of the Temple, on the right ſide, that is the South, there was a doore by which they entred into the loweſt ſtory, and from thence aſcended by ſtayres to both the ſtories above, ſo as that there was no paſſage through the Temple into them, nor door into the Temple but at the Eaſt end only, where the porch ſtood; as Martyr gathereth. But Lyra ſaith that this doore was through the South ſide of the wall of the Temple from whence they aſcended to the midle ſtory above it, and ſo to the higheſt; but foraſmuch as no mention hath been made hitherto of any chambers above the Temple, it is not probable that this hath any reference to ſuch, but onely to thoſe that were before ſpoken of on the ſides of the Temple. P. Martyr. Lyra.

V. 9. Thus Solomon finiſhed this houſe and covered it with Cedar beams arch-wiſe, and Cedar boards, which roof within is ſaid v. 22. to have been covered with gold, and the walls likewiſe being firſt covered with Cedar, were overlaid with gold, v. 15. 21. 22. and the pavement being covered with firre, was overlaid with gold, v. 30. which ſheweth the magnificence of this, farre ſurpaſſing all other houſes of former ages, although ſince a Temple was built unto Diana in Epheſus much longer and broader, for the length was 425 feet, and the breadth 220, and it had 127 pillers, each one 60 foot high, and for bright ſhining within it was ſo glorious, that it dazeled the eyes of the beholders; for which it was written at the entrance to ſuch as went in, tenete oculos.

V. 11. P. Martyr. But the word of the Lord came to Solomon, &c.] Before the declaration of the ornaments of this houſe, here is ſhewed, what incouragement God gave unto Solomon, when he was in building it: for ſo Martyr thinketh that this paſſage comes in in the proper place, now the work not being yet perfected, but in that forwardneſſe which was before ſpoken of, this word came to Solomon, and that moſt probably by a Prophet; yet ſome think that it was after all the works finiſhed, and is here inſerted by anticipation. But the verb here uſed of the preſent tenſe, the houſe which thou buildeſt, and not, haſt built, ſheweth the contrary. The ſpeech here uſed is imperfect, the houſe which thou buildeſt, if thou keepeſt my Commandement; Iunius ſupplyeth it thus, this which thou buildeſt is the houſe of which I ſpake unto David; Martyr, ſhall ſtand. But I think rather it may be ſupplyed thus, the houſe which thou buildeſt will not eſtabliſh my favour towards thee, although a work that I do greatly accept of, but if thou wilt keep my ſtatutes, then I will doe as I promiſed to David thy father; that is, make thy kingdome proſperous and ſtable to thy ſeed after thee; ſo that meerly building of Temples will not procure Gods favour, but when ſuch builders are godly, and perſiſt in holy obedience alwayes. And I will ſaith the Lord dwell among the children of Iſrael; which is ſo promiſed, becauſe commonly like Prince like People, and dwelling amongſt them is meant nothing elſe, but with his favour, and being ready to hear the prayers made in that houſe, and ordinances and oracles and bleſſings, whereby they ſhould become more famous then any other nation, otherwiſe God is every where.

V. 15. And he built the wals of the houſe within with Cedar boards, &c.] All the houſe within both roof and walls were covered firſt with Cedar, and the floore with Firre, then all was overlaid with gold; 2 Chron. 3. 5. it is ſaid that the greater houſe was covered with Firre boards, unto which plates of gold were fixed, and the pavement was ſpread with marble. Thus indeed the Vulg. Lat. but the Hebr. which Iunius followeth is, and he covered the houſe with precious ſtones for ornament, expounding the covering with Firre of the floore, as 1 King. and this with precious ſtones of the ſpaces between the plates of gold. Junius.

V. 16. He built alſo on the ſides of the houſe 20 cubits with Cedar,] This place is obſcure; Lyra. Scholaſt. hiſtor.

obſcure, becauſe he had ſaid before, that he covered the walles with cedar boards, and theſe were 30. cubits high, but here it is ſaid 20. cubits high. Lyra and Comeſtor clear it thus, the Weſt wall which was next unto the moſt holy place, is hereby meant, and this it is to be thought, was but 20. cubits high, the ten cubits above being left void for the fume of the incenſe to paſſe through into the moſt holy place. Others think, that ſo much of the walles was ſet with precious ſtones. Martyr followeth Lyra, and that indeed is moſt probable. If it be objected v. 20. the height of the moſt holy place was but 20. cubits, ſo that if the wall next unto it were 20 cubits high, there could be no ſpace above that for the fume to paſſe through; Martyr anſwereth, that the whole houſe is ſaid at the firſt to be 30. cubits high and 60. long, wherefore the moſt holy place being a part of that 60, was certainly 30. cubits high alſo, and whereas v. 20. it is ſaid to be 20. as the breadth and the length was, Martyr ſaith, it is to be underſtood of the Eaſt part next unto the temple onely, which was built up no higher for the reaſon before ſaid.

V. 17, 18.
V. 20, 21.
V. 19.

The houſe was 40. cubits long, and the cedar boards wherewith the walles were covered, were carved with pictures of wilde cucumbers and flowers, v. 29. and of cherubims and palmes.] And all the houſe was finally over-laid with gold, and all things therein, and the moſt holy place with the fineſt gold. And in the moſt holy place were two cherubims made of olive wood, the height of each cherubim being 10 cubits, and they had wings extending 20 cubits from one ſide of the houſe to the other, that is, the two wings of one 10 cubits, with one of which it touched the wing of the other, and with the other the wall on one ſide, and the wings of the other likewiſe on the other ſide; and their faces ſtood towards the Temple, 2 Chr. 3. 13. wherein they differed from the cherubims ſet up by Moſes; for they looked with their faces towards one another, Exod. 25. 20. what manner of faces they had is not here ſaid; but Martyr ſaith, in the book of the Chron. it is ſaid, that they had faces like young men, but Joſephus ſaith it is uncertain what they were like, and they were covered with gold. If it be doubted how their wings could extend 20 cubits, ſeeing this was the breadth of the houſe, what roome was left then for their bodies? Kimbi anſwereth, that their wings covered their bodies behind, and ſo their bodies took up no room, but their wings onely in the houſes breadth. Touching theſe cherubims and their forme and ſignification of the word I ſay no more here, becauſe I have ſaid enough already upon Exod. 25. 19. 20. If any ſhall make a queſtion, whether Solomon did well in making ſuch images in any part of the Temple, Moſes his doing the like before him, juſtifieth him. Beſides, it is to be held, that as of other things about the Temple, ſo of theſe he had a pattern from David, and he from God. Touching the matter of which they were made; viz. olive, it is a poore doubt, that is moved and anſwered by P. Martyr, how Solomon could lawfully cut down olives to make them, ſeeing that even in beſieging a city it is forbidden to cut down ſuch trees. For no man can conceive that hereby it was meant, that it ſhould be alwayes unlawfull to cut down ſuch trees, but only that no waſt ſhould be made of them for buildings or making of inſtruments of warre, as of other trees that bare no fruit. But here was a ſpeciall occaſion to take ſome of them for the uſe of the Sanctuary, for which uſe nothing was to be thought too precious, and ſuch wood is obſerved to be moſt hard and durable, and ſo fit for this purpoſe; beſides for the figure that might be herein, this wood might ſpecially be taken.

V. 29.

And he made the walls of this houſe carved cherubims and palmes, and flowers both within and without; that is, upon that wall which was next unto the Temple.

V. 30.

Likewiſe he is ſaid to have covered the floore of the houſe within and without with gold, that is, both in this inner part called the moſt holy place, and in that which was called the Temple or holy place, thus Iunius. But the Vulg. lat. agreeing onely about the floore, touching the walls, renders it thus; and divers pictures hanging over, and as it were going out: but the firſt is moſt agreeable to the Hebrew text.

V. 31.

Touching the doores of the moſt holy place, it is ſaid that the upper poſt and the ſide poſts were of five ſides, that is, as is moſt probable, with five angles according to the form of the doores, which were neither ſquare nor round, as two leaved doores commonly are, but of a different form for greater beauty, thus Lyra; and Pellican, who alſo mentioneth another expoſition of ſome, that it is meant, that this was the fift gate; the firſt being of the peoples court, the ſecond of the Prieſts, the third of the porch, and the fourth of the temple; and this Martyr ſeemeth to favour, becauſe in ſpeaking of the doores into the temple, it is ſaid, he made them of four ſides. But Iunius renders it: Were the fiſt part of the wall; that is, the wall being 20. cubits high, and 20. broad, four cubits high, and four broad, which ſeemeth to be too little; but Ioſephus exceeds as much when he ſaith, that the doors were the whole breadth and heigth of the wall, v. 33. the doors of the temple are alſo ſaid to have been with four ſides, the vulgar Latin, with four corners: as the other doores were with five. And all theſe doores were carved with cherubims, palms and flowers, being done over with gold.

V. 36.
P. Martyr.

Then he made the inner Court.] 2 Chron. 4. 9. the Prieſts court, Which is called the inner, becauſe it was next unto the temple before the porch; and beyond that Eaſtward was another Court, into which came the people, and of the inner court the walles were but three cubits high, that the people might look over into it, and ſee the Altar which ſtood there, and the Prieſts offering of their ſacrifices thereupon; the outer was called the great court, this, ſaith Martyr, was ſo ſpacious, that it compaſſed the inner court and the temple round about, having a wall 30. cubits high, unto which galleries were adjoyned within, wherein the people might ſtand, and be ſheltered in rainy weather, and from the heat of the Sun, and thence behold both what was done in the inner court and ſee the temple and worſhip towards it: for into the inner court they might not come, but onely the Prieſts and Levites to execute their office by preparing and offering their ſacrifices upon the Altar, that ſtood there, and by waſhing them in the brazen ſea, which ſtood there alſo, and cutting them out upon tables, of which eight ſtood there, and waſhing themſelves in ten lavers, placed there alſo. For this court and the other did both bear the name of the temple, and therefore when as ch. 7. 39. the brazen ſea and theſe are ſaid to have been placed on the ſides of the temple, it is to be underſtood, in this court; And when Ieſus is ſaid to have taught in the temple, it was in the outer court. Again, of this there were three parts; firſt, for men of Iſrael to come into, that were clean; ſecondly, for women, which were clean likewiſe; thirdly, for the unclean and for the Gentiles, which came thither to worſhip. And forſomuch as the temple ſtood upon a mount, unto which they aſcended by degrees; they which were in any of theſe courts, might from thence ſee into the temple, and worſhip towards it. Theſe diſtinctions indeed are not here mentioned; but becauſe they were in the temple built by Herod afterwards; it is moſt probable, that they were now alſo, ſeeing that Solomons temple was a pattern propounded in the building of it, and if it had varied herefrom, it would not have been accepted of by the Iewes, whom to pleaſe Herod built that ſo coſtly.

V. 37.
Lyra.
The Allegory.

In the fourth yeare in the month, Ziph this houſe was begun, and in the eleventh yeare in the month Bull, it was finiſhed with all things pertaining unto it.] The month Ziph was the 2. month of the yeare, as was ſhewed upon v. 1. Bull the eighth month, as is expreſſed in the text, that is October; ſo all this great work was ended in 7 yeares and 7 months. Thus the writer of this hiſtory, before he hath ſet forth all the things pertaining to the Temple, concludeth it with the account of the time, & then ſetting forth the building of Solomons own houſe c. 7. to v. 15. he returneth to the ornaments of the Temple, but 2 Chr. 3. 15. the hiſtory of making theſe is continued, and then briefly the building of his own houſe touched ch. 8. 1. after the bringing in of the veſſels and dedicated things, and the dedication alſo ended. But becauſe we are in the Kings, I will proceed according to the order here followed; that is, make ſome conclution about the fabrick of the Temple, then ſpeak of the houſe which Solomon built for himſelfe, and laſtly of the other appurtenances and ornaments of the Temple. And for concluſion about this magnificent building, it is to be underſtood that it was figurative, as the Tabernacle ſet up by Moſes, figured out the old Church of the Iewes; ſo this houſe the Church of the Gentiles, which was built long after in the dayes of Chriſt the true Solomon, upon mount Moriah in a parcell of ground belonging to Arannah a Gentile; and it was ſet upon a mount, becauſe this Church was moſt conſpicuous, and there were of it three parts, the doores of which ſtood all Eaſtwards towards the riſing of the Sun, that it might ſhine into them; beginning firſt in the porch, to ſhew that the heavenly light whereby the Church is enlightened ſhone firſt to thoſe of the primitive times, who lived in the dayes of Chriſt and his Apoſtles. Secondly to ſuch as lived in the times immediately ſucceeding by the miniſtery of thoſe that were raiſed up after the Apoſtles in the times of thoſe greivous perſecutions. Thirdly to thoſe that lived in the dayes of Conſtantine the great, and afterwards; when this Church enjoyed peace. And this houſe had windowes narrow without, and within wider; to ſhew the light of teaching, which encreaſeth more and more. And all the walls, and all things about it were covered with gold, and ſet with precious ſtones, and adorned with divers pictures, to ſhew the divers vertues which ſhine in the faithfull. The galleries about the Temple of three ſtories figured out the divers degrees of the faithfull, and the doore on the right ſide of the Temple, by which they aſcended into all theſe galleries, the ſide of Chriſt pierced with a ſpeare, out of which flowed watter and blood, figures of both our Sacraments, whereby wee aſcend to everlaſting bleſſedneſſe. The pavement of marble covered with firre did ſet forth faith in the heart, and an heavenly converſation outwardly; which the firre tree aptly ſignifieth by the ſtreight and high growth thereof, and the plates of gold above all theſe, love. The partition between the Temple and the moſt holy place 20 cubits high; through which none might enter, but the high Prieſt only once a yeare, yet the fume of the incenſe went dayly through the void room above this wall into it, and filled it; this ſhewed that although no man can enter into heaven till death, yet his prayers as a ſweet perfume doe continually enter even whilſt he liveth here, and are accepted before God.

CHAP. VII.

V. 1. Lyra. P.Martyr. But Solomon built his owne houſe in* 13 yeares, and the houſe of the Forreſt of Libanus, &c.] Here are 3 buildings more mentioned. 1. Davids own houſe. 2. The Forreſt houſe. 3. The houſe of Pharaohs daughter his wife, touching all which it is to be underſtood, that he was in building them 13 yeares; not that he beſtowed more coſt upon theſe buildings then upon the houſe of the Lord, but partly becauſe all things about theſe were to be prepared now, whereas for the houſe of the Lord, they were prepared before, and partly becauſe here were three houſes for one; and laſtly becauſe all Iſrael did help, and more diligently the builders followed that work then this.

The houſe of the forreſt of Libanus, is thought to have been ſo called, for the 1 King. 10. 17. orchards and trees about it, and that therein was his armory, and to this both the King and Queen came for their recreation. Ioſephus ſaith, that it was the hall of Theodoret. the Kings pallace, then which the Queen of the South admired nothing more.
Theodoret thinketh, that it was called the forreſt of Libanus, not becauſe this houſe was built there, for it ſtood upon a part of mount Sion, but becauſe as in Libanus many Cedars grew, ſo here were many pillars of Cedar ſtanding; or according to Pellican. ſome, becauſe it ſtood upon that part of Sion, which was woody like Libanus.
Pellican ſaith, it was ſo called, becauſe it was made all of wood, and that by the Hebrews it was called domus refrigerii, and that it ſtood near the temple, in which happily the King and his courtiers ſtood at the time of ſacrificing, where the common people ſtood in the Court made for them, and the porch which hee alſo built, he ſuppoſeth was for women to ſtand in, and the two leſſer porches ſaith Lyra, were, the one for Solomons throne, when he would ſit in moſt royall ſtate, the other for his Iudges to ſit in and to hear common cauſes.

V. 9.
V. 10.

All theſe are ſaid to have been made of pretious ſtones, that is, ſtones, which coſt a great price, as being very great and coſtly to be tranſported, for they were ſtones of 8. cubits, and ſtones of 10. cubits ſawn and poliſhed.

V. 13.

And Solomon ſent and took Hiram out of Tyre, he was the ſonne of a widow of the tribe of Naphtali] 2 Chron. 2. 14. the ſonne of a woman of the poſterity of Dan; that is, ſaith Iunius a widow of Naphtali by the fathers ſide, and of Dan by the mothers, and this mans father was a Tyrian, becauſe he had skill to do any work in braſſe. 2 Chron. 2. 14. in gold, ſilver, braſſe and iron, wood and ſtone, in purple, ſilk and skarlet, and to grave any graving. Here the hiſtory returneth again to the temple, and to ſet forth the ornaments thereof made by Hiram. But it is to be underſtood, that he did not now firſt come into Iudea to do theſe works following, but came, when they firſt went about the building of the temple, and had an hand in all the curious works about it hitherto deſcribed, as is plainly ſhewed 2 Chron. 2. 14, &c. and ch. 3. 15. after the other curious works before commemorated, done by him, it is ſaid as here v. 15. that he made two pillars of braſſe to ſtand before the temple, and here v. 14, he is ſaid to have done all Solomon's work; but here either of them is ſaid to be onely 18. cubits high, there 35. cubits, which Iunius doth thus reconcile; here ſacred cubits are meant, there common, and it is to be known, that the ſacred meaſure was twice as great as the common: But thus the height ſhould not be 35. but 36. cubits, to this he ſaith, that the baſis might be a cubit, which becauſe it was but half a ſacred one, is not here left out, but counted with the body of the pillar, but there it is. Pellican ſaith, that they both together were 35. cubits high, which is there meant, and each one almoſt 18. for which it is ſaid to be 18. cubits. Lyra reckoneth 35. cubits height thus; 18. in the body of the pillar, 5. the chapiter upon the top of it, and 4. the head put upon that, and then the baſis below muſt needs be 8. cubits, although it be not ſpoken of, and all theſe together make 35. This of Lyra is followed by P. Martyr, that of Pellican by Patablus and Ribera, onely herein they differ, that they ſay, the half cubit in the baſis of each pillar was hidden in the hollow of the pillar, and therfore is not mentioned in Chro. The reſolution given by Iunius I cannot ſubſcribe unto, becauſe it is not ſaid in Chron. 36. but 35. and for the ſuppoſed baſis, ſeeing no mention is made in the text of any, it is onely imaginary. And therefore, I think not that of Lyra to be received neither, and becauſe he would make up the number of 35. here, partly by adding the cubits of the chapiter, which in the Chronicles are expreſly put by themſelves over and above the number of 35. I ſubſcribe therefore to Pellican, whoſe will ſoon appear to be the trueſt, if this and that in Chron. be compared together, for here the length of one pillar is ſpoken of, there of both together, and that more exactly, there being in each pillar ſomewhat wanting of 18. cubits, but it is ſaid to be ſo much, becauſe it was about that length, and what it wanted was not worth the ſpeaking of, unleſſe we ſhall ſay with Patablus, that ſome part of the pillars being ſet up, was hid, and the reckoning in the Chron. is onely of the length, which appeared. The bigneſſe of each pillar was ſuch, that a threed of 12. cubits did compaſſe it. So Ier. 52. 21. where it is alſo ſaid to be hollow, and that the thickneſſe was 4. fingers.

And he made two Chapiters, each one five cubits high, and ſet them upon the pillars, &c.] Theſe are called crowns, Ier. 52. 22. that is, ſaith R. Levi, not like unto Kings crowns, but like globes, of a juſt and proportionable bigneſſe to the pillars, and theſe were fixed into the pillars, being ſet one againſt another like two cups, and upon theſe two were ſet two other leſſer heads riſing up, as Lyra ſaith, from the midſt of them with a narrower compaſſe four cubits high, ſo that the whole crown and ornament above it ſtanding upon the pillar, was nine cubits high, being moſt curiouſly wrought all over in the braſſe, of which they were made with rowes of net-works, and 200. pomegranats to each head, that is, 100. above and as many beneath, artificially hanged round about it. Martyr ſaith, that theſe pillars did reſemble a man, the nether part ſetting forth his feet, the ſecond the trunk of his body, the third his head, and the fourth his hat, and that the uſe of them was was the ornament, ſignifying Gods protection over this houſe, as of old the pillar of fire and the pillar of ſmoke, ſhewed his protection over them in the wilderneſſe.

And whereas they had names given them, which happily were engraven in them, the one being named Iachim and the other Boaz, ſignifying firmneſſe and fortitude, this ſhewed the ſtability of this houſe, and of the ſpirituall temple for ever figured out hereby, the Rabbins ſay, of the houſe of David.

V. 23. He made alſo a molten ſea of 10 cubits from brim to brim round, in the circuit, the height 5 cubits, and a threed of 30 cubits did compaſſe it about. &c.] The uſe of this brazen ſea is not here ſet down, but Exod. 30. 17, 18. it ſaid, that a veſſell of braſſe was made for the Tabernacle, in which Aaron and his ſonnes might waſh 2 *Chron.*4.6. their hands and feet, and for the like uſe was made, yet not for them to goe into, Lyra. as Lyra hath it. But that they might waſh with the water which iſſued out of it P.Martyr. by rocks round about, for which cauſe Martyr thinketh that the heads of the bulls ſerved, whereof there are ſaid to be 12. which did beare up this ſea, 3 towards the Eaſt, 3 to the Weſt, 3 to the North, and 3 to the South. The capacity of this ſea is ſaid to be of 2000 baths, that is, ſuch meaſures of liquid things, as an Ephah is of dry; of which ſee Exod. 16. but Ioſephus ſaith, that a bath was 62 ſextaries, that is, 93 pints, which make 11 gallons, and 5 pints. 2000 Baths, 22250 Gallons; whereas Junius. 2 Chron. 4. 5. it is 3000 baths, Junius reconciles it thus, there were commonly put Lyra. into it 2000. but it could contain 3000. Lyra following the Vulg. lat. hath it, 2000 baths here, and 3000 meaſures there, ſaying that a bath was a meaſure and a halfe, and ſo 3000 meaſures are no more then 2000 baths, yea in this place the Vulg. lat. hath both, 2000 Baths, that is, 3000 meaſures; but he confeſſeth that it crept into the text by the ignorance of the writer. But it is to be underſtood, that neither here, nor 2 Cron. 4. 5. any other word is uſed but baths, ſo that Lyra his ſolution cannot hold, unleſſe, as ſome, he will have baths and meaſures to be all one, but a diſtinction between baths, one ſort being leſſe by the third part then the other. Ca- jetan, Ribera, and Serrarius follow Iunius, but this is rather to be preferred, if there were any ſuch difference of baths. It is called a ſea, becauſe it was uſuall amongſt the Hebrewes, to call the gathering together of much water ſeas.

V. 27. And he made 10 brazen baſes, the length of each one 4 cubits, and the breadth 4 cubits, and the height 3 cubits.] Much is here ſpoken in deſcribing theſe ba-2 *Chron.*4.6. ſes which yet were nothing elſe, but frames to ſet the lavers upon, of which v. 38.
V. 38, 39. and they were to hold water to waſh the fleſh of the ſacrifices, each one containing 40 baths, and theſe were placed 5 on one ſide of the Preiſts Court, and 5 on the other; the brazen ſea being neareſt to the ſacrifices; it is to be underſtood that they were firſt waſhed at the poole deſcribed, Iohn 5. by the Nethinims. And for the Lyra. forme of the baſes, it is generally held, ſaith Lyra, that they were four-ſquare ſtan-ding upon four wheeles, whereupon they might be removed, and their height ſaid to be 3 cubits, is to be underſtood of the baſes and wheel together, and the ſquare of each baſis about was made into a round but one cubit and an halfe over, fit for the lance to ſtand upon, being of the ſame meaſure downward, but at the top of it was but one cubit over, yet in the midſt it ſwelled out into 4 cubits according to the ſquare of the baſis, and outwardly both above and beneath, were divers pictures made of Lions and Cherubims for ornament, and four ſhoulders or pillars went out from the baſis above to ſtay the laver, when it was ſet on. And the belly of the laver muſt needs be conceived to be in extent anſwerable to the baſis that is, 4 cubits; becauſe otherwiſe it would not have contained 40 baths, yea the He-brewes holding that ſo it could not contain thus much, ſay that it was not narrow, but broad at the top, being thus alſo more fit to waſh any thing in, and this is moſt pro-P.Martyr. bable, thus alſo Martyr. The 4 cubits therefore ſpoken of in text are to be attributed to the Diameter above, and not according to the height, which muſt not be conceived to be above one cubit, becauſe otherwiſe it would have been too high to reach unto, to waſh any thing therein. And if each laver contained 40 baths, they altogether contained 2000. as the brazen ſea did.

V. 40. Moreover, Hiram made chaldrons, fire-ſhovels, and baſons.] The chaldrons are Lyra. thought by Lyra to have been to put the aſhes of the Altar into to be carried away,

but by Martyr, to ſethe the fleſh of the peace-offerings in, wherewith they feaſted, that brought theſe offerings, but the Prieſts had part of it alſo, and in the time of Ely's ſonnes, one came with a fleſh-hook and thruſt it into a chaldron, and whatſoever it brought up was the Prieſts, 1 Sam. 2. But the word כירות here uſed, which in the vulgar Latin is rendred Lebetes, is by Martyr rendred conchæ, as the ten lavers before ſpoken, becauſe the word which ſetteth thē forth & theſe is the ſame. And it is an other word, סירות which is uſed v. 45. and is by him rendred chaldrons, although the vulgar Latin hath it lebetes, in both places. But becauſe they are two divers words, the firſt happily may ſet forth ſome brazen veſſell to put aſhes into, the other a chaldron or pot to boyl meat in. The fire-ſhovels were to gather up the aſhes, and to carry coals from the altar to put into the cenſers in the temple for the incenſe, and the baſons to receive the bloud of the ſacrifices, and the drink-offerings. Theſe things being thus diſtinctly mentioned, v. 41, 42, 43, 44, 45. there is a capitulation of them all together, and v. 46. it is ſhewed, that they were all caſt in the plain of Iordan. He made alſo an altar of gold, and a table of gold for the ſhew-bread. 2 Chron. 4. 19. It is ſaid Tables; and v. 8. he made 10. tables, placing five on the right ſide, and five on the left, whereas then a table is there ſpoken of, Martyr thinketh, that it is meant of one more eminent then the reſt, which was for the ſhew-bread to be ſet upon, and that the other tables were for baſons and vials of gold and ſilver to ſtand upon, according to Ioſephus, who ſaith, that Solomon made 2000. baſons, and 4000. vials. But it is not onely ſaid 2 Chron. 4. 19. that he made tables, but tables for the ſhew-bread; and Lyra thinketh, that whereas upon the table made by Moſes, there were ſet 12. breads, that there were 12. upon every one of theſe tables, but haply one was more excellent then the reſt, and this onely is ſpoken of here. The golden Altar was for incenſe, it ſtood in the temple nigh to the moſt holy place, into which the fume might enter above, where it was open; and be as a cloud above the Oracle. Of the ſhew-bread and myſtery therein, and the golden table made by Moſes, whereupon it ſtood, which was then but one, ſee before Exod. 25.23. where alſo is ſhewed of what it was made, viz. of cepar, and overlaid with gold, and what was the height, length, and breadth thereof.

For the myſticall ſignification of the two pillers, enough hath been ſaid before upon v. 23. The brazen ſea figured out Baptiſme, wherein all the Prieſts, that is, the elect waſh themſelves, and are cleanſed, that they may appear acceptably before God. And well is it called a ſea, becauſe a naturall ſea, that is, the red ſea firſt figured out Baptiſme, 1 Cor. 10.1. now this ſea made by art.

The 12. oxen, which did bear up this ſea, did figure out the 12. Apoſtles, who went into all parts of the world teaching and baptizing, as theſe looked three towards the Eaſt, three to the Weſt, &c. for that oxen do aptly reſemble preachers, is ſhewed 1 Cor. 9. where it is ſaid, thou ſhalt not muzzle the mouth of the oxe which treadeth out the corn.

This ſea contained 2000. baths, to ſhew, that to the baptiſme figured out hereby, come two peoples, the Iewes and the Gentiles; ſo Beda.

The ten baſes bearing up the lavers, in which the ſacrifices were waſhed, and afterwards put upon the Altar to be burnt with fire, did alſo figure out the preachers of the word, by whoſe miniſtry as the elect are waſhed in baptiſme, as Prieſts to ſerve God at his Altar, ſo they are waſhed, as holocauſts, that by the impoſition of hands, the holy Ghoſt as fire might come upon them, and make them ſacrifices unto God, which is, when they are filled with his guifts, the accompliſhment of which is moſt notably to be ſeen in the beleeving Samaritans, baptized by Philip, Act. 8. but afterwards by the impoſition of the hands of Peter receiving the holy Ghoſt. The four wheels which each of theſe baſes had, did ſet forth the four Evangeliſts, upon which they did run into all parts, and their anſwering to one another in all things, the harmony betwixt the Evangeliſts. The lavers ſet upon theſe baſes containing each one 40. baths, ſaith Beda, ſhewed, that ſuch as are truly baptized, beleeve the faith ſet forth in the 4. Evangeliſts and keep the ten commandements, becauſe ten multiplied by four make forty. And to ſhew, that baptiſme was hereby figured out, all theſe veſſels were made near unto Iordan, where Chriſt was baptized. For the figure in the golden Altar, the tables and ſhew-bread and candle-ſticks, enough hath been ſaid before, and upon Exod. 25.

CHAP. VIII.

V. 1. THen Solomon called all the Elders of Iſrael and the heads of the tribes, and the Princes of the fathers of the children of Iſrael to Ieruſalem, to carry the ark from the Ark from the city of David, &c.] At what time this was done, is ſhewed was in the moneth Ethanan in the ſolemnity, the 7. moneth, and upon what day it began and ended, 2 Chron. 7. 9. viz. the 8. day of the 7. moneth, counting from thence 14. dayes, unto which 8. being added make 22, and upon the 23. day the people Iunius. were diſmiſſed; that is, as Iunius hath it, at the end of that day, for it was the laſt of the feaſt of tabernacles, which began the 15. day of this moneth, and laſted 8. dayes, the firſt and the 8. being dayes of reſt, wherein no ſervile work might be done. And the King choſe this time, that the people might be ſpared from the trouble of taking this journey purpoſely, for now they came fitly to celebrate the Pellican. feaſt of tabernacles before their return home. Wherefore Pellican erreth, who ſaith, that this ſolemnity was the 10. day, which was the day of expiation, neither did this meeting, which was to feaſt and to rejoyce agree to that, ſeeing it was a day of faſting. And whereas ch. 6. 38. it is ſaid that all things belonging to the temple were finiſhed in the 8. moneth, it appeareth, that this dedication was made before the finiſhing of all things, the great abundance of implements for greater glory being made afterwards, but this opportunity taken before in the moneth which was fitteſt, being a moneth of many feſtivals, as appeareth, Levit. 23. For the name of the moneth Ethanan, it is moſt probably ſo called from אתה to come, becauſe both then all the fruits of the earth were come in, and ſacrifices came plenteouſly to the Tabernacle, in way of thankfulneſſe: but ſome derive it from איתן ſtrength, becauſe the fruits of the earth wherewith their garners were filled now, were the ſtaffe and ſtrength of the land. They, which were now gathered together, were the Princes and heads of families, who brought the people with them, as Ioſephus ſaith.

V. 3. Then the Prieſts bare the Ark into the moſt holy place, &c.] That holy ſigne of Gods preſence, which had hitherto been divers times carried from place to place, as having no ſetled place to reſt in, now cometh to one, and is after this never carried out by the Prieſts any more, therefore it is ſaid, there it is to this day. But whereas the Prieſts are ſaid here to carry it, 2 Chron. 5. 4. the Levits are ſaid to P.Martyr. carry it, and indeed to them this work was appointed, Numb. 4. This is by Martyr reconciled thus, the Prieſts, who carried it, were of the tribe of Levi, and therefore might by a generall name be called Levites, and although the Levites ordinarily carried the Ark, when they travelled far in the wilderneſſe, yet at ſome Ioſh 3. Ioſh. 6. ſpeciall times, ſuch as this was, when God would work miracles by the Ark, the Prieſts were for more honour to carry it. And if by Levites a diſtinct order from the Prieſts of that tribe be underſtood in the Chronicles, it is to be thought, that the Prieſts took the Ark of the Levites, when they came at the Temple and had brought it thither, and ſo carried it into the moſt holy place, into which the Levites might not enter, and thus both the Prieſts carried it, as is here ſaid, and the Levites, as there. But it is to be noted, that they are not onely ſaid to have carried V. 4. the Ark, but alſo the Tabernacle and the veſſels thereof, both Prieſts and Levites carried them, the one receiving them at the hands of the other, that is, the Levites firſt of the Prieſts, when they had prepared them and brought them forth, and the Prieſts of them again, at the Temple. For hither God in his providence would have them now both brought, which had a long time been disjoyned, by this means, two places being ſanctified for divine worſhip and ſacrifice, that after this, there might be no more two places, but one onely, prefiguring the conjoyning of two peoples, Iewes and Gentiles in one Chriſtian Church, under the true Solomon. Now the Ark was brought from Zion, and the Tabernacle from Gibeon, where it long abode: yet ſome hold it moſt probable, that by the Tabernacle at this time brought into the temple is meant the Tabernacle which David made, although the other was brought thither alſo afterwards, becauſe no mention is made of any other place, from whence, but onely of Zion.

V. 5. And King Solomon and all the congregation of Iſrael was with him before the Ark ſacrificing ſheep and oxen, which could not be numbred.] As when the Ark was carried before to the Tabernacle prepared by David, the King and people went before, and the Prieſts having gone 6. paces ſtayed, and then ſacrifices were offered, ſo at this time it is to be conceived, that King Solomon, with his train going before, upon a ſtay made of the Ark, theſe ſacrifices being many more were offered, and they are ſaid to be without number, becauſe their number was ſo great, that it could not well be counted.

V. 6, 7, 8. Then the Ark was by the Prieſts carried into the moſt holy place and ſet there, under the wings of the Cherubims, and they drew out the barres thereof, the heads whereof appeared out of the Sanctuary before the Oracle, and did not appear without. Ioſephus relateth a miracle here, which the Rabbins ſay was wrought now, viz. that the doors of the Sanctuary opened of themſelves to give way to the Ark; but ſeeing the ſacred Hiſtory, which omitteth not other miracles at this time, ſaith nothing of this, it is rather to be rejected, as an invention of theirs, then received. For the appearing of the heads of theſe barres, and not appearing without, R. Solomon, as Lyra hath it, ſaith, that they were drawn out ſo farre, as that they did a little bear out the veil, as a womans dug doth her breaſt-piece, whereby a man might ſee that they were ſo farre extended, but ſeen they could not be by any in the Temple, no more then a mans hand having a glove upon it; and this is followed by Martyr, yet Lyra holds another ſolution more probable, which he ſaith, is the ſolution of the Doctours, viz. that the ends or heads of the bars might be ſeen without by ſuch as were near, but not by thoſe that were farther off, and this he confirmeth by diſproving the other, in ſaying, that beſides the veil there was a wall, which parted the moſt holy place from the temple; and therefore the barres could not be ſeen by bearing out the veil. But this is by Martyr well anſwered, that the doores againſt which the barres were drawn out, ſtood always open, the veil hanging before it, as appeareth, for that at the paſſion of Chriſt the veil being rent, the way into the moſt holy place was laid open, and he conjectureth this to be the end of the barres being drawn out and ſtanding ſo continually, that the paſſage of the high Prieſt, when he entred once a year, might be on both ſides fenced hereby. And there they are to this day, that is, till the time of the captivity of Babylon. Iunius, There it is to this day, that is, the Ark, but the word uſed is of the plurall number and not of the ſingular.

before the teſtimony, Exod. 16. 35. Numb. 17. and therefore he expounds opening of the tabernacle; and this is one ſolution of Lyra and ſome others, but he hath another, viz. That the two tables onely were firſt laid there, as the moſt precious thing, to hold which the ark was made, and that the other two were laid up there afterwards only occaſionally. Things might be diverſly ordered in the time of Moſes and afterwards, then theſe three things being in the Ark, but now only the two tables of the Law, or the pot and rod were put in afterwards by Ieremia, ſee my Expoſ. Heb. 9. 4.

And it came to paſſe, that when the Prieſts went out of the ſanctuary, a cloud filled the houſe of the Lord, &c.] 2 Chron. 5. 11. This is more largely related, for all the Prieſts were preſent and not thoſe four onely, who carried the Ark in, the diſtributions into courſes not being at this time obſerved, and the Levites were alſo preſent with inſtruments of muſick, and Prieſts with trumpets, 120. praiſing the Lord, then the cloud filled the houſe, neither could the Prieſts ſtand to miniſter for the cloud. Hereby God manifeſted his preſence, and acceptance of this houſe for his own, as when the Tabernacle was newly ſet up he had done the like, Numb. 9. 15. And this meanes of manifeſting his preſence, he uſed from the firſt comming of the children of Iſrael out of Egypt, Exod. 13. 21. and eſpecially upon Sinai at the giving of the law, and ſpeaketh of it Levit. 16. 2. Thus almoſt Martyr, who alſo addeth, the cloud was bright, and yet dark upward, as a fire newly beginning to flame with a black cloud upon the top. But ſome, ſaith Lyra, hold, that it was a cloud ſhining ſo brightly, as that Matth. 17. at the transfiguration of Chriſt, as that the Prieſts were forced to go farther off, as not able to ſtand nigh unto it to behold it; but he rather holdeth with Martyr, that it was both bright and darkneſſe, becauſe of a paſſage in Solomons ſpeech. v. 12. The Lord hath ſaid, that he would dwell in the dark.] And that the Prieſts retired further out of reverence. Pellican ſaith, by the Prieſts being driven out by this cloud appearing, was ſhewed, that the time ſhould come, when this Prieſthood ſhould miniſter no more by carnall rights in Gods houſe. Comeſtor following Ioſephus ſaith, that the darkneſſe of this cloud was ſuch, that the Prieſts could not ſee to miniſter, and therefore it is ſaid, they could not ſtand to miniſter: ſo likewiſe Hugo Cardinalis. Now becauſe the place where the Prieſts ſtood to miniſter was in the Prieſts court, where was the brazen Altar, and aboundance of ſacrifices were now offered, Toſtatus thinketh, that the clouds filling of the houſe, is to be underſtood of that court alſo. I hold with Lyra, that when the cloud filled the houſe they could not ſtand to miniſter, becauſe they durſt not preſume to ſtand, where the glory of the Lord ſupplied the room, and indeed what place could they have there, where Gods glory filled all?

Then Solomon ſaid the Lord hath ſaid, that he would dwell in the darkneſſe.] That is, Levit. 16. 2. when he ſaid unto Moſes, that he would appeare in a cloud, ſo Iunius and Lyra alſo, but he thinketh that it may bee moreover expounded of his fact, in that he went before the children of Iſrael in a cloud in the wilderneſſe, and was in a cloud upon mount Sinai, and the tabernacle for his doing thus from time to time, was in effect ſaying, that he would dwell in it. And hereby Solomon both gathered, and would have the people underſtand that God was now preſent in this cloud; which was as it were, his common habitation.

And a cloud ſaith Martyr, was moſt aptly uſed to ſhew Gods glory to men, becauſe we cannot in this life ſee him, but darkly, and as it were, through a cloud. 1 Cor. 13. 12. but the time ſhall come, that we ſhall ſee him clearly, and know as we are known; where Solomon was he ſpake this, is expreſſed v. 22, 6. viz. before the brazen Altar; whereupon ſome think that he was in the Preiſts court, for there that Altar ſtood. But this is by others rejected, becauſe none but the Preiſts might come in there; to which we may adde, that the Preiſts could not ſtand there now to miniſter by reaſon of the cloud, and therefore neither could the King be there to make this ſpeech and prayer. It is then to be held that he ſtood not there, but in the Iſraelites court, turning his face to the Altar when he prayed; for which the ſcaffold upon which he ſtood, is ſaid to have been ſet in the court; and becauſe this was before the Altar, to which he firſt looked, and again after that, his face being turned to the people, he ſpake unto them; he turned himſelfe again to pray, he is ſaid to have ſtood by or before the Altar.

V. 14. P. Martyr. Then Solomon turned his face and bleſſed all the congregation of Iſrael, and all the congregation of Iſrael ſtood.] They ſtood, ſaith Ben Gerſon, for none might ſit in that court, but the King only for his great dignity, becauſe it was a place of adoration. What the King ſaid when he bleſſed them is not ſet down, but it is to be underſtood, that he prayed for all good unto them.

V. 15. Then he bleſſed God for fulfilling what he had promiſed to David his father in granting him his ſon to build him an houſe, which was in Davids mind, and approved before, although God in his providence had otherwiſe appointed it. Whence Martyr gathereth, that a man may ſometimes lawfully will that, which God willeth not; viz. before that he hath revealed it, being then ready to ſubmit to his bleſſed will, as David was in this matter; and Chriſt when he had prayed, that that cup might paſſe from him. 2 Chr. 6. 5. he choſe not a man to rule, that is a man & his poſterity after him.

V. 22. 2 Chron. 6. 13. Then Solomon ſtood before the Lord in the preſence of all the congregation of Iſrael, and ſtretching out his hands to heaven he ſaid, &c.] 2 Chron. 6. 13. He ſet up a brazen ſcaffold, and kneeling down thereupon, he ſtretched out his hands to heaven, and ſaid; and v. 54. he is ſaid to have kneeled upon both his knees. This ſcaffold was ſet up that he might be ſeen and heard the better by the people round about him. He bowed his knees for reverence to God, as we ought alſo to doe, eſpecially in our publick prayers, becauſe this geſture is ſpecially commended unto us in the holy ſcriptures, although it is not to be doubted, but that devout and humble prayers made in faith are accepted of, whatſoever poſition of body a man bee in; ſtanding, walking, riding, lying, or ſitting: And in praying we muſt lift up our hands to ſhew that we look for all our help and comfort from heaven.

V. 23. O Lord God of Iſrael, there is no God like unto thee.] Hee beginneth his prayer with aſcribing all praiſe and glory to God for his excellency and ſure performing of his promiſes, eſpecially which he made to David. In ſaying there is no God like unto thee, he meaneth not any perſon in the Trinity, as the Arrians have objected it; but amongſt thoſe that the ſuperſtitious world accounted Gods, for the Father, Sonne, and Holy Ghoſt are one God, to whom this praiſe is given. V. 25, 26. Then he prayeth for the conſtant performance of the promiſe made to David; not that hee doubted thereof, but for ſo much as it was upon condition of his poſterities perſeverance in obedience to his lawes, that this grace might be given unto them continually.

V. 27, 28, 29. Thirdly, he ſheweth that the end of his building this houſe was not for God to dwell in it; for the heaven of heavens could not contain him, who is infinite; but that the people reſorting to this houſe to pray, which was built to the honour of his name, might the rather be heard, and have their petitions granted.

V. 31, 32. Lyra. Fourthly, he beſeecheth God to heare the prayers made there in divers particular caſes, as 1. if any man that had wronged his neighbour came to ſweare there; that is, ſaith Lyra, ſome goods of his neighbour being committed to his cuſtody, if when his neighbour came to require them againe, they could not bee found, and hee to whom they were committed, came to the Temple to ſweare his own innocency about the conveying of them away: for in this caſe he was appointed to cleare himſelfe by oath, Exod. 22. that God would lay ſome judgement upon him, whereby it might be manifeſt, that he was perjured, and to deale ſo with the innocent, that his innnocency might plainly appeare; and ſo in other like caſes. V. 33, 34. 2. If the people of Iſrael for their ſinnes ſhould fall before their enemies, but return and pray in this houſe, &c. A caſe is here put which was frequent in the time of the Indges, for ſin to be given into the hands of their enemies, and upon their repentance and praying again, to be delivered. But how is it ſaid, if they come and pray in this houſe, pardon thou their ſinne and bring them back into the land; if they were carried out of the land, how could they come to pray in that houſe? R. Kimbi. Kimbi reſolveth this well, the caſe is of ſome being carried away, others ſlaine, and ſome ſtill remaining; now the meaning is, if theſe that remain ſhall humble themſelves in this houſe, then bring back thoſe that were carried away captive, they alſo turning to thee by true repentance.

3. V. 35. 3 If the heavens be ſhut that it raineth not, &c.] Here by heavens, ſaith Marty, ſome underſtand the middle region of the aire, where the clouds are ingendred, but he underſtandeth rather the higher heavens, where the ſtarres are, by the influence whereof rain cometh; and when this is ſtopped, they may be ſaid to be ſhut. P. Martyr. I rather think according to the common opinion that the parts from whence the rain commeth immediately are meant, or both theſe and the other alſo: and it is here intimated, that it is ſhut by ſin, and opened by penitent prayer, whereby we may ſee of what extent the power of ſin is, to ſhut the heavens from raining, and to ſhut out of the kingdome of heaven. There is alſo a judgement ſometimes by too much raine, but thoſe dry parts were ſeldome annoyed ſo; he therefore directs his petition as their neceſſity moſt required, whoſe puniſhment was by drought, and not by raine.

And he prayeth not only that God would pardon their ſin, but alſo ſhew them the good way and make them to walk in it, and ſo to ſend rain; whereby is intimated that to come into favour with God, it is neceſſary not only to be ſorry for our ſinnes paſt, but alſo to walk righteouſly before him for time to come.

V. 37. 4. If famin ariſe in the land, if peſtilence, a corrupt ayre, if blaſting, the locuſt or mill dew, &c.] Here is a 4th. caſe, wherein many judgements are put together, which alſo come for ſin. A corrupt ayre is that which cauſeth many diſeaſes, ſaith Lyra; Martyr hath it, dryneſſe; whereby the corn is dryed away, ſo as that the eare ſeeming full hath nothing in it when it is rubbed; Junius, Vredo a burning, by the immoderate heat of the Sun. The word is שרפון a ſmiting by the Eaſt wind according to Paguinus. The next word ירקון is indifferently rendred arugo, or rubigo, blaſting, or mil-dew; and the next unto the locuſt, חסיל bruchus, a kind of locuſt. There are divers wayes of annoying the corne, either by ſharp winds, or calme weather, and hot gleames of the Sun comming upon the corne, having dew upon it, and corrupting it; or the enemy beſieging them: all which tend to famin, and come not by chance; but the divine Majeſty being provoked by ſin, as the very heathen acknowledged; for Numa Pompilius inſtituted the feaſts called rubigalia to be kept in May for the pacifying of the gods; as Pliny ſaith, lib. 18. and the feaſts called Floralia were appointed by the oracles of a Sybill for the ſame purpoſe; and Theophraſtus and others call it a divine force, as Martyr noteth.

Lyra. Junius. Paguinus.

V. 38. V. 39. When any of theſe judgements are ſent, and prayers be here made by them that know the plague of their own heart, &c. for he ſaith, God only knoweth the hearts of all men. So that the ground of all plagues is the plague and infection of ſin in a mans heart, and therefore muſt be healed by turning therefrom. And to God only here it is ſhewed, that wee muſt pray in all times of our miſery, and not to Saints or Angels, becauſe he only knoweth the heart, and the affections thereof; and ſo how to deale with every one accordingly, and not as he deſireth, who hath in him an evill heart.

V. 41. 5. Moreover for ſtrangers, which are not of thy people Iſrael, &c.] Here is a fift particular caſe of a ſtrangers comming to the Temple to pray, that is, one who was not of the ſeed of Abraham, for a court was made, as for the Iewes that were cleane to come into to pray, ſo for thoſe that were not yet cleanſed, into which the Gentiles alſo might come. And this was thus done to allure the Gentiles to the worſhip of the true God, and that not in vain, becauſe many did come thither to worſhip, and to learn the knowledge of God, as the Steward of Candaces Queen of Ethiopia, Act. 8. and many of all nations, Act. 2. And it is not to be doubted, but that this paſſage is propheticall of the nations flowing to the mountain of the Lord, and comming up unto it; as Eſa 2. Whereas v. 43. he prayeth that the Lord would heare and doe according to all things that ſtrangers ſhould there pray for: but before in ſpeaking of Iſrael that he would deale with every one according to his wayes, the Rabbins note, that hee prayed more for the Gentiles then for the Iſraelies, becauſe to have all granted, that a man deſireth is a greater thing, then to be dealt withall according to his wayes. But they ſay, he prayed thus for them, becauſe they were ignorant of the lawes of God, and therefore if God ſhould have done for them but according to their wayes, none of their petitions could have been granted, but from the Iſraelites who knew the law and were inſtructed in it, living accordingly was expected: or if they had erred herefrom, a turning to it again, or elſe there could be none expectance of a grant to their deſires.

Note.

The 6 particular caſe, v. 44, 45. &c. is, when God ſhould ſend them to warre againſt their enemies, as he had done Saul againſt the Amalekites, & Phinees againſt the Midianites, then if they ſhould pray in or towards this houſe, hee beſeecheth God to judge their cauſe; that is, to give them victory who goe not out of their own minds, being lead by covetouſneſſe or ambition, but being ſent of God to execute his judgements againſt the wicked enemies of his people. And hereby is intimated, that alwayes in making warre preparation ſhould be made unto it by prayer, becauſe that even when they were ſure of victory, for ſo much as God ſent them, they were to pray to him for ſucceſſe.

6. V. 44, 45.

Note.

The 7 particular caſe, v. 46, 47. &c. is, when for ſinne they ſhould be delivered into the hands of their enemies, and be carried away captive into a ſtrange land; if they repent and pray towards this houſe: hee beſeecheth God to move their enemies hearts to pity them; and thus Daniel prayed in the Babyloniſh captivity, and the people captived, found great favour there.

7. V. 46, 47, 48.

In concluſion, he argueth from Gods ſeparating of the children of Iſrael to be his peculiar people, as he ſpake by Moſes; Deut. 7. 2 Chron. 6. there is the ſame prayer, but with ſome difference of words; and the words of v. 51. and v. 53. are wholy omitted, but this is added more v. 41, 42, Ariſe now (O Lord God) to thy reſt, thou and the arke of thy ſtrength, let thy Prieſts be cloathed with health, and let thy choſen people rejoyce. Turn not away thy face from thine anointed, &c. And at the end of theſe words, ſay the Rabbins, the doores of the moſt holy place opened alone. But I paſſe this over, as the Scripture doth, as an invention of their owne. For the words, the meaning is, remove not (O Lord) the Arke, the ſigne of thy preſence any more from hence, but let it reſt in the moſt holy place which I have built for it for ever, to the comfort of thy people. And hee calleth it the Arke of his ſtrength, becauſe hereby he had ſhewed his ſtrength in working wonders.

V. 53.

2 Chron. 6.

Let thy Prieſts be cloathed with health or ſafety, that is, preſerve them, that they may never again be deſtroyed, as ſometime they were in Nob, and let thy Saints rejoyce for the ſafety of this place, being alwayes kept from doing any thing, whereby thou ſhouldſt be provoked againſt it, to lay it waſt. And never turn away thy face from me thine anointed, but if I ſin, as I and all men are ſubject to ſin, yet remember thy promiſes to David, and be propitious unto me, and to my poſterity for ever: to this effect Pellican.

Pellican.

Solomon having ended his prayer made upon his knees, roſe up and bleſſed all the congregation of Iſrael with a loud voice, &c.] His bleſſing was a praying for all good unto them. But, which is here omitted, 2 Chron. 7. 1. It is ſaid, when Solomon had done praying, fire came down from heaven and conſumed the burnt offerings and ſacrifices, and the majeſty of the Lord filled the houſe. A cloud is ſaid before to have filled the houſe, which is called the glory of the Lord, v. 6, 7. and the ſacrifices of beeves and ſheep offered, are ſaid to be innumerable, but here 22000. beeves and 100000. ſheep, v. 63. which we muſt not conceive to have been offered all in one day, but in divers dayes, viz. in 14. according to the time, that this feaſt laſted, v. 65. and upon the 8. day, the people were diſmiſſed, v. 66. that is, the 8. after the ſecond 7. kept for the feaſt of tabernacles, as the firſt 7. were kept for the feaſt of dedication. The fire comming down upon the ſacrifices, was to ſhew Gods gracious acceptance. And by reaſon of the great multitude of ſacrifices, which the brazen Altar could not contain, he ſanctified the middle of the Prieſts court, that is, ſaith Lyra, he cauſed the high Prieſt to ſanctifie the pavement of that court near unto the Altar, that thereupon ſacrifices might be offered alſo.

V.2. THe Lord appeared to Solomon the ſecond time. 2 Chron. 7. 12. He appeared unto him in the night, ſo he did alſo the firſt time in Gibeon in a dream. And now he told him that he had heard his prayer, and had ſanctified this houſe to put his name there for ever, and if he and his poſterity did walk in his wayes, he promiſed that his kingdome ſhould be perpetuall; but otherwiſe, if they degenerated, he threatned to caſt of Iſrael and this houſe, &c. 2 Chron. 7. 13, 14, 15. I have choſen this houſe for ſacrifice, and if the heavens be ſhut, or the locuſt devoureth, &c. and then followeth, I will put my name here for ever, &c. His ſanctifying of the houſe, was his ſetting it apart for divine worſhip, as is further expreſſed by ſaying I will put my name here, that is, to be called upon, and thus my benefits may be diſtributed amongſt ſuch, as worſhip me in this place. Whereas it is added, for ever, this is to be underſtood, as the word לעולם is often uſed, to a long period of time, which is unto men unknown, for the ever of legall rites and ceremonies till the comming of the Meſſiah, who was figured out by this temple, for then the uſe of that temple was at an end, although the children of Iſrael had not by their ſinnes provoked God to deſtroy it.

V.10. At the end of 20. yeares, when Solomon had built the houſe of the Lord and his own houſe] Here, by his own houſe, all other his buildings before commemorated, which he made in 13. years are meant, for every one was the Kings houſe and built to ſhew his magnificence, for unto the time of building of theſe, 7. yeares, which he ſpent in building the Lords houſe being added, they together make 20.

V.11. Then Solomon gave to King Hiram for all the cedars and firre-trees and gold re-

Pellican. he ſaw them, he not being pleaſed with them, called them the land of Cabul, which
P. Martyr. as Pellican hath it, ſignifieth, ſandy and barren; according to Martyr, diſpleaſing; ſo likewiſe Iunius, alledging Ioſephus, who ſaith that it is a Phœnician word, ſignifying that, which pleaſeth not: whereas ſome expound it dirty, that is not ſo probable, becauſe thoſe grounds were all generally dry, and ſuch as lay loweſt and were wetteſt, were moſt fruitfull. Theſe 20. towns or cities were given to Hiram in way of recompence for all his bounty towards Solomon, in not onely ſupplying him with timber, but alſo aboundance of gold towards his buildings, viz. 120. talents, as is more expreſſely ſet down v. 14. Hiram had ſent unto the King 120. talents of gold] which amounted, according to Budeus to 92400. crowns, reckoning to every talent 770. Touching the timber given by Hiram to Solomon, it is ſaid before to have been cut down in Lebanon, which lay within the Land of Canaan, that is, within Solomons kingdom; his giving of this therefore is to be expounded of his cutting it down by his Tyrians, and tranſporting it for his uſe, but the gold, wherewith he abounded, as being brought from Ophir by his ſhips, it is to be thought, that he gave out of his piety towards the building of the Lords houſe. Although Martyr ſeemeth ſometime to hold, that his giving is to be underſtood of his giving for a price; of which there is no probability, for then it had not been thankworthy. But Solomon to recompence it, gave him theſe 20. townes, as to recompence the labour of his ſervants about the timber, he had before given him aboundance of corn and oyl.

But was it juſtifyable in Solomon to give away to a heathen King any part of the Lords inheritance appropriated to the children of Iſrael? for although the preſent King were godly, yet his ſucceſſors might be idolaters again, as he at the firſt was by the teſtimony of Ioſephus, before his acquaintance with David, and then there would be danger by this meanes of corrupting the people of Iſrael that dwelt Rabbini. there. Some anſwer, that he did not give them ſo as that the children of Iſrael loſt any land hereby, for Hiram gave him as many cities in his countrey, 2 Chron. 8. 2. but the text there ſaith not, either that he gave him ſo many, or in his country, but onely, that Solomon built the cities, which Hiram gave unto him, and cauſed the children of Iſrael to dwell in them. Others, that Hiram diſliking the cities given him by Solomon, gave him them again, and ſo by the providence of God it fell out, that none of the holy land was alienated: but againſt this maketh that circumſtance, he cauſed the children of Iſrael to dwell in them, for in thoſe townes of Galilee they dwelt before. Some ſay that Solomon cannot be juſtified herein no more then other holy men of old, in all their actions. Others juſtifie this fact, by ſaying that it was done in a figure of the coverſion of the Gentiles, and making one people of Iewes and Gentiles, not doubting but that he was by the inſtinct of the ſpirit moved, thus to doe. And ſome, that Solomon gave not theſe townes to Hiram for ever, but for certain yeares the profits ariſing out of them to requite him for the gold that he ſent him; but ſeeing it is ſaid that he gave him them, this is but a light conjecture. It ſeemeth to me that he gave him theſe towns for his life-time, but not to his heyrs after him, which he might well do out of his love unto him ſo good a friend, & ſo great a wel-willer to the children of Iſrael; & I exclude not the myſtical ſignification before ſpoken of, but do think, that it may be taken in alſo. Now for the cities which Hiram gave unto Solomon, it is uncertain how many they were, or where they ſtood, onely it is ſaid, that when they were given unto Solomon, he built them, and put Iſraelites into them, happily they were cities decayed for want of inhabitants, the countrey of the King of Tyre not being ſo full of people, and upon Solomons giving the benefit of certain cities to Hiram, moſt probably he gave him them, as one ſtriving with Solomon in courteſies.

Ioſephus writing of Hiram bringeth in Menander and Dius, who wrot the Tyrian Chronicles, commending Hiram for building the temple of Iupiter Olympius, Hercules, and Aſtartes, but that is to be conceived to have been done in former times, now it ſeemeth that he was turned a worſhipper of the true God onely. And he ſaith, that Galilee, the Province in which theſe cities ſtood, lay Northward near unto Hirams country, for which it is called Galilee of the Gentiles, Eſa. 9. Mat. 4. and becauſe before Davids time inhabited by the Gentiles, and now given by Solomon to the Gentiles.

V. 15. And this was the cauſe why King Solomon exacted tribute, namely to build the houſe of the Lord and his own houſe, &c.] Having ſpoken of Solomons ſumptuous buildings, and being to ſpeak of more, it is is here intimated that he took tribute of his ſubjects for this cauſe, all the treaſure that David left him, and Hiram ſent him not being ſufficient. Martyr will have not only mony, but alſo men to come under the name of tribute here, and ſuppoſeth that both Iſraelites and ſtrangers yeelded him both the one tribute and the other, but with this difference; the ſtrangers under his dominion were imployed in the works that were ſervile, but the Iſraelites in a better ſervice joyned with dignity, as is further expreſſed, v. 20, 21, 22.

Pellican thinketh that the Iſraelites paid no tribute of mony, but onely were made overſeers of his works, and appointed to other higher offices, but of this ſee before ch. 5. 13. The Vulg. lat. hath it, this is the ſumme of the expences, as if the 120 talents of gold before ſpoken of were meant, & that a diſtribution hereof were made amongſt the workmen, So Lyra; but Hebr. it is tribute as he acknowledgeth, and hath reference to the words following, v. 20. and includeth happily a tribute of mony alſo, as hath been ſaid. And here beſides the Temple and the Kings houſe, which he is ſaid to have built, is added Millo, and the wall of Ieruſalem and Hazor and Megiddo and Gezer. Millo is added, becauſe it was a part of the Kings houſe built before by David, but now made more beautifull by Solomon, and likewiſe the building of the wall of Ieruſalem is to be underſtood, as Ioſephus ſaith; and of the adding of towers to it for defence, ſeeing it was not without a wall before in Davids time; and it is to be thought, becauſe Ieruſalem was afterwards compaſſed with 3 walls, that Solomon made one wall new to increaſe the ſtrength of that city. The towers upon all the walls ſaith Joſephus, were 164. and there was a ſpace of 200 cubits between tower and tower, but Vilalpandus numbreth onely 90. and makes the whole compaſſe of the wall 49 furlongs, that is, 6 miles and a furlong. Hazor was a city in the tribe of Naphtali, Ioſh. 19. 36. and it was a head city, city of divers kingdomes, and therefore of great conſequence to fortifie it. Ioſh. 11. 1. Megiddo in Manaſſeh, Ioſh. 17. 11. it was a frontier town next the Philiſtines, and Gezer in Ephraim, Ioſh. 11. 11. What the ſtrength of Gezer was we may gather, becauſe Ioſh. 16. 10. it is ſaid that the Ephraimites could not expell the Canaanites thence, and the like is ſaid of Megiddo, Ioſh. 17. 11.

V. 16.

And here v. 16. it is further added, that this Gezer was taken by Pharaoh and given to his daughter, Solomons wife; and it is ſaid that he built and ſtrengthened Bethoron and many other places, even all that he would, ſee alſo, 2 Chron. 8, 2, 3.

V. 24.

But the daughter of Pharoah went up from the city of David to her own houſe, &c.] 2 Chron. 8. 11. it is ſaid Solomon removed her, for he ſaid, my wife ſhall not dwell in my houſe, which is ſanctified, ſince the comming of the Ark into it.

This ſaith Martyr, is ſpoken according to the lawes in force then, whereby women were unclean by their monthly courſes, and by puerpery; and ſo unfit to be in the houſe, where the Arke was: whereas ſhee had been in this houſe hitherto, it was ſaith Lyra, but for a time, whilſt her houſe was in preparing.

2 Chr. 8. 13, 14.

And Solomon offered whole burnt offerings and peace-offerings, 3 times in the year, &c.] That is, as is commonly held, at the Paſſeover, Pentecoſt, and feaſt of Tabernacles; and this is expreſſed, 2 Chron. 8. 13. and not only was his piety exerciſed at thoſe times, when all males were required to appeare before the Lord, and not empty; but he provided, that upon the Sabbaths and new Moones alſo, ſacrifices ſhould be offered according to the law of Moſes, and confirmed the diſtribution of Prieſts and Levites into their courſes made by David.

V. 26.

And Solomon made ſhips in Eziongeber, near Eloth, &c.] 2 Chron. 8. 19. It is ſaid, that he went to Eziongeber in Edom. Which is expounded by ſome, as if by his going, his going by his Meſſengers were meant, but by others of his going and ſubduing this place; but neither rightly; not the firſt, for the writer of the Chronicles alwayes ſupplieth things miſſing in the Kings and maketh them plainer, but if his going by his Meſſengers had been meant, it had been more obſcure: nor the ſecond, becauſe Solomon was alwayes peaceable and made no warre, and Edom was before ſubdued by David. Of Eloth and Eziongeber, ſee before Deut. 2. 7. For his going to Eziongeber, it was moſt probably to ſee his ſhips before their going out, and to give ſome inſtructions, according to his wiſedome, about the preparing and directing of them. And it is not to be thought, that he ſet forth these ſhips out of covetouſneſſe, but that he might the better provide to defray his great charges, and ſo be the leſſe burthenſome to his ſubjects. Eziongeber was 176. miles from Ieruſalem, and from thence his ſhips went to Ophir, that is, to India to fetch gold, from whence were brought unto him 420. talents. 2 Chron. 8. 18. it is ſaid 450. talents: ſo that it is true which is here ſaid, but all not ſpoken of. Iunius thinketh, that 420. talents came in clearly, and that 30. were ſpent upon the Navie. This journey was finiſht in 3. yeares, and was 4800. miles; neither did he ſend out thus once only, but once in 3. years from time to time, 2 Chron. 9. 21. It is thought by ſome, that this countrey had the name of India and Ophir from two brethren, by others, India from the river Indus. And Pomponius ſaith, it hath in it 5000. cities. Ophir ſaith Rabanus, is a province in India, taking the name from one of the poſterity of Heber, there be mountains of gold, and it is inhabited by moſt fierce lions and other wilde beaſts, ſo that none dare go into it, but near unto their ſhips there gathering up the gold, which they finde digged out of the earth, by the wilde beaſts, they carry it to their ſhips. Solomons ſhips figure out Christ his miniſters, who gather together the treaſures of wiſedome and knowledge and other vertues, and in this work are employed the ſervants of Hiram with the ſervants of Solomon, when they that are learned in ſecular wiſedome are joyned in the unity of faith with thoſe, that are skilfull in the law of Moſes; and the gold is brought to Solomon, when all the glory is given to Chriſt onely. And Solomons building of divers cities and fortifying them, figured out Chriſts building of his Church in divers places, and compaſſing them about by his providence as with ſtrong walls.

Scholaſt. hiſt.

B*Vt the Queen of Saba hearing of the fame of Solomon, in the name of the Lord, came, &c.*] Who this Queen was, is not agreed amongſt Expoſitours. Comeſtor, whom many follow, ſaith, that ſhe was Queen of Saba in Ethiopia, and he that wrote the Patriarks travels, ſaith the ſame, deſcribing that Saba as the Metropolitan city of the kingdome, ſhewing alſo the great heat of that countrey, as lying in a torrid zone under the ſigne Taurus, being 964. miles from Ieruſalem. He alſo alledgeth Pliny, ſaying, that this kingdome was ſometime ruled by Kings, but ſince by Queens, whereof this was one, and Candaces, Act. 8. called the Queen of Ethiopia another. And the writers of the Ethiopian hiſtory do not only affirm, that ſhe was the Queen of Ethiopia, but alſo that ſhe was gotten with childe by Solomon, and had a ſonne firſt called Melech or Meiler, then David, who was the firſt King of the Abyſſens, which kingdom is called the kingdom of Preſter-Iohn, from whom all the reſt ever ſince deſcended, and that ſhe had a train of 12000. Iſraelites ſent home with her by Solomon, who dwelt in that countrey thence-forth, of every tribe 1000. Of theſe the Ethiopians hold themſelves to have deſcended, and accordingly are circumciſed, not for any neceſſity, which they hold to bee thereof unto ſalvation, but for diſtinction from other nations, and to ſhew the ſtock of which they came. Ioſephus ſaith, that ſhee was Queen of Ethiopia and Egypt, and that before her for 1300. yeares, 330. Kings reigned ſucceſſively in Egypt after Minaus the builder of Memphis, being every one called by the name of Pharaoh, which ſignifieth a King in the Egyptian tongue; and herein he ſaith, that he followed Herodotus, ſaying, that after theſe, a Queen called Nicaule reigned, next unto that Pharaoh, who was father in law to Solomon, and that after him none was called Pharaoh more, as he ſaith, that he found in Hebrew commenters. But neither doth Herodotus call her Nicaule, but Nitacris and Genebrard, Makeda. And Pliny ſaith, that a Queen reigned in Meroe in the time of Nero called Candace, which had a long time been the common name of the Queens of Ethiopia, which countrey was anciently governed by Queens. And it is manifeſtly falſe, that he ſaith of none called by the name of Pharaoh, after Solomons time, becauſe we read of Pharaoh Necho after this a long time, who ſlew Ioſiah, and of Pharaoh in the dayes of Hezekiah, by whom Sennacherib upbraided him, ſee alſo, Eſa. 9. a. 30. 2 Ier. 4. Ezek. 31. 38. P. Martyr aſſenteth rather to them, who think that by this Saba is meant the country of the Sabeans; that is, Arabia Fœlix becauſe that is farre South from Ieruſalem, and alone yeeldeth frankincenſe and other moſt ſweet ſpices according to Virgil, India mittit Ebur, molles ſua thura Sabei, and Solis eſt thurea virga Sabæis. And this country is thougt to have been called Seba ἀπὸ τοῦ σεβεῖν from worſhipping, becauſe ſweet perfumes were uſed in the worſhip of God; and this Queen is ſaid to have brought upon Camels much ſweet odours. By others it is thought to have had the name from Seba the ſon of Cham, who built this city, being the Metropolitan of Arabia Fœlix, and lyeth Southeaſt from Ieruſalem, much farther then Saba in Ethiopia, viz. 1248 miles, according to Ortelius, 12000 miles; and this Queen is ſaid by Chriſt to have come from the South to hear the wiſdom of Solomon, calling her the Queen of the South, and from the fartheſt part of the earth; and Herodotus ſaith, that Arabia is the fartheſt of all the countries that is inhabited Southward, wherein only Frankincenſe, Myrrhe, Cinamon, and Caſſia, grow; and herein they doe ſo abound, that the fragrant ſmell thereof extends to ſuch as travaile farre of from it upon the ſea. And whereas this may ſeem to make againſt it, that ſhee brought with her abundance of gold which Ethiopia yeeldeth, and not Arabia: the ſame Herodotus farther deſcribeth this as the richeſt of all countries, affirming that there groweth in it gold which is called ἄπυρον, that is, without fire, becauſe it is pure without trying in the fire; and it is of the bigneſſe of cheſnuts, and to ſhew the riches of the country, they abound eſpecially in Saba with golden and ſilver veſſells, both cups and pots; and the very feet of their beds are of ſilver ſilver, and great pillers ſupporting galleries, are headed ſome with gold, and ſome with ſilver. And Strabo ſetteth forth this country as moſt rich in gold and ſilver and precious ſtones, in ſo much that the very walls of the dwelling houſes of the inhabitants are covered with them as with a cruſt. Whereas Kings are ſaid to have reigned in Arabia, and not Queens; this being a thing peculiar to Ethiopia to be governed by the Queens. It may be anſwered, that the Queen who came to Solomon might be the wife of the King of Arabia, who of all Kings is reported to be moſt miſerable for this, that he may never goe out of his palace, and if he at any time doth, the people are ready to ſtone him; wherefore the Queen with his permiſſion might doe that which he could not: viz. come to Ieruſalem, to ſee Solomon, of whoſe incomparable wiſdome and magnificence, they had heard ſo much. Theſe objections thus anſwered, and the reaſons brought before conſidered, this laſt opinion ſeemeth to me rather to be preferred. And whereas the firſt goeth on with a colourable hiſtory of this Queens having a child by Solomon, whoſe race continueth to this day; it is moſt improbable, becauſe this Queen is ſaid to have come to Ieruſalem in the name of the Lord, intimating her to be godly, and her bleſſing of God, when ſhee ſaw Solomons magnificence ſhewed no leſſe: and laſtly Chriſts praiſing of her, and therefore doubtleſſe ſhee would not conſent to ſo great a wickedneſſe, neither would ſuch a King being yet godly, offer it to her a ſtranger, to the great ſcandall of the true religion, being enough to breed a diſtaſt thereof in all her followers. But what was it that drew this Queen from ſo farre a country; the fame of Solomon in the name of the Lord, of which there are divers expoſitions of divers, as of Dionyſius, according to the will of the Lord. Hugo, being inſpired by the Spirit of God. Vatablus, Hearing of thoſe things which he did by the helpe of God and not of Idols. Caietan, That he attained to ſo great wiſedome by the ſingular gift of God and not by humane help of ſtudy. To ſpare the alleadging of more, I think nothing elſe is meant, but his fame for divine knowledge extraordinarily by the Lord conferred upon him. For although he excelled in all manner of knowledge, yet this was it which moved a godly Queen to come ſo farre unto him, and not ſo much to heare him ſpeaking of things naturall, in the knowledge of which ſhee had doubtleſſe many Philoſophers about her, that were excellent. Now this Queen is ſaid to have come with a great traine, and to have brought with her very much gold, ſweet odours and precious ſtones to give, as is by and by ſaid, that ſhe did to Solomon, when he had ſatisfied her in all her queſtions, and ſhee had been raviſhed both with his wiſdome and magnificence, viz. 120 talents of gold, and ſo much ſweet odours, as were never more brought thither after. Comeſtor ſaith alſo that ſhe gave him the root of balſam which the wicked Queen of Egypt, Cleopatra, afterwards took away; ex Ioſepho. Ioſephus telleth out of one Dio an hiſtorian, that which no way agreeth with the ſacred hiſtories viz. that one Abemdon, a Tyrian, propounded ſome queſtions to Solomon, at which he ſtuck. And on the other ſide this is as little to be credited, which Cedrenus reporteth of this Queens trying of King Solomon after all her queſtions reſolved; by apparelling ſome boyes and girles alike, and requiring him to diſtinguiſh between the ſexes, which he did by cauſing water to be brought, and them to waſh their faces with it; which the boyes did roughly and ſtoutly, but the girles tenderly and fearfully. In what yeare of Solomons reign ſhee came to Ieruſalem is not ſet down, and therefore divers conjecture diverſly; ſome as Marianus Victorinus in the fourth: ſome as Genebrard, in the forty one, others in the twenty, or twenty four, or twenty eight. But if things be ſet down in order, as I ſee not any reaſon why we ſhould think otherwiſe, it muſt needs be after the 24 year, becauſe he did not begin to build, till the 4 year of his reign; and 20 yeares were expired, before his buildings were all finiſhed; and after this ſhips were built in Eziongeber, and thither the King went to ſee their ſetting forth, and they returned again laden with gold after 3 yeares, and after all this it is ſaid that this Queene came, wherefore it muſt needs be in the 28 year at the leaſt. And what ſtay ſhee made in Ieruſalem is likewiſe uncertain; although ſome ſay a yeare. But in all that time it is not to be doubted, but that Solomon entertained her moſt royally, and v. 13 it is ſaid that he gave her all that ſhe deſired, and moreover out of his kingly bounty, which what it was is not eaſie to conjecture, but it may be conceived, that he was not behinde hand with her in royall munificence, he being the richeſt of all kings. If then we ſhall meaſure his guifts by thoſe, that ſome other Princes have given, they exceeded. Socrates Rhodius reporteth of Cleopatra a Queen, that when ſhe went to meet Anthony in Cilicia, ſhe entertained him and his followers with a moſt ſumptuous feaſt, in a room, where the walles were hanged with purple and gold hangings, and all the veſſels were gold, adorned with pretious ſtones moſt curiouſly wrought, and 12. ſumptuous tables admirably furniſht, ſo that Anthony and his friends wondred at the richneſſe thereof, ſhe ſmiling ſaid, that ſhe would give him all. And the next day entertained him and his captains where all things were much more coſtly, ſo that the firſt ſeemed nothing in compariſon of this, but all thoſe riches were likewiſe by her given to him and them, and when they departed, ſhe gave to his captains horſe-litters and horſes to carry them, and to the reſt of his followers, horſes trapped with ſilver. Myſtically, by this Queen underſtand the Church, which hearing of Chriſts wiſdome and miracles, commeth to him from farre, and having a taſte thereof doth more admire him, and giveth to the honour of him aboundance of moſt pretious things, and receiveth according to all her deſire of him againe, ſo Rab. Maurus. Now in ſpeaking of the treaſure given by the Queen of Saba to Solomon, leſt it ſhould be thought, ſaith Martyr, that theſe and the guifts brought him by others were his onely riches, the ſacred hiſtory ſaith, v. 11. 12. that he had a Navie, which brought gold from Ophir, and Almuggum trees, and pretious ſtones. But what theſe Almuggums were being ſo called in the Hebrew, is not agreed amongſt Expoſitours. Some render the word corrall, as R. Solomon and Kimhi. And whereas this ſeemeth to make againſt it that corrall is no wood, but ſtone, they anſwer, that whilſt it is in the water it branches and berries, as a tree, but being taken out turneth into a ſtone. And whereas it ſeemeth improbable, becauſe he made thereof not onely props or pillars for the houſe of the Lord, and the kings houſe, but alſo inſtruments of muſick, they anſwer, that ſeeing ſuch inſtruments have been made of Alablaſter in later times, it is not improbable, that they ſhould then be made of corrall.

P. Martyr.

Some by Almuggum underſtand ſome extraordinary Pine wood, which ſhined, as the Greek tranſlatours; ſome ligna hebeni, which grew onely in India, and is very hard, ſome the Tyne tree, as Iunius, who ſaith, it is a moſt excellent wood, as appeareth, Apoc. 18. 12. Plin. l. 13. c. 15. And he rejecteth that of corrall, becauſe it is unfit for ſuch uſes, neither was there any need to fetch it ſo farre off, ſeeing it grew aboundantly in the Mediterranean and red ſea, which were near.

Laſtly, ſome think them to be ligna praſilica, which are of a pumy colour, and moſt durable. That of Iunius is followed by the vulgar Latin, and Pellican, and Hugo, who ſaith, that it was a kinde of wood like a white thorn, that would not putrifie, round and white, that of the Greeks by Ioſephus. And Lyra ſaith, that of theſe were made not only props for ſtrength, but ſtairs to go up to the houſe of the Lord, and props, whereby they were ſupported. Let the Reader underſtand by theſe Almuggums which of the before nominated he pleaſeth, for my part I think, no man hath gueſſed rightly, for the text ſaith, that there were no more ſuch Almuggums ſeen unto this day, but the particulars before commemorated are by ſome ſeen and well known to this day, my judgement therefore is, that it was an excellent kinde of wood found in India by a ſpeciall providence for ſervice about the temple, but although ſome of the ſame kinde continue ſtill, yet they could never be found out more, ſo that it is vain to expound them by the names of other trees, which are found in divers places. For the fable mentioned by Comeſtor here of this Queens writing back to Solomon, it is ſo palpable an invention, that it is not worth the naming, that ſhe feared to tell him of one thing by word of mouth, which ſhe ſaw in the temple; viz. a piece of wood, upon which one ſhould one day be hanged, which would turn to the ruine of the Iewiſh nation, wherefore Solomon took it away and hid it in the ground; but afterwards, no man knowes how, it was ſeen ſwimming in the pool of Betheſda, and gave a ſanative vertue to thoſe waters, to heal all manner of diſeaſes, and laſtly, of it was made the croſſe, upon which Chriſt was hanged.

V.14. Whereas before Solomons treaſure, which came in yearly in gold was ſpoken of, and before that, ch. 9. ult. 420. talents at one time; here all his revenues in gold put together, are ſaid to be 666. talents, beſides that which came in from Merchants and the Kings and Lords of Arabia: and then is ſhewed, to what uſe he put ſome of this gold, viz. to make ſhields 200. putting 600. ſhekels in each one of them, and 300. leſſer, putting 3. pounds in each of them, that is, 300. ſhekels, and theſe he placed in the forreſt of Lebanon, not for any ſervice in warre, but for ornament and ſtate.

V.18. P. Martyr. Moreover King Solomon made an Ivory throne, and covered it with pure gold. There were 6. ſteps unto it, and it was round behinde, &c.] Martyr thinketh, that it was not all covered with gold, but ſo as that the ivory might be ſeen between for the greater luſtre, and he will have all the parts figurative; the ivory and gold ſhewing the incorruprion, that ſhould be in Kings. Rabanus. Pellican. Rabanus and Pellican by the ivory underſtand chaſtity and diſcretion, becauſe the elephant, of whoſe bones it is made, is the moſt underſtanding of all other beaſts, and ſo chaſt, as that he coupleth not, but with his own female; and is a great enemy to incontinency in others, and when his female is great with young, he coupleth no more with her, till ſhe hath brought forth. The 6. ſteps up to the throne alſo, ſaith Martyr, ſhewed, that as the King is lifted up above others in dignity, ſo he ſhould excell them all in vertue, the round figure above his head, the perfection and ſingle meaning of the King free from all fraud and guile, the two ſtayes for his armes, that he by incouraging the good on the right ſide and puniſhing the evill on the left, ſhould uphold the common-wealth; the two lions there his ſtrength and courage to execute what he decreeth, and the 6. and 6. lions on either ſide of the ſteps, his miniſters, who ſhould likewiſe be couragious in the ſaid execution. And this is by Rabanus applied unto the Church, in which Chriſt ſitteth, ſhining by his miracles as with gold and ivory, being alſo chaſte and incorruptible, aſcended unto by the doctrine of the 12. Apoſtles, ſet forth by 12. lions, and becauſe the Church doth herein exceed all other ſects, it is ſaid there was not the like in any other nation. 2 Chron. 9. 18. there is further ſupplied a foot-ſtool of gold, to ſhew that the Church treadeth worldly riches under her foot, by lightly eſteeming them, and ſo ſhould Kings do, and not covetouſly by oppreſſing their ſubjects, gather worldly riches, or to ſet forth their pomp.

V.21. Moreover all the drinking veſſels of King Solomon were of gold, &c. for the kings navie of Tarſhiſh went with Hirams navie, which came once in three yeares, &c.] 2 Chron. 9. 21. it is ſaid, the kings navie went to Tarſhiſh with Hirams ſervants, &c. Junius. Iunius, for Tarſhiſh, hath the ocean, according to the ſignification of the word, for hereby is ſometime ſet forth a pretious ſtone of the colour of an Hiacinth, that is, sky-coloured, of which colour the ocean is. P. Martyr. But this is rejected by Martyr, (who yet acknowledgeth, that this word Tarſhiſh is ſometime put for the ſea) becauſe Tarſhiſh is twice in one verſe, and if it ſhould be expounded by the Sea, it is in the firſt place, redundant, there being the word בום went to ſea. Wherefore he rather thinketh, that by Tarſhiſh is meant ſome place in India, or Ophir, which was before ſpoken of, and the rather, becauſe this voyage is of the ſame time, viz. three yeares, and this I embrace as moſt probable, although there be a Tarſhiſh alſo in Cilicia, not farre from Paleſtine, which ſome think is meant, and the Chald. Paraphr. expounds it by Africa, but the one was too near to require ſo long a time of travell, neither did it naturally yeild ſuch treaſures, and the other is not famous for yeilding ſo much gold neither, and the ſea is not ſo great between it and Aſia, that ſhips ſhould need to be ſo long in that voyage. And theſe ſhips are ſaid to have brought not onely gold and ſilver, but alſo ivory, apes and peacocks for ornament and delight. Of Ophir and Tarſhiſh ſee more upon 1 King. 22. 49. 50.

V.23. Here the wiſdome of Solomon is extolled above that of all other men, as Chro. 4. 31, 32. and it is ſaid, that all ſought unto him therefore, and brought him guifts therefore from year to year, that is, not as ſom think by way of tribute, for that is a due and no guift, but out of their great affection towards him, and the good and pleaſure, which they reaped by him, there were every year ſome comming unto him from all parts round about with ſuch guifts, and it is to be thought, that the ſame princes came oftner with their preſents. Whereas it is ſaid, All the earth ſought to hear the wiſdome of Solomon, it is to be underſtood of parts far and near, and not of every part without exception. And herein Solomon typified Chriſt, to whom the people reſorted in great frequency, going after him to hear him into wilderneſſes and deſert places, and ſo ſhould we by reſorting to hear his miniſters, and we ſhould bring our guiſts, that is, give almes to his poor members and communicate of our goods to his miniſters, and uſe our worldly goods to his glory.

V. 26. So that Solomon had 1400. chariots, and 12000. horſemen.] But of this ſee before ch. 4. 26.

V. 27. And Solomon made ſilver in Ieruſalem as the ſtones in the ſtreet, and cedars as ſycamores.] This is ſpoken hyperbollically to ſhew the great aboundance. The wood of ſycamores, according to Theophraſtus is of much uſe, being black and hard, and partakes of the fig and the mulbery, having therefore this compound name. Galen ſaith, the fruit hath a taſte partaking of both, Cornel. Celſus, that the fruit groweth not upon the boughs, but upon the body of the tree, and never ripeneth, but being cut with iron, then it ripeneth within four dayes, and being taken off, other fruit groweth four times in the year, and being cut this tree is always green, neither becometh it ſeare, but by covering it with water.

V. 28. And the going out of horſes, which Solomon had, was out of Egypt, and the congregation of Merchants of the king received the congregation at a price. And a chariot aſcended and came out of Egypt at 600. pieces of ſilver, and ſo to all the kings of the Hittites and Aramites they came by their hand.] Thus word for word out of the Hebrew. Here is ſhewed, how Solomon came to abound in horſes, although his own countrey brought forth none, yet Egypt the countrey of his father in law abounded with them, and Martyr thinketh it is here meant, that he had the profit of the encreaſe of horſes there by his guift, not only for his own uſe, but alſo to ſell them by his Merchants to other Princes, whereby much ſilver alſo came in. P.Martyr. Iunius, that he took a tribute for horſes of all that carried them between Syria and the red Sea, becauſe that way lay through his dominions. Junius. And the word expounded, congregation, he expoundeth ſilks and other merchandize, for which alſo he took a tribute upon the ſame occaſion. The vulgar Latin, agreeably alſo to the Hebrew, renders the words otherwiſe thus. And horſes were brought to Solomon out of Egypt and Choah, the Merchants of the king took them from Choah at a price, and a quadriga, that is, a chariot drawn by 4. came and aſcended out of Egypt at 600. ſhekles, an horſe at 150. Onely the laſt words differ from the Hebrew, After this manner, all the kings of the Hittites and Aramites ſold them. For Hebr. it is as before, ſo they came to all the kings of the Hittites and Aramites by their hand. Here the word Choah, as Lyra hath it, is taken for the proper name of a place which ſignifieth a congregation. But the ſenſe is better, if it be taken properly, and we underſtand not here, either as Martyr, that Solomon had the horſes of Egypt by the guift of Pharaoh, or as Innius, a tribute out of them for their paſſage, but only his merchants had the ſole buying of them both for his uſe, and to vend them for his benefit to other Princes, and this benefit was not ſmall, ſeeing they were ſold at 150. ſhekles an horſe, that is, according to Budæus, at 60. crownes.

Thus it is commonly held, but foraſmuch as the kings merchants took them at this great price, and ſo put them off again; I cannot ſee, how any ſuch benefit ſhould redound unto him, but rather, that it is meant, his horſes were none of the meaneſt ſort, but moſt excellent, being ſo high prized and the choice of all in the land of Egypt, ſeeing they came firſt into the hands of his Merchants, and ſo the drift of this place, is to ſet forth his royall magnificence, as in other things, ſo in his horſes. Touching the ſilks, of which Iunius, rendred in our new tranſlation linnen, ſeeing the ſcope of this place, is to ſpeak of the place from whence Solomons horſes came, and of linnen or ſilk nothing is ſaid before or after, neither is any price thereof mentioned, it doth not agree to expound the word thus, as if Solomon had the benefit of all the chief Merchandize in Egypt, which it availed

Pharaoh much to keepe to maintaine his owne ſtate, but rather as was before ſaid.

CHAP. XI.

V. 1. B*Vt King Solomon loved many ſtrange women, the daughter of Pharaoh, and Moabites, Ammonites, Edomites,*&c.] After the excellencies of Solomon, here follow his vices, whereby God was provoked to anger againſt him, 2 *Chron.*9.27. (2 *Chron.*9.27.) All this is omitted, and we are referred for that which concerned him more to the words of Nathan the Prophet, of Abijah and Iddo, which as Lyra ſaith, are not now extant either amongſt us, or the Hebrewes, but, as Pellican ſaith, are loſt by the injury of time and negligence of the Iewes. But I ſee no reaſon why we may not hold the Bookes of the Kings to have been written by theſe men, and then we ſhall not need here to ſpeake of their bookes being loſt, but that hereby the Bookes of the Kings are meant. Solomon enjoying all worldly felicitie above other kings of the earth, as hath been ſhewed, is here ſet forth as a patterne of humane weakneſſe, that we may neither dote upon worldly things, which are ſo dangerous to corrupt us, nor be confident of our ſtanding in grace, but with feare and trembling alwaies worke out our ſalvation, ſeeing Solomon that ſtood ſo long, fell ſo foulely in his old age, and that we may flie marrying with idolaters, in whom there is ſo great and ſo irreſiſtible danger to the wiſeſt that ever was. Now becauſe the outlandiſh women here ſpoken of are ſaid to be Pharaohs daughter, women of Moab and Ammon,&c. a queſtion may be mooved, whether Pharaohs daughter was one of them which drew him to Idolatrie, becauſe alſo, *verſ.*8. it is ſaid, thus he did for all his wives that were ſtrangers, which offered incenſe to their gods. But this hath been already diſcuſſed at large upon *Ch.*3.1. and with what heathens it was unlawfull to marry, and in what caſe lawfull, onely becauſe Pharaohs daughter is here mentioned amongſt theſe women, in the loving of whom Solomon offended, it may juſtly be doubted whether ſhe fell not to Idolatrie againe at the laſt, and were not one of them that drew him to it. Yet I thinke rather that ſhe did not, becauſe if ſo, ſome Idol of Egypt ſhould no leſſe have been mentioned then of Ammon and Moab in particular, ſeeing Egypt was a kingdome then ſuperiour to any of them. V. 3. For the number of his wives, they are ſaid to have been 700. and his concubines 300. And herein he ſinned greatly, in that he multiplied his wives ſo exceedingly, contrary to the charge given to kings, *Deut.*17.17. where this is not onely forbidden, but to fetch horſes out of Egypt, and to multiply them, and likewiſe to multiply ſilver and gold, as tending all to the corrupting of the heart with pride and luxurie, and in all theſe he went beyond his charge, and now are ſet forth the evils that enſued hereupon. It is moſt probable as Expoſitours thinke, that this was the occaſion of his ſtupendious multiplying of wives, he wallowing in wealth, and pampering his body, and living in all eaſe, after all his workes ended, and bookes written, grew in his elder years moſt libidinous, and when ever he ſaw any Princes or noblemans daughter that pleaſed his eye, he deſired to have his carnall pleaſure of her, but ſhe not conſenting unleſſe he would take her for his wife, he did ſo, and others of inferiour ranke alſo after the ſame manner for his concubines, that is, wives of ſervile condition, and becauſe his luſt, to which he had given himſelfe over was unſatiable, he ſent abroad for more wives into other countries, being nothing deterred by the contrarietie of their religion, who yet happily to enjoy ſo honourable a marriage, made ſhew at the firſt of turning proſelites, although they ſoone fell from it to their old Idolatry, and drew him together with them. And thus Solomon to his great ſhame and diſhonour exceeded in the multiplicity of his wives all that ever lived before or after him. Whereas Cant. 6. ſixty wives and eighty concubines are ſpoken of, ſome reconcile it with this number thus, he had ſo many, that were moſt beautifull, and ſome moſt beloved, and ſome that he had no more when he wrot that ſong. Ioſepus thinking that it would be moſt incredible that he had ſo many wives, for 700 hath ſet down 70. And it is to be noted, that by all his wives he had the feweſt children that we read of, of all other Kings of thoſe times; viz. but one unhappy ſonne Rehoboam by an Ammoniteſſe, and two daughters.

V. 5.

Toſtatus.

When Solomon was old, he followed Aſhteroth the abominations of the Ammonites, and Milcome, &c.] The age of which Solomon now was, is thought by Toſtatus and others to have been 54. the 34 of his reigne; and that he lived in this foule ſin of idolatry 6 yeares; and ſome but 3, ſome two, and ſome one. But the building of ſo many Temples to idols, which cannot but be thought to have been done magnificently, could not but take up much time. He is ſaid at 54 to be old, becauſe he had waſted his body ſo much with divers women, ſo that it was wonderfull, that he lived ſo long; but that moſt probably according to that skill which he had, he took ſuch things from time to time, as he knew were preſervative.

Qu.

But as much weakned as he was, it may juſtly be queſtioned whether he could be ſo weak in underſtanding as to worſhip idols any more then in ſhew to pleaſe his wives, he knowing ſtill in his heart that there were no more Gods but one, that idols were but the work of mens hands.

To this Martyr anſwereth, that all Expoſitours think indeed that he committed idolatry, as other idolatrous kings did after him, but this, he ſaith, ſeemeth to him not likely to be true, becauſe if he had done ſo, he would have brought thoſe idols into the Temple at Ieruſalem; wherefore he thinketh that he did no otherwiſe herein, then as Adam in eating of the forbidden fruits in gratiam uxoris. But it is not without juſt ground that the whole ſtream of Expoſitours hold the contrary, becauſe it is ſaid v. 4. his wives inclined his heart after other gods, neither was his heart perfect with the Lord, and v. 9. his heart declined from the Lord God of Iſrael, ſo that his idolatry was not formall only and outward, but inward, and of the heart; even as of other idolatrous kings, who are ſpoken of in like manner; that their hearts were not perfect, that they ſet up abominations to idols, &c. ſo Ioſephus ſaith alſo, waxing older he grew weak in underſtanding, and being forgetfull of his countrey religion, he neglected the worſhip of his God, and inured himſelfe to the rites of his wives. And Auguſtine ſaith, he fell into the depth of idolatry; when of Iedidiah, a lover of the Lord, he turned a lover of women. Proſp. Aquit. ſaith, that he fornicated both in body and ſoule, the Lord forſaking him. Baſill ſaith, that he became ſottiſh and fell into idolatry. Theodoret upon this place, hereby it is plain, that he worſhipped idols. Auguſt. indeed and Toſtatus grant, that he did not ſo at the firſt, but when as he to pleaſe his wives had made a ſhew hereof; God forſaking him, and giving him over to blindneſſe of mind, he worſhipped idols as they did; wherefore when Auguſt. lib. de Geneſ. ad lit c. ult. ſaith, is it to be beleeved, that Solomon a man of ſo great wiſdome thought, that there was any profit in the worſhiping of idols, or that he could not reſiſt the love of women drawing him to this evill: doing that which he knew was not to be done, leſt he ſhould greive them? he is to be underſtood as ſpeaking of him, as the caſe was with him at the firſt, and likewiſe that lib. de civit. 14. 11. It is not credible that Solomon thought idols were to be ſerved through errour, but that he was compelled to thoſe ſacriledges, by the flatteries of women. Again becauſe Solomon is ſaid to have ſet up an high place, Excelſum, to the idol, not an houſe, it may be queſtioned whether he built up a Temple to it. Sol. An high place indeed is commonly put for a pleaſant place well ſet up with trees upon ſome mountanous place to the honour of ſome idol; in which men performed their idolatrous rites: but it may be gathered both from the word here uſed, ſignifying he built. And ch. 13. 32. where the houſes of the high places were ſpoken of, when Ieroboam was threatned, that the high place here ſpoken of, comprehended both the grove and the idols temple and altars, about which the trees planted, muſt have a time to grow. But how many ſuch houſes he built, is diverſly conjectured by divers, yet none exceed the number of ſix, and ſo many Toſtatus thinketh that he built, but upon a weak ground; viz. becauſe v. 1. He loved women of 6 idolatrous nations; for it is moſt probable, as was ſhewed before, that he ſet up none to any Egyptian idoll, becauſe it is not particularly cularly mentioned, and yet the daughter of Egypt was the cheiſe of his wives. Some, that hee built onely one, wherein were divers altars for the worſhipping of divers gods, as ſometime one common Temple called Pantheon, was by the Gentiles built to all the Gods. Comeſtor, 3 to the 3 idols here mentioned; Aſtarte Chamos and Moloch, and this is moſt probable; for two are expreſſely named, v.7. and v.5. that he followed a third, and therefore doubtleſſe ſet up a temple to that idoll. And this is further confirmed, *v.*33. where he is charged only with 3 idols. Yet ſome think that more are implyed in that it is ſaid, he did in like manner for all his ſtrange wives that ſacrificed to their gods; that is, not ſetting up a temple for every particular one, but according to the diverſity of the gods which they ſerved; happily not being above five or ſix amongſt them all, according to the diverſity of their nations; and if none were ſet up to any Egyptian idoll, the whole number was but five. But if there were ſo many idols to whom Altars were ſet up, or more then three; we know not by what names the reſt were called. One of theſe was Aſtarte, that is, as moſt commonly is held, Iuno, whom the Sidonians worſhipped in the form of a ſheep, and Iupiter in the form of a ramme. The next Malcom, ſignifying their King; whereby it is thought that Saturn is underſtood who was held to bee King above all the reſt of the gods of the Ammonites. But as they ſet him forth by a glorious title, and offered their deareſt children unto him, to ſhew in what eſteem they had him; ſo God, to ſhew how baſe he was indeed, called him the abomination of the Ammonites. The third Chamos, an idoll, as it ſeemeth common to the Moabites and Ammonites, becauſe Iudg. 11. 24. it is called the Ammonites God, here the abomination of the Moabites, but Malcom was the cheiſe God of the Ammonites, and Chamos another, whom they worſhipped alſo, but the cheiſe of the Moabites. It is thought that he was Pluto, the God of hell, thus Martyr: but others take him for Bacchus, and Aſtarte for Venus, or Luna.

Apol.2.David. c.6.

The place where theſe high places were built, or one for all, was the mount over againſt Ieruſalem, 2 Kings 23. 13. it is ſaid more particularly to have been on the right ſide of the mountaine corrupting; that is ſaith Iunius, of mount Olivet; and the right ſide is put for the Sovth. Pagninus therefore and the Chaldees, for the mountain corrupting have the mount Olivet, being ſo called, for the idolatry there committed. Thus we read of Solomons foule falling into idolatry, whereupon it is thought, that his admirable wiſdome before given him, whereby all were drawne to love and honour him, was by the juſt judgement of God taken from him, and he as an ignorant beaſt grevv contemptible; ſo Ambroſe ſaith. Neither had Solomon vviſdome in the beginning, neither did he poſſeſſe it in the end, for turning from the vvorſhip of God he fell, not as a wiſe man, but as a foole, that he might offend: and he offended ſo much, that he loſt what he had received. Chryſoſtome, Theodoret, and other Fathers ſay. He whoſe beginnings did burn with the deſire of vviſdome, vvhich vvith his ſpirituall love he got, he loſt with his carnall love, Proſper Aquitan. ſaith, that vvhen in his old age he declined, he loſt both his life and wiſdome together. So likewiſe Iſidor and Gregory.

Fran. Georgius.

And it is thought by ſome, that unto his idolatry he joyned the art magick alſo; ſo Franciſcus. Georgius following the Rabbins ſaith, that not being content with the wiſdome given him by the moſt high, he would get him ſerpentine wiſdome and ſubtilty by calling to him, Aſmodeus, Aſtarte, Chamos, and Malchom, and other unclean formes, to which he erected ſtatues; whence it came to paſſe, that God willing it, he was by them deceived. And out of one Zohar he ſaith, that Solomon was delivered to Satan for the deſtruction of the fleſh, that the ſpirit might bee ſaved. Viz. To Aſmodeus, who held him certain yeares, being caſt out of his kingdome in the deſert, as Nebuchadnezzar was driven from his; then Aſmodeus putting upon him the likeneſſe and ornaments of the King reigned for him; and hence it was, that he ſaid in Eccleſ. I was King in Ieruſalem, for hee made that book in that time of his exile. Thus he; but to paſſe this over as a Rabbin invention, it is not improbable, but that Solomon was thus tainted, both becauſe Ioſephus ſaith, that he ſhewed a certain root by the force whereof being incloſed in a ring devils were caſt out, and 2 King. 21. 6. Manaſſeh turning to idolatry turned to witchcraft alſo, and Gal. 5. 19. idolatry and witchcraft are joyned together, as if the one went not without the other. Yet ſeeing the holy Scripture layeth not this ſinne to his charge, I think rather that he was not guilty of it: but onely that ſuch, as from him would countenance this wicked and divelliſh art, have deviſed this, and others to free him from it before his fall, have referred it to the time following after.

N. 12.

In Solomons example we may ſee the mutability of Princes, how he that is moſt excellent at the firſt, may afterwards grow moſt corrupt and vile, ſo likewiſe Nero in the firſt five years of his Empire being excellent, proved afterwards a moſt beaſtly and cruell tyrant. Tiberius the ſucceſſour of Auguſtus, who made all men at the firſt to hope well of him, proved moſt impure and tyrannicall. Alexander the great, at the firſt valiant and temperate, being afterwards mollified with the Perſian delights proved intemperate, libidinous and cruell, ſo as that his Macedonians could hardly endure him. Conſtantine the great who was ſo famous for piety, by the means of his ſiſter Conſtantia, in his latter time was a friend to Arrius, and baniſht Athanaſius. Theodoſius the younger, at the firſt a godly Emperour, afterwards by the means of Eudocia his wife, became a favourer of the Eutichian hereſie and countenanced that infamous Councell of Epheſus called λῃστρικὴν, from robbers. And Mauritius governed at the firſt godlily and happily, but afterwards grew covetous and cruell, and ſo was hated of his ſubjects, and ſlain by his Captain Phocas. Wherefore let him, that ſtandeth, take heed leſt he fall, and let ſubjects pray for their prince continually, that he may be kept upright unto the end. But whether Solomon thus falling did ever riſe again by repentance, is a great queſtion, and much controverted among divines, ſome affirming and ſome denying it. The Hebrews and Ierom following them affirm, that he repented, and wrot the book called Coheleth or Eccleſiaſtes, to ſhew his repentance; and Irenæus likewiſe alledgeth the teſtimony of a certain Presbyter before him, affirming, that he repented, though not here, yet in another world, which is a dangerous aſſertion; In the Hebrews greater Chronology ch. 15. it is ſaid, that Solomon repented in his old age and received the holy Ghoſt, whereby he dictated the Proverbs, Eccleſiaſtes, and the Song of Songs. And Ierom alledgeth the Septuagint. when comparing Solomons temple with Ezekiels he ſaith, the very builder of the temple Solomon ſinned, although afterwards he repented writing the Proverbes, wherein hee ſaith, noviſſimè ego egi pænitentiam, &c. laſtly I repented, and had reſpect to chuſe diſcipline, but theſe words are not in the Proverbs in the Hebrew, but in the Sept. edit. Sixti c. 24. 30. But there are other words, which imply penitency, if this were written after his fall. I went by the field of the ſluggard, and by the vine-yard of the fooliſh man, and behold it was over-grown with nettles, &c. which I ſeeing, applyed my minde and reaped inſtruction. The Hebrews alſo have a tradition, that Solomon was drawn 5. times through the ſtreets of Ieruſalem, after the manner of penitents, unto the temple, and five rods bound unto him, wherewith he deſired the Prieſts to beat him for his ſinnes, but they refuſing to do it to him the Lords anointed, he beat himſelf. * Ambroſe is alſo brought by Sallianus for his repentance, becauſe he ſaith, David ſaid, have mercy upon me for I am weak; If David were weak, art thou ſtrong? If Solomon fell, ſhalt thou ſtand unmoveable? If Paul be the firſt of ſinners, canſt thou be firſt of Saints? Therefore if the juſt have erred, they have erred as men, but confeſſed it as juſt men, and if the juſt have received the ſentence of moſt grievous puniſhment, how do'ſt thou propound unto thy ſelfe the hope of impunity? In that he ſpeaketh of him together with others that repented as juſt, he inferreth, that he alſo was for his repenting. But P. Martyr contrariwiſe citeth Ambroſe, ſaying, Chriſt had native wiſdome, but Solomon not, only he asked wiſdome and obtained it at the firſt, but at the laſt he poſſeſſed it not.

Hieron. in Ezech. 24.

Hilary in Pſ. 126. calleth him a Saint, and numbreth him with Moſes and Peter, who having ſinned, repented and obtained pardon. Cyrill after the manner of Ierom ſpeaketh of his repentance alſo out of the Septuagint. Irenæus alſo lib. 4. c. 45. and *Gregor. tius in ſpeculo, Albinus, Dionyſius, Genebrardus, &c. and their reaſons are ſtrong.
1 Reaſon. Firſt, from Prov. 24. 30. which place is expounded by many, of a man overgrown and defaced by ſinne, and Solomon applying it thus to himſelf, turned by repentance to the cleanſing away of theſe noiſome weeds, thus Gregory and Ierom, 2. Cyril and Iſidor or Beda. Secondly, from Gods promiſes, I will be to him a father, 2 *Sam.*7.14. and he ſhall be to me a ſonne, &c. for which cauſe he ſent to call him Iedidiah, the beloved of the Lord and promiſed, that if he ſinned, hee would correct him, but 3. not take his mercy for ever from him, as from Saul. Thirdly, becauſe when he died, he was buried in the Sepulchre of the kings of Iſrael, and it is ſaid that he ſlept 4. with his fathers, as it is not of any that died wicked. Fourthly, becauſe Rehoboam is ſaid for 3. years to have walked in the wayes of David and Solomon, whereas if Solomon had not repented, he ſhould never have been ſet forth, as an example of 5. walking in the right way. Fifthly, Bonaventure argueth from this, that he was a pen-man of holy Scripture, and there is no preſident of any one ſuch that is damned.
6. Sixthly, becauſe he was a type of Chriſt, and ſo zealouſly often prayed for by David his father.

Contrariwiſe, ſome hold that Solomon moſt probably repented not after this Chryſoſt. in foul falling, as Chryſoſtom, who comparing David and him together ſaith, Solomon 1 *Cor.hom.*24. received a deadly wound; David indeed fell and roſe again by repentance, he fought Auguſt. and received the crown: but his ſon did no ſuch thing. Auguſtine alſo up on the Pſ. which beginneth thus, except the Lord build the city, in his prologue ſaith, that *Lib.*2.*moral.c.*2 Solomon was rejected of God. What Ambroſe ſaith, ſee before. Gregory num-Theodoret. breth him with Iudas, Dives, and the Sodomites, who were damned. Theodoret with Saul and the unbelieving Iews, who for their ingratitude were deprived of Proſper. grace, and that finally. Proſper Aquitan. Solomon being puft up in his old age for-nicated both in body and minde, and the Lord forſaking him made an evill end, ſo likewiſe Eucherius, Rabanus and Angelomus, and Toſtatus, &c.

Reaſon 1. Their reaſons are; Firſt, becauſe it is no where recorded, that he repented, but of all others, that fell and roſe again by repentance, ſo much is recorded of 2. them, as of David, Manaſſeh, Peter, Paul, &c. Secondly, becauſe as Eucherius and ſome others reaſon, he deſtroyed not again the idolatrous houſes, which he 2 *King.*23.13. had ſet up, as appeared in that they continued to the time of Ioſiah, who demo-3. liſhed them. Thirdly, becauſe he was the firſt author of idolatry amongſt the kings of Iſrael, and ſo an occaſion of ruine to many, as an arch idolater, therefore it is to 4. doubted, that he was rejected, as Ieroboam that made Iſrael to ſinne. Fourthly, although God ſometime promiſed David not to take his mercy from his ſon for ever, if he ſhould ſin, but to correct him, yet David underſtanding well without doubt, that his meaning was not certainly to give him grace to repent, that hee might be eternally ſaved, but onely as is expreſſed, that he would not take his 1 Chron. 28.9. mercy from him, as from Saul (as he did not indeed, for his poſterity reigned ſtill generation after generation) threatned him, that if he ſhould forſake the Lord, 5. he would take his mercy from him for ever. Fifthly, becauſe in Eccleſiaſticus *Eccleſ.*47.14, where all the laudable and diſcommendable things in Solomon are ſpoken of, no 15,16,&c. word is ſpoken of his repentance, and whereas Gedeon and Sampſon, that fell and their riſing again is paſſed over in ſilence, yet that wee might not doubt of their being again received to mercy an honourable mention is made of them, Heb.
11. amongſt other moſt faithfull perſons, but no where of Solomon. And for the reaſons brought to prove the contrary, that taken from Gods promiſe made to David touching his ſon, hath been anſwered already, and is further anſwered by St.
Auguſtine, expounding it of Chriſt and the faithfull, for although he were without ſinne in himſelf, yet as is ſaid, Eſa. 53. He bare the ſinnes of all. Likewiſe his calling him Iedidiah is to be referred to Chriſt chiefly, and to Solomon in reſpect of the temporall good things vouchſafed unto him. Neither can an argument be drawn from this, that he wrote ſome books of holy Scripture: for as Auguſtine ſaith, Balaam likewiſe being evill, uttered good and ſalutiferous oracles; we beleeve not thoſe writings of Solomon and eſteem highly of them, becauſe they came from him, but becauſe from God through him. Therefore whatſoever good he wrote, let it be aſcribed to God, and ſinne left to the man, neither doth it prove any thing that there is none example like it to be found, for the thief upon the croſſe repenting at the laſt and being ſaved, is without another parallel. Whereas his being a type of Chriſt is inſiſted upon, that is nothing to prove his repentance, for God hath made other things which were not capable of ſalvation types of Chriſt, as the brazen ſerpent, the rock, manna, and divers beaſts offered in ſacrifice, and if every type of Chriſt muſt needs be ſaved, then every high Prieſt, which I think none will affirm. For the earneſt praying of David for him, it is not to be doubted, but that he did the like for Abſalom, and Abraham for Iſmael, but prevailed not. Laſtly, for the traditions alledged, they ſavour of the Rabbins invention, and it is uncertain, whether he wrot any thing after his fall, or all before, which laſt is moſt probable, becauſe ſo many proverbs, ſongs and writings, are before aſcribed unto him, 1 King. 4. 32. For my part, all the premiſes conſidered, I think it moſt probable that he repented not, but becauſe nothing certainly is revealed pro or contra, I leave the certain judging of this to the Iudge of all. And for one thing before alledged on Solomons behalf, I have paſſed it over as not worth the anſwering, viz. that he is ſaid to have ſlept with his fathers, and to have been buried in the Sepulchers of Kings: for the like is ſaid of Rehoboam, 1 King. 14. 31.

V. 9. Therefore the Lord was angry with Solomon becauſe his heart was turned away from the Lord, who had appeared to him twice.] The Lord is ſaid to be angry after the manner of man being offended, becauſe he determined not to let the injury done him by Solomon to goe unrevenged. He had appeared to him twice; that is, once in Gibeon, and after that when he had built the Temple, and that in great mercy, thus moſt ſtrongly obliging him unto him, which aggravated his ſin the more. And his word came unto him another time alſo, 1 Kings 6. 11, 12. to encourage him in building the Temple, but becauſe that was by a Prophet or Angell ſent to ſpeak ſo unto him, it is not reckoned amongſt his appearances. Now becauſe the Lord having uſed him ſo familiarly, he yet ungratefully went from him after Idols, being ſo ſeriouſly warned of this alſo before, hee threatneth to take away his kingdome from him, yet not all becauſe of his father David, but all the tribes except one, viz. Iudah, with which the tribe of Benjamin was ſo joyned, that they were but as one tribe together, and therefore as Martyr noteth, it was called by the name of that tribe only the kingdome of Iudah, who alſo obſerveth the juſtice of Gods dealing in puniſhing him, as he had divided between God and idols, ſo God divides his kingdome. But according to ſome others, when he ſaith, he would leave him one tribe, he meant one beſides [illegible] of which he was. How the Lord ſpake thus unto Solomon is not expreſſed, but generally by moſt it is held, that it was by a Prophet, either Nathan or Abijah, who alſo was ſent to Ieroboam. Yet ſome think, becauſe no mention is made of any meſſenger from God unto him, and it would not have been ſafe for any man to have done this meſſage, that God ſaid thus unto him immediately. But contrariwiſe it is more probable, that he did not, becauſe it is a great favour for God to appear to a man, and therefore, except in Cains time, when there was no prophet to ſpeak by, we do not read, that he ever ſpake immediately to any ſinner, but by his meſſenger. How this wrought upon Solomon is not related, ſome think, that he was ſo ſtricken, that he repented: but the contrary ſeemeth rather to be true, becauſe he ſought to ſlay Ieroboam, to prevent the renting away of his kingdome threatned, as Saul did to ſlay David. Inſteed of being moved with penitency, then he was afflicted onely with worldly ſorrow and indignation, and when he could not come by Ieroboam, he was oppreſſed the more with grief, and thus his death wss the ſooner haſtened. Whereas ſome Hebrews invent another cauſe of renting away part of the kingdom from Solomon's poſterity, and of this diviſion, viz. Davids dividing unjuſtly ſometime of Mephiboſheths land betwixt him and Ziba, being hereby followed by Ierom, Lyra, and Hugo, it is moſt improbable, becauſe the Lord himſelf declares the cauſe to be Solomons apoſtaſie, and that ſome part of the kingdeme was ſtill reſerved becauſe of his ſingular love to David.

1 King. 11. 40.

V. 14. Therefore the Lord ſtirred up an adverſary to Solomon Hadad an Edomite, &c.]

Although the great puniſhment of renting a great part of the kingdome away was deferred, till after Solomons death, yet Gods anger againſt him for his ſins began to work immediately. He ſtirred up three enemies againſt him to vexe and moleſt him, the firſt Hadad of Edom, the ſecond Rezon, v. 23. who joyned with Hadad againſt him, the third Ieroboam one of his own ſubjects, v. 26. Now theſe men out of an old grudge againſt the houſe of David, exerciſed hoſtility againſt him in his old dayes, but becauſe God made them herein to ſerve his providence for the puniſhment of Solomon, he is ſaid to have ſtirred them up, not that he infuſed this malice into them, but becauſe he uſed it to puniſh his wickedneſſe by them, even as a workman worketh by tools that another made. In deſcribing Hadad

V. 15, 16. the ſacred hiſtory is large, ſhewing whereby he was firſt provoked, viz. becauſe David and his captain Ioab ſometime attempted the rooting out of all the males in Edom, he then being a little one, was carried away by his fathers ſervants into Egypt, taking more men with them, as they went by Paran for more ſafeties ſake, and that he might be the more honourably attended. And in Egypt he found favour with Pharaoh, who harboured him, and when he was grown up to mans eſtate, gave him his wives ſiſter to wife, who bare him a ſonne, &c. Touching the occaſion of Davids ſeverity againſt the Edomites, nothing elſe is here ſaid, but that Ioab went up to bury the ſlain, and then he continued in Edom ſix moneths, and ſlew every male in Edom. But ſome Expoſitours ſay, that the Edomites ſlew the gariſon, which David had placed there, and theſe Ioab went up to bury, and in revenge he with all Iſrael made this deſtruction amongſt them, conceiving certainly, that if the children had been ſpared, an in-bred hatred againſt Iſrael for this would have ſtirred them up in time to come, to ſeek revenge upon Iſrael. But Lyra ſaith, that he permitted the Edomites to bury their dead, by which kindneſſe he got him a name. The king of Egypt out of a conſideration of the mutability of worldly eſtates, and conſequently of his own, takes pity upon this royall orphan

P. Martyr. and dealeth moſt kindly with him, as ſome others are noted by Martyr to have done upon the like conſideration, as Seſoſtris ſometime king of Egypt, who having four kings in his power, made them draw his chariot at the firſt, but when he eſpyed one of them look often back to the wheels of the chariot, he asked him why he did ſo? he anſwered, to note, how thoſe parts of the wheels, which were now up, by and by went down; This when he had heard, conſidering this to be the caſe of men alſo in higheſt dignity, he preſently diſmiſſed them all four, and

V. 21. ſet them at liberty again. Likewiſe Charles the 5. received and nouriſhed Tunetanus a king, being expelled out of his k[illegible]ome by his ſon. This Hadad, whom the king of Egypt ſhewed ſuch kindneſſe to, when he heard that David and Ioab were dead, for fear of whoſe puiſſance, whileſt they lived, he contained himſelf in Egypt, returned with Pharaoh's leave, and together with Rezon, went to Damaſcus, as it ſeemeth, and having taken it, they together reigned there, and as is to be conceived, annoyed by their excurſions the kingdome of Solomon, for it is ſaid, they went to Damaſcus and dwelt there, and they reigned there.

V. 24. This Rezon is ſaid to have been the Prince of an army, when David ſmote Hadadezer, King of Zobah, of which, and of the Sirians comming from Damaſcus to help him, ſee 2 Sam. 8. But of Ioabs cutting off of every male in Edom, and going up to

Lyra. bury the dead; nothing is ſaid before. Lyra ſaith that this Rezon having in thoſe dayes offended his maſter, the King of Zobah, fled from him and became a captain of robbers, and thus annoyed him, as he might well doe, that King being then ſo weakened by David. And now becauſe Hadad was unable of himſelfe to get the kingdom of Edom, he firſt joyned with Rezon and holp him to be King of Damaſcus, the head city of Syria, that he might afterwards help him to recover the kingdom of Edom; both which kingdomes were tributaries to Solomon, and therefore in thus joyning together to take them, they were enemies to Solomon, yet it is not to be thought that Hadad did this immediately after Davids death, for till Solomon fell to idolatry, he raigned over all his dominions in peace, but now hee becomming contemptible for his baſeneſſe, they thus lifted up their hands againſt him. Whereas then v. 25. Hadad is ſaid to have been an enemy to Solomon all his dayes; it is to be underſtood not from the beginning of his reigne, but from the time that he was ſtirred up againſt him. Ioſephus ſaith, that Hadad comming up from Egypt towards the end of Solomons reigne, and attempting Idumæa, could not prevaile with his countrymen for that kingdome, becauſe Solomon had there ſo many ſtrong holds; wherefore he went into Syria, and by the help of Rezon who had depopulated that country much by robberies he obtained that kingdom, and by many irruptions from thence filled the Iſraelites land with rapines, whilſt Solomon lived. Thus he; but the Sept. contrary to the originall, conclude this hiſtory thus, and he reigned in the land of Edom, v. 25. whereas in the Hebrew original it is, in Syria, juſtifying that of Ioſephus. This hiſtory through the brevity thereof is ſo obſcure, that this hath been the occaſion of difference amongſt Expoſitours, ſome holding that Hadad reigned in Syria, and ſome Rezon. For having ſpoken of Hadad, and how he asked leave of Pharoah to depart, it is not ſaid whether he departed or not; or what hee did againſt Solomon, but onely the proſecution of the ſtory touching him being left, v. 23. God alſo ſtirred him up an adverſary, Rezon who fled from Hadadezer, and gathered men unto him, and was the Prince of an army when David ſlew them, and they went to Damaſcus and dwelt and reigned there. And he was an enemy to Iſrael, &c. and that beſides the evill which Hadad did, and he defied Iſrael and reigned in Syria.] From whence we may gather certainly only that Hadad did evill to Solomon and his people, but whether he reigned in Edom or in Syria cannot be gathered, but only by the Septuagint, in whoſe tranſlation he is affirmed to bee King of Edom. For theſe words, and he reigned in Syria, have reference rather to Rezon before ſpoken of, and of whom it is ſaid that he with his men went and reigned in Damaſcus, the cheife city of Syria. It is to be held then with Lyra, that Rezon attained the kingdome of Syria, and becauſe Hadad could not otherwiſe ſo much annoy the Iſraelites, that he got the kingdome of Edom, which the Sept. thought neceſſary to expreſſe, leaving out thoſe words of reigning in Syria, as being a thing ſufficiently ſet forth before of Rezon with his men; where it is ſaid, they reigned in Damaſcus. And if we underſtand it thus, the caſe of Solomon and his countrey was now greivous, he being invaded on the South by the Edomites, and on the North by the Syrians. It was long that theſe two enemies had waited for this opportunity to get theſe two kingdomes, and they muſt needs now bee both of them very aged. Rezon, who was a Captain at the leaſt 20 yeares before David dyed, and at leaſt 20 when he was firſt Captain; and Hadad, who was at his death 25. for adde unto the one the yeares of Solomons reigne 36. and hee muſt now be aged 76. and to the other 36. and he muſt be 61. But Solomons exactions moſt probably being now more greivous, theſe nations who before might have been ſollicited in vain, were eaſily drawn to rebell and to admit of theſe for their Princes, and under them and at their direction to make excurſions upon his kingdome of Iſrael.

V. 26. Neither had Solomon theſe two enemies onely, but alſo another in his own kingdome; viz. Ieroboam the ſonne of Nebat, of the tribe of Ephraim, who had been formerly advanced by Solomon for his valour to bee over the whole houſe of Ioſeph, but now by Abijah a Prophet, he was ſtirred up by telling him that God would make him King over 10 tribes of Iſrael, leaving unto Solomons ſonne one onely, &c. This Nebat ſaith Lyra, the father of Ieroboam was Shimei, whom Solomon ſlew, according to the opinion of ſome; and he being by his mother nouriſhed up after his death was often by her put in mind of Solomons ſeverity towards his father, thus ſtirring up an hatred in his mind againſt him: but how frivolous this is, appeareth, becauſe his name differs, and Shimei was not of Ephraim, but of Benjamin. It is therefore more probable, which followeth in Lyra following Ioſephus, that Solomon firſt employed Ieroboam about the work of Millo, and hereupon obſerving his induſtry, preferred him to bee Ruler over the whole houſe of Ioſeph; that is, Ephraim of which he was, and Manaſſeh; now he having attained this great dignity, as he went out of Ieruſalem to take this principality upon him, Abijah was ſent by the Lord unto him to appoint him unto a farre greater dignity; viz. to bee a King over 10 tribes, a way to which was made by that præfectureſhip, over the moſt populous and potent family in Iſrael already conferred upon him. He being by this animated, began to ſpeak privatly againſt Solomon, that thus he might draw the hearts of the people from him to himſelf; for which Solomon hearing it ſought to ſlay him. For to this effect the ſacred hiſtory ſaith.

V. 27. This was the thing, for which he lifted up his hand againſt Solomon, he built Millo, and filled up the breach of the city of David his father. Then Ieroboam being a mighty man, and Solomon ſeeing him to be induſtrious ſet him over the whole houſe of Ioſeph, and at that time Abijah found him going out of Ieruſalem having a new garment, &c.] In which words no cauſe can be found why Ieroboam rebelled againſt Solomon, or why Solomons building of Millo is mentioned, unleſſe a ſupply be made, which is partly implied in the words, viz. to ſhew, by what meanes Ieroboam began firſt to riſe, it was upon his employment in Millo, and for his lifting up of his hand againſt him, there was no cauſe in that, or in his being ſet over the houſe of Ioſeph, but onely in the meſſage of the Prophet unto him, this his advancement by the King being ſpoken of only as a preparative and means, the better to attain the kingdome, to which God would raiſe him for Solomons puniſhment. Wherefore they both vent their own inventions, of whom Lyra ſpeaketh, as R. Solomon, who ſaith, that he reproved Solomon for filling up and ſtopping the paſſage, which David had left open for men to come to the houſe of the Lord, which he did by repairing Millo, and for this Solomon being angry expelled him the city; and others, who ſay, that he being firſt ſet over the houſe of Ioſeph, was removed down to a lower office to be over the work of Millo, at which he took indignation and rebelled. But this laſt is plainly contradicted in the text, for the work of Millo was the occaſion of his riſe, and the firſt is meerly imaginary. Yet, as Martyr hath it, Kimhi also findeth a cauſe in the building of Millo of diſcontent, both to Ieroboam and to the people; for that in times paſt it was ſo built that a poſtern door was left, and paſſage for the kings of Iſrael in caſe of danger to flee away, which Solomon now alſo ſtopt up, and becauſe hereby he ſhewed a contempt of the citizens, as though he feared no danger from that which they could do at any time, through which he ſhould have any need to flee. And ſome alſo, he ſaith, hold this to be a cauſe of Ieroboams and the peoples diſcontent, that by ſetting buildings upon Millo, all paſſage to the court was ſtopt up, that men could not ſo eaſily come to the king with any ſute, as in times paſt, and againſt theſe things Ieroboam was moſt ready to ſpeak, and upon theſe occaſions to ſtir up the people to rebell againſt him. And to theſe or ſome of theſe he ſeemeth to aſſent. But if there had been any preparatives in Ieroboam to rebell againſt his maſter before the Prophets comming to him, the ſacred hiſtory would not have ſpared certainly to relate it, no more then Abſaloms practiſes, when he aſpired to his fathers kingdome. Seeing therefore here is no cauſe ſet down, but onely the propheſying of Abijah unto him, I conclude, that this was the only thing that firſt gave him occaſion to attempt any thing againſt Solomon, as we may gather certainly, that he did, becauſe it is ſaid, that he lifted up his hand againſt him, and yet he had no reaſon to do ſo upon that propheſie, in Solomons life-time, ſeeing he was told, that no part of the kingdome ſhould be taken from him whilſt he lived, but in his ſonnes time. The reaſon then, why the building of Millo and Ieroboams induſtry about that work are firſt mentioned, was becauſe here was the beginning of Ieroboams riſing to dignity, making him the more capable of a kingdome afterwards, as in ſpeaking before of Hadad, his hiſtory is ſet forth from the beginning, and likewiſe of Rezon: neither doth Ioſephus ſpeak of any other occaſion of his rebelling, but this propheſie. Yet Toſtatus, as Lyra, will have an occaſion in the building of Millo, viz. it being a work of great coſt, a tribute was raiſed to maintain the charge, and Ieroboam being appointed over this, finding the people hereat diſcontented, took this opportunity to ſpeak againſt the king alſo: but how then came he after this to a greater dignity by the kings favour?

V. 29. At that time when Jeroboam went out of Ieruſalem, Abijah the Shilonite found him, and he was clad with a new garment, &c.] It is moſt probable, that by his going out of Ieruſalem, is meant his going out towards Ephraim to execute his office fice, till now thinking nothing leſſe then of a kingdome, but apt enough, as God knew, upon juſt occaſion offered, to aſpire after it. For the tribe of Ephraim, of which he was, in times paſt affronted Iephtah, and ſlew the 70. ſonnes of Gedeon, and Micah of Ephraim was a ringleader to idolatry in Iſrael, and Sheba the ſonne of Bikri an Ephraimite, lifted up his hand againſt David next after Abſalom, and ſo did Ieroboam now againſt Solomon. Him, being come out, Abijah the Prophet found in the field, and they two are ſaid to have been there alone, which may ſeeme ſtrange, that he being a man ſo highly promoted, ſhould travell without any attendants; but it is moſt likely, that the Prophet called him aſide in ſecret to do his errand unto him, as Samuel in times paſt did Saul, to avoid the danger of Solomons knowing of it. Touching the new garment, it is ſo ſpoken of, as that it is uncertain, whether Abijah or Ieroboam were clad with it, but it is moſt commonly taken, and that moſt rightly, that this garment was the Prophets, becauſe it is likely that Ieroboam would not have ſuffered him to take and rend his garment, before hee knew the reaſon, and it had been a ſtrange thing in the Prophet to offer it, and it had not beeen ſo fit a ſigne to give him part of his own, to ſignifie the rending away, and giving to him that which was another mans, but the garment being the Prophets, who came as a meſſenger from God, and giving part unto him, did moſt aptly ſignifie the thing intended. The cauſe, why the Prophet did not onely foretell, but by a figure and ſigne fore-ſhew the taking away of ten tribes from Solomons poſterity, to give them to Ieroboam, by rending his garment into 12. parts and giving ten of them to Ieroboam, was both to ſtir him up to be more intent to the thing propheſied, and to make the deeper impreſſion in his minde by the ſenſe, not onely of hearing, but alſo of ſeeing, as other Prophets alſo were directed afterwards to do, both Eſay, Ieremiah, and Ezekiel. For when Ieroboam ſaw him to take his own new garment and to tear it in pieces, he could not but conceive, that this was not done for nothing, but upon ſome ſerious and weighty conſideration.

And it is worth the noting, that as ten tribes were rent from Solomons houſe and Rupertus.
given to Ieroboam, ſet forth by ten pieces given to him, ſo the kings of the ten tribes were changed according to this number ten times, till that as a garment rent in pieces they were quite conſumed. The kingdome of Iſrael was new, as a new and whole garment under Solomon, and therefore moſt aptly ſet forth by a new garment, but after this rending, it ſoon began to decay. Firſt, under Ieroboam by 1 King.14.30.

ſonne of Remaliah, who ſlew Pekahiah, in his dayes came Tiglathpileſer king of Aſſyria, and ſubdued and carried away many of this kingdome into Aſſyria. Ninthly, V. 30. under Hoſheah the ſonne of Elah, who ſlew Pekah, in whoſe dayes Salmanaſar 2 King.17.3. the king of Aſſyria came againſt Iſrael, and Hoſheah became his ſervant, and ſo he reigned in another condition, viz. of a tributary a while, and ſo may be counted for a tenth king. But then treaſon being found in him, hee was taken and impriſoned, and the whole kingdome deſtroyed. But to return to the Prophet Abijah, V. 36.
he gave to Ieroboam ten pieces of the twelve, into which he had rent his garment, fore-telling him, that he ſhould reign over ten tribes, but for Davids ſake, one tribe ſhould be left ſtill to Solomons ſonne: by one tribe underſtanding, as hath been noted before, Iudah together with Benjamin lying mixed with it, to expreſſe which the Sept. have it, δυω σκηπτρα ὑπολειπωνται, he ſhall have two tribes, becauſe that 10 peices being given away, there remained two ſtill. But he telleth him that this ſhould not be done in Solomons dayes; but in his ſons dayes, to whom (though unworthy for Solomons great wickedneſſe, two tribes ſhould remain) that David might not want a light in Iſrael, that is, a Kingly poſterity comming of David, ſet up as a light by Kingly glory ſhining in that land; and it is ſaid a light, ſaith Mar- P. Martyr. tyr, becauſe David himſelfe reigning over all was as the Sun; but henceforth the Kings comming of him ſhould be but a[illegible]ht, the beames of their Kingly glory extending nothing ſo farre. The cauſe why God would rend away ſo much of the kingdome, is ſet down v. 33. Becauſe they have forſaken me and worſhipped Aſtaro, V.33. &c. It is ſaid not he, but they in the plurall number, to intimate that Solomons wickedneſſe ſpread it ſelfe amongſt his people, who were drawne by his example to commit the ſame idolatry: his ſin being thus aggravated, and made the more provocative.

But I will not take away any part of the Kingdome out of his hand, &c. 35. but V.34. out of his ſonnes hands, &c.] Here Ieroboam is expreſly directed not to attempt any thing in Solomons life time, as David being held by the feare of God without any expreſſion reſtrained himſelfe from attempting any thing againſt Saul during his Joſephus. life, although he were by Samuel annointed king in his ſtead. Yet Ioſephus ſaith, that he being by this propheſie lifted up to great hopes, began ſo ſoone as he came amongſt his contribules, over whom he was ſet, to move them to ſedition, and Scholaſt. hiſt. helpe him to this kingdome. Comeſtor and Toſtatus thinke, that he ſought to ſtirre Toſtatus. them up before. That of Ioſephus ſeemeth not to diſagree from the ſacred hiſtory, in which it is ſaid, that he lifted up his hand againſt him, v. 26. for what is this elſe but to rebell? and for his ſeeking the kingdome before, it ſeemeth to be intimated in this ſpeech of the Prophet unto him, Thou ſhalt reigne according to all that thy heart deſireth] for hence ſome gather that he deſired before to attaine the kingdome. But this is a weake ground, ſeeing the meaning of that ſaying might be nothing elſe, but that when he ſhould be made king over the ten tribes according to this propheſie, as he ſhould deſire after the manner of all kings, ſo he ſhould continue Lord and King over all thoſe parts, none being able to put him downe againe.
I conclude then, that moſt probably Ieroboam thought of nothing leſſe before, then of a kingdome, but when he had heard the Prophet, he began to ſhew the wickedneſſe of his heart preſently in aſſaying to get the kingdome in Solomons life time, which was expreſſely denied unto him, and yet the providence of God wrought alſo herein to afflict Solomon the more for his ſinnes, who knoweth how to uſe wicked men as inſtruments to puniſh the wicked, although that which they doe againſt them proceedeth meerely from their owne evill diſpoſition.

V.39. And I will afflict the ſeed of David for this, but not for ever] Becauſe theſe words are added after theſe, v. 38. I will build thee a firme houſe, &c. ſome to make them to cohere with them, underſtand them, as if that were the afflicting of Davids houſe meant, when they ſhould not ſee the ten tribes to returne any more un-P. Martyr. to them, but to continue ſeparated, as a contrary kingdome. But this pleaſeth not Martyr, who thinketh rather and that rightly, that they have reference to that which was ſaid before, viz. the renting away of the ten tribes for their ſinnes, ſee-ing if it had been meant of the continuing of this rent, it ſhould have been ſaid, I will afflict them in this, and not for this. Touching the laſt words but not for ever, ſome underſtand them, as if it were meant, that the kingdome of Iſrael now to be divided from the kingdome of Iudah ſhould not ſtand alwaies, but returne at length and be under the houſe of David againe, which they thinke was fulfilled, when Iſrael was carryed away captive by Salmanaſar, and Ioſiah ſome time after poſſeſſed Samaria, and the countries pertaining to the ten tribes, and when after the captivity of Iudah into Babylon and returne againe in the dayes of the Aſſamo-nei, the Iewes obtained the whole kingdome. But this ſaith Martyr cannot ſtand, becauſe although they poſſeſſed the land againe, yet the ten tribes never returned to

to be reduced under the obedience of the houſe of David. It is better therefore ſaith he, to underſtand it of the Meſſiah, in whom the kingdome of David is much more inlarged, then ever before, in that all the ends of the earth are given unto him. And this is acknowledged by R Solomon, but he erreth miſerably in that he holdeth the kingdome of the Meſſiah to be a kingdome in this world, under the obedience whereof the other ten tribes ſhall one day be brought againe. Pellican. Pellican agreeth with Martyr, who ſaith, that the glory was reſtored to Davids houſe in the Meſſiah, as never was to any mortall king; and Lyra, Toſtatus, and Dionyſius likewiſe. They were not ſay they, afflicted any more by the kingdome of Iſrael conſiſting of ten tribes after 250. yeares, becauſe that kingdome then ceaſed, by reaſon whereof the kingdome of Iudah could never be quiet long together before: but their affliction was wholly at an end, when the Meſſiah came and reduced all nations under his obedience by his Goſpell.

V. 38. Whereas the Lord ſpake ſo kindly to Ieroboam by his Prophet v. 38. If thou wilt walke in my wayes, &c. I will be with thee, &c. when as he knew that he would be a moſt groſſe Idolatour, and did by him puniſh Solomon, when as he knew that he would be much worſe, he did it out of his generall goodneſſe, that diffuſeth it ſelf to all alike, to the good and the bad, to the juſt and unjuſt, Matt. 5.45. that when he ſhould prove ſo bad, he might the more juſtly be moſt ſeverely puniſhed, as indeed he was in his poſterity, none being ſpared, but all cut off, thus alſo was Saul before advanced, and Iehu, and Hazael after. And he ſpake thus, and ſet him up to puniſh idolatry, that whatſoever he ſhould prove afterwards, it might yet bee manifeſt hereby, that God was not the authour of it, but that it ſprung from his own corruption moſt violently carrying him on againſt the moſt effectuall premonitions and promiſes that the Lord could make unto him, and that we might learn hereby not to charge God with our ſinnes, as ſome doe, ſaying; I am ſuch, becauſe God hath made me ſuch.

V. 40. But Solomon ſought to ſlay Ieroboam, wherefore he fled into Egypt to Seſhack, &c.] Hitherto hath been ſhewed what promiſes were made to Ieroboam, neither is it expreſſely ſaid, that he attempted any thing againſt Solomon hereupon, but becauſe this is ſaid before, that he lifted up his hand againſt him; whereof the Prophets comming to him is ſaid to be the cauſe, and here that Solomon ſought to ſlay him (which he would not doubtleſſe have done meerly for that prediction; for both it was ſecret, and he might as well and rather have ſought to kill the Prophet for that: neither is it to be thought that Solomon was ſo farre gone in wickedneſſe as to oppoſe the knowne will of God in any thing) it is to be held that he began now as was touched before, like a proud and ungratefull man, to ſeek to get away part of his maſters kingdome, and therefore he ſought to cut him off. But if by any meanes the propheſy came to Solomons eare, and hereupon hee were moved the more againſt him, that Gods purpoſe might be prevented; he ſinned greatly herein, and it argueth his finall impenitency, as Sauls; and his ſeeking to ſlay him was but a kicking againſt the pricks, and fighting againſt God; all whoſe decrees ſhall ſtand unalterable againſt the machinations of the greateſt Potentates in the world. Seſhack the King of Egypt, to whom Ieroboam fled, was moſt probably the ſonne of Pharoah, the father in law of Solomon; who now his father being dead, reigned there: but it ſeemeth that although hee were neare unto Solomon by his marriage with his ſiſter, yet the freindſhip continued not, as before; for then hee would not have harboured his rebellious ſubject, but delivered him to him to bee puniſhed. And this is a thing common to other Kings, the band of affinity proveth ofttimes no tye unto them, but that the brother in law will be againſt the brother in law, for his owne ends.

V. 41. The reſt of Solomons acts, &c. are written in the book of the acts of Solomon.] That is, ſaith Martyr in a Chronicle, in which all notable things were ſet downe from time to time, that happened in any Kings reigne; as in the Chronicles of other kingdomes: P. Martyr. but becauſe many things were therein ſet down, which it concerneth not the Church in generall to know, for inſtruction and edification in matters pertaining to God; ſuch onely were excerpted, and ſet forth in the two books of Chro-

Lyra. Bibliotheca patrum. nicles here following, and thoſe former writings being none of the canonicall Scripture, periſh; Lyra ſaith, that theſe writings of the acts of theſe Kings, were burnt by Nebuzaredan ſteward to the King of Babylon; ſo likewiſe Sixtus Senenſis, 2 Chron. 9, 27. Solomons other acts are ſaid to be written by Abijah the Shilonite, Nathan and Iddo, who it ſeemeth were writers ſucceſſively of Solomons acts, as others were in their times before and after of other Kings of Iudah and Iſrael.

V.42. The time that Solomon reigned over all Iſrael was 40 yeares, but at what age he began, it is not ſaid; but of this what may be moſt probably conjectured, ſee before ch. 1.38, 39. and it may be, that he reigned ſometime whileſt David yet lived, which commeth not into this account, in which time he begat Rehoboam, who is V.43. ſaid to have been 40 when he dyed, and then he began to reign in his ſteed. And it *Ch.*14.21. Note. is to be noted that Solomon fell ſo fouly in his old age, that no word is ſpoken in his commendation at his death, as of David; as that he dyed in a good old age, full of riches and glory, that all men may be warned by him not to fall from the feare and love of God, but to perſevere herein to the laſt gaſpe, leaſt they fall from that which is the greateſt comfort in the world in their death, the praiſe of God.

CHAP. XII.

V.1. A*Nd Rehoboam came to Sichem, where all the people aſſembled to make him King.*] That which was ſaid in generall before ch. 11.43. that Rehoboam reigned in his ſteed, is here more particularly declared, for the manner of proceeding about his reign; not as other kings afterwards, who being heires apparant to the kingdome expected not the peoples conſent, but the father being dead, the ſonne and heir immediatly reigned in his ſteed. But Rehoboam moſt fooliſhly deferred to do ſo, that in time he might by the conſent of the people, be made King, not conſidering, what danger there is in delayes in matters of this nature. And as he ſhewed folly in this, ſo in that he was drawn to Sichem about this buſineſſe, in the midſt of Ephraim, where Ieroboam was ſo powerfull, who had alſo attempted before to ſet up himſelf there, and from theſe he proceeded to a third degree of folly, in forſaking the counſell of the ancients, & following the counſell of young men as is hereafter ſhewed. Neither did Salomon wiſely, but as one that towards his end had his underſtanding taken from him, in that he neglected in his life-time to ſet his ſon upon the throne, which he ſaw was otherwiſe likely to be hazarded by Ieroboam, eſpecially ſeeing his father David had herein given him an example of kingly providence, when as he yet living had cauſed him to be crowned King. But happily he ſaw into his ſonnes fooliſhneſſe, and therefore was careleſſe, or thought it not fit to give him occaſion of inſolency by preferring him ſo, whileſt he lived: for Eccleſ. 47. 24. he is ſaid to be a moſt fooliſh man. But in all theſe things, we muſt look to a higher hand, which moderated herein, to effect what he had decreed for the puniſhment of Solomon.

V.2. Whileſt the aſſembly was comming together to Sichem, Ieroboam hearing that Solomon was dead, returned from Egypt, but whether ſent for by his contribules to this aſſembly, or to what place he came, or whether immediatly upon the news of Solomons death, it is not ſaid: yet we may hence gather, that he returned of his own minde, becauſe his ſending for is not ſpoken of untill v. 3. and it is moſt likely, that he being ambitious enough of the honour promiſed him, would not now ſlack the time to come and ſeek for it, much more then formerly he had done. The Sept. tranſlat. according to Aldus ſaith, when he heard theſe things in Egypt, he came ſtraight way to his city to the land of Sarita in the mount of Ephraim.

V.3. And they ſent and called him, &c.] Becauſe he was a man of great note amongſt them, as being in times paſt by Solomon made a Prince over them, they ſent for him as the fitteſt man to ſpeak for them to Rehoboam touching their grievance, making account as the ſequel ſhewed, that if by petition they could have no redreſſe, to revolt unto him, and altogether to ſhake off the rule of the houſe of David by his help, he being by them ſet up for King. And it is not to be thought, but they had heard of the propheſie of Abijah, who was of the ſame tribe, touching Gods purpoſe of thus advancing Ieroboam, which made them the rather to ſeek to have him with them, and to be their ſpokeſ-man to Rehoboam. And what was their grievance?

V. 4. Thy father made our yoak heavie, but now make thee it lighter, &c.] This yoke is thought moſt probably to have been, not as ſome Hehrews conjecture, the ſending of 24000. a moneth into Lebanon, of which it hath been ſpoken before, for this was done by David, but rather a taxe that was laid upon the people, for 1 King.9.15. the building of the temple, which held not onely whileſt that was in building, but alſo for the building of the Kings houſe, the forreſt of Lebanon, and Millo, &c. which being once impoſed upon an occaſion of building the temple, with which they were willing, was continued forth on for other buildings; and from thence forward as long as Solomon lived, there being wayes enough to ſpend a Myne of money, to him that had ſo many wives and concubines to maintain and humour. And this is the courſe of other kings alſo, commonly to continue tributes and taxes once impoſed, although the occaſion ceaſeth; but how juſtly will he one day judge, before whom alone all the doings even of the greateſt ſhall come then to be judged? And that this was the burthen, of which they complained appeareth, becauſe immediatly after this aſſemblies departure, Adoram was ſent to gather the tribute, and ſtoned to death, and Ieroboam who is thought to have been formerly ſet over the houſe of Ioſeph to gather this tribute, was for this cauſe the fitteſt man, that could be choſen to treat with Rehoboam about it. Yet it is to be thought, as Martyr ſaith, that the people were never grieved at Solomons taxes, till towards the end of his reign, when he exacted upon them for the building of temples to idols, &c. becauſe they lived alwayes before in great felicity under him. R. L. ben Gerſon ſaith, that they began firſt to be grieved at his taxes, when they ſaw by Hadads and Rezons invaſions, that new charges came upon them, towards V.5. the maintaining of thoſe warres. Rehoboam having heard their requeſt, taketh three Pellican. days reſpite to give anſwer, wherein, ſaith Pellican, he did fooliſhly, becauſe in this time they might conſult about a defection, whatſoever anſwer he ſhould make, ſo P. Martyr. likewiſe Martyr. But ſome others, that he did wiſely to take counſell, before he made them anſwer, as is adviſed, Eccleſ. 32. 24. my ſonne do nothing without counſell: and Prov. 29. 10. a man raſh to ſpeak is condemned. Yet in this caſe, the people being already exaſperated, it had been more wiſely, done to lenifie their mindes with ſome gentle anſwer at that time. For this is a generall principle amongſt Kings, by no meanes to ſhew rigour in the beginning of their reign, but all humanity to the winning of the hearts of their ſubjects. It is ſtrange, ſaith Martyr, that the people being aſſembled together, ſhewed no diſtaſt at the idolatry lately ſet up, neither ſpake any thing for the redreſſe thereof, but onely to have their burthens eaſed, that concerned their worldly profit. But this is common to worldly men, they are not ſenſible of the evill corruption in religion, but only of worldly damages.

V. 6. The people being diſmiſſed, Rehoboam began rightly to conſult with the anci- Hieron. in tradit. Hebr. ents, who had been counſellours in his fathers time, that is, ſaith Ierome, and after him Comeſtor, Benaiah the ſonne of Iehoiadah, and Iahiel the ſonne of Achimoni, otherwiſe called Chilab. But whereas they counſelled him moſt wiſely to ſpeake V. 8. kindly to the people, he contrariwiſe conſulting alſo with young men, that had been brought up with him, anſwered them roughly, as they adviſed him. Here it is to be underſtood, that theſe men were not young in yeares, ſeeing they had been brought up together with Rehoboam, who was now forty one yeares of age, but children in underſtanding and experience in affaires of the common-wealth. They V.10,11. counſelled him to ſay, my little finger ſhall be greater then my fathers loynee, my father made your burthen heavy, but I will adde unto it, he did beat you with rods, but I will beat you with ſcorpions. whereby they meant, that his father ruled over them and put upon them what tribute he pleaſed, when he was very young, therefore he being much older, for this their relucting againſt him would make them know his puiſſance to be greater, and compell that ſubjection and ſervice from them, about which they now made queſtion. So that his aggravating of the burthen upon Lyra. them ſhould be as a beating with ſcorpions, which, ſaith Lyra, is a kinde of moſt hard whip having pieces of lead or iron tyed at the end of the cords, and is called a ſcorpion becauſe as it ſtingeth with the taile and the torment of the ſcorpions ſtinging is moſt grievous, ſo is the ſcourging with this kinde of whip. This counſell although without all ground of truth, pleaſed greatly this fooliſh man, becauſe he thought that in ſaying thus he ſhould ſpeake more like a king, that had power and command over the people, but to ſpeake otherwiſe were to abaſe himſelfe to his ſubjects. But as I ſaid before, without all ground of truth; for neither was Rehoboam more, but leſſe powerfull then Solomon, who was the wiſeſt and richeſt amongſt men, and Rehoboam fooliſh and poore to him-ward, neither did Solomon a long time burthen them, but they enjoying much happineſſe under him, rejoyced and V. 15. praiſed God. But the cauſe why Rehoboam was thus cruelly bent and fooliſhly lead, was the hand of the higheſt, which was herein for the puniſhment of Solomon in his poſterity, that his word ſpoken by Abijah might take effect. He did not give the wiſedome to Rehoboam to diſcerne the beſt counſell from the worſt, whereby he might have been kept from this pride and cruelty, but in his juſt judgement infatuated him, and ſtirred up Ieroboam and the people to take this occaſion to revolt from him, that is, not by putting into them a ſpirit of rebellion, but permitting them to be carryed on by the bitterneſſe of their own mindes thus exaſperated, leaving him, to ſet up another king over them.

V. 16. What portion have we in David, or what inheritance in the ſonne of Iſhai?] As Rehoboam had ſpoken contemptuouſly to them, ſo they here reply contemptuouſly, not as to their king, but to ſome private perſon of an obſcure family, as Saul in times paſt had done, when he would diſgrace David, calling him the ſonne of Iſhai; to thy tents O Iſrael, and looke thou to thy houſe O David, that is, to thy own matters, and to thoſe that will adhere unto thee, for we will be no longer thy Subjects. The expoſition of theſe words [thy houſe] in Ioſephus, underſtanding hereby the Temple, is moſt ſtrange, and contrary to all others, and to the Chaldee paraphraſe, who hath it, reigne over thy houſe (O David;) neither was the Temple called by the name of David, but of Solomon, and it came not from the people afterwards to leave the Temple, but from Ieroboams wicked policy. Thus Iſrael went from Rehoboam and made Ieroboam their king, which act of theirs was not juſtifiable, although God had decreed that thus it ſhould be; becauſe it proceeded from an evill fountain, a rebellious and impatient minde in them, neither had they yet order from God thus to doe, although he had foreſhewed by his Prophet that thus it Note. ſhould be. But from Rehoboams example uſing his Subjects like ſlaves, all other kings may take warning, as they deſire to reigne in peace and not to hazzard the loſing of all.

V. 17. But Rehoboam reigned over the children of Iſrael, that dwelt in the cities of Iudah.] Pellican. That is, ſaith Pellican, Iudah, Benjamin, and Simeon, and to make the other tribes ten he ſaith, that Manaſſeh becauſe of the diviſion into two parts, one on the other ſide of Iordan, and the other on this, might be counted for two. And indeed Simeon muſt needs be part of his kingdome, becauſe he is ſaid to have reigned over all the children of Iſrael that dwelt in the cities of Iudah, ſeeing the lot of the tribe of Simeon fell within Iudah, Ioſh. 19. 1, 2. Wherefore the one tribe of Iudah over which Rehoboam is ſaid to continue King ſtill, v. 20. comprehended two more. So likewiſe Martyr, but ſome oppoſe this alleadging Adricomius, who divideth Simeon from Iudah in his deſcription of the holy land, and urging the propheſie againſt it of 10 tribes to Ieroboam; and hereunto may be added, that in all the levying of armies by the Kings of Iudah, the tribe of Iudah onely, and the tribe of Benjamin are ſpoken of both in Rehoboams time, and in the time of his ſucceſſors; no word being ſpoken of the tribe of Simeon, out of which alſo men ſhould doubtleſſe have been raiſed, if it had been under this King. Moreover it is expreſſely ſaid, that many of Ephraim and Manaſſeh, and of Simeon, came and dwelt in Iudah in the dayes of Aſa; 2 Chron. 15 9. being altogether called Iſraelites, which argueth that they were of the kingdome of Iſrael, as the Ephraimites were, but then through the feare of God turned to Iudah. In which kingdome, when the Simeonites increaſed, they being ſtraightened in the dayes of Hezekiah, are ſaid to have gone out and conquered more land for their inlargement, 1 Chron. 4.41.

V. 18.
1 Kings 4.6. he is called Adoniram.
*Joseph.lib.*8. *Antiq.c.*3.

Then the King ſent Adoram who was over the tribute, but they ſtoned him to death.] He is thought by Expoſitours to have ſent him being a wiſe man and an ancient, by good words to lenifie their minds again; ſo likewiſe Ioſephus; but they being once exaſperated were ſo farre from returning, that they were the more enraged, and both ſlew him and tumultuated ſo againſt Rehoboam himſelfe, that hee fled away in his chariot to ſave his own life, neither could their minds ever after be reconciled to his ſo, as to return unto that houſe againe. But to ſhew how diſpleaſing this their rebellion was to God, they were alwayes left under the government of Idolatrous kings, untill that the meaſure of their wickedneſſes being made up to the full they were deſtroyed, and came into the hands of forrein enemies. If any ſhall think that Adoram was ſent not to pacify the people, but to exact tribute according to his office; this cannot be, ſeeing Rehoboam was not yet accepted for King, and the people now being from home, and ſo moſt probably unprovided of mony to pay, this was no place to require it in. Lyra ſaith, that they ſuſpected Adoram to be one of them, who gave the King counſell to make them ſo harſh an anſwer, and therefore they raged ſo much againſt him, ſeeing it is the manner of men in this office commonly to encreaſe the Kings tribute as much as they can, that they may be with him in the more favour; but it turneth ſometimes to their own deſtruction, which would be thought upon by all projectours, who for their own ends againſt law and equity, procure heavy burthens to bee laid upon the people.

V. 20.

And when all Iſrael heard that Ieroboam was returned, they ſent and called him, and made him King.] It is ſaid, v. 2. 3. that Ieroboam being returned out of Egypt was ſent for, and together with the people demanded a relaxation of their heavy burthens, how then is it now ſaid, that they heard of his return, and ſent for him? Pellican thinketh that he was now gone home, when it was cryed, To your tents (O Iſrael) modeſtly expecting the event of this tummult, and not ambitiouſly ſeeking the kingdome.

Pellican.
Lyra.

But Lyra, all the people now heard in all places, that he was returned out of Egypt, by thoſe that had been at the former aſſembly; but v. 1. they that had been there, are ſaid to be all Iſrael, therefore this cannot ſtand, and much leſſe that of Pellican, that by his return is meant his return to his own houſe, from whence they ſent to call him, for his practices paſt do ſhew, that he was too greedy of comming to this honour. Theſe words then are nothing elſe but a repetition of that which was ſaid v. 3. theſe words onely being ſupplied more, which were wanting there, When all the people heard that he was returned, as if it had been ſaid, they ſent for him to be their fore-man in ſpeaking to Rehoboam, and now their requeſt being ſo contemptuouſly rejected, and menaces of greater burthens added, they ſtraightway make him their king, whileſt they were together in Shechem. For although they cryed, to your tents (O Iſrael) yet it is not probable that they went any further, then to ſome tents they had for the time pitcht up for themſelves about that place, becauſe the houſes in Shechem could not contain them: for unto them, their aſſembly not yet being diſſolved, came Adoram, whom they ſtoned and immediatly proceeded to the conſtitution of this new King, and it had been a great toil, and no policy, to go away and return again after a time, from all parts of the kingdome to do it, becauſe Rehoboam might ſo eaſily have come upon them, being ſevered and without an head and taken revenge for their rebellion. Thus a new kingdome came to be ſet up, called ſometime the kingdome of Iſrael, as the other of Iudah, ſometime of Ephraim, or Samaria, or of Iezrael, and becauſe Ieroboam was of the tribe of Ephraim, it is thought that the propheſie of Iacob was now fulfilled, who in bleſſing the two ſonnes of Ioſeph, preferred Ephraim before Manaſſeh, Gen. 48.

V.21,22. 23,24. Rehoboam being returned to Ieruſalem, gathereth an army out of Iudah and Benjamin of 180000. to go againſt Iſrael, to bring the people back again to his obedience. But God ſent Benaiah a prophet unto him to forbid him, becauſe their revolting and ſetting up of a new King over them came from him, and thus hee was ſtayed from theſe proceedings, wherein the great power of God appeared in ruling and turning mens hearts, in that the King being ſo greatly incenſed, and having now ſo ſtrong an army about him, was by a meſſage brought by a poore Prophet ſo ſoone turned from his purpoſe and made to diſſolve his forces. Whereas then it is ſaid Ch.14. 30. That there was warre between Rehoboam and Ieroboam all their dayes, it is to be underſtood not of any warres to get the kingdome one from the other, but of skirmiſhes to revenge wrongs mutually done by the one to the other upon their borders.

V.25. *Judg.*9.45. And Ieroboam built Sychem in mount Ephraim, and dwelt there, and going from thence he built Penuel.] Sychem was about two hundred yeares before this deſtroyed by Abimelech, but it is not to be thought, as Expoſitours generally hold, that it remained waſte till this time, but was rebuilt againe long before, yet haply it wanted walls and towers for ſtrength, which this new king intending to make it the chiefe citie of his kingdome, and his royall ſeat, thought now needfull to have about it, and a pallace and other ſtately buildings for ornament, and therefore he immediately after his inauguration to the kingdome thus built it, that he might from hence the better rule over his ſubjects about, and becauſe part of his dominion was on the other ſide of Iordan, where dwelt the tribes of Gad and Reuben, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, he built Penuell which ſtood there, and ſtrengthened it likewiſe, that he might the better keep his ſubjects thereabout in awe. For of *Judg.*8.17. this city we read alſo, that it was deſtroyed by Gedeon the father of Abimelech, a few years before Sychem.

Touching the other king Rehoboam, that which is here wanting of his buildings 2 *Chr.*8.11.5, 6,7,8. and fortifications, is ſupplied 2 Chron. 11. 5, 6, &c. He dwelt in Ieruſalem, and built fenced cities in Judah, Bethlehem, Etham, Tekoa, &c. Solomon his father had beſtowed great coſt this way before, but his fortifications were upon the frontires of his kingdome, the cities that were within the land remaining unfortified, but now the kingdome being divided into two, it was neceſſary to fortifie thoſe cities, that ſtood next unto the kingdome of Iſrael for fear of Ieroboam, if he at any time ſhould attempt to get more from him, wherefore he ſtrengthened theſe cities being 15. in number, and furniſhed them with victuals and armour, ſhields and ſpears.

V. 26. Then Ieroboam ſaid in his heart, the kingdome will now return to the houſe of David, if the people go up to Ieruſalem to ſacrifice, &c.] Now Ieroboam beginneth to ſhew the wickedneſſe of his heart, and what little faith he had in God, who had made him king, and had promiſed to eſtabliſh him, if he would walk in his wayes, and given him already a taſte of his providence over him, in averting the danger by Rehoboams mighty army from him. For leaving God, he truſted in his own policy, deviſing a meanes to keep the people from Ieruſalem, and ſo from all danger V.28,29. of being drawn to the obedience of Rehoboam again. And this was by ſetting up two golden calves, one in Bethel and the other in Dan, where he built temples and inſtituted a new prieſthood, and a new feaſt the 15. day of the 8. moneth, and offered ſacrifices to them, as at Ieruſalem by divine inſtitution the 15. day of the 7. moneth was kept for the feaſt of tabernacles. This idolatry with golden calves, he may well be thought to have learned in Egypt, whileſt he lived there with Siſak, whoſe daughter he is alſo ſaid by ſome to have married, for ſo the Hebrews coming out of Egypt, when Moſes was gone from them 40. dayes, cauſed Aaron to make them a golden calf, Exod. 32. and he ſaid, theſe are thy gods (O Iſrael) which brought thee out of the land of Egypt, go no more up to Ieruſalem. 2 Chron. 11. 15. he is ſaid to have made him Prieſts of high places, and of devils, and of the calves, which he had made. Whereby his intimated, that having once gone from the Lord in ſetting up ſome idols, or viſible ſignes of Gods preſence, and preſuming upon his own head, to alter both the prieſt-hood, and place, and time of his worſhip, he was ſoon given over contrary to that, which happily he intended at the firſt, to all the abominations of the Gentiles. Which ſhould be a warning to all to take heed, how for any ends of their own, they go from Gods holy word in divine worſhip, as the Papiſts have alſo done, and the Gentiles did long ago, Rom. 1. 19. and were therefore given over to a reprobate ſenſe, and the Papiſts to equall the Gentiles in their ſuperſtitions. Bethel and Dan, where he placed theſe calves, were the one the fartheſt city South, which was famous for Gods appearing to Iacob there, whereupon he called it Bethel; that is, the houſe of God, but now it became Bethaven the houſe of iniquity, and ſo it is afterwards by the Prophets called: the other was the fartheſt city of the kingdom North, where the Idol of Michah was by the Danites ſet up before; ſo that ſuch tribes as lay Northward, might with more eaſe goe to that city to ſacrifice, then to Ieruſalem; and ſuch as lay Southward, to Bethel.

Iudg. 18.

But the people being carried with blind ſuperſtition went even from the moſt remote parts South to Dan, as ſuperſtition is commonly more patient of labour, then true piety in the moſt. And in what eſteem the Idol in Dan was amongſt them, appeareth; Amos 8. 14. where they are threatned, that ſweare by the God in Dan. And it is probable on the other ſide, that they who dwelt about Dan, went to Bethell; ſuppoſing ſtill, that greateſt vertue was in the God that was fartheſt off from them. And this is ſaid to have turned to ſin, that is, the very ſetting up of an image to repreſent God, although not of any heathen god, as we may gather from Ieroboams ſpeech. Theſe are thy gods, that brought thee out of Egypt. And from that which was ſaid upon the like occaſion by Aaron before, as hath been already noted; which plainly confuteth that interpretation made upon the ſecond commandement by papalls, ſaying that the images onely of heathen gods are there forbidden, as if it had been ſaid, thou ſhalt have none other gods but me, neither ſhalt thou make any images of them. Wherefore vaine and preſumptuous is that fiction of Ambroſe Politus, as Martyr noteth, who inquiring into the reaſon why God at the firſt giving of the Law forbad images, but afterwards directed Solomon to ſet up divers images in his houſe, ſaith, that it was becauſe the people were rude and ignorant at the firſt, and ſo there might have been danger in making images, but afterwards, when they were better inſtructed, this danger ceaſing, becauſe they knew then, how to uſe them, and that there was no diety in them, he appointed images to be made, and myſtically hereby intimated the uſe of images in times to come in the Church under the Goſpell. But this bold figment of his is plainly confuted by this very place, wherein after Solomons time images made for divine worſhip are cenſured as a cauſe of ſinne. And if images which ſhould bee in the Church under the Goſpell, were prefigured by theſe in Solomons temple, it is a marvaile that the holy Apoſtles and Doctours of the Church had no perceivance hereof for 600 yeares, all which times images were kept out of the Church, and then firſt brought in, when learning and piety was moſt decayed. If any man ſhall wonder how Ieroboam could perſwade the people to accept again of a golden calfe, when as Gods wrath had been before declared by Moſes to be ſo great againſt their forefathers for the like; it may be conceived that Solomon had already made way to idolatry in his latter time, whereby they were for the moſt part corrupted, and knew little of the ſacred hiſtory, and they were of themſelves moſt prone to idolatry; and therefore having now a new King of their owne ſetting up to lead them, it is no marvaile that they were taken with this device of his, except the Preiſts and Levites who had more knowledge, and ſome others of the people who being more religious, and ſo more converſant in the word of God, deteſted it, and were ready rather to leave their poſſeſſions to goe from the kingdome wherein ſuch abominations were committed to ſerve God, according to his ordinance at Ieruſalem, as is ſhewed that they did, 2 Chron. 11. 13. 16. And happily as Martyr conjectureth, Ieroboam juſtified his proceedings herein, by ſaying, that the people of old ſet up a golden calfe of their own head without the authority of their Governour, and therefore God was offended with them, but now it being done by the King, the caſe differed; and ſo there was no feare of Gods diſpleaſure: and for the

V. 30.

the place, as Solomon was a King ſet up by God, and built his temple; ſo was he, and therefore might uſe the like liberty to ſet up others, &c.

V. 31. Martyr. He made alſo an houſe of high places, and he appointed Prieſts of the extremities of the people, which were not of the ſonnes of Aaron.] That is, ſaith Martyr, beſides the Idols ſet up by him in Bethel and Dan, he appointed ſacrificing in divers other high places in the land after the manner of the heathen. And whereas God had tyed the Prieſthood to Aaron and his ſonnes, confirming his decree herein by miracle, Numb.16.ch. 17. after the rebellion of Chorah about it, and his deſtruction with his complices by fire from heaven, Ieroboam nothing dreading the judgements of God, when as Aarons ſons would not conſent to his wickednes, as is moſt probable, made other Preiſts in their ſtead; of ſuch as he could get from the uttermoſt parts of his dominion out of any of the tribes; who being men of corrupt mindes, and ambitious of the honour readily accepted of it. For there were two dignities, the one Kingly, and the other Prieſtly; about which, to take away all contention the Kingly was ſetled upon the tribe of Iudah, the Prieſtly upon the tribe of Levi; and more particularly upon Aarons family to figure out the Preiſthood to come, viz. of Chriſt, by whom alone the ſacrifices of praiſes and prayers can bee acceptably offered unto God. For as of the Kingly, ſo of the Prieſtly office men were ambitious, as hiſtories both ſacred and prophane doe ſhew. This was the cauſe of the rebellion of Chorah; and after the peoples return from their captivity, much contention there was about the high Prieſthood. And of Iulius Cæſar Suetonius writeth, that when his mother diſſwaded him from ſeeking the high Prieſthood, he ſhewed himſelfe to be moſt eagerly ſet upon it in that he anſwered her, thou ſhalt this day either have me a baniſhed man or an high Prieſt. And as Ieroboam, ſo ſuperſtitious men Note. and hereticall have from time to time depoſed and deprived true Presbyters of the Church, which would not conſent to their ſuperſtitions and errours, and ſet up others in their ſtead; but that God who ſoon ſhewed his diſlike of Ieroboams wicked doings, by his judgements againſt his houſe, will not certainly ſuffer them to goe unpuniſhed.

V. 32. Moreover Ieroboam inſtituted a ſolemnity in the eight month the fifteenth day and offered upon the Altar, &c. v. 33. He went up to the Altar, and offered incenſe.] Ieroboam not content to alter the place of divine worſhip, & the form & Prieſthood preſumed yet further to alter the feaſt of Tabernacles, which God had appointed to be kept the 15 day of the 7th. month; which Martyr thinketh that he did, becauſe the autumnall fruits were then more perfectly gathered in and the work done about them; ſo that the people might now the better intend to the keeping of a ſolemnity, and happily becauſe he could not ſo well have held the people from going up to Ieruſalem at the firſt to the feaſt kept there, if hee had held one at the ſame in Bethell. But I rather aſſent to the firſt reaſon, ſeeing his aym was not to let them goe firſt to Ieruſalem, and then to call them to Bethel; but to keep them altogether from going up to Ieruſalem for feare of revolting from him. And this new feſtivall time he is ſaid to have appointed of his own head, wherein ſaith Auguſtine, he made God a lyer, not beleeving him to be conſtant in the maintenance of his lawes once made, although he beleeved him in his word touching his own advancement Hoſ. 7. to the kingdome. And this new day is by Hoſea called the day of the King, becauſe it was not of Gods, but his appointing. And his offering incenſe ſhewed, that he took the Prieſts office upon himſelfe alſo, that by his example he might teach them, that it was lawfull for any man that was conſecrated by the offering in the law ap- Lyra. pointed, as was Aaron, to be a Preiſt, as Lyra hath it; who alſo ſpeaking of the houſe in the high places expounds it of one upon a mount in Dan, and another in Bethel; which is more probable then that of Martyr before, becauſe wee read not of any more places appointed by him.

Touching the feaſt the 15. day of the 8. moneth inſtituted by him, although by Ioſephus and Lyra and others following him, it be thought to be the feaſt of Tabernacles, yet Theodoret, Dionyſius, and Adricomius do think it to have been a feaſt of the dedication of the temples or calves, which he had ſet up, but becauſe it is ſaid to be like the feaſt kept in Iudah, it is rather to be held, that it was a feaſt of tabernacles, to which the people had been long accuſtomed, although the time differed. By Rehoboam we may with the ordinary gloſſe underſtand worldly minded rectors of the Church, who leaving the way of the ancient fathers, give occaſion of ſchiſme in the Church. And by Ieroboam, the moſt advanced in the Church, who do ill requite God by bringing in idolatry, being thus a cauſe of great ſinning to the people.

CHAP. XIII.

V. 1. But behold a man of God came from Iudah to Bethel, and Ieroboam ſtood by the altar to offer incenſe, &c.] Ieroboam having faln into ſuch groſſe idolatry, and many other ſins, the Lord, who had ſet him up to be King, left him not, but ſent his Prophet to him to reprove and threaten him, if by any meanes he might be humbled for it and reformed. And he is ſaid to have come out of Iudah, becauſe, ſaith Martyr, none in his kingdome durſt oppoſe him in his wicked proceedings, from whence he gathereth, how cold their love and zeal for the truth was grown; if we compare it with their zeal of old in Ioſhuahs time, when for an Altar ſet up by the Reubenites, Gadites, and the half tribe of Manaſſeh, all the reſt were ready to go to fight againſt them. But the moſt godly in thoſe parts were all gone to Iudah out of a diſlike of Ieroboams doings, as was ſaid before, and therefore from thence, if from any place, one muſt needs come upon this meſſage of the Lord. And if there had been true prophets ſtill remaining in Iſrael, yet none of them could have come, but being particularly ſtirred up by the ſpirit of God, in which caſe onely at all other times, the prophets of God have gone forth to reprove kings, as is commonly ſaid, the ſpirit of God came upon ſuch or ſuch a prophet, and then he went and ſaid, &c. as 2 Chron. 20. 14. and this man of God came not, but by the word of the Lord. Who this prophet was is not certainly known, but he is thought by Expoſitours to be that Iddo, of whom it is ſpoken 2 Chron. 9. 29. in the latter end of Solomons reign; but againſt this maketh 2 Chron. 13. 22. where he is ſaid to have written the acts of Abijam the ſonne of Rehoboam, whereas this prophet was the ſame day ſlain by a lion. Ioſephus calleth him Iadon, Hugo Cardinalis Addo or Gad, Ierom Iaddo, meaning, as he expreſſeth himſelf, the ſame man, that wrot Solomons acts. Epiphanius cals him Ioam, born in Samaria. Tertullian thinketh him to have been Semeia, who was another prophet, that wrot of Solomons acts, ſo likewiſe Clemens Alexandrinus Semea the ſonne of Amame. And he cried out, not to the king but to the altar, ſaying, O altar, altar, &c. not for reverence to the king forbearing to ſpeak to him, as ſome think, for the men of God feared not to ſpeak to the greateſt tyrants, when they were ſo directed, as we may ſee in the example of Samuel to Saul, Elijah to Ahab, Eliſhah to Iehoram, &c. but he ſpeaketh to the altar and threatneth it, meaning the idolatrous worſhip there ſet up, that by crying out unto the altar he might be terrified, that erected it, and all they that ſerved about it, ſeeing he propheſied of their deſtruction and burning upon it, as of beaſts at this time to the honour of idols, which God ſo much abhorred, and of the utter overthrow of all that idolatrous worſhip. And he nameth the man, that ſhould burn men hereupon, viz. Ioſiah, in whom this was accompliſhed 340. yeares after, or according to Iunius 330. Neither did he propheſie of a thing to come onely, but gave a preſent ſigne, that he might be beleeved, viz. that the altar ſhould cleave in ſunder and the aſhes run out, which followed immediatly, ſo as that they, which were preſent, could not but acknowledge God, hereby atteſting, that he was ſent of him, which ſhould have made them all to tremble, and to repent of this abominable wickedneſſe. But the king was ſo obſtinately ſet upon his idolatry, that in ſteed of repenting he ſtretched out his hand, commanding to apprehend the prophet, but he was ſmitten by the hand of God ſo, as that his hand withered, and all ſtrength was ſo taken from his arm, that it ſtill extended, and could not be drawn in again. Yet when he entreated the prophet to pray to his God

God for him, it was again reſtored, ſo ready are the ſervants of God to paſſe by injuries done unto them, and for the evill attempted againſt them to pray for their perſecuters. This kindneſſe of the prophet, although Ieroboam could not, but in humanity requite by inviting him home to dine with him, yet neither by the miraculous ſmiting of his arm, nor by the miraculous ſanation thereof, nor by the prodigious preſent renting of the altar, nor by the judgement befalling the prophet for doing contrary to the charge given him, as here followeth, nor by the old prophets confirming, what this had fore-told, was he moved to any repentance, or to turn from his evill wayes, till his houſe was deſtroyed therefore, as is noted v. 34, 35.
Whereas in ſpeaking to the altar he doubleth the word [O altar, altar] ſome think, he meant both it and the altar at Dan, but this is too curious, he rather ingeminates the word out of zeal and earneſtneſſe. His ſigne giving was according to the direction Deut. 23. to approve himſelf to be a true prophet of God. And it is to be noted, that Ieroboam was not affected with the ſigne or the thing threatned, but onely with the ſtroke, which he felt upon himſelf, neither did he hereupon deſire to be prayed for, that his ſinnes might be forgiven him, but onely that his hand might be healed, and he ſpake of God as the prophets, not his God [pray to the Note. Lord thy God.] Whence we may gather, how far from any ſenſe of true piety reprobates are, even when they are humbled for judgements, their humiliation is not for their ſinnes, but for bodily ſufferings, as Ahabs and Pharaohs.

V.8. The prophet although deſired, would not go to Ieroboam's houſe, no not for a reward alſo promiſed him, becauſe the Lord had commanded him, neither to eat bread nor drink water in that place, eating bread and drinking water being put for Toſtatus. all other proviſion, as 2 King. 6. 22, 23. But as Toſtatus puts the caſe, what if he had been impriſoned and kept there many dayes, ſhould hee rather have ſuffered himſelf to be ſtarved, then to have eaten there? and anſwereth, that having a particular charge to abſtain, he ſhould, though to the endangering of his life. He was to put his truſt in God, who could have miraculouſly preſerved him, as he did Elijah.
This interdicting him to eat and drink in that place, was in deteſtation of Cyprian. the idolatry there committed, and figured out, as Cyprian and Rupertus have it, Rupert.lib.5. Reg.c.6. the cenſure of the Church againſt hereticks and other notorious wicked perſons, 2 King.5. beeing excommunicated, with whom it is unlawfull to eat, that they being ſhunned of all men, might be confounded and brought to repentance. And for receiving guifts, that the prophets did generally abhor from any in thoſe caſes, leſt the favour of God ſhould ſeeme to be purchaſe-able with money, which cometh freely.

V.9. But what meaneth that which is further added, neither ſhalt thou return by the way whereby thou wenteſt? Hereby was intimated, that the place, where idolatry is committed is made ſo abominable, as that the way thither alſo is hereby polluted, and therefore to ſhew the greater deteſtation of this place, he muſt not tread in the way that led to it any more, and hereby we are taught to eſchew coming where the wicked come, but onely to reprove them.

V.11,12. And there was an old prophet dwelling in Bethel, &c.] This prophet hearing by his ſonnes, who it may be were preſent at Ieroboam's ſacrificing, that a man of God came from Iudah and ſhewed ſuch ſignes, but departed thence without eating or drinking, becauſe he was by God forbidden to eat there, rode after him to fetch him back to his houſe to eat with him, lyingly telling him, that it was to him revealed, that he ſhould return and eat and drink with him, but therein hee diſſembled. 2 Kings 23. 18. this old Prophet is ſaid to have come from Samaria, ſo P. Martyr. that he was not of Bethel by birth, as Martyr noteth, but of Samaria; only he now dwelt in Bethell. And whereas Samaria was not built till long after his time by Omri, 1 *Kin.*16.24. he ſaith, it is either ſayed ſo by anticipation, or that there was a city ſo called before, but by Omri increaſed and beautified with more buildings.
Touching this old Prophet ſome hold him to have been a falſe Prophet, and a worſhipper of Ieroboams calves, and an incourager of him in that wickedneſſe, and that he ſought to intrap the man of God in ſubtilty, that he being provoked againſt him, he might bee deſtroyed; and when he had effected it, that hee went to the King and perſwaded him that he was a vain and wicked man, as appeared by the judgement befalling him. Wherefore hee ſaid there was not any cauſe why hee ſhould be troubled at his ſpeeches or ſignes ſhewed by him, ſeeing the Altar being new made might well be cleaved in ſunder by the many ſacrifices wherewith it was overwhelmed, and the ſtrength of his arme might faile him through weari-neſſe in ſtanding and holding the cenſer of incenſe ſo long. Thus Ioſephus in many more words, and after him Comeſtor, and Rupertus, and Lyra, Dionyſius, Hugo, and Cajetan; Vatablus and the Chaldee paraphraſt calling him a lying Prophet, Michal by name. And Lyra ſaith that he came from Samaria to Bethel for the worſhip of the calves; and ſome, ſaith Martyr, that he was Amaſiah their high Prieſt. But both Martyr and Pellican hold him to have been a true Prophet of God, but frigid and without zeal to oppoſe Ieroboam in his idolatry; yet they ſay hee was glad that one came to reprove it, and earneſtly deſired to doe him any good office therefore, and to be acquainted with him. Wherefore not being otherwiſe able to reduce him back to his houſe, hee ſeigned a revelation made unto him from God. And Theodoret long before ſaith, that hereby he appeares to have been a true Prophet, that he foretold truly the judgement to come upon this Prophet, and believed and confirmed his word touching the Altar at Bethel, and added a propheſie againſt all other high places; and laſtly gave a charge to his ſonnes to bury him in the ſame ſepulcher with this Prophet, being aſſured that the time ſhould come that mens bones ſhould be taken up and burnt in Bethel, but thus he hoped that his ſhould reſt in quiet; ſo likewiſe Procopius ſaying, that hee was no otherwiſe a falſe Prophet, but in that he falſely pretended a revelation at this time, and to them agreeth Toſtatus and ſome others, becauſe he is called here only a Prophet, but not a falſe Prophet. And whereas it is objected, that he ſaid, becauſe thou haſt not obeyed the voyce of the Lord thy God, as if he ſerved other Gods; for thus Ieroboam alſo ſpake, v. 6. and Pharoah to Moſes. It is anſwered that this phraſe doth not alwaies imply a ſtrangeneſſe in the ſpeaker from the true God, but ſometimes the peculiar favour of God towards him; to whom it is ſpoken, as the woman of Tekoa ſpake to David, and Moſes to Iſrael; Heare the voyce of the Lord thy God.

Theodor. in 3. Reg. qu. 42.

Vpon the foreſaid reaſons then, and becauſe in the ſacred hiſtory he is called no otherwiſe but an old Prophet. I conclude that he was no falſe Prophet that ſtood for Idolatry, as Ioſephus pretends, or a wicked wizzard, as Balaam, but a Prophet of the Lord, yet ſubject to be overſwayed by a good intention to ſhew kindneſſe to the man of God, ſo as that he diſſembled with him, but ſought again afterwards by repentance to doe away this his ſin; and doing unto him the beſt offices of love that he could in burying him honourably, lamenting his death, confirming his word, and lying in the ſame ſepulchre with him after his death. As for Ioſephus, whom others that are of a contrary opinion follow, it appeares how little credit is in this matter to be given unto him, becauſe in that long narration that he maketh of this Prophet, he erreth palpably in divers things; in that he ſaith that Jeroboam fell to this idolatry by his perſwaſion: whereas the Scripture ſaith hee did it of his own head, and that whilſt they were dining, the word of the Lord threatning him came to Iadon, whereas it came to this old Prophet, and that it was told him that he ſhould be deſtroyed by a Lion in that journey, whereas it was only ſaid, that he ſhould not come to the ſepulchers of his fathers; and laſtly, that this man of God was a vain fellow, neither was his propheſie true, whereas he confirmed it to the uttermoſt; yet he was as Gregory ſaith, an evill Prophet to him, when he lyed unto him, and deceiving him, made him to ſinne; whereupon he hath theſe words, He well received the ſentence of death out of the mouth of an evill Prophet, by whoſe ſeducing he declined from the precepts of life, that from thence he might receive puniſhment truly, from whence he contracted guilt negligently. Yet it is not to be doubted, but that this man of God was ſaved, his errour being puniſhed onely with death corporall, as is ſaid of the Corinthians, 1 Cor. 11. 32, that he might not be judged with judgements eternall.

charged, Gal. 1.8. Touching his exemption from future puniſhments, S. Auguſtine ſaith, Thus God would puniſh his ſervant who deſpiſed not to obey his precept by his own contumacy, but being deceived by anothers fallacy, believing that he obeyed, when he obeyed not. For it is not to be thought that he was ſo killed by a beaſt, as that his ſoule was ſnatcht away to tartarean puniſhments, ſeeing the ſame Lion that ſlew him, kept his very body, the beaſt which carried him being alſo unhurt, and ſtanding by his maſters body without feare, in the preſence of that ſavage wild beaſt even to his funerall; by which marvailous ſign it appeares, that the man was rather chaſtiſed temporally unto death, then puniſht eternally after death. And hereby ſaith Angelomus, it manifeſtly appeareth that his ſin of diſobedience was in death releaſed, becauſe the ſame Lion which preſumed to kill him living, durſt not touch him being ſlaine. Eucherius ſaith the ſame, with Auguſtine and Toſtatus likewiſe, and others. Although hee ſinned ſaith Martyr, and was therefore puniſhed with death, yet it was meerly by being deceived, becauſe although God had before forbidden him to eat in that place, yet he thought now he might countermaund it, as to Abraham, whom he had bidden to offer his ſonne Iſaack in ſacrifice, but afterwards he ſpake to the contrary; and Balaam being firſt forbidden to goe with Balaacks meſſengers, was afterwards bidden to goe: and this extenuateth his ſinne, although it freeth him not from it. And happily as Gregory noteth, hee was ſelfe-conceited at his precedent doings and good ſucceſs; wherefore to humble him the Lord ſuffered him to fall, and happily ſaith Martyr, he was offended with him, becauſe he ſtayed by the way and made no more haſte back again, or the occaſion of his errour by this device of the old Prophet, might be his propenſity to hearken to a motion of refreſhing, he being now hungry and thirſty, and ſo he might not ſo ſeriouſly conſider before hee yielded to return; or laſtly, becauſe he ſought not to God by prayer again to direct him. Wherefore that wee may by no pretence of the truth be deceived, as ſome are by the Popiſh; Let us firſt cleave unmoveably to that which we certainly know to be the word of God, not being carryed by any pretended revelations, and feigned miracles; and if the caſe be ſo doubtfull, as that we cannot otherwiſe know the truth, let us flye to God by prayer, and bee no whit more prone to be ſwayed on way then another by any worldly reſpect, but by his glory; having alwayes an heart ready to obey his known will in every thing, and alwayes be humble. Yet the ſame Martyr ſaith, that this man of God is to be hoped well of, according to the opinion of others before, and giving him thus to death for one offence, into which he fell onely by being too facile; he gave occaſion to the people of Iſrael to be terrified by thinking what grievous judgements they were expoſed unto by their wilfull abominable idolatries, and likewiſe all other obſtinate ſinners. In that the old Prophet denounced this as a judgement unto him, that he ſhould not come to the ſepulchers of his fathers, we learn that to want a buriall, or not to be buried at home, but in a ſtrange place, was of old counted ignominious: for although a dead corps hath no ſenſe hereof, yet when this is threatned to a man living, through the love that he beareth to his own fleſh, he is ſenſible of it. But for Gods cauſe to ſuffer, as many Martyrs have done, and to have the dead body expoſed to wild beaſts, as the body of Ignatius was, and devoured; or otherwiſe to lye unburied is not ignominious, but glorious. The old Prophets going himſelfe in perſon, when he heard what had happened to the man of God, was to recompence as much as he could, the injury which hee had done unto him, and to ſhew his penitency, that he might obtain pardon. The Lion ſtanding by, and neither tearing the body nor the aſſe, ſhewed the ſpeciall hand of God herein, and that he was not ſlaine by chance; when he would for a puniſhment, he opened the lions mouth againſt his ſervant, and when he would, he ſhut it both towards his body and the aſſe, making him his keeper, and holding the aſſe there to carry him back to the buriall, ſhewing hereby that all even the fierceſt creatures are at his beck. If any ſhall marvaile why this man of God was ſo ſoon puniſhed, who ſinned leaſt, but the old Prophet, who was for his lying more in fault, was not; nor Ieroboam, who was worſt of all, till many yeares after in his houſe; Martyr anſwereth that God puniſheth thoſe ſooneſt, whom he loveth beſt; and deferreth the puniſhments of the moſt wicked, that at length they may come more heavily upon them, and this is according to that ſaying, if judgement begin at Gods houſe, what ſhall their end be that obey not the Goſpel? 1 Pet.4.17. even as a king that is a father chaſteneth his ſonne betimes, but deſtroyeth rebels though long ſuffered. But becauſe this ſatisfieth not us touching the old prophet, whom we may not for one act number amongſt the wicked, it is further to be added, that it is at the will of the Lord, to puniſh one of his ſervants ſinning leſſe, and to let another ſinning more upon his repentance to go free, or it may be held, that this old prophet committed not ſo great a ſin as the other, becauſe he went not from the expreſſe particular command of God, as he did, which to do hath alwayes brought judgement not to be reverſed, as in our firſt parents, in Saul, and in Ionah, &c.

V. 33. After this Ieroboam returned not from his evill way, but he turned and made Prieſts of the high places of the meaneſt of the people, who ſo would filled his hand, &c.] Hitherto have been related ſo many wonderfull accidents, that a man would think, were ſufficient to turn any heart from his ſinne, but ſuch was the obdurate obſtinacy of Ieroboam, that nothing would move him to repentance. P. Martyr. The cauſe (Martyr thinketh) to be, and that truly, his deſire of holding the kingdome which he had obtained, and to keep the people alwayes from revolting. For to reign, ambitious men are bent to do any thing, yea to run into the horrible ſinne of perjury, as Iulius Caſar, who ſaid, ſi pejerandum, regnandi cauſa pejerandum, and Harold here in England is ſaid to have broken his oath to William Duke of Normandy for the ſame cauſe. And Baſiliſcus to get unto himſelf the Conſtantinopolitan Empire alone, Zeno being put down, diſanulled the councell of Chalcedon, to win divers Princes and Biſhops to his ſide, that were againſt it, and the popiſh Hierarchy likewiſe will not turn from their errours, although palpably manifeſted, through the deſire of holding their Empire ſtill. But turned and made prieſts] ch. 12. 31. he is ſaid to have made ſuch Prieſts before, of the high places in Dan and Bethel, but now being more hardened, as they are, that are not made to relent by ſuch powerfull meanes, he proceeded to make more ſuch prieſts of all other high places throughout his kingdome. Who ſo would filled his hand] That is ſpoken according to the manner of conſecrating the Prieſts at the firſt by Gods inſtitution, Levit. 8. 27, 28. as the hands of Aaron and his ſonnes were filled with offerings. Expoſitours alſo mention another ſenſe, as if by filling his hand were meant Ieroboams, by giving him money to be made prieſts, but I prefer the firſt.

V. 34. And this turned to ſinne to the houſe of Ieroboam, &c.] That is, after the example of the father, the ſonnes went on in abominable idolatry, and erecting and maintaining a prieſthood promiſcuouſly of any tribe, or of any baſe condition, thus bringing ruine upon themſelves at laſt, as it ſhall be alſo to all ſuch, as putting down the moſt faithfull miniſters of Gods word, becauſe they will not agree to their ſuperſtitions, do indifferently put any, that will into their places.

CHAP. XIIII.

V. 1. AT that time Abijah the ſonne of Ieroboam fell ſick, and he ſaid unto his wife, ariſe change thy attire, that thou mayeſt not be known to be the wife of Ieroboam, &c.] This wicked king, ſaith Pellican, not being moved to repent by all the ſignes, which he had ſeen, beginneth now to be puniſhed in his beſt ſonne Abia, who is ſmitten with ſickneſſe. Pellican. And he knowing, that the idols, whom he ſerved, had no power to help him, but onely the true God, he ſendeth to his ſervant Abia the prophet, that by his meanes he might obtain favour, of whom he had experience before, when he fore-told him, that he ſhould reign over Iſrael, that he was a true prophet. But being conſcious to himſelf of his groſſe idolatry he was aſhamed, that his ſending to him ſhould be known, and therefore cauſeth his wife to diſguiſe her ſelf. Note. Thus they are confounded in time of trouble, when they would, but durſt not ſeek to the true God, of whoſe help they deſpair, becauſe they have formerly forſaken him, who caſt away his fear, and give his worſhip to creatures, and this is the caſe of all the wicked, they feel at length the hurt that cometh by their ſins, and ſeek to God being miſery enforced too late.

P. Martyr. Ieroboam, ſaith Martyr, had been ſmitten before in his arm by withering and repented not, now he is ſmitten in his ſon, moſt probably, the eldeſt, which did much affect him, but yet he looketh not to the cauſe, to amend, which if he had done, his ſonne doubtleſſe ſhould have been healed. Yet he beleeved that his ſickneſſe was ſent of God, as appeareth by his ſending to his prophet, and that the idols, whom he ſerved and their prieſts were not able to help him, becauſe he ſent not to them. But whereas Martyr ſaith, he ſent not, that we can gather from the holy Scripture for help, but onely to know what the event ſhould be. I think rather with Muſculus, that his ſending was to ſeek help alſo, this being implied alwayes in ſending to an oracle to enquire, forſomuch as it is an honour done to that oracle, and an implicit profeſſion of faith and truſt put therein. For his wives diſguiſing of her ſelf, he ſaith rightly, that it was, leſt the prophet knowing her, ſhould either refuſe to give her anſwer, or ſpeak bitter words againſt Ieroboam, who knew himſelf to be hated by the prophet for his abominations; as ſome conceive, becauſe he thought he would be afraid, if he knew who ſhe was, to ſpeak the truth, leſt the king ſhould be hereby exaſperated, if it were diſpleaſing to him, for the prophets of God never feared to ſpeak what God would have them whatſoever they ſuffered for ſo doing. Whereas he ſent his wife and not any other meſſenger, it was becauſe he would have his ſending to the man of God kept ſecret, leſt others by his example ſhould be moved leaving his idols, to ſeek to the true God alſo, ſeeing he had no confidence in them or their prieſts, that they could tell any thing or afford him any help. This prophet dwelt now in Shiloh, ſometime a place famous for the Ark, but now deſolate, for he was a Shilonite, ch. 11. 29. although Martyr thinketh, that he retired himſelf thither, becauſe hee was irked at the abominations of the king. V. 3. And to him Ieroboam directed his wife to go, with a poore preſent of bread and honey, that by meanes of this and by going alone ſhe might be the more concealed. The journey from Thirza to Shiloh was 24. miles, H. B. Patriarks travels. In carrying a preſent to him, ſhe did after the manner in thoſe times, wherein they were not wont to go to conſult with a prophet without giving him ſomething, as appeareth by the example of Saul and his ſervant going to Samuel about his fathers loſt aſſes, not that hereby the prophet might be enriched (for when great guifts were offered by Naaman to Eliſha he utterly refuſed them) but that they might have ſomething coming in by their office to live upon. The Sept. tranſlat. hath more here then is in the Hebrew, for there Ieroboams wives name is ſet down [Ano] and (to theſe words cakes, and a cruſe of honey are added theſe, for his children and grapes. Ieroboam would not go himſelf, becauſe howſoever he had been diſguiſed yet he thought the prophet would know him by his voice, neither could he well have been gone ſo long, without being miſſed and ſought after by his courtiers. But it may be demanded, how Ieroboam could think to be reſolved touching the recovery or death of his ſonne, when as he would not have the party enquired of to be diſcovered to the prophet, who he was? It is moſt probable, that when any came to enquire, they did only propound the queſtion in generall, as thus, I have a ſonne at home very ſick, tell me, whether he ſhall recover, the party inquiring never declaring himſelf, or what he was. But herein the folly of Ieroboam declared it ſelf, that he thought Abiah could ſee what ſhould become of the young man inquired of, but not who it was that ſent to enquire.

V. 4. When Ieroboams wife came to the prophets houſe, it is ſaid, that he being before inſtructed by the Lord knew her, and calling her by her name, bade her come in, and challenged her for diſguiſing her ſelf: for by ſeeing her he could not know her or that ſhe was diſguiſed, becauſe his eyes were dim with age, and he could not ſee. From which circumſtance of his old age it is gathered by ſome, that this was done not long before Ieroboams death, about 20. years of his reign being now expired, and he dyed when he had reigned 22. becauſe Abiah the prophet was not aged when he firſt fore-told unto Ieroboam, that he ſhould be king, for he could then ſee and walk abroad, ch. 11. 29. but who knoweth not, that he who now ſeeth, may in two or three years become blinde through age. Yet although it cannot hence be evinced. it is moſt probable, that this was done towards his end, becauſe v. 14. it is ſaid, [the Lord ſhall cut off the houſe of Ieroboam this day, even now.] Which words are underſtood by all, as intimating a ſuddain execution of this prediction. And therefore although this hiſtory be placed here before the defection of Rehoboam, and his caſtigation by Shiſhach king of Egypt, and his death, and his ſon Abiams reign, and his famous victory obtained over Ieroboam, ſet forth 2 Chr. 13. yet it followed in time after all theſe, it but two yeares before Ieroboams death, ſeeing Rehoboam reigned but to the 17. year, and Abiah to the 20. of his reign, for hee reigned but three yeares. Yet it is ſet forth before them, that we might have the whole hiſtory of Ieroboam to his death, and then the hiſtory of Rehoboam and his race till after his death unto the raiſing up of another king in Iudah, before which again the hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael by an intercourſe is fetcht up ſo farre, and then that of the kings of Iudah proſecuted. Again, for this circumſtance of the preſent hiſtory, the prophet called her by her name, and told her of her diſguiſing her ſelf, that ſhe might be the more aſſured of the truth of that, which he ſhould further ſay unto her for Ieroboams greater terrour.

V. 7.

And what is it that he ſaid? Go and tell Ieroboam, thus ſaith the Lord, &c.] The anſwer ſent by the prophet to Ieroboam is a grievous accuſation, that being extraordinarily advanced by God to the kingdome of Iſrael, whom he ſtill calleth his people, although now polluted by idolatry, for the covenant made with their fathers, which kingdome was alſo taken away from Davids poſterity for their ſins, and therefore he might well underſtand, that he ſhould have been by this favour of the Lord towards him ſtirred up with all his power to purge the land from idolatry, and to preſerve the worſhip of God pure and uncorrupt, as David had formerly done: yet he moſt ungratefully contrariwiſe was the authour of more groſſe idolatry, God and his pure worſhip being utterly neglected, yea oppoſed by him.

V. 8.
P. Martyr.

Whereas in commending David he ſaith, that he kept his law with his whole heart, doing nothing but that which was right in his eyes, I underſtand it with Martyr, of the thing now ſpoken of, and not generally of the whole courſe of his life, that is, of his freedome from all errour about the worſhip of God, and if it be generally underſtood, it may be ſaid, that it was thus ſpoken, becauſe his ſins of adultery and murther upon his repentance were done away, as Nathan told him, 2 Sam. 12.

See more of Davids commendation again, 1 King. 15. 5.

V. 9.

And wheras it is ſaid, that he did worſe then all that were before him, this is to be underſtood of Saul, Solomon, Rehoboam & Abijam, after the end of the reign of the laſt of which kings this was ſpoken: for Saul did not ſet up any Idolatry, Solomon, notwithſtanding the idolatries in his time hindred not the worſhip of God in the place and after the manner by him appointed, Rehoboam having ſinned by idolatry, repented when he was chaſtiſed by Shiſhach king of Egypt, and Abijam his ſon likewiſe turned to the Lord, when he was endangered by the armies of Ieroboam; neither did he ever preſume to alter any thing in the worſhip of God, as Ieroboam had done. But Ieroboam would not be moved by any meanes to repent, and appointed new places and Prieſts and feaſts of his own head, moſt preſumptuouſly keeping his Subjects from the old ordained by God. Toſtatus extendeth the compariſon further, even to the Idolatrous kings of the heathen, all whom he exceeded, becauſe they were ignorant, but he had knowledge.

V. 10.

Behold I will bring evill againſt the houſe of Ieroboam, and I will ſmite him of Ieroboam that piſſeth againſt a wall, both the ſhut up and the left in Iſrael, and I will cleanſe away the remainder, &c. as dung uſeth to be cleanſed away.] that is, ſaith Pelican, I will ſo utterly deſtroy the houſe of Ieroboam, that not ſo much as a dog thereof ſhall be left, nor any though never ſo carefully ſhut up and hidden in any part of the land; yea ſo ſweeping a judgement will I bring, that if any remaine, although but the refuſe of that ſtocke, and as vile as dung, they ſhall alſo be ſwept away. Martyr diſtinguiſhing thoſe that are threatned here, will have by the ſhut up and left in Iſrael underſtood either treaſures cloſely laid up and cattell in the field, or men in ſtrong holds and in the countrey abroad, or laſtly men in walled townes, who ſhall be taken by the enemy, and ſuch as being left at the firſt, ſhall afterwards be ſought out and deſtroyed. And for the compariſon uſed, as one re-moveth dung, he ſaith, ſome by the word גלל tranſlated dung underſtand grinding teeth, as if it were meant, that they ſhould be ground as meat by the teeth; ſome, a whirlewind carrying dung away; but the commonneſt and beſt is, that his poſterity ſhould be caſt out as a man caſteth out all dung and filth out of his houſe when he cleanſeth it. And it is to be noted, that the ſame word is here uſed for dung, which ſignifieth idols, to ſhew their baſeneſſe and the baſeneſſe of thoſe that ſerue them. I hold with Martyr, that judgement againſt Iſrael for being polluted with Ieroboams idolatry is here mixtly denounced under theſe words [the ſhut up and left in Iſrael] being meant ſuch as were fortified againſt their enemies, whom they ſhould firſt deſtroy and take away, and then others, whom as left out of theſe defenced places they firſt let paſſe; and for the laſt clauſe touching Ieroboams po-ſterity, I ſubſcribe to the common interpretation. The judgement againſt Iſrael being but touched here in a word, is further amplified ver. 15,16.

V.11. Thoſe of Ieroboam that dye in the City the dogges ſhall eate,&c.] v. 14. it is ſhewed by whom the execution ſhould be done, viz. by another king that ſhould be ſet up in his ſtead, as ch. 15.29. is ſhewed that it was done by Baaſha. Onely it is ſaid V.12,13. v. 12,13. that Abia alone, that was now ſick, of all the houſe of Ieroboam ſhould have a buriall, becauſe there was ſome goodneſſe found in him, but that ſhe ſhould never ſee him alive more, for he ſaith, that at her entrance into the city he ſhould dye. This goodneſſe the Rabbins ſay, was, that he tooke away the impediments whereby his father ſought to hinder the paſſage of the Iſraelites to Ieruſalem to worſhip; and R. Solomon ſaith, that his father had ſet armed men in the way, but he removed them, his father not knowing it. But this is improbable, becauſe v. 3. he is called a childe, and therefore he was unfit for any ſuch exploit, and it is to be thought rather, that by the goodneſſe in him was meant his towardlineſſe and forwardneſſe in vertuous wayes, which made all Iſrael to love and hope well of him, and when he was taken away by death, to lament it. The words in Hebrew are, [there was found in him a good word towards the Lord] the vulgar Latine [there is found a good word from the Lord upon him] that is, ſaith Sallianus contrary to all o-Sallianus. thers, not any goodneſſe, although Ioſephus and many after him ſtand for that, but onely, it ſeemed good unto God to forgive him, which he did not to any other.
But a good word is commonly put for a good thing in the Hebrew tongue, and ſo I doubt not but it is here meant; and ſo Lyra and Pellican underſtand it, who follow the Latine tranſlation.

V.14. But the Lord ſhall ſet him up a king who ſhall roote out the houſe of Ieroboam this day, and what, even now] ſo are the laſt words in the Hebrew, word for word, the Junius. meaning being according to Iunius, He ſhall cut off Ieroboams houſe the ſame day that he entreth upon the kingdome; nay what did I ſay, the Lord will ſet him up a king? he is even now in the kingdome who ſhall doe this. The ſpeedy execution Tostatus. is here certainly ſet forth, and happly, as Toſtatus hath it, Baaſha began even then to worke and make way for the attaining of the kingdome, although he could not effect it in leſſe then two or three yeares: the vulgar Latine hath it, [this day and at P. Martyr. this time.] Martyr, who followeth the Hebrew, ſaith, that theſe words are added, leſt by [this day] a longer time ſhould be thought to be meant, and therefore he ſaith, what do I ſpeak of a day, it ſhall even now be done. Some others, he ſaith, underſtand it as ſpoken interrogatively, what is it that ſhall happen even now in compariſon of that, which ſhall come afterwards; to the declaring of which he in the next words proceedeth v. 15, 16. But I reſt in the firſt, as moſt genuine, to ſay nothing of Caietans underſtanding by [now] the now living, for they now lived, upon whom this judgement ſhould fall.

V.15. And the Lord ſhall ſmite Iſrael as a reed is ſhaken in the water, &c.] Here are two puniſhments threatned againſt Iſrael. Firſt, that that kingdome ſhould alwayes be unſtable as a reed ſhaken to and fro, being ſometime under one King
and

and ſometime under another of a divers tribe, ſo ſoone as one was ſet up and had reigned awhile, another working his deſtruction, and ſo taking the kingdome to himſelfe; not like the kingdome under Davids poſterity, which was ſetled in his race, and therefore ſtood, as a cedar in compariſon of it. 2. That it ſhould after certaine yeares bee quite deſtroyed, Iſrael being carried captive beyond the river, that is, Euphrates; into Babylon, and from Aſſyria which was under the King of Babylon, people being brought to inhabit that land in their ſtead; as is ſhewed, 2 Kings 17. that it fell out. Thus for their idolatry, whereof Ieroboam was authour to them, they were made to change a moſt fruitfull countrey for a barren, which change ſaith Martyr, was like the change made between Glaucus and Diomedes of golden armour for brazen.

P. Martyr.

V. 17.

Then the wife of Ieroboam aroſe and went away and came to Thirza, &c.] ch. 12. 25. Ieroboam is ſaid to have dwelt in Shechem in Ephraim, but Thirza ſaith Martyr, was an head city in Manaſſeh, and happly he had another houſe there, in which he dwelt ſometimes, and here at this time his child lay ſick, and at the return of his mother when ſhe entred the houſe, he dyed. But how doth this agree with v. 12. When thou ſhalt enter into the city, he ſhall dye. Anſ. The Kings houſe moſt probably ſtood at the entrance of the city, and ſo the entring into the houſe was the entring into the city. And whereas a queſtion may be made, what if his mother had not returned thither, ſhould he not have dyed? I anſwer, he that foretold this, knew that ſhee ſhould return forthwith, and therefore this is but the putting of caſe impoſſible. v. 19. The reſt of the acts of Ieroboam how he fought and reigned, they are written in the book of the Chronicles.] Many ſaith Martyr think this book to bee that which is contained in the Bible called by this name, but againſt this maketh, 1. That the Chronicles were written by Eſdras, who was not born, till many yeares after the writing of this. 2. Many things are ſaid to bee ſet forth in that book of Chronicles, which are not to be found in this. It ſeemeth that the prophets wrot the geſts of the Kings of their times more largely, calling their books ſo written, Dibri hajamim; and out of this Eſdras took that which he wrot, leaving out many things which he thought not ſo neceſſary; ſee before ch. 11. 41. The time that Ieroboam reigned was 22 yeares, and then he dyed, not long after that the Lord had ſo threatned him by his Prophet, and Nadab his ſonne reigned in his ſtead; the proſecution of whoſe hiſtory is intermitted, untill ch. 15. 25. and the acts of Rehoboam the King of Iudah, and his ſucceſſors are next ſet down.

V. 20.

V. 21.

Rehoboam the ſonne of Solomon reigned in Iudah, 41 yeares old was he when he began to reigne, and he reigned 17 yeares, &c.] The thing moſt remarkable in this King is, that he came of a mother an Ammoniteſſe, which is not certainly without cauſe ſet down, but to intimate the evill that commeth of ſuch prohibited marriages. For the children of Iſrael were forbidden to marry with the daughters of Ammon or Moab to the tenth generation, and it is moſt probable, that this woman was one of thoſe that turned away Solomons heart to idolatry, ſeeing he is noted to have ſet up the abomination of the children of Ammon, ch. 11. 7. And now ſee what came of this marriage; an inſolent and fooliſh ſonne, who by his pride and folly loſt the greateſt part of his fathers kingdome, and was a groſſe Idolater alſo; and Iudah together with him, as is ſhewed 2 Chron. 12. 1. although here v. 22. Iudah only be named, as doing evill in the ſight of the Lord. But neither he nor Iudah fell to ſo foule ſinning in the firſt of his reigne, but at the end of 3 yeares, 2 Chron. 11. 17. before which it is ſhewed there, but here omitted, that he fortified many cities, viz. Bethlehem, Etam, and Tekoah, Bethzur, Socante, &c. being 15 in number, and ſcituated in Iudah, and Benjamin. Theſe he fortified and furniſhed both with armour and victuals for the better defence of his kingdome againſt any new attempts of his enemies, thinking happly alſo as Pellican hath it, that he might afterwards uſe thoſe armes to reduce again the ten tribes to his obedience. And to ſtrengthen him the more, the Prieſts and Levites came from all parts unto him, becauſe Ieroboam had caſt them off, and made other Prieſts, as hath been already touched: 1 Kings 12. 31. For the Prieſts and Levites being diſperſed amongſt the tribes from whence they were to come up at certain times to doe their their ſervice at the Temple, and commonly to inſtruct the people where they lived in the lawes of God, were now debarred from both theſe by Ieroboam, who would neither permit any to go to Ieruſalem to worſhip, nor the inſtructing in the lawes, the knowledge whereof he deſired ſhould be aboliſhed amongſt the people. Wherefore the zealous Miniſters of God choſe rather by abandoning his kingdome to leave their houſes and lands, then by ſtaying ſtill to be any way guilty of his wickedneſſe. And not only they, but other godly perſons from thoſe parts V. 16. flocked to Rehoboam to dwell in his kingdome, where they might be free from the like danger, and enjoy the comfort of Gods ordinances, which they could not doe in their own places. Indeed no more is ſaid, but that they went up to Ieruſalem to ſacrifice, but it muſt needs be underſtood, that they left their houſes and poſſeſſions alſo, as the Levites did to goe and dwell in that kingdome, because if they had remained in the kingdome of Iſrael ſtill, they could not have had liberty to go up to Ieruſalem at feſtivall times to ſacrifice, as it is ſaid that they did. Now by meanes of ſome comming thus from all tribes into the kingdom of Iudah, it became much more populous and ſtronger, and although Rehoboam had loſt the 10 tribes, yet whilſt he cleaved unto the Lord, he began again to reigne over them in part, for he is ſaid to have walked in the wayes of David and Solomon 3 yeares, which is to be underſtood of Solomons former yeares; but this happy time laſted not above three V. 17. yeares. Then ſaith Pellican, his hypocriſie, by which he had made a ſhew of fearing God in worldly reſpects, viz. to draw more ſubjects to him was diſcovered.

Now, more ceaſing to come unto him, the wickedneſſe that lay hid in his heart brake out, and he fell to the open practice of idolatry as well as Ieroboam, 2 Chron.
V. 18. 19. 12. 1. and 1 King. 14. 22, 23, 24. But before this his multiplying of wives is recorded, and his begetting of many children. He had 18 wives and 60 concubines, and begat of them 28 ſonnes and 60 daughters. And in particular, how he ſought eſpecially to match with Davids houſe; for the eſtimation wherein he was had amongſt the people, to this end taking Mahalath the daughter of Davids ſonne Ierimoth, and Abihail the daughter Eliab, Davids brother; and Maacho the daughter of Abſolom, whoſe children are alſo named Abia, Ethai, Zizah, and Solomith, becauſe V. 22. the firſt of theſe reigned after him, although the ſonne of the laſt 3 wives, and ſo moſt probably younger, then ſome other of his ſonnes.

But as David had formerly preferred a yonger ſon Solomon, becauſe wiſeſt; ſo he made Abiah captain over all his brethren, thus making way for him to reign after him, becauſe he was both wiſer and mightier then any of the reſt.

V. 23. And he is ſaid v. 23. to have deſired many wives, which was contrary to the charge given Deut. 17. herein following his father Solomon, and probably by this means he was drawn alſo to follow him in idolatry, for which he is here commemorated.

To return now again to his fall into idolatry, into the fourth year of his reign, when his kingdome was ſtrengthened, [he left the Law of the Lord and all Iſrael with him] and more largely, 1 King. 14. 22.

And Iudah did evill before the Lord, and provoked him above all that their fathers had done through their ſinnes. 23. For they built alſo high places, and images, and groves, &c. v. 24. there were Whoremongers in the land.] P. Martyr hath it male 1 King. 14. 22. Or Cinadus, that is, ſuch as ſinned after the manner of the Sodomites, and this was ſuffered to go unpuniſhed, yea whatſoever abominations elſe were practiſed amongſt the heathen, were practiſed there alſo. Rehoboam enjoying a proſperous eſtate, knew not how to uſe it, but now fell from God, who had thus bleſſed him, whereby the danger of proſperity and wealth appeareth: wherefore that of Pindarus is true, as Martyr obſerveth, nothing is ſo hard to be concocted as proſperity.

God had choſen Ieruſalem to ſet up his name there, but he as it were to deſpight God, ſet up idols there, and by this meanes Iudah was now alſo corrupted more then in Solomons or in any of their fore-fathers times, becauſe idolatry P. Martyr. was more generally followed, then at any time before. Their ſinning in Iudah is not aggravated by comparing it with Iſraels ſinning under Ieroboam, but with the ſinnes of former ages, for Iſrael ſinned yet more then they, both becauſe Ieroboam began at the firſt with idolatry, and alſo interdicted the peoples comming to the temple at Ieruſalem to worſhip, which Rehoboam did not, ſeeing there was free liberty ſtill to ſacrifice according to the law. The particular thing, wherein they exceeded their fore-fathers in ſinning, was in that males were proſtituted at their idolatrous feaſts, and in other abominations they did like the heathen, whom the Lord had caſt out before them. And indeed this is noted to be a judgement, unto which the heathen were given over for their idolatry, Rom. 1. and it is to be imputed to the like judgement, that the people of Iudah ſinned likewiſe. R. Solomon indeed, becauſe he would free his countreymen from ſo foul a ſinne, expounds it by adulteries, but other Hebrews, as hath been already ſaid, ſo Pellican. This wickedneſſe the Lord ſuffered not long to go unpuniſhed: for in the fifth year of Rehoboams reign, Shiſhack the king of Egypt came up to Ieruſalem. 2 Chron. 12.2,3,4. He is ſaid to have come becauſe they ſinned, and that with 1200 chariots and 60000 horſemen, and innumerable others, and took the moſt defenced cities of Iudah, &c. There alſo it is ſaid, that Semeiah a prophet came to Rehoboam and the princes of Iudah, when they were gathered together in Ieruſalem, fleeing from Shiſhack, ſaying, unto them, thus ſaith the Lord, ye have left me and I have therefore left you, &c.

Lyra.

Then they confeſſed their ſins and by the ſame prophet had comfort, that they ſhould not be deſtroyed utterly, but ſerve the king of Egypt, that they might know the difference between the ſervice of God and of other kings. The king and princes humbled themſelves at the hearing of the prophet, but from their wickedneſſe they turned not, but only in hypocriſie, becauſe v. 13. Rehoboam is ſaid again to have done evill, and not to have prepared his heart to ſeek the Lord. Yet this ſhew of repentance for fear, to which they were brought by Semeiah, prevailed for the preventing of utter deſtruction at this time, as Ahabs humiliation alſo did, 1 King. 21.29. that all may learn to humble themſelves before God in time of publike calamities and dangers. But Shiſhack was permitted to rifle the Lords houſe and the kings houſe, and to carry away the treaſures found there, and the golden ſhields that Solomon made. Ioſephus ſaith, that the king for fear ſet open the gates of Ieruſalem unto him, upon agreement to ſpare theſe things, but the Egyptian king kept not this covenant. And this ſeemeth to have been done after that little comfort, which the prophet gave them, becauſe after that he is ſaid to have gone into Ieruſalem, and to have done this v. 9. They were not then wholly delivered, but ſo as that thenceforth they lived in miſery, they were taught by experience how ſweet and comfortable the ſervice of God is in compariſon of the ſervice of other kings. For to be made ſervants and tributaries to kings is ſo grievous, as that the Iſraelites formerly ſerving ſuch, groaned under the oppreſſion thereof and were delivered, and when the Romans deſtroyed Ieruſalem, ſome, ſaith Ioſephus, killed themſelves by running through one anothers ſides with their ſwords, rather then they would come into the ſervitude of the Romans; yet ſo puſillanimous, ſaith Lyra, was Rehoboam, as that he was comforted in this, that he enjoyed his life and kingdome ſtill, although in ſuch a ſervile condition upon theſe words, 2 Chron. 12.13. He comforted or confirmed himſelf in Ieruſalem. And for the golden ſhields, which were carried away he made brazen, thus the golden time, which was before when they ſerved God, was turned into brazen, when they forſook him and ſerved idols, and this and greater be the miſeries of ſuch as apoſtatize from good to evill.

The concluſion of the hiſtory of Rehoboam is, that the reſt of his acts and all that he did, were written in the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iudah, as the hiſtory of Ieroboam was before concluded, v. 19. where ſee, what is to be thought of ſuch books, as unto which reference is thus made. In that Rehoboam had brazen ſhields carried before him when he went into the houſe of the Lord, it is to be noted, that although he were an idolater, yet he ſerved God ſtill at the temple, where the Prieſts and Levites attended, as in Davids time. And for his puſillanimity Herodotus noteth, that he yielded his countrey to the king of Egypt, whom he called by another name, without fighting, for which, to the ſhame of that kingdom, he ſet up ſtones there for monuments, containing both inſcriptions of this conqueſt, conqueſt and womans privities annexed, to ſhew the woman-like timerouſneſſe which was in them. But this is that which is threatned to the wicked, that they ſhall have a fearfull and trembling heart. Whereas Rehoboam is ſaid to have reigned ſtill in Ieruſalem, it is intimated, that the Egyptian king did no more but take away treaſures and impoſe a tribute, but otherwiſe the ſtate of that kingdome remained under Rehoboam, as before, that it might appear, what regard God had unto David according to his promiſe.

AMongſt other things touching the acts of Rehoboam it is particularly mentioned in the Chapter before going. v. 30. And the warre between Ieroboam and Rehoboam all their dayes.] And this chapter *v.*6. it is ſaid, There was war between Rehoboam and Ieroboam all the dayes of their lives. Although at the firſt dividing of the kingdom God reſtrained Rehoboam from war, whileſt he ſerved him, not ſuffering ſo great an evill to rage in that kingdome, yet when he and his kingdome were corrupted alſo with idolatry, he ſuffered warres to begin again, and to go on without ceaſing, one ſeeking to recover his tribes loſt, and the other to hold them. it being thus verified, which was ſpoken by the prophet Eſa. 57. There is no peace to the wicked, ſaith my God. Having gone from God, he went from them, leaving them to teare and to deſtroy one anothers kingdom without end, which may alwayes bee expected in any kingdome or ſtate, to bee the iſſue of wickedneſſe.

V. 1. In the 18 yeare of Ieroboam began Abijam to reign over Iudah. He reigned three yeares in Ieruſalem, and his mothers name was Maachah the daughter of Abſalom, and he walked in all the ſinnes of his father, &c.] 2 Chron. 13. 2. His mothers name was Michaiah the daughter of Vriel of Gibeah. But 2 Chron. 12. 20. ſhee is named Maachah the daughter of Abſalom. To reconcile this difference ſome ſay, that Maachah was Abſaloms daughters daughter, for his only daughter was Thamar, neither is it unuſuall in holy Scripture to call the grand-child the daughter. Vriel then of Gibeah a Benjamite, to whom Thamar, Abſaloms daughter was married, was father to Maachah and Abſalom her Grand-father, for which ſhee is here called the daughter of Vriel, there of Abſalom. But Ierom and Lyra and Toſtatus ſay, that by Abſalom is not meant Davids ſonne; but ſome other, becauſe he was of Gibeah, Abſalom of Ieruſalem, or Hebron, or Bethlehem; to approve which they ſay that it is not Abſalom in the Hebrew, but Abeſſalom; and to make that name and Vriel to agree, that either the ſame man was of two names, or elſe Abeſſalom was the Grand-father, and Vriel the Father. But who ſo ſhall look into the Hebrew text, ſhall find no difference between this name and Abſalom, and although no marriages ought to have been made out of the tribe, yet who can think that any ſcruple was made of this, by ſuch as ſinned ſo fouly againſt other more weighty commandments of God? Wherefore I conclude, that moſt probably, Maachah or Michaiah, was Abſaloms Grand-child, and properly the daughter of Vriel, who was the ſonne of Abſaloms daughter; for which cauſe ſhe is the daughter: as Obed, who came of Ruth, a ſonne borne to Naomi, her mother. Now his mothers name is ſet down in making way to relate of his wickedneſſe, becauſe ſhe happily being a groſſe idolatreſſe was the chiefe cauſe thereof; of her idolatry, ſee 2 Chron. 15, 16.

But becauſe v. 10. Abijam ſaith, The Lord our God is ours, neither doe we forſake him, &c. For if he had ſpoken diſſemblingly, he ſhould not certainly have found ſuch help from God. And becauſe he continued in the way of piety ſo ſhort a time, that is paſſed over, as not worth the naming; and his great wickedneſſe only is mentioned, yet Martyr thinketh that he was wicked at the firſt, but being in danger by Ieroboams great Army, repented; and ſought unto God, as his Father being chaſtiſed by the King of Egypt, had done. But Pellican that hee was wicked even now, only the worſhip of God was by him externally maintained, and magnified; wherewith becauſe God was well pleaſed, it being of his owne ordaining, hee now took part with him. And for this the time of his reigne was made ſhort, for it was only 3 yeares. v. 3. His heart was not perfect like Davids, V. 2.

to be ſet down there out of place, but the writer of this hiſtory did it, that wee might take ſpeciall notice, that warres were not only begun when Kings were left never turned, and then v. 7. in the ſonnes time, betwixt whom yet, and Ieroboam

2 Chron. 13. 2, 3. wherein Abijam obtained a famous victory, neither was he any more moleſted, which ſeemeth to favour the expoſition of Martyr before going, that Abijam was wicked at the firſt; and hereby Ieroboam was emboldened to raiſe ſuch forces againſt him, but hee being in danger, turned and beſought the Lord for aid and ſo prevailed, but his heart being not right, after this hee was not ſuffered to continue long, but dyed at the end of 3 yeares. Touching this battell, Joſephus. P. M. it is uncertain whether of them provoked the other, but almoſt all men conjecture, Zonaras in annal. Lyra, &c.
that Ieroboam took the opportunity of Rehoboams death, and firſt provoked unto it in the beginning of Abijams reign, when he was ſcarce ſetled in his kingdome, and but young and unexpert in martiall matters. Yet if we conſider his reign only of 3 yeares, and his ſonne Aſa left behind him then fit for government, hee cannot be thought to have been ſo young: and becauſe Abijams entring the battell fought, was in Ephraim, which was within the kingdome of Ieroboam, it is moſt V. 4. probable, that Abijam was firſt in armes, thinking to recover that part of the kingdome again, which his father had loſt; and to this doth beſt agree the tenour of his ſpeech, which was to move them to forſake Ieroboam, as a rebell againſt the houſe of David, and a perverter of religion, and now to return to the obedience of that houſe, ſet up of God to rule and reign for ever. Wherefore Sethus Calviſ. ſaith, that Abijam raſhly offering warre to Ieroboam, yet obtained the victory, when he Sethus Calviſ.

called upon God. He began then, as his father by force to ſeek to recover the kingdome taken from his houſe, but by more wiſe perſwaſions added. But did not he know that God had given Ieroboam that part, and taken it from the houſe of David?
Anſ. Doubtleſſe he did, but whether for Rehoboams time only, or for ever he knew not; or to how long time this puniſhment of Solomons idolatry ſhould be extended.
Certain it is, that he favoured his proceedings by giving him the victory miraculouſly, he having in his army but 400000. but Ieroboam 800000. For although men going out to warre, ſometimes unjuſtly are ſuffered to prevaile, yet never are they extraordinarily aſſiſted, as Abijam was; And the reaſon may eaſily be conceived, viz. the incorrigible wickednes of Ieroboam, and of the men of Iſrael here mentioned, whereas Abijam maintained the true worſhip and ſervice of God, and both he and the men of Iudah called upon God, and put their truſt in him only. To ſhew therefore how wel pleaſing to God this is, & contrariwiſe how diſpleaſing to forſake Note.
God & to ſerve images, he wrought thus miraculouſly for them, although he favoured them not in ſeeking contrary to his decree, to bring all Iſrael again to the houſe of David; ſo that after this great victory Abijam could not yet prevaile for that, but only took ſome cities of Iſrael, that kingdome remaining to Ieroboam ſtill. The place from whence Abijam ſpake before the battell began, was mount Semeraim, ſo placing himſelfe doubtleſſe, that he might be heard by a great part of Ieroboams Iu'g.9.7. army, as ſometime Iotham the ſonne of Gedeon went up to a mount to ſpeak likewiſe V.5. to the Shechemites. The occaſion that he made beginneth firſt with Davids and his ſons right to the kingdom over all Iſrael, for ever; for he ſaith that God gave to them by a covenant of ſalt, that is, either confirming it by ſacrifice, in which alwayes there was ſalt, or becauſe ſalt keepeth fleſh from corrupting; it is thus ſpoken 2 Sam.7.14. to ſhew that this covenant ſhould never be altered, thus this phraſe is uſed alſo V.6,7. before, Numb. 18, 19. And for Ieroboam hee ſaith, that hee was but a ſervant that rebelled againſt his Lord, and gathering vain fellowes to him, he prevailed againſt Rehoboam, as a timerous and unexpert man only, that thus he might move their minds if he could poſſibly without warre to leave Ieroboam againe, intimating by this ſpeech that the fault was only in his father, that Ieroboam thus prevailed; but now another man being made King, who had more courage, the caſe would be altered.

And becauſe it was commonly knowne againſt this, that God ſet up Ieroboam, and Rehoboam loſt not thoſe tribes under him for want of courage, for hee gathered a great army to bring back the kingdome to himſelfe, only God reſtreined him from fighting; he added, that Ieroboam was to them the authour of idolatry, V.8,9. and of caſting off Gods Prieſts, and making others in their ſtead, even of the baſeſt condition; ſo that they had whilſt they followed him, God for their enemy, and therefore if they truſted in their great multitudes, they ſhould certainly be deceived, because there is no ſtrength againſt God.

V.16. In the kingdome of Iudah contrariwiſe he ſheweth, that there were lawfull prieſts and ſacrificing, and lights burning, and ſhew-bread, &c. Neither had they forſaken God, becauſe although there was idolatry there alſo, yet none was compelled to it, but all men were left free to repair to the ſervice done in the temple, according to the law of Moſes. Whereas he ſpeaketh of the golden candleſtick, it is per enalagen numeri, one being put for more, according to ſome, yet others think, there Lyranus. was but one left, the reſt being taken away haply by the king of Egypt. In concluding, Toſtatus. he diſſwades them therefore from fighting againſt God, threatning that if they did, V.12. they ſhould not proſper, as indeed it fell out. For whileſt he ſpake thus, although Ieroboam cloſely divided his army, cauſing one part to wheel about and to come upon their backs, and the other to ſet upon them before, thinking by his great multitude V.13,14,15, thus to confound and overcome them, yet the prieſts ſounding with trumpets and 16,17. the men of Iudah crying to the Lord for help, gave them the overthrow, killing 500000. of them, ſuch a ſlaughter as no hiſtory almoſt relates the like in any age, as Ioſephus alſo noteth, and therefore the verſion of his hiſtory made by Ruffinus is V.18,19,20. falſe, wherein it is 50000. Then Abijah and the men of Iudah purſued Ieroboams men, and took from him three cities, with their daughters, that is, the villages belonging Pellican. to them, viz. Bethel, Ieſhana, and Hephraim, then Ieroboam died being ſmitten by the Lord, ſo Toſtatus and ſome others underſtand it. Pellican ſpeaking of the number ſlain, calleth it an incredible number, ſaying, that a certain number is put for an uncertain, the meaning being, that more then half the army periſhed, but I ſee no reaſon, why the preciſe number ſhould be called in queſtion, ſeeing the Lord at the ſounding of the ſilver trumpets, according to his ordinance, gave ſuch courage to Iudah, and ſtrook ſuch fear into Iſrael, that one of them was able now to chaſe an hundred, for the heart being ſurprized with fear, the outward members, ſaith the Philoſophers, languiſh and are without ſtrength. Touching Lyra. him that is ſaid now to be ſmitten; Lyra will not have Ieroboam underſtood, but Abijah, who according to ſome, having taken Bethel where a golden calf was, V.20. became by this meanes an idolater, for which God ſmote him, that he died. The words are, Neither could Ieroboam prevail any more in the dayes of Abijah, and the Lord ſmote him that he died, where the word [him] may be referred to either, but to Ieroboam it ſeemeth, that it cannot be referred, becauſe he lived ſtill, when Abijah was dead, for Aſa is ſaid to have begun to reign in the 20. year of his reign, 1 King. 15.9. and he fulfilled 22. before that he died. And becauſe it is immediately here ſubjoyned touching Abijah, that he was confirmed and maried 14 wives, and begat 22 ſonnes, v. 21. it is as improbablo, that it is ſpoken of him, and yet becauſe Abijahs death is preſently ſpoken of, v. 22. and Ieroboams living & reigning after that 2. yeares, I hold with Lyra, that it is to be underſtood of Abijah turning wicked and idolatrous after this victory, as was touched before. That which followeth of him, v. 21. being meant of his poſterity, & wheras it is ſaid, he married, &c. it is beſt read by Iunius in the preterpluperfecttenſe, he had maried, this being ſpoken by way of recapitulation. And to this expoſition conſenteth Diony. Hugo, & Ioſephus, & Hebr. major Chron. alledging yet another reaſon, viz. becauſe when he had taken Bethel, he deſtroyed not the golden calf. Abijah after this victory turning wicked is ſmitten, that he died in a ſhort time; whoſe acts are ſaid to be written in the book of the Chron. of the kings of Iudah, as Rehoboams before, 1 Kin. 14.29. but 2 Chr. 13.22. in the book of the Prophet Iddo; of both which enough 1 Kin. 14.19.

To returne again to the hiſtory of the Kings. Abijah being dead, Aſa his ſonne began to reign, anno 20. of Ieroboam, and he reigned 41. yeares, and did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, his mothers name was Maacha, &c. The ſame hiſtory is alſo ſet forth, 2 Chron. 14.1,2. where it is ſupplied which is here wanting, the land had reſt 10. yeares. And in deſcribing his righteouſneſſe it is ſaid, that he beat down the altars of ſtrange Gods, and their high places, and brake their images, and cut down their groves, ſaying to the Iews, that they ſhould require the Lord, he built alſo cities of defence, &c. v. 6, 7. And his armies are ſaid to be 300000. of Iudah, and 280000. of Benjamin. v. 8. And when Zerach the Ethiopian came againſt him with 1000000. he called upon the Lord and ſo overcame them, &c. v. 9, 10, 11, 12. Here it is onely ſaid v. 12. he took the maſculine harlots out of the land, and removed their dung-hill gods, of which ſee before ch. 14. 24. There alſo is ſhewed, what encouragement he had by Hazariah, a prophet, and how he then proceeded yet more to purge the land from idolatry, and to offer ſacrifices abundantly, making a covenant together with his people to ſeek the Lord, and this was done anno 15. of his reign. Maacah ſaid here to be his mother was his grandmother, as may be gathered by that which went before, as ſhe being called the daughter of Abſalom was his grandchilde, wherefore Iunius rendreth it, his grandmothers name was Maacha. And ſhe is mentioned, ſaith Pellican, for the greater commendation of Aſa, who although he came of ſo wicked a ſtrain, yet feared God, and would not by her be corrupted, as his father had been, which his goodneſſe was rewarded with reſt and quietneſſe of 10. yeares, which was a bleſſing remarkable in thoſe times, becauſe not enjoyed either by his father or grandfather, for there were alwayes warre between them and Ieroboam. Whereas he is ſaid to have beaten down the altars and high places of idols, but 2 Chron. 15.17. and 1 King. 15. 14. the high places are ſaid to have remained ſtill in his time, I underſtand it with Lyra of thoſe high places, upon which they ſacrificed to the Lord, according to the manner of old, before that the Ark had a ſetled abode in the temple, and not of any high places made to idols, for all ſuch he beat down, except that built by Solomon upon mount Olivet, which Ioſiah afterwards deſtroyed, as Martyr noteth, of which ſee 2 King. 23. 15. And theſe, although the temple was now the onely place, to which all their ſacrifices were to be brought, he tolerated to avoid a greater evill, viz. their ſacrificing to idols upon ſuch places, from which he ſaw, that they could not be kept, unleſſe theſe had been permitted unto them. But whereas Lyra illuſtrates this by a ſimile, ſaying, as whores are now tolerated, that all places might not confuſedly be filled with whoredomes, ſuch a toleration is intolerable, for to ſacrifice to God upon high places, although it were an errour, yet it was no ſpirituall whoredom, but ſuch, as that it was upon ſpeciall occaſion ſometimes done by holy prophets, as by Elijah upon mount Carmel. Wherefore this is no juſtification of his holy father, the Pope, tolerating ſtews in Rome and taking rents therefore. And indeed Aſa his tolerating of ſome high places was a blemiſh to him, and to ſuch other godly kings after him, as did the like: for the utter overthrow of all high places in the dayes of Hezekiah is commended afterwards, ch. 31. 1. For thoſe that ſinned after the manner of the Sodomites, males with males committing filthineſſe; whereas he is ſaid v. 12. to have taken them out of the land, it is to be underſtood by putting

The cities of defence which he built in this time of peace are not thought to be new, but ſuch as were cities of defence before in Rehoboams time, but becauſe they were by warres ruinated, they were now rebuilt and ſtrengthened.

V.8,9. His armies are here alſo mentioned, becauſe the Ethiopian King came to warre againſt him, that we may underſtand with what forces he went againſt him. Not that immediately after the expiration of ten yeares the king of Ethiopia with ſo mighty forces invaded his land: for his thankeſgiving and offering ſacrifices for this, was anno 15. of his reign, 2 Chron. 15. 10. the third moneth, whereby is intimated, that the king of Ethiopia was not the firſt enemy, that made warre upon him, when he had enjoyed peace ſo long, but ſome time in the 14. of his reign he came againſt Iudah. And before that, moſt probably, Baaſhah king of Iſrael, both becauſe he is ſaid to have lived in peace from the beginning of his reign onely ten yeares together, therefore there muſt needs be ſome to diſturb it before Zerach the Ethiopian king, and becauſe 2 Chron. 15. 8. it is ſpoken of the cities, which Aſa took in Ephraim, which was part of the kingdome of Baaſhah, and this could not be without war, and 1 King. 15. 16. it is ſaid, that warre was between Aſa and Baaſhah all their dayes, therefore not anno 36. onely of his reign, 2 Chron. 16. 1. but ſundry times before, viz. between his tenth and fifteenth year, the cauſe happily being, for that Baaſhah would ſeek to recover the cities, which Ieroboam loſt from the kingdome of Iſrael to Abijah, but inſteed of recovering he added more loſſe to the former. Whereas Baaſhah came againſt Aſa anno 36. of his reign, 2 Chron. 16. when as Baaſhah his time extended onely to anno 27. ſee the ſolution after.

V.9,10. Touching the king of Ethiopia it is ſaid, when Zerach the Ethiopian came againſt them with 1000000. men, and 300. chariots, and came to Mareſhah, Aſa went out againſt them with his armies, &c.] Theſe Ethiopians came from beyond Egypt and Lybia in Africa, as appears 2 Chron. 16. 8. where the Lybians are ſaid to have come with them, and therefore they were not of the Ethiopians in Arabia in Aſia, as ſome think. Zerach reigned over Ethiopia and Lybia, where he reigneth at this day, who is called Preſbyter Iohn a mighty Emperour, and being a warlike prince, he took this long journy (with this huge hoſte) of 1200. miles, thinking to ſubdue the kingdome of Iudah. The cauſe of their coming ſo far againſt this kingdome is not ſet down, but moſt probably the ſucceſſe which the King of Egypt had in comming againſt it in Rehoboams time, getting ſo much treaſure there with ſuch facility, induced him to this attempt, hoping to have the like ſucceſſe. But God turned it out of his mercy to ſuch as fear him, the clean contrary way, he loſt by this expedition both great treaſures, and many of his mens lives. For Aſa prayed, and the Ethiopians were terrified, as before Iſrael had been in Abijah his time, and fled before they joyned battle, and were purſued unto Gerar in the countrey of the Philiſtims, which from Mareſhah is diſtant 22. miles, and Mareſhah being a city in the tribe of Iudah from Ieruſalem 16. miles, and ſcituated upon the borders of Iudah and Dan, according to St. Ierom. Yea ſo many of them are ſaid to have faln before the Lord and his army, that is, the army of his people of Iudah (although ſome underſtand the heavenly hoſte) that this loſſe could no more be repaired, and the men of Iudah carried away much prey, and ſmote all the inhabitants of the cities about Gerar, which ſome ſay, were Ethiopians, but that is improbable, ſeeing Ethiopia was ſo many hundreth miles off: others therefore better ſay, that they were Philiſtims, who took part with the Ethiopians againſt Iudah.

2 Chr. 15.1,2,3. Touching the propheſying of Azariah for his encouragement after this v. 1. Then the ſpirit of God came upon Azariah, the ſon of Oded, Who went out to meet Aſa and ſaid, &c.] It is a tradition of the Hebrews, ſaith Ierom, that this Oded, otherwiſe called Adon, whoſe ſonne Azariah is ſaid to be, was the prophet ſent formerly to Ieroboam, to threaten him for his idolatry at Bethel. [He went out] that is, as Ioſephus hath it, a little before the kings returning to Ieruſalem, when he with his army and ſpoiles was now come near, he went out of the city to meet him, and then ſpake by the ſpirit unto them, [illegible] followeth, the Lord hath been with you, whileſt you were with him, and if ye will ſeek unto him, he will be nigh unto you, V. 2. but if ye leave him, he will leave you. And many dayes Iſrael without the true God, without a prieſt teaching, and without law. And he ſhall turn in affliction, coming 3. to him to the Lord, &c. and ſhall ſeek him, and he ſhall be found of them. And in thoſe 4. dayes no peace to him, that goeth out and in; for great vexations upon all the inhabitants 5. of thoſe lands. And nation ſtrikes at nation, and city at city, becauſe God vexeth them with every affliction. Thus it is in the Hebrew text word for word, 6. and becauſe, here is no verb in the beginning of this propheſie to ſhew the time, it is diverſly underſtood by divers, as Lyra ſheweth. For our Expoſitours, ſaith he, underſtand Lyra.

it generally of the time to come, when the people were to be caried away captive into Babylon, and therefore the vulgar Latin ſupplieth a verb thus. Iſrael ſhall be many days without the true God, and Prieſt, &c. for then many turned to idols, and all ceaſed to ſacrifice to God, becauſe they could not come to the proper place of ſacrificing, neither had they a prieſt executing his office, nor the law, the books whereof were burnt. But then Iſrael turned to the Lord, and was delivered from this captivity by Cyrus king of the Perſians, who gave them leave to return into their own countrey and to build the Temple again, yet even in that time there was no peace, becauſe the enemies of Iſrael did many years ſeek to hinder them in their buildings, as is ſhewed in Nehemiah, and nation fought againſt nation, both then and much more in the dayes of Titus and Veſpaſian, when the vexations of Iſrael grew to the greateſt height. But Hebrew Expoſitours underſtand all of the times paſt in the dayes of Rehoboam and Abijam, for then they fell from God to idolatry, and ſo regarded little the prieſt or the law. But in the dayes of Aſa they ſought the Lord, eſpecially being in a ſtrait by the coming of the Ethiopian king, and he holp them, but in the dayes paſt, viz. of Rehoboam, and Abijam, after there was a beginning to decline to idolatry, there was no peace, becauſe Ieroboam was alwayes making warre upon them, till that great overthrow given him by Abijam, and Sheſhack alſo the king of Egypt came againſt them. And thus this was verified, nation fought againſt nation, &c.] And this is followed by Iunius, and Pellican Junius. Pellican.
generally underſtandeth it either of that, which happened unto them then, or in the time of the judges, when they fell from God to idolatry, neglecting his prieſts and law, they had no peace, but were greatly oppreſſed, ſo that they could not go or come ſafe any where, yet when being afflicted they cried unto the Lord he delivered them; but ſinning again, their troubles were renewed, all which was ſpoken to ſhew, that God had now in like manner proceeded with Iudah, hearing and helping them in their ſtrait, but if they ſhould again forſake him, the times would be full of calamity as they were before. And to this alſo Martyr ſeemeth to aſſent, P. Martyr. becauſe he ſpeaketh of theſe things as paſt and not to come. But Ioſephus contrariwiſe, Ioſeph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 6.
having ſhewed, how the prophet encouraged Aſa and his people, addeth, that if they ſhould fall from their religion, he ſaid, that the time ſhould come, wherein there ſhould neither be a true prophet found amongſt the people, nor a prieſt righteous, and that then their cities ſhould be overthrown, and their nation diſperſed into all countryes, &c. Toſtatus alſo expounds it of the time to come.
And Ierom ſaith, the Hebrews affirm this to have been fulfilled 52. years after the Hieron. de tradit. Hebr. deſtruction of the temple, in which neither bird did flee, nor beaſt paſſe through Ieruſalem, and Iſrael was without hope, and all nations in trouble. And Sallianus argueth againſt the former expoſition, both becauſe the latter part of the propheſie is in the future tenſe, and becauſe they were not without prieſts ſacrificing to the Lord in the dayes of Abijam, as appeareth 2 Chron. 13. 10, 11. and moſt probably in the dayes of his father Rehoboam, the ſervice of God was maintained at the temple, as in Solomons dayes, although idolatries alſo then abounded in the land. Laſtly, it had been no propheſie, if onely things paſt had been commemorated, and ſo no more then any other man could have ſaid. Wherefore I think, that the moſt common and ancient expoſition, referring it to future times, as prophetical, is to be preferred, according to Ioſephus, although it be againſt our tranſlation, which rendreth it in the preterperfect tenſe.

V. 8. When Aſa heard theſe words, & he ſtrengthened himſelf and took away other abominable gods out of all the land of Iudah, &c.] ch. 14. 3. 4. he is ſaid to have done this in the beginning of his reign in Iudah, but now if there were any idols ſet up again ſince in that land, and the idols in Benjamin and the cities of Ephraim, which he had ſubdued, they were all deſtroyed, ſo did the propheſie aforegoing comfort and encourage him to put down whatſoever he knew to be an abomination to God, all fear of other princes about, that favoured ſuch idols, being caſt away.

And he repaired the altar of the Lord] the vulgar Latin [he dedicated the altar] but the word ſignifieth to renew, or repair, neither is it probable, when ſo godly a king had reigned thus long a time (for it was now his 15. year) that the altar for burnt offerings (for that muſt be here underſtood) was ſtill to be dedicated, but it being decayed, might have need now of repair, eſpecially ſo great ſacrifices being ready to be offered thereupon in way of thankfulneſſe for ſo great a victory, V. 11. and ſpoyles obtained, as is ſhewed v. 11. even ſo great, as that the like had not been offered ſince Solomons time. Toſtatus following the vulgar Latin [dedicated] will have no renovation meant here, but onely a dedication-like feaſt, and ſacrificing, for which onely he is ſaid to have dedicated it: but it is plainly ſaid to have been renewed, and therefore that conjecture is vain.

V. 9, 10. And he gathered together all Iudah and Beniamin, &c. And they being gathered together the third moneth, the fifteenth year of Aſa his reigne, offered ſacrifices, &c.
This time was moſt probably at the feaſt of Whitſontide or Pentecoſt, becauſe that was in the third moneth alwaies, ſeeing it was ſeven weeks after the paſſeover, which was celebrated the firſt moneth the fourteenth day, from which to the V. 13. third day of the third moneth are ſeven weeks. And then they entered into a covenant to ſeek the Lord, that is, to ſerve him, and him onely, all idolatry being had in abomination, and whatſoever man or woman would not thus ſeek the Lord, but practice idolatry, ſhould be put to death, according to the law, Deut. 17. And all this was done in way of thankfulneſſe for the preceding victory. But the Vulgar hath it: Et intravit ex more ad corroborandum fœdus: whereas in the Hebrew it is onely, they went into a covenat: ſo that it is not neceſſary to grant, that it was a cuſtomary thing to ſweare this covenant, as ſome from that tranſlation gather, but rather it may be held to have beene a fact extraordinary, to which they were ſtirred up in zeale after ſo extraordinary a favour done unto them. And this they are ſaid, to have done from their hearts with great expreſſions of joy by their lowd acclamations, congratulating mutually their unanimous conſents to ſo pious a vow.
V. 15. And this their piety went not without a bleſſing, for they had reſt from their enemies round about, and ſuch a vow was now held neceſſary, becauſe ſo great idolatries had been lately committed in Abijams time, and Rehoboams and Solomons alſo, and now in Iſrael idolatry infected all places. And yet it is to be noted againſt our neighbours, the covenanters of Scotland, that they went not to this covenant without their King, but being by him aſſembled, and lead herein as by their head; neither in the time of any other King, of Moſes or Ioſhuah, was any ſolemne covenant publiquely entered into, but the king or the Iudge for the time being was the firſt and the chiefe in this act.

V. 16. Moreover he put down Maacah his mother from being Queen, becauſe ſhe had 1 King. 15. 30. made an idol with a grove, &c.] 1 King. 15. 13. How Maacha is ſaid to be his mother ſee before, 1 King. 15. 9 10. The word commonly rendered Queen, or Auguſta, Junius. is in Hebrew, Domina, Lady, or Miſtreſſe, it being meant as Iunius hath it, Lyra. from having any imperiall power, as the Kings mother. But Lyra following the Vulgar Latine, upon 1 King. 15. ne eſſet princeps in ſacris Priapi et in Lucoeius, quem conſecraverat: and here, ex anguſto depoſuit imperio, he put her down from her ſtreight Empire, ſaith, that Maacah made a grove and an idol called Priapus there, which was worſhipped, and over this worſhip ſhe was, but when King Aſa took it away, ſhe was put down from this her ſtreight Empire, ſo called becauſe it was over ſo little a place. And touching Priapus he ſaith, 1 Reg. 15. that he was a certain young man of Helleſpont, who for the extraordinary greatneſſe of his privy members was reverenced as a god, and an image was ſet up unto him, and wor-ſhipped

ſhipped, and at ſuch feſtivals, as were kept in the honour of him, adulteries and whoredoms were committed in the grove where this idol ſtood and a den adjoyning, where they might be more ſecret; and as another ſaith, a matron, that was chief amongſt the women then aſſembled did put a crown upon this abominable idol, which office this wicked woman Maacah had hitherto moſt probably executed. Thus Lyra. But it is to be underſtood, that in Hebrew there is no difference between 1 Kings 15. and 2 Chron. 15. in the relation of this, in both places there being no more ſaid, but that he put her down from being Lady or Miſtreſſe, the other words being added by the interpreter for further explication. And accordingly Pellican ſaith, he depoſed her from the miſtriſhip, which ſhe had uſurped in the worſhipping of idols, and the execrable ſuperſtition which ſhe had erected together with the grove & filthy idol, which the Hebrews cognominate from trembling and amazement, becauſe it was not worſhipped, but by men ſtupid and mad: for they call it מפלצת. horrendum. Ierome, ſaith Martyr, turneth it Priapum, who according to Diodorus, was called Oſiris and was ſometime a mighty King in Egypt, but by his brother Typhon conſpiring againſt him by the aid of many Giants, ſlain and cut in pieces, every one taking unto him a part of his body, but all refuſing to have his privy member caſt that into the river Nilus. Iſis his wife after this by the help of Hercules overcame Typhon and thoſe giants, and taking from them her husbands parts ſhe honourably buried them, and becauſe his privy member could not be had, ſhe made an image thereof and cauſed divine honour to be given thereunto. And this obſcene idolatry ſpread afterwards into divers other countreys, and into Iudah, where he thinketh, that Maacah was a principle about it, but will not have her putting down from this principality here meant, but in the kingdome, where the Kings mother uſed to have great authority. Thus Martyr and ſome of ours ſay; but becauſe I cannot finde, that the Kings mother had ever any ſuch authority, I rather ſubſcribe to antiquity, that her being put down in her mageſtery about this idol only is meant here. Some, ſaith Martyr alſo, will have Pan meant by this idol, becauſe he ſtruck terrour into his worſhippers, according to the ſignification of the word here uſed, whence the phraſe came, a panicall fear. The high places indeed were not removed out of Iſrael, but the heart of Aſa was upright all his dayes. How this is to be underſtood ſee before, 1 King.15.9,10. And ſo his heart being upright all his days, I underſtand it with Martyr, not that he never fell into ſin, but that he maintained the worſhip of the true God onely, and oppoſed idolatry to the end, although he fell otherwiſe and was puniſhed therefore, as is afterward ſhewed. Lyra ſaith, his heart was perfect, till he fell, as is ſhewed, chap.16. which was the greateſt part of his time, but how the greateſt part can be underſtood by all his dayes, I ſee not.

V. 18. And he brought into the houſe of the Lord the things which his father had dedicated, &c.] This is not to be underſtood, as if he did it not till the 15 yeare of his reign, after which it is here ſet down; for it cannot be thought, that being ſo godly a King, he would deferre ſo long the rendring unto God the things of God. But happily he now brought in of the ſpoyles that he had taken from the Ethiopians, and dedicated in way of thankfulneſſe, after the repairing of the houſe, and the things dedicated by his father, he brought in before, but both are ſpoken of together without regard of the time for brevities ſake: and in like manner it may be thought, that although the deſtruction of Maacha her idolatry be not mentioned till now, yet he did it ſooner, even in the beginning of his reign, ſeeing no godly King would ſo long permit ſo great an abomination ſo near unto him.

Touching the things dedicated by his father Abijah, it ſeemeth that although he were a wicked King, yet there was ſometime ſome goodneſſe in him, wherein he dedicated to God, as was touched upon 1 Kings 15. 2.

V. 19. For there was no warre untill the 35 year of the reign of Aſa.] The vulgar latine not till the 30 year by a manifeſt errour, as Lyra noteth, for ch. 16.1. it followeth. And in the 36 year, &c. But conſidering that Baaſhab is ſaid to bee the King that made warre upon him, and he began his reign the third year of Aſa, and reigned only 24. that is, to the 27th. of Aſa; how could he be ſaid in his 36 yeare to have Lyra. come againſt him? Anſ. Lyra, whom Vatablus and Gembrard follow, ſaith, that when Baaſha is ſaid to have begun to reign the third year of Aſa, it is meant the third year of his reign after the great victory obtained againſt the Ethiopians, from which time he began to be more potent then before by farre; and ſo the third is indeed the thirteenth year from the beginning of his reign. And to make this the more probable, he proveth it by the like in the hiſtory of Nobuchadnezzar, Dan. 2, who is ſaid to have done thus and thus the ſecond year of his reign, whereas indeed it was the 25. but the ſecond of his Monarchyall nations being now ſubdued unto him.

Adricomius in his Chronology, Melchior Canus, Cajetan, Iohannes Lucius, and Annius ſay, that this place is corrupted by the fault of the writer, 35 being put for 25. But the Hebrew Chronicle which Iunius followeth, ſaith, that by the 35 year of Aſa his reign, is meant the year of that kingdome, over which he reigned, ſince the diviſion of Iudah from Iſrael; for Rehoboam reigned ſeventeen, Abijam three, unto which, if 16 in Aſa his time be added, we come to 36. Thus alſo Pellican; againſt every of thoſe, ſomething may be objected. Againſt the firſt, the victory over the Ethiopians was after the 13 year of his reign, and if it be granted, that the 3 be put for the 13, all the accounts of the times hereafter, will be uncertain. Againſt the ſecond, admit an errour in the writing eſpecially all copies conſenting, the authority of the holy ſcripture is hereby weakned, and it is contrary to that ſaying, Not one jot or title of the Law ſhall faile. Againſt the third it is expreſſely ſaid in the thirty ſixt yeare of the reign of Aſa: and afterwards in the 39 he fell ſick, and ch.
16. 13. he died Anno 41 after he began to reign. Amongſt theſe yet, I preferre the firſt, only whereas Lyra underſtandeth by the third year, the thirteenth, I would rather underſtand the ſeventeenth, which was truly the third after the Ethiopian victory, when he returned to Ieruſalem and reigned in greater glory, and then the 36 year will be but the 22. from the beginning of his reign ſo reckoned, but indeed the 36. and ſo the yeares of account remain certain, notwithſtanding for the kings of Iudah, but for the kings of Iſrael, an interregnum muſt be granted, before Baaſhah; of 14 yeares; Martyr ſeeing theſe difficulties ſaith, that the account muſt begin when Aſa his reign began to be troubled with warre, viz. after the tenth yeare, and when Baaſha began to reign over all Iſrael, which he did but in 2 King. 15. 16. Pellican. part. Wherefore there was warre between Aſa and Baaſhah king of Iſrael all their after that he began to warre againſt Aſa, Anno 36. of the kingdome of Iudah, over which Aſa reigned; and this was the ſixteenth of Aſa, the thirteenth of Baaſhah, and continued eleven yeares; but according to the former account five yeares. And whereas it is ſaid, Wherefore there was warre, it is to be underſtood becauſe Aſa was zealous in beating down idolatry, and proſpered, & hereby many more were drawn to him out of Iſrael; 2 Chr. 15. 9. Baaſha to ſtop their paſſage built Ramah, and fought

2 Chron. 16. 1. &c. How Baaſhah began his warre; but more fully, 2 Chron. 16. 1. In the 36 year of the reign of Aſa, Baaſhah the king of Iſrael came up againſt Iudah and built Ramah, Ioſeph. Antiq. l. 8. c. 6. that none might goe in or out to Aſa. This Ramah belonged to Benjamin, and as Ioſephus ſaith, was taken by Baaſhah firſt, and then he fortified it, that from thence he might annoy the reſt of Aſa his kingdom; and laſtly ſaith hee, Baaſhah did ſet upon Ramah, no ignoble city, and took it, being 40 furlongs from Ieruſalem: and it being taken, he fortified, that he might make it the ſeat of the warre, from whence his ſouldiers might waſt with their excurſions the kingdome of Aſa. And by this means he kept the inhabitants thereof, that they could not go out to Aſa, and the reſt of Aſa his ſubjects, that they could have no paſſage; that, or elſe none of all the kingdome of Iudah could goe in or out in ſafety, ſuch advantage had he againſt them by reaſon of this fortification. Aſa being thus ſtreightned, did not put his truſt in God, as formerly hee had done, nor in this confideuce goe out with his army againſt him, as he ſhould have done; and ſo he ſhould have been ſure to proſper: as in warring againſt the Aethiopians. But being afraid, he baſely begeth gion; ſending unto him all the gold and ſilver in the Lords houſe, and in the kings, to make him break his league with Baaſhah, and to come and help him by invading Baaſhah his dominions. Shiſhack the king of Egypt had come once before and taken away theſe treaſures in Rehoboams time, but ſince that Abijah had a great victory over Iſrael, and without doubt great ſpoyles, whereof hee dedicated much to the Lords houſe, and with part filled his own coffers. And afterwards Aſa obtained a notable victory over the Ethiopians, and then enriched both with the ſpoyles much more, but now all this is ſent away to Benhadad. And herein Aſa ſinned divers wayes. 1. In that hee fell from his faith, and confidence in God. 2. Robbed his houſe of the pretious things thereof, when no neceſſity urged him unto it. 3. Sought help of an idolatour. 4. Was an occaſion of Benhadads truce-breaking with Baaſhah, which was doubtleſſe confirmed by oath, which is ſacred and inviolable amongſt all nations. If the queſtion be whether a league with an idololatrous king be lawfull, I anſwer with Martyr, ſome league for peace-ſake, which we muſt ſeek as much as in us lyeth, with all men may be made, as between Iacob and Laban, the Venetians and the Turks, the Polonians and Tartars; but a league to help and to fight one for and together with another, is altogether unlawfull; for when Iehoſaphat did ſo, he was reproved; and it is written, be not unequally yoaked with Infidels, ſeparate your ſelves and come from amongſt them. The king of Syria is eaſily moved by gifts contrary to his league with Baaſhah to goe againſt Iſrael, and ſmiteth divers cities, whereby hee was forced to retire from Ramah. But Toſtatus thinketh that there was ſome colour of reaſon ſo to doe, ſeeing as Aſa ſaid by his Embaſſadours unto him, there was a league alſo between Aſa and Benhadad; wherefore ſeeing Baaſhah ſo unjuſtly moleſted him, he might; aid Aſa againſt him. But both being his confederates, he ought not certainly to goe from his oath to either of them.

But Hanani the ſeer came then unto him and ſaid, Becauſe thou haſt truſted to the king of Syria and not to the Lord, therefore are his forces eſcaped out of thy hand.] That is, according to Lyra and others, whereas if thou hadſt truſted in God, and gone to warre againſt Baaſha thou ſhouldeſt have prevailed, yea although the king of Syria his forces had joyned with him, and ſo both their armies ſhould have been ſubdued by thee, to the greater ſafety of thy kingdome for a long time. But now they are out of that danger, and remain ſtrong to annoy thee hereafter, as is further intimated v. 9.

V. 8. Then he put him in minde of his victory againſt the Ethiopians, when he truſted in God, and told him, that he had done fooliſhly, as he did indeed to empty his treaſures to hire one to help him; who did bear ſuch a mercenary minde, that he would be for him that ſhould give him the greateſt guifts, and therefore if afterwards the king of Iſrael did wage him with greater guifts, he would moſt probably do as much for him. If it be demanded, may not a king, then, who feareth God, if greater forces then his come againſt him, ſeek help of another king, but put his truſt in God onely for ayd? Admit, that the other king who cometh againſt him, ſuppoſing his cauſe to be juſt putteth his truſt in God alſo, will he be aſſiſtant to them both? This queſtion is moved by Toſtatus, becauſe by the prophets ſpeech it is intimated, that Aſa ſhould have truſted in God, as he had formerly done, and not have ſought the help of another, and anſwered thus obſcurely, God doth for the moſt part leave to common-prudence thoſe things, which he hath decreed to do by the comming between of ſecondary cauſes, but ſometime peculiarly ſhew, that he will effect ſomething altogether by them, and then there is no place for humane prudence, but a certain truſt in him is required, which was the caſe of Aſa. His meaning, as I take it, is, that now it could not be ſo, as is put in the queſtion, for Aſa onely had a ſure ground of confidence; his former ſucceſſe and a promiſe from the man of God; but Baaſhah not, when there is no ſuch ground, and both parties truſt in God, they may on both ſides uſe ſuch means as humane prudence doth dictate, but he, who to his truſt in God hath indeed a juſt cauſe, ſhall by his aſſiſtance moſt probably prevail. In reproving Aſa, the prophet concludeth thus, The eyes of the Lord run through the whole earth, that he may be firm to them that truſt in him, thou haſt done fooliſhly, and for this, Warres ſhall now riſe againſt thee. Whereby he intimateth the ficklenesſe of the king of Syria, in whom he now truſted, and that in way of revenge, warres ſhould be made againſt him by Baaſhah continually, of which although nothing be ſpoken particularly, yet it is ſaid, there was warre between Aſa and Baaſhah all their dayes.

V. 10. Then Aſa was Wroth With the Seer and committed him to priſon, and he oppreſſed certain of the people at that time] Junius. Junius hath it, in carcerem cippi, he ſet him in the ſtocks, he took it ſo heinouſly, that he had ſo much diſgraced him. Becauſe he was angry with him for this matter, the vulgar Latin, for the Lord was very angry for this matter, and ſleW very many of the people. Lyra. That is, ſaith Lyra, becauſe the people did many of them haply agree with the king againſt the prophet, the Lord therefore ſlew them in the wars, which he cauſed to be raiſed againſt them. But in the Hebrew it is plainly ſaid, Aſa oppreſſed of the people. And it is meant as plainly that he, and not the Lord was wroth for the ſpeech of the prophet, inſomuch that when ſome godly affected ſpake againſt this his tyranny, he committed them alſo. Pellican. Wherefore I marvail, that Pellican ſhould alſo apply it to the Lord almoſt as Lyra doth, but he was deceived by the vulgar Latin, and for want of looking into the Hebrew text.

V. 11. But behold the matters of Aſa firſt and laſt are written in the booke of Iudah, &c.] of which ſee before, ch. 9.29. 1 Kings 15.23.

V. 12. But Aſa was diſeaſed in his feet the thirty ninth yeare of his reigne, &c.] Vengeance ſlept not long after his ſin, Anno, 36. he hired Benhadad againſt Baaſhah, and it is moſt probable, that in carrying away the materials from Ramah to Gibeah, and Mizpha, and building thoſe cities, he ſpent a year or two, and then the Prophet came to reprove him moſt probably in the 38 year, and he was puniſhed ſutably to his ſin in his feet with moſt tormenting pangs, as he had ſet the Prophet by his feet in the ſtocks. And to ſhew that this ſin went not alone, it is added, that he ſought not the Lord, but truſted to the Phyſitians, that we by his example might be warned both to flye all ſin, becauſe if we commit one, as a link of a chain it drawes in more after it, and in time of ſickneſſe, firſt and chiefly to ſeek to God, and Phyſitians only, as a means under him of recovering our health. But Aſa ſeemeth to be taxed for ſeeking to Phyſitians, becauſe this diſeaſe was ſent by God as a puniſhment, and therefore he ought in this caſe to have ſought to him only, and not naturall meanes; which now could doe him no good.

V. 13. Then Aſa ſlept With his fathers the forty one year after he began to reign, &c.] His torments continued, and he was never healed of them to his death, becauſe he took not the right way; but being dead, he was buried like a noble king, in a ſumptuous ſepulcher prepared by himſelfe, and filled with ſweet odours, which they Lyra. burned to make a ſweet perfume; whereby as Lyra ſaith, the ſtink of the dead body was taken away.

Pellican. And this is reckoned by Pellican as another ſinne of Aſa, his vanity in being ſo profuſe about his dead body, after the manner of the heathen, and not of the holy Patriarcks who were before him. And he noteth, that when any coſt is ſpoken of about dead bodies, there is nothing in any place ſaid of any coſt beſtowed for prayers to be ſaid for the ſoule, whereby it is evident, that they believed not a purgatory, but that the ſoule went immediately to the place where it muſt abide for ever, either of weale or woe. This laſt of his is good, but in reckoning this, as another ſin in Aſa, I cannot ſubſcribe unto him. For the laying of a dead body in a fit ſepulcher is every where ſpoken of as an honour; and likewiſe the burning of ſweet odours, that they in whom the fragrant ſmell of vertue was in their life time, might be kept from ſtinking, when they were dead, as having ſtill a ſweet ſavour amongſt the living, by their good name left behind them. And for the cuſtome to doe this to the dead bodies of kings worthy, ſee in the hiſtory of *Ierem, ch.*21.19. of whom it is ſaid, that becauſe he was wicked, the people made no burning at his funerals, according to the manner of his anceſtours. And for the Patriarks, although we read not of any burning of ſweet odours about them when they were dead, yet Iacob was embalmed, and ſweet oyntments were prepared, and ſpices for the body of Chriſt being dead, which ſheweth that it was a caſtome amongſt the faithfull, till that time, to beſtow this kind of coſt upon their dead: and it ſeemeth by our Lord to be approved, when he rebuked Iudas for finding fault with her, that beſtowed a boxe of very precious ointment upon him, and praiſed her, ſaying, ſhe anointed him to the buriall, and that this ſhould be ſpoken of to her praiſe whereſoever the Goſpel ſhould be preached.

Touching Nadab the ſonne of Ieroboam, he was alſo wicked, as his father had been, and therefore was ſoon cut off by Gods juſt judgement, and then the reſt of Ahabs houſe by Baaſhah, as had been before threatned; and he is ſaid to have ſmitten him in Gibbethon of the Philiſtims, as he and all Iſrael were beſieging it. This Gibbethon, ſaith Martyr, was ſcituated in the tribe of Dan, and poſſeſſed by Iſrael in the dayes of David and Solomon, but for the ſinnes of the people it came into the hands of the Philiſtims, and ſo is ſaid to bee of the Philiſtims, but now Nadab ſought to recover it to Iſrael again. Pellican ſaith, it was within the inheritance of Iudah, but moſt probably poſſeſſed by the Philiſtims, as alſo ſome other cities in ſome other tribes. But Iunius proveth it to be within the inheritance of the tribe of Dan, Ioſh. 19. 44. and H. B. ſaith, that it was a city of the Levites not farre from Ekron of the Philiſtims, ſcituated in the tribe of Dan, 16. miles from Ieruſalem, and 36. from Thirza, from whence Nadab went.

V.29,30.

Baaſhah one of his captains ambitious of the kingdome, conſpired againſt him near this city and ſlew him, and reigned in his ſtead; wherein although there was a divine providence for the puniſhment of Ierobooms wicked family, yet he ſinned by murther and ambition, as Martyr noteth, and proved no better afterwards, but worſe when he was king. Yet he was made an inſtrument to execute Gods judgement upon Ieroboams houſe, by cutting them all off. Whereas ch. 16. 2. the Lord ſaid unto him by his prophet, I made thee captain over my people. His uſurping of the kingdome is not hereby juſtified, God made him king becauſe he ſuffered him to come to the kingdome, but approved not the way, whereby, ſeeing he gave him no calling to it, and ſtreightly forbiddeth murther, eſpecially of kings, to whom every ſoul ſhould be ſubject. If it be demanded, but did not God know, whē he threatned Ieroboam, that Baaſha ſhould be the inſtrument to cut off his poſterity, & if he meant that he ſhould ſhed all this bloud, & in ſo doing he did but his wil, how can ſin be laid to his charge? Anſ. God knew, that thus it ſhould be done long before it came to paſſe, but his fore-knowing of a thing to be done, and decreeing it in judgement is no juſtification of the doer, if he doth it without particular warrant from him againſt his generall lawes, ſeeking himſelf and not the accompliſhing of Gods decree. This Baaſhah is here called the ſonne of Ahiah of the tribe of Iſſachar, but by Ioſephus; one of his domeſtick friends Baſanes the ſonne of Machelus, who ſlew him by treachery, and he was the firſt king murtherer, that hitherto we read of, thus opening the way to this foul ſinne, and therefore it was in him moſt deteſtable, and he afterward had his reward accordingly, being firſt ſuffered to fall into other groſſe ſinnes, as we read ch. 16. Nadab the ſonne of Ieroboam being thus murdered, it is moſt likely, that his dead body was expoſed to the devouring of the dogs, as had been formerly threatned to Ieroboams poſterity, and therefore we reade of no buriall thereof.

CHAP.

CHAP. XVI.

V. 1,2. B*Vt the word of the Lord came to Iehu the ſonne of Hanani againſt Baaſhah, ſaying,* becauſe I have exalted thee out of the duſt, &c.] Hanani the father of this Iehu Hieron. in Zephan. was alſo a prophet ſent before to Aſa, 2 Chron. 16, 7. and this very ſaying, Iehu the ſonne of Hanani, according to the tradition of the Iews, intimateth him to be a prophet, for they ſay, that when any prophet is named together with his father, his father was alſo a prophet. Of this Iehu, ſent long after this to Iehoſaphat, ſee more 2 Chron. 19. 2. although ſome think him to have been another man. The prophet putteth Baaſha in minde of his former mean condition, out of which he was raiſed by God, or elſe he could never have attained to this regall dignity, as hath been formerly touched. It is not neceſſary becauſe of this ſaying, to hold with Sallianus, that ſome meſſage was formerly brought unto him, that he ſhould reign, by the ſame Iehu, as had been to Ieroboam, to whom he was ſo like; firſt, in comming to the kingdome, being taken from another for idolatry; ſecondly, in idolatry; thirdly, in having a ſon to reign after him but two years onely, being then ſlain; fourthly, in the cutting off of all his poſterity and the manner of it. For if any meſſage had come unto him before it would have been expreſſed, as that to Ieroboam, neither would his ſin againſt his maſter in ſlaying him and his poſterity have been ſo great. For he did not out of obedience to God, but out of ambition and barbarous cruelty, unwittingly working the will of God herein. To put which out of doubt this is reckoned, as one point of Baaſhah his wickedneſſe, that he ſlew Nadab, v. 7. in theſe words.

V. 7. And by Iehu the prophet, the ſonne of Hanani, the word of the Lord came againſt Baaſha and againſt his houſe, for all the evill which he did in the eyes of the Lord, becauſe he provoked him with the works of his hands, that he ſhould be like the houſe of Ieroboam, and becauſe that he ſlew him.] For thus theſe words [he ſlew him] are P.Martyr. expounded by Martyr, who ſaith that in the vulg. Lat. indeed, theſe words [he ſlew him] are expounded, that is, the prophet Iehu, but erroneouſly, becauſe Iehu lived ſtill to ſpeak to Iehoſhaphat divers years after Baaſha his death, as hath been already touched.
Lyra. And Lyra confeſſeth, that ſome expoſitour wrote theſe words in the vulgar Latin, [that is, Iehu the prophet] for explication, and afterwards by corruption they crept into the text, for R. Solomon ſaith, that it ought to be referred to Nadab, in ſlaying whom Baaſha greatly ſinned, ſeeing he was his maſter, and although he were wicked, yet Baaſha was worſe, and had no authority given him to ſtrike him. If it be objected, it was the will of God, that he ſhould be thus ſmitten, it hath been already ſufficiently anſwered, the fulfilling of his will unwittingly herein, did no more juſtifie Baaſha, then the Iews fulfilling of what was by God before determined, their bloudy crucifying of our Lord Ieſus. So then here is a repetition made in this verſe of things paſt, not idly, but to ſhew one cauſe more of Gods ſeverity againſt Baaſha and his houſe, that he might be puniſhed in his kinde, the ſame meaſure being meted to him, that he had meaſured to others. And the Hebrews ſay, that God was the more offended with Baaſha for killing Nadab ſo treacherouſly at that time, when he was beſieging Gibbethon, becauſe the taking thereof from the Philiſtims was hereby hindered. Touching the prophet Iehu, that it is not meant that he was ſlain by Baaſha is the more probable alſo, becauſe Joſephus makes no mention of his death, nor yet the ſacred hiſtory, as it doth commonly, when any prophet is ſlain for doing the meſſage, about which God ſendeth him.

V. 3. To proceed now again, in the propheſie of Iehu, he threatneth Baaſhab from the Lord, that his poſterity ſhould be cut off, as Ieroboams, and not have any buriall, but be eaten up by the dogs, and fowles of the ayr, becauſe he followed him in idolatry, which ſheweth, that he did not deſtroy Ieroboams poſterity in any V. 6. zeal to God, but out of his own malice. Whereas Baaſhah is ſaid to have ſlept with his fathers, and to have been buried in Thirza, it is to be underſtood, that the threatning before-going of being devoured with dogs and fowles is to be reſtrained ned onely to his poſterity, and not extended to his perſon only.

V. 8. In the 26 year of Aſa began Elah, the ſonne of Baaſhah to reign over Iſrael in Thirza, &c.] How Baaſhah is ſaid to warre againſt him, and 36 of Aſa his reign; 2 Chr. 16 ſeeing he was dead, and his ſon ſet up for King 10 yeares before that time hath been reſolved upon that place. Of Elah is nothing commemorated, but that he V. 9. was ſlain by Zimri a Captain of halfe his chariots, when he was drunken in the ſecond year of his reign, and he reigned in his ſteed; that all, men by his example might learn to beware of drunkenneſſe, which hath been the overthrow of kings and great men, Benhadad, Belſhazzar, Holofernes, Alexander, and Cyrus, Ammon, and Nabal, &c. The idolatry of Elah, wherein he followed his father is not here mentioned, but v. 13. they are both put together, as making Iſrael to ſin; for which, both he and the whole houſe of Baaſhah were deſtroyed by Zimri and their friends and kinſmen, which was doubtleſſe done on his part to make the kingdome the more ſure to himſelfe; but on Gods part one wicked man was uſed as an inſtrument to puniſh another, and to fulfill his word. Neither did his taking away of all, that might endanger him, any thing conduce to his eſtabliſhment upon the V. 15, 16. throne, which he had uſurped; for he was again put down, and ſlain in ſeven dayes by the army lying ſtill againſt Gibbethon of the Philiſtines. Whereby it appeareth that although Nadab the ſonne of Ieroboam fought againſt it, yet in all Baaſhah his time, which was 24 yeares, it was not taken, nor in Elah his time: viz. two yeares more. It is to be conceived, that Baaſhah by reaſon of his warres with Aſa, did nothing againſt it all his time; but the ſiege was again begun by Elah, and continued till he was ſlaine. For the manner of Zimri that uſurpers death, the army before Gibethon hearing of his treachery in killing the king, immediately made V. 17, 18. Omri Captain of the army, king; who forthwith marched with his army to Thirza, where Z*imri* had uſurped, which was diſtant from Gibbethon 36 miles, and took the city; which Zimri ſeeing, entred the kings palace, and ſetting it on fire, burnt it and himſelfe together, which is ſet forth as a judgement befalling him for V. 19. his ſinnes; wherein he was like unto Baaſhah: not ſo much after his comming to the kingdome, for that time was too ſhort, being but ſeven dayes; but before, when he was a private man. Omri being made king, could not at the firſt enjoy this V. 21. dignity quietly, for part of the people ſet up Tibni to bee king, but within a few yeares he dyed, and then Omri reigned twelve yeares; that is, ſaith Iunius, counting the time that he had a competitour, and the time that he reigned alone; for he began to reign immediately after the death of Elah was heard of, that is, Anno 28. of Aſa, ſeeing Elah began his reign, Anno 26. and was ſlain in his ſecond year; and in the 31 of Aſa he began to reigne in quiet, Tibni being dead; and v. 29. his ſonne Ahab began to reigne the 38 of Aſa. Which times being counted together, doe indeed make but 10 yeares. Wherefore Expoſitours ſay, that his time began the 27th of Aſa, and Elahs two yeares, one yeare before his father Baaſhah dyed, he being made king together with him in his life time; and touching Ahab, the like may be conceived, that he reigned alſo a year with his father, who atteined to the 39 of Aſa by this account, reigning ſtill with his ſonne one year, after his coronation; or elſe his 12 year being incompleat when he dyed, is counted both to him, and his ſonne Ahab alſo. Whereas Tibni is ſaid to have dyed, and then Omri began to reign the 31 of Aſa; it is to be underſtood, not by a naturall, but a violent death; as is intimated in theſe words. The people that followed Omri prevailed over them that followed Tibni, That is, in warre, wherein moſt probably he was ſlaine; and thus alſo ſaith Ioſephus: and then Omri is ſaid to begin to reign, that is, to enjoy the whole kingdome of Iſrael, which he had before but in part, it being yet uncertain, to whom the whole would fall,

V. 24. This place was *S*hechem, where Iacob dwelt ſometime, for his Wel was there, Ioh. 4. here Ieroboam began to reign, although he removed to Thirza, & here Abimelech long before him, was made king.

Omri being eſtabliſhed in the kingdom, bought the mountain Someron of one Semir for two talents of ſilver, and built it, and called the name of the city Samaria, after the name of the Lord thereof; and ſo this city was thenceforth made the ſtate of the kingdome of Iſrael; and it is moſt probable, that occaſion was given unto him to leave Thirza, and to build his palace, here, becauſe the kings houſe at Thirza was burnt by Z*imri*, that he might not enjoy it, nor the goods therein. Two talents of ſilver are by ſome computed to be 3000 crownes.

V.25. Note. P. Martyr. Of this Omri it is ſaid, that hee did worſe before the Lord, then all that were before him, &c. that is, as Martyr expoundeth it, becauſe being warned in their examples, yet hee without fear of Gods judgements followed them in the ſame abominations. And thus we that live in theſe times, wherein we ſee ſo many made examples of Gods judgement for their ſins, if we ſinne likewiſe, ſhall be judged as worſe then any of them, and be puniſhed accordingly. But Omri is thought to have done worſe, not only by perſiſting without all feare in the ſame wickedneſſe, but by adding ſome things more to their idolatries and ſuperſtitions.

V.28,29,30, 31,32,33. Then Omri died, and Ahab his ſon reigned in his ſtead, who is ſaid to have done worſe then all that were before him; which may be expounded as the like ſaid before touching Omri, for he took Iezabell a Sidonian to wife, and ſet up her gods alſo, and ſinned in the very taking of her contrary to Gods lawes, and in killing the Prophets of God, as is afterwards noted, which none of his predeceſſours durſt do. Iezabel is ſaid to be the daughter of Ethbaal, king of the Sidonians, their very names, ſaith Martyr, being taken from Bell & Baal, ſhewing how greatly they were addicted to idolatry. P. Martyr. And herein he was to be condemned more then Ieroboam, for that he as it ſeemed to him, was by neceſſity compelled to ſet up his golden calves, to keep the people from revolting from him by going to Ieruſalem, and had ſome pretence of repreſenting the true God hereby: but Ahab quietly enjoying his kingdome, and being by no neceſſity urged, was the firſt that brought in other ſtrange gods of the heathen alſo, and built a temple; and planted a grove unto them in Samaria, intending happily to make Samaria, as Ieruſalem, the place to which all the kingdome ſhould reſort to worſhip thoſe ſtrange gods with him. And laſtly, hee proceedeth moſt unjuſtly againſt Naboth, and murdered him to get his vineyard. For the time, the 22 yeares, ſee more upon ch. 22. 40.

V.34. Ioſhuah 6. 29. P. Martyr. In his dayes Hiel the Bethelite built Iericho, hee laid the foundation thereof in his firſt borne Abiram, and ſet up the gates thereof in his young ſonne Segub, according to the Word of the Lord which he had ſpoken by Ioſhua.] This is thought by Martyr and ſome others, to be inſerted here to aggravate the more the ſinnes of Ahab, in that he ſuffered this to be done; the doing whereof had been ſo ſolemnly interdicted under a curſe. But foraſmuch as Iericho belonged to Benjamin, and ſo was not within Ahabs kingdome, but Iehoſaphats who now reigned over Iudah; it may be doubted, how it could be mentioned as a fault in Ahab to ſuffer it, and not rather in Iehoſaphat? Martyr anſwereth, that Hiel being of Bethel, which was within Ahabs kingdome, Iericho was moſt probably at that time a part of his kingdome alſo, ſeeing it was in the poſſeſſion of a ſubject of his. And touching Iehoſaphat the king of Iudah, it is not likely, that he being ſo holy a man would have ſuffered the building hereof, if it had been under him, Yet ſome think, that this is not commemorated as a fault in Ahab, but only that this was done againſt the will of God in the time of his reigne; and that he who preſumed to doe it, was puniſhed in his poſterity, by ſeeing their deſtruction from the eldeſt to the youngeſt, as Ioſhuah had propheſied; ſo that Ahab, in whoſe time it was done, might ſee in this example the truth of the threatnings of Gods Prophets; and conſequently of the Prophet Elijah, againſt him and his poſterity as it followeth; ch. 21. 21. Ioſhuah 6.26. And they who make this expoſition, wil not have Hiel called a Bethelite becauſe of Bethel, but from Beth, an houſe or family, and Alah curſing, as if it had been ſaid, Hiel of the houſe of curſing. For the meaning of theſe words all Expoſitours agree, that it is meant, that when he laid the foundation of Iericho, his eldeſt ſonne ſhould dye; and as he proceeded in building, all the reſt unto the youngeſt, who ſhould dye immediately after a full end made thereof, in ſetting up the gates. And it is to be thought that his poſterity was ſo to bee cut off as that hee ſhould never have any child more to continue his memoriall, who in building this city ſought to bring it to have a name againe after ſo ſolemn a binding of all men from attempting it, whereas the children are puniſhed for the fathers ſinne, and the father is ſuffered to eſcape; wee muſt not call in queſtion the juſtice of God herein, who is Lord over all, and againſt whom all are ſinners; as hath been ſhewed in the like caſes before of Ieroboam, and Baaſhah his poſterity. And it is not improbable, but that they had an hand in this ſin alſo; in that they were well pleaſed in this work, and furthered it. If it be demanded why the Lord layd by Ioſhuah ſuch a penalty upon the builder of Iericho? Martyr anſwereth, that it was the firſt city which was deſtroyed, and that by the immediate hand of God in all the land of Canaan, and therefore it was to lye upon ruinous heapes for ever, to terrifie all wicked and idolatrous perſons that ſhould ſee it, as Sodom. Vnto which we may adde, it was intollerable preſumption in a creature to goe about the ſetting up of that again, which God had ſo miraculouſly overthrowne for the glory of his juſtice and power, as being a ſeeking to bury in oblivion his dreadfull and mighty works. If it be demanded what moved Hiel to build it? It is anſwered, his pride and ambition to get him a name, by rearing up that city again, which had lyen waſte now 536 yeares; but by this preſumption his name was put out by the cutting off of his children. Pellican draweth this to an allegory in the deſtruction of Hiels houſe, the curſe of God being ſet forth, that ſhall come upon all ſuch as enrich themſelves out of the houſe of God, and divine buſineſſes; and then entangle themſelves in ſecular affaires, their function being neglected. He reſtoreth the walls of Iericho alſo, who reſumeth the ſinnes which he renounced in baptiſm, that reneweth the pompe of the world by riotous living, or inſerteth erronious opinions, or heatheniſh fables, into Eccleſiaſticall verity. See more of this before, Ioſhuah 6.26. St. Ierom touching this Iericho ſaith, that Oſa of Bethel in the tribe of Ephraim built it, putting Oſa for Hiel; as alſo ſome Greeks doe, and many call him Achiel. But he ſaith, that it was at the time of the deſtruction of Ieruſalem deſtroyed by the Romans; and after that being built again, it remained to his time: the ruines of the former two buildings ſtill remaining.

CHAP. XVII.

V. 1. BVt Elijah the Thiſhbite of the inhabitants of Gilead ſaid to Ahab, as the Lord God of Iſrael liveth, there ſhall be neither dew nor raine, theſe yeares, &c.] Here is the firſt mention made of Elijah that great Prophet, in whoſe ſpirit, Iohn greater then any Prophet, is ſaid to have come. And he is ſpoken of, as not now firſt beginning to be famous, but as one well known in thoſe dayes, becauſe it is not ſhewed of what parentage or tribe he was. Whereupon ſome Rabbins will have him to be Phinees, but without any colour of probability; for then hee muſt now have been 500 yeares old, and what reaſon is there, why he is called by a new name. It muſt ſuffice us to know that he was of Gilead, as is here ſaid, which was the tribe of Manaſſeh; ſeeing Gilead, who gave the name to it, was the ſon of Machir, the ſonne of Manaſſeh. Yet becauſe part of Gilead belonged to Gad, ſome ſay that hee was of that tribe, and ſome following Iohan. Hieroſol. and Epiphanius, that he was of the tribe of Levi, and a Prieſt; yea Epiph. hæreſ. 55. goes further ſaying, that he was brother to Iodeus the Prieſt, and ſonne to Achimaam; but Iohan. Hieroſol. calls his father Salachab. And although he were of Thiſhbe, a city in Gilead, yet he might be of Levi, becauſe the Levites and Prieſts were diſperſed into all the tribes. Touching this propheſie, ſome ſay that it was then a great drought, and leaſt this ſhould be thought to come to paſſe by nature or chance, Elijah telleth how long it ſhould laſt, and in what manner it ſhould be, that ſo it might appeare to be ſent of God for ſin and idolatry, which did then ſo much abound; and foretold this to Ahab, as the authour of thoſe abominations. But becauſe Iam. 5. Elijah is ſaid to have prayed that it might not rain, this is a groundles conjecture. The truth is, that a judgement being ſhewed upon Hiel his family, and yet no reformatinn following, Elijah comes forth and threatens Ahab with a greater judgement, of which both he and all Iſrael ſhould be more ſenſible. And the Rabbins bold to invent any thing, make a perfect hiſtory of it thus; Elijah ſeeing the judgment of God upon Hiel in his poſterity, ſought hereby to deterre Ahab from going on in his rebellious way. But Ahab contrariwiſe made a mock of this warning, asking him whether Moſes or Ioſhuah was the greater Prophet; and when he anſwered Moſes, Ahab replyed, how then happened it that the word of Ioſhuah againſt Hiel was fulfilled, but the word of Moſes threatning, that for tranſgreſſion the heaven ſhould become as braſſe, and the earth as iron, was never fulfilled; no not now, when as he ſaid, iniquity did ſo abound in him and his people; then Elijah anſwered as in this text, and obteined of the Lord, that it fell out accordingly; ſo Lyra, Martyr, and Pellican.

But the foreſaid Iohan. Hieroſol. determineth not onely the parentage of Elijah, but as he was himſelf a man of a monaſticall life, before he came to be biſhop of Ieruſalem, ſo (he ſaith) Elijah was the firſt of men, that lived alwayes in chaſtity, and the Virgin Mary amongſt women. It is moſt probable, that when he came to Ahab, he came out of ſome deſart place, where he retired himſelf from the ſociety of the common ſort, to converſe with God, out of a deteſtation of the wickedneſſe of thoſe times, for Iohn the Baptiſt, whoſe type he was, did ſo, and the ſudden bringing in of his hiſtory here, intimateth him to have been formerly unknown to the world, but now his zeal for God would not ſuffer him to lye hid any longer, but he muſt come forth to declare that judgement which he had prayed might come, that it might appear, how greatly the Lord was incenſed by the wickedneſſes of thoſe times, to move Ahab and his to repentance. And it is to be noted, that he determineth not the number of yeares, that the drought ſhould continue, but only ſaith, if there ſhall be dew or rain theſe yeares, but according to my word. That is, till I ſhall ſay that it ſhall rain again, which moſt probably he himſelf then knew not, when it ſhould be, but was to depend upon the Lord for further direction. For accordingly the word of the Lord came to Elijah, when he ſhould go and ſpeak of rain to Ahab, ch. 18. 1. Yet St. Iames ſaith, that he prayed, that it might rain, and then it rained, but this was done as he was moved by the ſpirit. Ioſephus relating this hiſtory ſaith, that he threatned, that there ſhould be neither rain nor dew, till he appeared again, and then he went immediatly and hid himſelf ſouthward, wherein he was certainly deceived, becauſe the Scripture ſaith expreſly, v. 3. that he went towards the eaſt. For it is ſaid, Turn thee towards the Eaſt, and hide thee at the brook Cherith, which is over againſt Iordan. There was a cave there, ſaith Ierom, beyond Iordan, Adrichomius on this ſide, in a moſt deſolate place, to which there was no way leading, and in that Elias was to hide himſelf, and to drink of the brook in that time of drought. This river Cherith, ſaith H. B. runneth between Bethel and Iericho, from mount Ephraim towards the north, and ſo paſſing along towards the eaſt, falleth into Iordan, being eight miles from Jeruſalem. But one paſſage more is diverſly expounded. [As the Lord God liveth, before whom I ſtand.] Some taking it to be meant of his ready ſtanding to go about whatſoever meſſage the Lord would ſend him, ſome, whoſe ſervant I am and by whom I was ſent, but others, before whom I have prayed for this, as Martyr, grounding upon that of St. Iames, who ſaith, that he prayed that it might not rain. But the third ſeemeth to me moſt genuine, becauſe it is an apt deſcription of a ſervant, and thus the ſervants of Solomon were deſcribed by the Queen of the ſouth [Bleſſed are thy ſervants, that ſtand alwayes before thee.] And thus much for the explication of this.

But a doubt may here further ariſe, becauſe Elias is ſaid to have prayed, that it might not rain, how he may be juſtified in calling for ſo great a judgement againſt the king and people, ſeeing it is the duty of prophets not to pray againſt but for them, 1 Tim. 2. Let ſupplications be made for all men, &c. 1 Sam. 12. God forbid, ſaith Samuel, that I ſhould ſinne againſt God and not pray for you.

Sol.

Charity indeed requireth that we ſhould pray for all men, but the prophets of God knowing by the ſpirit, which they have, what conduceth moſt for converſion and ſalvation, ſee that judgements are ſometimes neceſſary for this purpoſe, and ſo pray for them, not out of malice, or for any end of their own, but to bring them to God, and then they pray again for the removall of theſe judgements, and ſo Elias did, and it was not altogether without effect in the people, who being thus prepared, and ſeeing a further miracle of fire coming down from heaven upon Elijah his ſacrifice, acknowledged Iehovah to be the onely true God, whereas they had ſerved Baal before. And Samuel proceeded alſo in like manner, firſt calling ling for thunder and rain in wheat-harveſt, and then for fair weather, and Moſes did the like towards Pharaoh in the land of Egypt.

But to return now again to Elijah his hiding of himſelf, where Ahab might not finde him, who the Lord knew, would bee enraged againſt him, when hee ſhould begin to ſuffer by this drought. It may ſeem ſtrange both that Ahab laid not hold upon Elijah, when he was before him, and alſo, that the Lord ſhould bid him go and hide himſelf, when he was able to protect him unhidden. But to the firſt it may be ſaid, that Ahab haply contemned his threatning, as coming from an idle and diſtempered brain of one, who was not to be regarded; and to the ſecond, that the Lord in his example, would teach us to uſe means of preſervation in time of danger, by fleeing and hiding our ſelves, and not to truſt to his immediate providence, when there is any other lawfull way of eſcaping; ſo Martyr.

And thou ſhalt drinke of the brooke, and I have commanded the ravens to feed thee there.] This is ſpoken, leſt Elijah ſhould doubt, when he came into ſo deſert a place, that he ſhould be deſtitute of neceſſary food. And it was a ſtrange way of feeding him, but ſerved to ſet forth the power of God the more, whereby he can make any of his creatures to ſerve for the good of his, although againſt their nature; and Martyr noteth particularly, that the ravens eſpecially did owe the Lord this ſervice for the benefit which they ſingularly above other fowles enjoy by his providence, when they are young; according to Pſ. 147. Who feedeth the young ravens, that call upon him. And Iob 39. 3. For being newly hatched, as ſome obſerve the dam forſakes them, till they be feathered, and in all that time they are by an extraordinary providence ſuſteined; and they determin alſo the means, viz. by little wormes, bred about their neſt. And as the Lord promiſed it was performed to his Prophet: the ravens brought him bread, and fleſh morning and evening, and this the Rabbins are bold to ſay, they took out of Ahabs kitchin. But certainly no man knoweth where they had it, only it is certain that he who employed them about this carriage, could provide it any where at his pleaſure, and he could alſo have ſent it him by his Angels, but it was his will at this time rather to make this uſe of theſe fowles, ſo ſingularly obliged unto him, to teach men to be ready to doe him ſervice for his goodneſſe extraordinary towards them, in feeding the hungry, as he commands, out of that which they have to feed themſelves withall: according to that, He that hath meat let him give to him that hath none. But ſeeing the raven is an unclean bird, why would the Lord have meat brought to Elijah by ravens, or how could he eat it without being defiled? Martyr anſwereth, the ſame Lord, who would have the raven generally counted unclean, by appointing the ravens now to bring him meat diſpenſed with that law, and indeed in caſe of neceſſity Chriſt teacheth, that a ceremoniall law need not to be kept, but that a mans neceſſity for the preſervation of his life is alwayes a diſpenſation to it, when hee juſtified his Diſciples plucking of eares of corn upon the Sabbath being hungry, ſaying, man is not made for the Sabbath, but the Sabbath for man, Thus Martyr; but it is to be noted, that although the raven was unclean, and they that did eat of it, or touch the carcaſſe of it being dead, were hereby indeed made unclean for a time, yet no uncleanneſſe was by it contracted whilſte it lived, and therefore no diſpenſation was now needfull. Allegorically by the ravens, the ordinary gloſſe underſtandeth the Gentiles black by ſinne and idolatry, but they bring meat, as it were, unto Chriſt, when they turn to the faith; according to that ſaying of his, when the Samaritans came out to heare him, and believed, I have meat to eat, that yee know not of; for that meat was their faith, and herewith Chriſt is fed morning and evening, when the Gentiles embrace the faith in the beginning of the Goſpell, and continue in it unto the end. The Papiſts to countenance the ſuperſtition of Anchorites, parallel this of Elias, with the like done to Paul the firſt Eremite, who they ſay had bread brought unto him once a day by the ravens, herein making him to be of a more perfect life then Elias, becauſe he eat but one meale a day, and bread onely, without fleſh; hereupon commending this courſe of life as moſt perfect, when as by this example of Elijah it is plaine, that it well agreeth with the holyeſt man living ordinarily to eat fleſh as well as fiſh, and two meales a day as well as one, ſo that gluttony and drunkenneſſe be avoided, and abſtinence from all meat be uſed at times of faſting. Only where abſtinence from fleſh upon ſome dayes is by the law of the land enjoyned for the good of the common wealth, obedience herein out of the caſe of neceſſity, is to be yielded by all men.

V.7. But after certain days the brook was dryed up &c. Then the word of the Lord came to him ſaying, ariſe go to Sareptah, &c.] Heb. it is, at the end of days, well rendred by Iun. at the end of a year, as alſo the ſame phraſe is uſed, Gen. 4.3. The drought was now grown very great even to the drying up of water ſprings. God indeed could have cauſed that the water ſhould ſtil have continued here for the uſe of his ſervant, but it ſeemed good unto him rather to work now another miracle, & in providing for him the reſidue of the famin, to provide for a poor faithfull widow alſo, who muſt otherwiſe have periſhed together with her ſon through hunger, and that not in the land of Iſrael, but of Sidon, in Sareptah a city of the Gentiles, which was done as we may gather from the application of Chriſt made hereof, Luke 4. to figure out the rejection of the Iewes, and the vocation of the Gentiles; yet the Rabbins, as Martyr hath it, will ſome of them have this city to be in Iſrael, becauſe they would not have it thought that ſuch a miracle was wrought out of their land; and ſome in France, but moſt erroneouſly, as may appear by that which hath been ſaid; how Elijah ſpent his time when he lived alone by the brook, it is not ſaid, but we may eaſily conjecture, that he ſpent it in prayer, and divine meditations. Ioh. Hieroſ. ſaith, that he was there taught of God a form of living ſolitarily, wherein he afterwards inſtructed others, making this the originall of a monaſticall life. And he addeth, that other godly perſons came thither to him by the guidance of Angels, who were by him confirmed againſt idolatry, and taught to live ſuch a life, &c. When Elijah came to the gate of the city, he ſaw a widdow woman gathering up ſticks, whom happily he knew to be a widdow by her habit, but whether the Lord had yet declared unto him, that R Sole m. Lyra. this was ſhe to whom he was ſent, is by ſome doubted, holding that he asked firſt a little water of her, as Abrahams ſervant ſometime had done of Rebecka, praying before, that her readineſſe in giving it to him, might be a ſigne to aſſure him, that ſhee was the woman. But I rather think, that by a divine inſtinct he knew her ſo ſoon as he ſaw her, becauſe he preſently declared the word of the Lord unto her, and Prophets were of that ſagacity generally, that they knew others extraordinarily, when they came near unto them, although another man could not; as Abijah the 1 Kings 14. Prophet knew the wife of Ieroboam, when her feet did but ſound at his door, before he heard her ſpeak, although ſhe were alſo diſguiſed to deceive him, that could not ſee. He then asked her firſt, as the thing which he firſt ſtood in need of being dry and thirſty, and then calling to her again, would have a little cake brought him H. B. P.t. trav. alſo. The journey of the Prophet from the brook Cherith to Sareptah, ſaith H. B. was 100 miles, and his former journey from Samaria to Cherith 24 miles. Hee might well then, when hee had taken ſo long a journey, bee both very thirſty and hungry; and ſo weary, as that he might gladly ſit down and reſt and refreſh himſelfe there, before he went to the widdowes houſe; neither could he without an extraordinary ſpirit, wherewith he was endued, travaile ſo far without food. But what his ability was in this kind, we may gather from ch. 18. where he is ſaid to have girded himſelfe, and run before Ahabs chariot, when hee made all the haſte that hee could from mount Carmel to Iezreel, which was 16 miles. But now he was doubt- Matth. 4. leſſe weary and hungry, as our Lord when he had faſted 40 dayes, is ſaid afterwards to have begun to bee hungry. Who this widdow was, is not otherwiſe expreſſed, but that ſhe was gathering up ſticks to make a fire; whereby it appeareth, that ſhe Iam. 2. 5. was poore, So God chooſeth the poor in this world: And by her ſpeech it appeareth, that ſhee was one rich in her faith, and by her preſent believing the word of the Lord, which the Prophet ſpake unto her; For ſhe ſaid, as the Lord thy God liveth, and called not gods to record after a heatheniſh manner; and although ſhe had only meale enough to make one cake, and then was likely to dye with famin; yet at this word ſhe imparted thereof to Elijah for his neceſſity, believing to be ſupplyed again miraculouſly, as he had ſaid. It cannot hence be gathered, as Martyr no- P. Martyr. teth, that one ought to give to a Prophet in his need, before that hee giveth to his childe, child, or himſelfe, or parents. For charity beginneth at home, and a man muſt firſt and chiefly provide for his own family, and honour father and mother by ſupplying their wants, and if he hath any thing to ſpare, then give to others; and chiefly to Prophets in want. For when the Phariſees taught, that in giving to the Prieſt, a man did ſo highly pleaſe God, that he needed not thus to honour his parents, they are cenſured as overthrowing Gods command by their traditions. Neither did this widow give the prophet a cake firſt to diminiſh her neceſſary proviſion, which was for the ſuſtentation of her and her ſonnes life, but to have it encreaſed, as it is ſaid indeed that it was.

For whereas ſhe had onely meal and oyl enough for once to feed her and her ſonne, it was now ſo encreaſed from thenceforth as ſhe ſpent of it, that both he and ſhe and her houſe, which was not ſpoken of before, lived upon it many dayes, neither was it thus diminiſhed, till the earth returned to her former fertility. In the text it is ſaid, till God ſent rain upon the earth, not meaning, that then immediatly it ceaſed, for after the rain it was divers moneths, before the earth could yield any fruit, but ſo ſoon as this was done, the miracle of encreaſing the meal and oyl ceaſed, and that was two yeares and an half, as will appear by comparing herewith verſ. 7. How this was done is not to be enquired, for he that promiſed it, could as eaſily do it by his almighty power, as cauſe the earth ordinarily to bring forth corn and oyl by his bleſſing. Yet the Rabbins are bold to ſet down the way, viz. by cauſing the aire about the oyl to turn into oyl, and that about the meal into meal, as in the caverns of the earth, from whence the water-ſprings come, the circumambient aire is by the coldnes & moiſture of the place turned into water, wherby no want followeth the running out of the water, but the ſame current continueth ſtill. It may be noted here, that the famine brought upon Iſrael by the wickedneſſe of king Ahab, extended to ſome forreign countrries alſo, but herein it is probable, that there was a ſpeciall hand of providence directing it to the country of the Sidonians for the puniſhment of their idolatry, who were authours to Iſrael of ſinning thus in their daughter Iezabel, the wife of Ahab, who ſprung from their king, the land of Judah under good king Iehoſaphat, being in the mean ſeaſon free from this judgement, and all other countries alſo, as may well be ſuppoſed, becauſe no hiſtory maketh mention of any ſuch famine in all the world, and Toſtatus argueth againſt it both from naturall cauſes, which never are of a famine in all parts together, ſeeing the conſtitution of divers clymates are divers, and from ſupernaturall, ſeeing God doth not at any time puniſh all countries in one kinde. But amongſt the Sidonians and Tyrians that this famine was, Menander teſtifieth, ſaying, in the time of Ithobaal king of the Tyrians, there was ſuch a defect of rain from the moneth Hyperberetens unto the Hyperberetens of the year following, that none fell in all that time, but when he had appointed ſupplications to be made, a great deal of thunder followed, wherein yet he goeth from the ſacred hiſtory, which ſpeaketh not of a year only, but of three years and ſix moneths. If it be asked, why the prophet was not ſent at the firſt to this widow? Toſtatus anſwereth rightly, that Ahab making enquiry after him, when he began firſt to be vexed with the famine, in all kingdomes about, as Obadiah afterwards told him, it had been hard for him to be hidden in a populous city, but now having ſearched in all places as much as he could after him, and hearing no where of him, he did moſt probably give it over, reſolving that either he was dead, or elſe taken away ſo by the ſpirit, as that he could not be found.

V. 17.

After theſe things it happened, that the womans ſonne fell ſick, and his ſickneſſe was ſo ſore, that no breath was left in him, &c.] That is, whileſt Elijah yet ſojourned with her, the Lord did thus exerciſe and further confirm her faith. She ſeeing her ſonne dead, expoſtulateth with the prophet, as calling her ſinne to remembrance before God, for which ſhe thought that her ſonne was thus taken away from her. Therefore he carieth the childe into his chamber and prayeth again, and again, and ſtretcheth himſelf upon him three times, and he was reſtored to life again, and ſhe was more confirmed in her faith. The meaning of her expoſtulation was, as if ſhe had ſaid, what have I offended againſt thee that I am now thus puniſhed? and if not, this is come upon me for my former ſins and preſent impurity, which appears to be the more foul, now that I have ſo holy a man with me. Thus P. Martyr and Pellican. But Lyra rejecteth it in the laſt part, which is the expoſition of the Hebrews, becauſe none fare the worſe for their ſinnes, for having ſuch as are more holy with them, but rather the better for their ſakes, wherefore he confirmeth the former, ſhe ſeeing him to be a man zealous againſt ſinne in Ahab, thought that he had alſo called for this judgement againſt her for her ſinnes, of which being a godly woman ſhe could not but be moſt ſenſible, and this I take to be the true meaning. She out of her grieved and troubled minde ſpake ſo unto him, as if he were the cauſe. But to clear himſelf, he took her ſonne to him and prayed, &c.

For Elijah his ſtrange geſture in ſtretching himſelf upon the body of the childe three times, which the Chaldee rendreth he ſtreightned himſelf, the Septuagint

2 Kings 4. 35. he breathed upon him, he did this as an inſtrument of God, and ſo did Eliſhah in imitation of him, thus helping by the ſpirit, that was extraordinarily in him, the body to wax warm, and ſo to be the more fit to be again enlived by the ſouls returning, as God at the firſt breathed into Adam the breath of life and he became a living ſoul, and he did thus and prayed thrice, to intimate his praying to the bleſſed Trinity, and not, becauſe God could not have raiſed him without ſuch means,

Lyra. but God directed him ſo to do, in a myſterie, according to Lyra, Chriſts coarcting or ſtreightning of himſelf upon a humane body being ſet forth hereby, when he took fleſh upon him in the womb of the Virgin Mary, and again when he lay in the manger, and laſtly, when he hung upon the croſſe, whereby man dead in ſinnes and treſpaſſes is quickened, coming once by faith to be united unto him. And ſuch meanes were alſo uſed then, to ſhew the imperfection of the law in compariſon of the Goſpel, when with leſſe ado Chriſt and his Apoſtles raiſed ſome from the

P. Martyr. dead. But as Martyr noteth, this is the firſt, amongſt thoſe that were raiſed up from the dead ſince the creation of the world, but after two were raiſed from the dead by Eliſhah, three by Chriſt, one by Peter, and one by Paul, to ſay nothing of thoſe, that roſe out of their graves at the time of Chriſts reſurrection, and this is held rightly to be the greateſt of all miracles, and therefore this widow, who had ſeene the great miracle of the meale and oyle before, ſaid, Now I know that thou art a man of God, &c. That is, I am more confirmed in it, which I in-

Joh. 4. deed beleeved before, as the Samaritans, to her that told them of Chriſt; Now we beleeve, not becauſe of thy ſaying, but we have heard him our ſelves, and know, &c. Touching him that was raiſed, ſome, whom Ierom followeth, hold, that it was Ionah, who is therefore called the ſon of Amittai, that is, of truth in alluding to the ſaying of his mother, I know that the Word of God in thy mouth is true. Hebr. אבורן Amith. But this may well be paſſed over as a Rabbinicall invention. For Ionah was of Gath Hepher a citie in Zebulun, Ioſh. 19. 14 1 King. 14. 25. and not of Sareptah, and his fathers name was Amittai, neither he ſo called, becauſe of the word uſed by his mother upon this miracle. And the time doth not well agree, ſeeing more then 59. years paſſed from this time to the beginning of the reign of Ieroboam the ſecond, two in the time of Ahaziah the ſon of Ahab, twelve of Ioram, 28. of Iehu, and 17. of his ſon, after which Ieroboam reigneth and corrupteth all things, and yet by Ionah a propheſie is uttered, that then much, which had been loſt from the kingdome of Iſrael, ſhould be recovered out of a commiſeration, which God had of their long continued affliction. But although the times may agree to this childe, yet for the reaſons before going, he cannot be that Ionah.

CHAP. XVIII.

V. 1. A*Fter many dayes the Word of the Lord came to Elijah in the third year*, &c.] A doubt may here be made how the drought continued three yeares, and ſixe moneths, according to St. Iames, when as an end was put unto it the third year?

P. Martyr. year? P. Martyr giveth a double ſolution. 1. That the 6 months are not here counted, but the whole years only; but if it were 6 months after 3 years expired, I cannot ſee how it can be ſaid in the third yeare, but rather in the fourth. 2. That he abode 6 months in the land of Iſrael, which are not here reckoned, but only 3 years of his abode with the widdow of Sareptah, and therefore it is to be underſtood, as if it had been ſaid, at the end of 3 years after his comming to Sareptah, which was laſt ſpoken of, the time of the drought before this not being determined in the ſacred hiſtory, but only ſpoken of generally, till that Luke 4. 25. Chriſt ſpeaketh hereof, and after that Iam. 5. 17. to this effect, Martyr. Junius. But Iunius better having ſet down the time of the drought, when he went from the brook Cherith, to be a year, rendereth the words here; many dayes after the third year: that is, 6 months. Neither doth the Hebrew ſo diſagree, but that his tranſlation may be juſtified, ſeeing it is, and there were many dayes; and the word of the Lord came to Elijah the third yeare, that is, many dayes of the drought before his comming to Sareptah, and after his comming thither in the third yeare, about the midſt of the year, this word came unto him that he ſhould goe to Ahab, and tell him that now it ſhould raine again, and this judgement ſhould ceaſe; which was not thus taken away for their penitency in Iſrael, but out of Gods mercy to verifie the ſaying of Elijah, that it ſhould not rain, but according to his word. For Ahab went on ſtill in his wickedneſſe, neither doe we read of any repentance in the people; onely there were ſcattered amongſt them ſome who feared God, and abhorred from that idolatry, even 7000. as is afterwards ſaid, that bowed not the knee to Baal; which doubtleſſe prayed earneſtly to God for deliverance from this famine, and partly for their preſervation, God would now ſend rain upon the earth. V. 2. Whereas v. 2. the famine is now ſaid to have been great in Samaria, it is not to be underſtood ſo, as if it were not great all over that kingdome, but Samaria the Metropolitan city, wherein moſt wickedneſſe was committed, ſuffered moſt hereby.

V. 3. Then Ahab called Obadiah the Steward of his houſe, who feared God greatly, &c.] Note. A wicked king had a godly ſervant, ſo Pharoah had Ioſeph, and Laban Iacob, Saul David; wherefore he may be godly, that liveth in the houſe of the wicked, Naaman ſerved the king of Syria a worſhipper of Rimmon, and there were good chriſtians whom St. Paul ſaluteth, of Caeſars houſe. And herein the providence of God appeares for the preſervation of his faithfull ſervants in time of danger, by placing ſuch about heathen kings, as Daniel alſo, and Nehemiah, and Heſter, and Ebedmelech, V. 4. who delivered Ieremiah out of the dungeon, and here Obadiah is ſaid to be one, that ſhewed his piety in hiding and feeding the Prophets of God in time of perſecution, in caves with bread and water, to the number of 100. which muſt be underſtood to be ſuch, as were inſtructed by other Prophets in companies as their Diſciples, being therefore ſometime called ſonnes of the Prophets, who laboured as their teachers in beating down ſinne and upholding the ſervice of the true God, and ſinging and ſetting forth his praiſes, and oppoſing idolatry; for which Iezabel ſought their deſtruction. Of ſuch it appeares by the example of Obadiah, that the godly have a ſpeciall care, but the wicked maligne them moſt; yet as much maligned as they were, ſee the providence of God in upholding ſo many amongſt a people ſo deſperately wicked, for their more juſt condemnation, when they would not be reformed by them. And from amongſt theſe Prophets God ſometime ſent forth one, and ſometime another, as he pleaſed; and it is not unlikely, but that in the land there were many more provided for by other godly perſons. As theſe by Obadiah, ſo Martyr.

Now this Obadiah ſo well approved of God, Ahab it ſeemeth counted alſo moſt faithfull to him, and therefore in this great drought, in which the beaſts which hee V. 5. had, could find no graſſe to ſuſtein them about Samaria, he took a journey himſelfe one way to ſearch about halfe the kingdome for it, and ſent Obadiah to doe the like about the other halfe, that the horſes and mules at the leaſt might be kept alive. A brutiſh and wicked king, that ſuffered the Prophets of God, the chiefe of his creatures to be perſecuted; and took ſuch care for bruit beaſts; and ſo to many chriſtians, a horſe or a dogge is more then the beſt ſervants of God. Neither did hee ſearch into the cauſe of this judgment to repent and turn, but his ſolicitude was to ſearch out if there were any hay in any place, that it might be brought to Samaria for the ſuſtentation of thoſe beaſts, in which his greateſt delight and confidence was. And herein Obadiah ſerved him, as was his duty, foraſmuch as he knew, that hee was by God ſet up to be King and Lord, and therefore to be ſerved and obeyed in theſe things.

And as Obadiah was upon the way, Elijah met him, and he fell upon his face, &c.]
The Lord directed Elijah not to Ahab at the firſt, who was unworthy for his wic-kedneſſe, but to Obadiah a godly man and a ſervant to the Lords Prophets, ſaith Pel- lican, who ſhewed by his ſpeech, calling him my Lord Elijah, and by his geſture in bowing to him down to the ground, how much in his godly heart he honoured 1 Tim. 5. 17. ſo great a prophet, being here an example to others of giving double honour to Elders ruling well, that labour in the word. When Elijah heard him aske whether V. 8. he were not Elijah, he both ſaid that he was, and immediately bad him goe tell his Lord, that Elijah was there. But Obadiah fearing, that this might be dange-V. 9, &c. rous to him, if the ſpirit of God ſhould in the mean ſeaſon carry Elijah away to another place, ſpake ſo as that he might not be ſent to tell Ahab thus, unleſſe the prophet were conſtantly reſolved upon it, and to inſinuate the more into his favour to deal well with him, he told him, that he greatly feared God from his youth, and was ſuch a friend to the Lords prophets, that he hid and fed 100. of them in time of danger. That which he feared from Ahab, if he ſhould come to him with falſe news, was killing, either for deceiving him when he repoſed ſo much truſt in him, or for that he laid not hands upon him to bring him unto him, for whom he had ſo long ſo anxiouſly ſought, and if doubting whether Elijah would then indeed ſhew himſelf to Ahab, he ſhould refrain from going upon this errand when the prophet bade him, there might alſo be danger that way from the hand of God, for his diſobedience. Now in ſetting forth his own goodneſſe in this neceſſary caſe he ſinned not, although out of ſuch a caſe in vain-glory to do ſo that a man may be praiſed, is not without ſinne.

V. 10. There is, as the Lord liveth, no nation or kingdome, to which my Lord hath not ſent to ſeek thee, &c.] This, as all expoſitours agree, is not to be underſtood ſtrictly, as the words ſound, as if Ahab had ſent all over the world to ſeek Elijah, although the Hebrews hold ſo, affirming Ahab, but falſly, to have been Emperour over all, for he reigned not over Iudah which was neareſt unto him. It is then to be underſtood of all the neighbour kingdoms, with which Ahab was in league, and by vertue thereof might require any of his ſubjects being fled thither, to be redelivered unto him, taking an oath of them to anſwer truly, whether they knew him to be there or not, as they might in the like caſe of him. And therfore he ſaith only, there P. Martyr. is no nation or kingdom, not nation or kingdom in all the world. And thus almoſt P.
Martyr at the firſt cleareth this place, but he reſteth finally upon another, viz. that the land under Ahab is ſpoken of as it was in times paſt, conſiſting of many king-domes, there was no nation or kingdome within his dominion, but he had ſent unto it. But I think the firſt is rather to be preferred, ſeeing however that country was in times paſt divided, yet now it was all one kingdome. But if Ahab ſear-ched ſo narrowly for Elijah, it may be doubted, how he could in Sareptah be hidden from him, ſeeing his father in law reigned there? It is commonly anſwered according to the ſaying of Obadiah here, that the ſpirit of the Lord ſometime took him and carried him away, ſo that he could not be found: but I think it may better be anſwered, that Ahab had done making that inquiſition, before the prophets coming to Sareptah, after that giving over the ſearching for him any more, as vain, ſuppoſing him to be carried away ſome whether by the ſpirit, and ſo not to be found, as was partly touched before.

V. 15. Eliiah ſeeing the fear, in which Obadiah was, aſſured him by oath, that hee V. 16. would ſhew himſelfe to Ahab that day, and ſo he did immediately after that Oba-
V. 17. diah had told him. Then Ahab ſaid unto Eliiah, art thou he that troubleth Iſrael?
Toſtatus. But Eliiah replyed ſaying, not I, but thou and thy fathers houſe, &c.] Toſtatus thinketh, that when Ahab ſaw Eliiah comming, he went to meet him for honour ſake, ſake, but his ſalutation by upbraiding him for troubling Iſrael by that great drought, ſheweth the contrary; that hee was angry with him, and now thought to be revenged on him, as the authour of ſo great an evill, ſeeing he had made him in his power; whereas if his going to meet him had bin for honour, his words would have bin ſutable, requeſting his prayers, that an end might be put to the preſent judgment. I think therefore rather with Martyr, that he went to meet him that he might the ſooner terrifie him, and compell him to ſeek for rain immediatly, with the want of which he and his people were now ſo greatly endangered. Thus wicked infidels impute the calamities, which come for ſin, to the ſervants of God, as the cauſe thereof; ſo alſo the heathen in the dayes of Tertullian, if Nilus did not overflow, which was a cauſe of dearth, or Tyber overflowed, whereby the city was endangered, if there were famine or peſtilence, they cried out, have the chriſtians to the lions, as the cauſe of theſe evills.

Note.

Elijah nothing daunted by the kings angry ſpeech, layeth the fault altogether upon him and his idolatrous father, by whom indeed God was provoked to this judgment, for that they left his commandements and ſerved Baalim, that is, ſaith Pellican, the planets of heaven, chiefly the ſun. But Iudg. 2. 13. I have already ſhewed, that all the male gods of the heathen were called Baalim, whereof Iupiter was the chiefe. Elijah in thus reproving the king, did as Iohn who was like unto him afterwards did to King Herod, neither did he more then was juſtifiable. For although the ruler of the people may not be railed upon, yet he may be reproved for his ſins. For the word troubling here uſed, Martyr noteth, that it is put for troubling, either in the out ward eſtate, as Achan is ſaid to have troubled Iſrael; and Iacob ſaid to his ſonnes, that they had troubled him, when they had ſlain the Shechemites; or in things ſpirituall, as Gal.1. St. Paul telleth the Galathians that there were ſome that troubled them. And both theſe wayes, this wicked King troubled Iſrael outwardly by this drought and famin, and ſpiritually by ſetting up idolatry; after which followed a tayle of other groſſe wickedneſſes, cauſing the foreſaid judgement. But he contrariwiſe imputed both theſe wayes of troubling Iſrael to the prophet, ſeeing he ſought as much as he could to hinder the people from idolatry, which hee counted piety, from whence this great judgement ſeemed to him to come, as the weakning and diſſipation of the Roman empire after Conſtantines time was imputed by the heathen to the beating downe of the old religion, which they counted their idolatry to be.

V. 19.

But now ſend and gather to me all Iſrael unto Mount Carmel, and the Prophets of Baal, &c.] It is generally held by all Expoſitours, that ſome others paſſed from Elijah to Ahab before theſe, tending to diſſwade him from idolatry; ſo promiſing raine, and to induce him the more, he ſpoke of the vanity of idols, and of the power of God, a demonſtration whereof he would make before all Iſrael, if they were aſſembled together; and therefore he willed him now to gather to him all Iſrael, &c.] The prophets of Baal whom he would alſo have aſſembled, were 450. and the prophets of the groves 400. which were fed at Iezabels table. The firſt number Martyr thinketh to have lived all over the kingdome, but the other, as Chaplins to the Queen, about her; and that thoſe 450 only were gathered together, the other company which attended upon Iezabels devotions, not being by her ſuffered to come. And to this alſo Pellican agreeth, becauſe thoſe 450 only are mentioned after this, but nothing more ſaid of the other, and therefore moſt probably they came not, But I ſee no reaſon why we ſhould not hold, that the King had his Chapleins as well as the Queen, and therefore I aſſent rather to them, who will have thoſe 450 to bee Ahabs Chapleins, whom hee nouriſhed, as Iezabel did the other 400, yet moſt probably ſo, as that they were ſent out at ſome times into all parts to teach the people their idolatry, and then returned again. The place, to which Elijah would have all theſe gathered was mount Carmel, that is, ſaith Martyr, near mount Tabor in Ephraim, or Zabulon, and not that place in Iudah called Carmel, where Nabal ſometime dwelt. In which laſt he ſaith truly, for Nabals Carmel was but 12 miles from Ieruſalem towards the South-weſt, this 60 or more towards the North. But whereas he ſaith in Ephraim or Zabulon, it was in Iſſachar, char,being the place where Elijah and Eliſhah dwelt, ſtanding almoſt mid way between Ieruſalem & Sareptah,ſeeing from Sareptah to Carmel there were 60.miles, H.B.Patriarcks travels. and from thence to Ieruſalem 64. and from Ieruſalem to Sareptah 112. and from this place the Frier Carmelites took their name, who built them a monaſtery there, ſo H. Bunting. And by this we may conceive, why he would have them gathered to Carmel, becauſe there was his abode, towards which he was coming, when he met Ahab. To Samaria he would not have them gathered together, V. 20. where Ahab dwelt, ſaith Martyr, becauſe ſo Iezabel might have hindered it. According to the prophets deſire, all Iſrael was ſoon gathered thither together, that is, moſt probably all the elders, princes, captains and officers, and not every one of the common people: for that would have required a long time and been a great trouble. If any man ſhall marvail, how Ahab was drawn ſo ſoon to yield to Elijah to do this, it is to be conceived, that partly for fear of greater judgements, if he ſhould refuſe, and partly out of hope, that in thus doing rain would fall again, and a deſire to ſee what Elijah could do, God alſo who hath kings hearts in his hands, and turneth them as he pleaſeth, moving his heart hereunto. And it is not to be doubted, but the people preſſed with miſery, would be very ready upon this occaſion to come.

V. 21. When they were all come together, Baals prophets alſo being preſent, Elijah ſaid unto them, How long halt ye between two opinions, &c.] Ioſephus ſaith, how long are ye divided in minde and in opinions, the Chaldee in two parts, the Septuagint into two knees, hereby is both intimated, that they were diverſly affected, ſometime acknowledging the Lord to be God, becauſe his power was ſo great, that he had now ſhut the heaven above three years, and ſometime drawn by Baal either for fear of the king, or through the perſwaſions of his prophets, being alſo faſcinated by his pompous ſervice with ſo many attendants, accomodated with coſtly apparell, ſtately altars, rich ſacrifice and bewitching ceremonies: and that it is a ſinne intollerable in any to be thus wavering in matters pertaining to God, which be of ſo great moment, flying like birds off one bough on to another, as the word סעפים here uſed properly ſignifieth. For no man can ſerve two maſters, much leſſe two Gods ſo contrary, ſeeing neither will be herewith pleaſed, and it is taxed in 2 King.17. the Samaritans, that they feared God and ſerved idols, and St. Paul ſaith, What 2 Cor.6.16. agreement betwixt the temple of God and idols? which may well be applied to the papiſts for their worſhipping of images, and calling upon the dead. Some gather from hence, that there was a tripartite diviſion, ſome worſhipping Baal onely, as Iezabel, and her prophets and followers, ſome the Lord onely, as Obadiah and other godly perſons, and ſome both, as Ahab and many more, who being worſhippers of Baal, yet trembled at his judgements. The people being thus challenged, anſwered him not a word, for they ſuſpended, till they ſaw what he would do to decide this controverſie, and make it evidently appear whether of the two was the true God, about which the greateſt part began now to ſtagger, although they had hitherto ſerved Baal, becauſe that in all this time of the drought they could have no help from him.

V. 22. Then Elijah ſaid again unto the people, I alone remain a prophet of the Lord; but the prophets of Baal are 450. Let them now give us two bullocks,&c.] Becauſe he had ſaid, if the Lord be God follow him, &c. he now propoundeth a meanes of triall, the Baalites ſhould prepare one bullock for ſacrifice, and he another, and the god that anſwered by ſending down fire to burn it, ſhould be acknowledged to be the true God. Whereas he ſaith that he alone remained a prophet of the Lord, the P. Martyr. meaning, ſaith Martyr, is, that came forth to contend with the Baalites, for many were deſtroyed by Iezabel, and many remained hidden in caves, but Elijah entred theſe liſts alone, which tended to the magnifying of Gods power the more, when by one a greater work was wrought then by many hundreds. But why did he flee to miracles and not to the holy Scriptures for the deciding of this controverſie? Anſw. Some think, becauſe all the aſſembly could not have heard his voice, but the true reaſon is, becauſe he had to do with many that regarded not the Scriptures, as their doings did declare, whom nothing could therefore convince but miracles which are for unbeleevers. And the coming down of fire firſt, and then of water, was not without this Allegory, that the ſpirit to believe is firſt given, and then followeth baptizing. By fire ſent down upon ſacrifices God had divers times before approved his divine power, in Solomons time and Davids, in the time of Moſes and Aaron, and to Manoah the father of Sampſon, and as is held by many, to Abel he ſhewed his acceptation of his ſacrifice in like manner. Wherefore Elijah by a divine inſtinct was moved to propound the ſame at this time, and not to give us an example at all times to ſeek to try out the truth by miracles, leaſt we tempt God. If any ſhall wonder at the Baalites accepting of this offer, ſeeing they could not hope to have fire ſent upon the ſacrifice by a dumbe and dead idol; it is to be underſtood that the Devill can ſometimes ſend down fire from heaven, as upon Iobs cattell, and as is ſaid of Antichriſt working by him, Revel. 13. But againſt God Elijah knew that now he ſhould not be permitted ſo to doe; whereas Elijah biddeth them to call upon their gods, it is not to be underſtood, as if he would have them commit this idolatry, but he ſpeaketh that, becauſe he knew they would do ſo; as if he had ſaid, call upon your gods, if yee will, for I know that out of the vain confidence which yee have in them, yee will doe ſo. And in like manner it is to be underſtood, which he ſaith after this ironically, when he ſaw them to continue calling upon Baal till noon, without any anſwer, Cry aloud, for he is a god, either he is aſleep, &c. for hereby he plainly derided them, who believed him to be a God, that they might be aſhamed; although they being infatuated by Gods juſt judgement, underſtood him as ſpeaking in earneſt; hereupon extending their voyces more. If any ſhall doubt whether Elijah did well in this jeaſting, ſeeing it is forbidden, Epheſ. 5. 4. It is anſwered, obſcene and ſcurrilous jeaſting onely is there forbidden, which tendeth to the corruption of others, and ſheweth nothing but vanity or malice in the heart of the ſpeaker, and is not to the uſe of edifying; but this mocking of Elijah tended to edification to ſuch as were preſent, the worſhippers of Baal, and Baal himſelfe being hereby declared to be moſt vaine, that all ſuch as followed him might be aſhamed, and repent.

V. 28. The Prophets of Baal hearing him ſay ſo, did not onely cry lowder, but alſo cut themſelves till the blood ran out, which they did to move their idol to the more pity. But the hand of the devill was doubtleſſe herein to ſtirre them up to this madneſſe, out of that delight which he taketh in ſhedding of humane bloud, who was a murtherer from the beginning; and not onely them, but others of their ſtamp alſo in other countries. The Sybils of France did cut themſelves likewiſe in their ſacrificing, and geld themſelves. And the Popiſh in Italy doe not much differ from them; when as the week before *E*aſter they whip and fetch blood out of their own bodies, ſo laborious is ſuperſtition to the deſtroying of the ſoule and pleaſing of the devill, whereas true piety doth not teach a man thus to pleaſe God, but by faſting and prayer, and temperance, and flying of ſin in the whole courſe of our lives; hitherto Martyr in theſe words or to this effect, neither doth nor needs any man to ſpeak more for the clearing of all things in them.

V. 29. When noone-tide was paſt, and there was no voice that anſwered, &c. Elijah ſaid to all the people, come to me, &c.] There were two times of ſacrificing, the morning and the evening, to the prophets of Baal the firſt time was given, and the choiſe of the bullock to be ſacrificed, that they might have whatſoever advantage they could deſire, and that they all together ſhould joyn in calling upon their god againſt Elijah alone. Yet all this helped them not, and their time being now paſt, Elijah calleth the people to him that they might ſee, that hee uſed no deceit, and then he firſt repaired the altar of the Lord in that place, which Saul ſometime built, but the Baalites had now deſtroyed, ſaith Pellican, as they did more in other places. Toſtatus alſo underſtandeth this, of the altar ſet up by Saul, as he ſuppoſeth in Carmel, when after his victory over the Amalekites he made his ſtation there, 1 Sam. 15. 12. But neither is it ſaid, that he made an altar there but in Ajalon, 1 Sam. 14. 36. after his victory over the Philiſtims, but from Carmel he paſſed on immediatly to Gilgal to ſacrifice there, neither doth the ſcite of that Carmel agree to this, ſeeing it was in Iudah; this in the tribe of Iſſachar, as was before ſhewed.

Toſtatus.

P. Martyr. ſhewed. Wherefore Martyr thinketh, that it was ſome altar upon which the Patriarks had anciently uſed to ſacrifice. And ſome, he ſaith hold, that the godly thereabouts uſed to come thither to ſacrifice, when they were kept from going to Ieruſalem after the diviſion of the kingdome, as they did alſo in other holy places of note, which the Baalites ſeeing did beat them all down. But this he rejecteth, becauſe there was then onely one altar appointed for ſacrifice at the temple of Solomon, yet he ſheweth none other reaſon, why the Baalites did break down this and other altars of the Lord in the land, according to the complaint of Elijah here following, they have ſlain thy prophets, and broken down thine altars, &c.

And forſomuch as Elijah complained of this, and now erected one of them again to offer ſacrifice thereon, it is plainly intimated, that in the time of that neceſſitie the ſervants of God were diſpenſed withall, when they ſacrificed in ſome other holy places beſides at Ieruſalem, and therefore I ſubſcribe to the fore-recited opinion, as moſt probable. But it is to be noted, ſaith Martyr rightly, that Elijah would not uſe the ſame altar which the Baalites had built, to ſhew, that the ſervants of God ſhould not uſe the rites or idolatrous veſtments and inſtruments of thoſe that ſerved falſe gods, which he complaineth, that ſome did when they uſed thoſe of the papiſts.

V. 31. And he took twelve ſtones according to the number of the tribes of the children of Iacob, to whom the word of the Lord came, ſaying, Iſrael ſhall be thy name.] With theſe ſtones he made up the altar, to ſhew, that all theſe tribes ſhould be joyned together as one in the ſervice of the ſame onely true God, and none of them worſhip name of Iacob their father, changed into Iſrael, that is, a prince of God, of whom Exod. 24. 4. Joſh. 4. 4, 5, &c. they being deſcended did alſo partake of principality, which ſhould have made them ſcorn to ſubject themſelves to dumb idols. The like alſo was done before by Moſes and by Ioſhua, whoſe example Elijah doubtleſſe followed herein.

V. 32. Lyra. Then he made a ditch as it were, of two meaſures of corn] the vulgar Latin hath it, as it were by two ploughings about the altar. But R. Solomon, ſaith Lyra, following the Hebrew text, expoundeth it of two furrowes drawn about ſo much ground, within the which this altar ſtood, as two meaſures of corn might be ſown upon, which he ſaith was done in reſemblance of the court compaſſing the tabernacle, as this is moſt probable, becauſe as the tabernacle had, ſo he would have theſe furrowes as a boundary about the altar, over which the people might ſee the ſacrificing, V. 33, 34. but not come within them. Then he cauſed the ſacrifice upon the altar to be filled with waters, till they ran over into the ditch and filled it, for he cauſed waters to be powred on the firſt, ſecond, and third time, all which he did, to make the miracle of fire coming down and conſuming the ſacrifice the more famous, that none might object any deceit herein, but all might be convinced of the almighty power of the Lord, and ſo turn to him, and from dumb and impotent idols. In cauſing water to be brought to waſh the ſacrifice, Elijah followed the rite preſcribed Levit. 1. but in cauſing it to be powred out ſo aboundantly upon the ſacrifice laid upon the wood, which made it more unapt to burn, he reſpected the miraculous fire, that was to come down, which could as eaſily kindle, and as ſpeedily burn up wet wood as dry, and the water alſo, as this is ſhewed by and by to have done. But whereas he cauſed 4. meaſures or firkins of water to be powred P. Martyr. The Myſtery. on, and this to be done three times, Martyr will have this myſtery to be therein:
The 12. meaſures of water did ſet forth, as the 12. ſtones did, the 12. tribes of Iſrael, and the powring of them on at three times, the three holy Patriarks, from whom they were deſcended, Abraham, Iſaac, and Iacob, and from whom they had learned the right way of worſhipping the Lord. If any man ſhall marvail at Joſeph. Antiq. this aboundance of water in ſo great a drought, and of ſo long continuance, Joſephus thinketh, that ſome Well nigh to that place, which was almoſt dry, was made by the power of God to abound again with water at this time. Some of the Rabbins have deviſed another new and ſtrange way, of water dropping from Eliſha his fingers, who miniſtred unto Elijah in preparing this ſacrifice, applying hereunto, his ſupplying of Iehoſaphats army with water miraculouſly, 2 King. 3.

But leaving this as a vain figment, and that of Ioſephus, as an humane conjecture; we may more probably hold that there was nigh ſome known well of water, not yet dryed up; and from thence they fetched all this water, neither was there need of a miracle to provide it extraordinarily: for otherwiſe they that were bidden to powre on water might, and would doubtleſſe have asked, where they ſhould have
it. Some ſay, that mount Carmel ſtood by the ſea, and therefore from thence they H.B.Patriarks would eaſily fetch water enough, viz. by the ſhore of the Mediterranean ſea, not travels.

All things being thus prepared, Elijah prayeth, that the Lord would ſhew himſelfe V.36. by miracle to be the onely true God, and that he was his ſervant, and ſo make the people to know him, and with their hearts to turn unto him. For now they ſerved Baal, and counted him an impoſtour, and ſo would not be moved by him to turn from their idolatry. This prayer being made, fire came immediately downe V. 38. from heaven and conſumed all the ſacrifice, wood, ſtones, and water, round about; the ſtream. And this execution was juſt, neither could the people without it have approved themſelves for true converts, ſeeing theſe prophets were moſt notorious for ſeducing to idolatry, and who ſo did thus was by the law of God to be put to death, and it was not ſafe to defer it, becauſe of Iezabel the queen, who doubtleſſe Deut. 13. would have been a means to ſave them. If it be doubted, how the fact of Elijah may be juſtified in giving ſentence and not expecting it from the king, who was preſent there, and by his office was the ſupream judge? I anſwer, that at this time Elijah had a power above the king, as Samuel alſo had, when in the preſence of 1 *Sam.*15. king Saul, he gave ſentence againſt Agag and hewed him in pieces. The king was an idolater, and therefore it was not to be expected, that he ſhould now condemn them, neither was his ſentence to be waited for. It ſufficed that there was one, who was extraordinarily ſtirred up by the ſpirit to give this ſentence, for what he ſaid, God ſaid by him, who is King of kings, and accordingly moved the peoples hearts ſo, that it was done by their aſſiſtance, and thus a well-pleaſing ſacrifice was offered unto him, for the averting of his wrath in the drought, and the procuring of his favour, as when Phinees was moved in like manner to ſlay Coſbi and Zimri. Some Numb. 25. think, that Ahab ſeeing the miracle was convinced, and gave his conſent to this ſlaughter, how ever, God ſo wrought in his heart, that he did not countermand, but gave way unto it.

For the fact of Elijah in ſlaying theſe men, it is not ſet forth, that we ſhould imitate it, who are either prophets or private perſons, but leave the ſword of juſtice to be drawn againſt malefactours, by the publike Magiſtrate, who by commiſſion from God beareth the ſword, for this and the like caſes were extraordinary, *Rom.*13. neither is any man of a private motion, but being extraordinarily ſtirred up water, &c.] It ſeems, that both the king and people continued faſting all this day, for they remained firſt expecting, what the prophets of Baal could do, till noon, then they waited to ſee, what could be done by the prophet of the Lord, till the evening, and immediatly after the miracle of fire deſcended, with Baals prophets to the brook, that they might bee ſlaine there. Now therefore it was time for them to take ſome repaſt, and it is not improbable, but that the king had an houſe or tent upon mount Carmel, wherein he might eat and drink, and to this the prophet bade him aſcend from the brook to this end, that after ſome repaſt taken, he might be the fitter to travell home to Iezreel. But Elijah for his own part not caring for food, went up to the top of Carmel to pray, as his geſture declared: for he fell down upon the ground after the manner of one praying, and P. Martyr. put his face between his knees, that is, ſaith Martyr, he fell down to the ground ſo, as that he neither lay nor kneeled with his body erected, but his head bowed down towards the earth, as he kneeled, between his knees, which geſture he uſed in *Eſa.*6.2. greateſt humility, as unworthy to look up to heaven, like the Publican commen- Note. ded by our Lord for his humility, Luk. 18. ſo the cherubims covered their faces with two of their wings, from which examples we ſhould learn to uſe the moſt humble geſtures in prayer. And it is to be noted, that Elijah was ſo intent to praying, that he would not look up himſelf, but ſent his man to ſee, whether any cloud did appear out of the ſea, for this place, as was ſaid before, was near unto it, and when he brought him word that none appeared, he notwithſtanding perſevered ſtill in prayer; when he returned the ſecond and third time, and ſo to the ſeventh, before any cloud could be ſeen. And all this he did, although he knew certainly that God would ſend rain, becauſe it was the will of God, that he ſhould thus earneſtly ſeek it of him, for the making of it more manifeſt; that rain fell not now by naturall cauſes, but by Gods power, that he might yet further appear Note. hereby to be the onely true God: That we might learn by prayer to ſeek all good things whereof we ſtand in need, and deliverance from evils, although the decrees of God ſhall ſtand without our praying, and to perſevere in praying till we Toſtatus. prevail; although we looking often for it ſee no ſigne of audience. Toſtatus comparing the Lords former anſwering him without delay, when he prayed for fire to be ſent down from heaven, with this deferring, when he prayed for rain, ſaith, that was before the people, whoſe beleeving would have been much hindered and Baals prophets not ſo much confounded, if there had been any long delay: but now Elijah being alone, there was no ſuch danger, but this deferring to anſwer him, might be of good uſe to keep him from being puffed up, to which he might otherwiſe have been ſubject, if alwayes ſo ſoon as he prayed, he had received V.44. anſwer; when his man had gone 7. times at the laſt he brought word, that he ſaw a cloud like to a mans hand riſing out of the ſea, the vulgar Latin, quaſi veſtigium hominis, as the ſtep of a man, but erroneouſly, for both the Hebrew and Greek Lyra. have it, a mans hand. He went till the ſeventh time, ſaith Lyra, before he could ſee this, ſeven being a number of univerſality, to ſhew the univerſality of the peoples ſinnes of all ſorts, and overſpreading all, to ſhew, that their ſinnes was the cauſe, why the heavens were hitherto ſhut up. But now they having confeſſed the true God to be the Lord, there was an appearance of an hand, ſhewing Gods hand ſtretched out to help them. Then Elijah ſent to Ahab to haſten home, leſt the waters ſhould hinder him.

V.45. And whileſt he turned himſelf hither and thither, the heavens grew black with clouds, &c.] Hebr. And it was untill this, and untill this.] An ecliptical ſpeech, to expreſſe the ſuddain gathering of the clouds together, whileſt Ahab gave order for the making ready of his chariot, and the horſes were joyned together to draw it.

V.46. And the hand of the Lord was upon Elijah, and he girt up his loynes and ran before Ahab to Iezreel.] For the hand of the Lord, the Chaldee paraphraſt hath, the ſpirit of fortitude, he ſtrengthened him thus to run, when Ahab rode, for reverence to P.Martyr. the king, ſaith Martyr, and that being all the way in his ſight the deeper impreſſion might be made in his minde of the miracle which he had wrought, to move him to turn to the Lord, and he ran even to Iezreel, where Iezabel was, and the 400. prieſts of the groves ſurviving, to ſhew his undaunted courage, and further to inform the people of the doings of the true God, and of the vanity of idols, by ſhewing how rain was at his praying with-held, and now again granted, when Baals prophets could do nothing, that they might now be ſtirred up to leave dumb idols, and become the ſervants of the Lord. The hand of the Lord is alſo ſaid to have been upon Elijah, to ſhew, that he was carried on as by the hand, by the ſpirit of the moſt mighty. Some in yielding a reaſon, why Ahab and Elijah went to Iezreel, not to Samaria, ſay that it was both nearer to Carmel, and that Iezabel was now at Samària, and ſo it was not ſafe for Elijah to come further. But the foundation of this opinion is too weak, viz. that ch. 19. it is ſaid, it was told Iezabel what Ahab had done, and how he had ſlain, &c. whereas in truth it is ſaid, Ahab he told her, not what Ahab, but Elijah had done.

CHAP. XIX.

V.1. IEzabel the Queen hearing by her husband, King Ahab, that the prophets of Baal were all ſlain, ſent immediately to threaten Elijah with death, at the hearing of which he feared, and fled. If it be demanded, why ſhee firſt threatned him, and ſet the next day for the time of execution and did it not preſently, nor laid hold upon him, that he might not eſcape, Lyra anſwereth, that forſomuch as he boldly ſhewed himſelf to the king, ſhee thought that he would not now flye for fear from her, being a woman. But it pleaſed God to leave him a while to his own weakneſſe, and then all courage failed him, whereby the moſt faithfull may ſee what he is of himſelfe, to be humbled; notwithſtanding the great valour and conſtancie, which he hath formerly ſhewed, for all our courage to ſtand for God is from him, and if we be left to our ſelves, we preſently fall. And touching Elijah, Gregory doubteth not to ſay, that becauſe he began to be tickled with high conceits, of himſelfe for the great acts which he had done, he was ſuffered thus to feare, to humble him.

Lyra.

Note.

Gregory.

P. Martyr having ſaid the ſame with Lyra, imputeth it to the ſpeciall providence of God, notwithſtanding, that Iezabel went ſo openly about to kill Elijah, that he might have time to eſcape away. And yet he taxeth it as a fault in Elijah to fear and to flye thus, when he ſhould have kept his ſtation; eſpecially having no word now from the Lord to flye away. And he admireth his preſent weakneſſe, comparing it with his confronting of Ahab before, and alone oppoſing 450 prophets of Baal, ſaying, that it was ſtrange, that he who had ſhewed ſo great magnanimity hitherto, and both ſhut and opened heaven for fire and raine, ſhould now upon the ſudden for the threats of a ſilly woman, prove ſo puſillanimous. But yet thus Peter was terrified alſo by a young maid, and made to deny his maſter Chriſt. For Iezabel, who after ſhe had heard all things miraculouſly done by Elijah related, and yet hardened her heart to this great wickedneſſe, he ſaith, that ſhee was of the number of thoſe that were ſo hardened in ſin, as that they will by no means be made to relent, but rather are hereby more exaſperated to do wickedly unto the end, where ſome wicked one are moved for the preſent, as Ahab ſeemeth to have been, but ſoon fall againe. For Elijah had his favour now ſo farre, that he might have been ſafely in Iezreel with him, but hee was too much carryed away by his wicked wife; hitherto Martyr. And Ierom ſaith, for ſo much as this juſt man feared and was troubled in mind, who can ſay that this was without vice, ſeeing David ſaith, the Lord is on my ſide, I will not therefore feare, what man can doe unto me. The Lord himſelfe indeed feared, when in the dayes of the fleſh, he offered ſtrong cryes unto God. But his feare proceeded not from diffidence, for he ſaid that none had power to take away his life, and that he gave his life for his ſheep, and that he could pray and have 12 Legions of Angels, when hee was in greateſt danger; &c. His feare then was not for himſelfe, nor his carefull ſeeking, that this cup might paſſe from him, but for his followers, leaſt their faith ſhould by his ſufferings be ſhaken; and for his very enemies, leaſt they ſhould be the more hardened. And when he fled from one place to another, that he might eſcape danger, he did it not for feare of his own life, but becauſe as he ſaid, his houre was not yet come. It was not ſo with Elijah, for like another man hee now feared through weakneſſe of faith, and fled. So likewiſe the ordinary gloſſe. Being lifted up moſt high by the ſpirit, he was repreſſed by temptations, when he feared death by the

V.4. miles from Beerſheba; and being weary, he ſate down under a juniper tree, for the ſhadow of this tree keepeth away ſerpents, as Pliny ſaith; wherefore a man might ſafely reſt here. Some ſaith Martyr, for a Iuniper, have Geniſta. But no ſuch thing is written of that tree, and the word here uſed is rendred Iuniper, Pſ. 120. 4. the burning coales of Iuniper which are ſaid ſo to exceed in heat, that being raked up in embers, they will keep fire an whole yeare together. Elijah being come hither, deſireth of God that he might dye; for he ſaith, he was not better then his fathers.
Hereupon the Rabbins lay hold to confirme their opinion that Elijah was Phinees, upon which it was touched before. But it cannot neceſſarily be inferred hence, as they would have it, that he overlived all his fathers, if by them we underſtand Abraham, Iſaack, and Iacob, or Aaron who lived 120 yeares, but onely that he was an old man and at the yeares that he had atteined to, or ſooner, many of his progenitours had dyed, ſome by a naturall death, and ſome being prophets by a violent, in the Iezzabelan perſecution. Wherefore he growing weary of this life through his manifold troubles, deſired now to dye alſo. If it be ſaid, this is ſtrange, that he fled for feare of being put to death, and yet deſired to dye. It is anſwered, he feared only the manner by the hands of perſecuters, leaſt they that ſtood for Baal ſhould ſeem at the laſt to have gotten the day, and ſo the Lord to have been overcome by Baal, if he being his only champion, ſhould have been cut off by the ſervants of Baal. It was his zeale then for the Lord, and feare, leaſt ſome diſhonour might redound unto his name, which made him firſt flye death, and then to deſire it; his weakneſſe was, that he did not believe, that the Lord could preſerve him from the fury of Iezabel, if he had remained there; if we ſhall not ſay rather that he fled, ſeeing an opportunity by Gods providence infatuating Iezabel to threaten him firſt, that hee might not tempt the Lord in putting himſelfe upon apparant danger, needleſly. To conclude, it is to be thought, that howſoever the ſpirit of zeale wrought with him to make him flye, yet it was not without ſome mixture of the fleſhes weakneſſe, which made him, when he was now come thus farre impatient of life, as Iob alſo was. But in deſiring that he might die, he ſhewed that he believed a better life to come, after the bodily death, or elſe he would never have deſired it; and that to lay violent hands upon himſelfe, had been the way to have loſt it. Wherefore he would not thus rid himſelfe of this life, but ſought unto the Lord to take it away, in whoſe hands alone is the power to give life and to take it away; and for a man in diſcontent or upon any other occaſion to deſtroy his own life, is a preſumptuous ſinne; for which I cannot ſee, how there can be any remiſſion. But why did Elijah deſire to have his life cut off, ſeeing long life to the faithfull is the greateſt bleſſing in this world? Anſ. He might deſire this, that he might ſee no more diſhonour done to

V.5. Elijah being weary with travaile, fell aſleep here, but becauſe he had faſted all the day, and had nothing after his journey to eat, that he might not faint through want,

want, the Lord ſent his Angell with bread unto him, ſaying, ariſe Elijah and eat; then he looked and ſaw cakes baked upon the embers, and a pot of water, and did eat and drink and ſlept again, as is to be ſuppoſed all night; and then the Angell coming again bad him eat, becauſe he had a great journey to goe, which he did, and went in the ſtrength of that meat 40 dayes and 40 nights, till he came to Horeb, the mount of God. The ſame God that provided for him miraculouſly in the time of drought by the miniſtery of ravens, now again fed him by the miniſtery of an Angell, and he that made the meale and oyle, which was enough only for one meale to laſt many daies, and to ſuffice for the feeding of him, the widow of Sareptah, her ſonne and familie all that time, now by a new kind of miracle gave a meale unto him, that ſtrengthened him without eating more 40 daies together, and that to labour in tedious travaile. How this could be we ought not to queſtion, ſeeing the Almighty cauſed it ſo to be, that we might know, that he hath more waies then one to ſuſtein ſuch as truſt in him. In times paſt he fed Elijah by miraculouſly ſupplying him from day to day, now he ſuſteineth him many dayes together eating nothing, but once or twice at the beginning of this time, bread miraculouſly prepared by an Angell. For it was not the Angels preparing it, that put this vertue into it, as it may ſeem. And the authour of the book de mirabil. S. Sacra, affirmeth ſaying, that by reaſon of the Angels preparing it, ſuch vertue was in it, that it kept the nature of the body from conſuming the naturall heat, by reaſon whereof the taking of meat is requiſite for the repairing of that which was conſumed. But Gods will, which cauſed the Angell to prepare ſuch bread, that made it laſt in his ſtomack, that he felt no hunger all this time, but remained, as if he had eaten but a little before, no feebleneſſe or languiſhing coming upon him through that long want. And this was done to prefigure Chriſts faſt of 40 daies and 40 nights, in the ſame wilderneſſe. But wheras he is ſaid to have gone in the ſtrength of this meal 40 daies and 40 nights; it is not to be underſtood, as though he had in all that time taken no reſt, but that he went in the day time being fit for travaile, and reſted at night, and happily in the heat of the day alſo. Neither was he all this time in the day going directly to mount Horeb, or Sinai, for it was but 80 miles thither, and ſo a journie that might well have been gone in 4 or 5 daies; but he made in this voyage many turnings, and fetched many bouts through invious places, leaſt happily ſome purſuing him from Iezabel, ſhould find him. And to Horeb he directed his courſe, as being a moſt deſert place, thinking, as Ioſephus conjectureth, to dwell there; till the Lord ſhould further reveale his will unto him: for he is ſaid by and by to have been there in a cave. Some hold that he faſted not only 40 daies, till he came to this mount, but alſo till he returned again; becauſe this alſo was a deſert place, and wee read not of any other food after this brought unto him. But for ſo much as the Scripture ſaith only, he went in the ſtrength of it 40 daies and 40 nights, till he came to mount Horeb, it is rather to be thought, that he was there otherwiſe ſupplied with food, although no mention be made therof, one includeth the time of his being there within theſe 40 daies ſaying, by vertue of this meat he went to Horeb, & there continued 40 daies, &c. But the text admitteth of no ſuch gloſſe, but as Martyr hath it, he ate nothing after in the 40 days wherein he was going thither. And he thinketh that Elijah came to Horeb being a part of mount Sinai where the law was given, becauſe he conceived it the moſt fit place to receive inſtructions, what to doe now, that the law was ſo neglected & trodden under foot. The cave into which he went, ſaith R. Selom. was that, in which Moſes was, when the Lord paſſed by Exo. 34.6. And here the Word of the Lord came unto him ſaying, what doeſt thou here Eliiah? which ſheweth that he came not by any particular direction from the Lord, but of his own mind; happily, as hath been already ſaid, ſuppoſing, that where the law was at the firſt given, he ſhould receive ſome comfort, that was ſo zealous for the law. And the Lord did not aske him this queſtion, ſaith Martyr, as if he were ignorant upon what occaſion he came thither, but in way of reproof; as if he had ſaid, doeſt thou thus for feare come to lurk in ſolitarie places, forſaking the place whereunto thou wert called to withſtand idolatrie? haſt thou therefore received the ſingular gifts of the ſpirit, to come and hide them here? And he dealeth with him by way of interrogation, that he might draw a confeſſion from his own mouth. But he when he ſhould have confeſſed his timerouſneſſe in fleeing the danger of death, palliateth it with a pretext of zeal, and complaineth of the great wickedneſſe of the people of Iſrael, thus to move the Lord to take revenge upon them: thus he. But Lyra better. He asked him this, that upon his anſwer he might take occaſion to comfort him, as indeed he did: and Pellican likewiſe, but onely he addeth, that he ſought to draw an anſwer from him touching his zeal, that he might by and by teach him in his own example, patiently to expect their amendment, and not ſo ſuddainly ſeek their deſtruction. For in cauſing a mighty winde, and fire, &c. to go before him, and then a ſoft and ſtill voice, he ſhewed, that he had power to confound them all in a moment, but he would deal more gently firſt by admonitions and inſtructions. For ſeeing the Lord reproveth not Elijah for his fearfulneſſe, how can any man do it? Indeed he concealeth not, but acknowledgeth this in part to be the cauſe of his coming hither now, when he ſaid, they ſought his life alſo, but it was his zeal for God, which brought him into that danger, for which he doubted not, but after this complaint made, as the Apoſtle calleth it, hee ſhould heare of comfort.

V. 10.

To the Lords queſtion, what do'ſt thou here? Elijah anſwereth, v. 10. I have been zealous for the Lord God of hoſts, for the children of Iſrael have left thy covenant, broken down thine altars, &c.] It may ſeem ſtrange that he ſhould complain of their breaking down his altars, when as there ought to be but one altar for ſacrifice, at that particular place, which the Lord ſhould chuſe, and that was mount Moriah in Ieruſalem, where Solomon by the direction of God had built him a temple. If there were any altars then in other parts of the land, it may ſeem not to be a fault to break them down, yea it is commended in godly princes, that they brake down the high places, where altars had ſometime by the Patriarks been erected to God, that none might ſinne by ſacrificing after that the temple was built, in any other place; and if ſo, why doth Elijah complain of this? Martyr anſwereth, that idolaters brake them down in another minde, viz. out of enmity againſt God, that no remembrance of him might remain any more in the land. And Lyra ſaith, they deſtroyed them in contempt of God, and this he complaineth of, and not that they were any further uſefull now for ſacrifice, except upon ſpeciall occaſion, and ſacrificing to God there was ſtill tollerated by ſome godly kings, to keep the people from ſacrificing to idols. They have killed thy prophets with the ſword and I am left alone. How could Elijah ſay thus, when as he had been certified by Obadiah lately, that there were 100. hidden by him in caves? Hugo Cardinalis ſaith, that becauſe he did more in the Lords cauſe then all they, he accounted them as none of the Lords prophets, which he ſpake not without ſome elation of minde, to pull down which the Lord preſently told him, that there were 7000. in Iſrael, which had not bowed the knee to Baal, but cleaved conſtantly unto the Lord, as he did. Lyra ſaith, he was left alone, becauſe there were but a very few, in compariſon of the great multitude which followed Baal. Martyr, he was left alone to ſtand publikely for God, all others, which had done ſo in times paſt, were either ſlain, or lurked in ſecret places, he not knowing, where any one was to be found at that time. And hereunto we may adde, that for ought he knew, they were by that time cut off by raging Iezabel alſo.

V. 11.

And he ſaid, go out and ſtand upon the mountain, and behold the Lord paſſed, and a mighty winde breaking the mountains and cleaving the rocks before the Lord, but the Lord was not in the winde.] Here before the Lord ſaid any thing to Elijah in anſwer, to his complaint, he made firſt a ſhew of his wonderfull great power by moſt ſtrong windes, a moſt hot burning fire, and terrible earthquake, in each of which it is ſaid, the Lord was not, and laſtly there was heard a ſoft and ſtill voice, ſhewing the Lords preſence. But to what end this was thus done, is moſt difficult to declare. Pellican as hath been partly touched before, ſaith, that hereby he would teach the prophet, that although he had power preſently to confound all his idolatrous enemies, yet he would not thus deal with them, but gently by teaching, ſeek to bring them into the right way, neither would he have him ſeek ſtill their deſtruction

ction by judgements, but their reformation by placide and gentle teaching. Martyr ſaith, it may be referred either to the Lord, to perſecuting tyrants, or to the prophet. Being referred to the Lord, hereby was ſhewed, that he could indeed uſe ſuch meanes to confound his enemies, for by windes he brought locuſts upon Egypt, by an earthquake he deſtroyed Chorah and his company, and alſo by fire Sodom, but he would proceed againſt them another more ſtill and ſilent way, by bringing ſuch enemies upon them, as they leaſt feared. Being referred to perſecuters, their rage againſt the ſervants of the Lord is hereby ſet forth, but the Lord is not with them in their attempts, ſo that they cannot bring to paſſe what they deſire, but what God hath decreed ſhall ſtand, which is ſet forth in the ſoft and ſtill voice. Being referred to Elijah, he was hereby taught, that his earneſt ſeeking of the deſtruction of the idolatrous Iſraelites was not pleaſing to the Lord: but rather, that after the judgement of drought, which he had formerly prayed for, he ſhould now by gentle meanes ſeek their converſion and ſalvation. For it appeared by experience, that rigid means would do no good upon them, ſeeing they were not turned by that long continued drought, but when they ſaw a ſigne of the Lords power above Baals, they cried out, the Lord he is God. He addeth alſo ſome others, as firſt, that the Lord by theſe ſignes ſhewed his power for the comfort of his ſervant now full of fear: but it is ſaid, the Lord was not in theſe; that is, the full knowledge of God is not by ſeeing ſuch dreadfull effects of his power attained, but when in ſilence we give our mindes to divine contemplation. Secondly, it was hereby ſhewed, that when the Lord executeth judgements againſt the wicked, this is not his ultimus finis to deſtroy them, but the converſion of ſouls, and bringing the ſtate of the Church to more quiet and tranquility at the laſt. Thirdly, Elijah was hereby taught, that God did nothing againſt the wicked being carried by violent paſſion, and yet all things were governed according to his will, and by his divine power he pierced into all. Lyra following the ordinary gloſſe, underſtandeth by the winde pride, by the earthquake covetouſneſſe, and by the fire fleſhly luſts, all which it is ſhewed by this apparition, muſt be mortified in us, before that the Lord entreth into our hearts by the ſtill voice of the Goſpel to ſanctifie us, that we may be ſaved. Hugo agreeth with Lyra, but that he underſtandeth by the earthquake either covetouſneſſe, or fury and rage, and wrath, which worketh not the righteouſneſſe of God. And for a ſtill voice having ſibilus tenuis aura, he expounds it of the Lords inſpiring inwardly of the will to lead a new life, and it is called tenuis aura, becauſe in ſuch there is a tender conſcience. Amongſt all theſe, I prefer that, which applieth it to the Lord, becauſe it is ſaid, the Lord paſſed by, ſhewing by theſe terrible ſignes, what he both could and would do to confound his idolatrous enemies, and for the comfort of the faithfull, which was the thing that Elijah ſought to ſtir him up to. Elijah had complained of four things. Firſt they have broken thy covenant, ſecondly caſt down thine altars, thirdly ſlain thy prophets, fourthly ſeek my life. Therefore four ſignes are given him, three of which pretended judgments for this their rage by 3. ſeverall means, and the fourth a quiet eſtate of all the faithfull after this. For the ſequel of ſpeaking after theſe ſignes, repeating again, What doeſt thou here Elijah? and bidding him to go and anoint Haſael, Iehu, and Eliſhah, and threatning deſtruction by their ſwords, after which he addeth, I have reſerved to my ſelf 7000, &c. doth plainly ſhew, that theſe 3. terrible apparitions, did but ſerve to prefigure the deſtruction to come upon the idolaters by thoſe three, and the ſoft voice a tranquill eſtate after that of the ſincere worſhippers of God. All which could not but abundantly comfort Elijah in the midſt of his greateſt troubles. Whereas the Lord is ſaid not to have been in thoſe ſignes that portended judgements, hereby we are given to underſtand, that he took no pleaſure in thus dealing, but wicked men brought theſe deſtructions upon themſelves, by going on obſtinately and impenitently in their ſinnes, in ſaying thus therefore it was ſhewed not to be his but [alienum opus] anothers work, as it were, as Eſay calleth the like, the Lords work and anothers his, becauſe he thus judgeth, but anothers, becauſe others are the cauſe, he is not in it, that is, in reſpect of his will and nature, which is not to put to death, but to turn and ſave ſinners.

Thoſe

Theſe things may alſo be applied metaphorically, according to Lyra, but I cannot ſee, how they ſhould be taken, as a check given to Elijah for his earneſtneſſe againſt Iſrael, ſeeing the Lord immediatly ſent him to prepare for a revenge-taking upon the idolaters amongſt them, as hath been ſaid. Whereas Elijah is bidden to go out, that he might ſee this great ſight, but yet he is ſaid then firſt to have come and ſtood in the mouth of the cave, when the Lord had thus paſſed by, ſome take it to be thus ſet forth by a figure called hyſteron proteron, and ſome, which I rather approve, that he was at the firſt called out, but being afraid at the riſing of the tempeſt he abode ſtill in the cave, and when theſe terrours were over, and the voice began to be heard, he went forth as he was bidden. If any man ſhall ask how the Lord is ſaid not to have been in winde, &c. ſeeing he is every where? it is anſwered, that the meaning is to be taken, which hath been ſhewed, and not the words ſtrictly to be inſiſted upon. Or as Martyr hath it, he was not in theſe in a peculiar manner, to ſpeak unto and to deal with Elijah, as in the ſoft voice, and thus he was not in times paſt in other places, as in the ſanctuary, to give anſwers to ſuch as ſought unto him. P. Martyr.

V. 13. Exod. 33. 23. And when Elijah began to hear, he covered his face with a mantle, &c.] Thus Moſes before was covered with an hand, when the Lord paſſed by, as not able to endure the ſight of his glory, as indeed he told him, that no man was. Wherefore Elijah remembring this, covered his face, but ſome (ſaith Martyr) hold, that he did it in humility and reverence, as the heavenly cherubims cover their faces, Eſa. 6. and this reaſon he thinketh not unfit to take in alſo, but the firſt alone may ſuffice, becauſe when Moſes his pattern would ſhew his humble reverence he fell down bowing his head to the ground, and was covered his face onely, for that the beſt man living is ſo unworthy, that he cannot ſee God and live. When Elijah was thus prepared, the Lord asked him again as before, and hee anſwered in the ſame words.

V. 14. Hugo Card. Pellican. He asked again, what he did there? that after his complaint renewed, he might give him comfort, yet ſecretly, ſaith Hugo, and Pellican, that he might be brought to ſee into his own weakneſſe, in that he was now ſo timerous, who yer-while had been ſo couragious, he was hereby reproved, as doing that which for fear of danger he ought not, viz. going from the company of men, to whom he might have done good by his inſtructions, to lurk in ſecret. For he, ſaith Gregory, that fleeth to a ſolitary life, is guilty of the deſtruction of ſo many ſouls, as he might have been a means to ſave, if he had done his endevour amongſt them, which is ſet fourth in the parable of him, that hid his talent in a napkin. Yet that he might make amends for this fault, by going forth again, as his office required, he giveth him all encouragement ſo to do, by ſaying unto him.

V. 15. Go, return by the way of the deſart to Damaſcus, and anoint Aſabel king over Syria, and Iehu the ſon of Nimſhi for king over Iſrael, and Eliſhah the ſon of Shaphat, &c.] Here are three men nominated to him, that ſhould be to the idolaters in Iſrael, as a tempeſtuous winde, devouring fire and earthquake to terrifie and deſtroy them that would not turn: Therefore he ſaith, thoſe that eſcape the ſword of Aſabel Iehu ſhall deſtroy, and thoſe that eſcape the ſword of Iehu ſhall Eliſhah deſtroy. P. Martyr. For the ceremony of anointing, Martyr ſaith, it was uſed then to kings and to prieſts, to figure out the guiſts of the ſpirit, where with they ſhould be endued, as being moſt needfull for their high offices, but ended with the ceremoniall law, and therefore ought not now to be uſed, as it is amongſt the papiſts at the inauguration of Princes and biſhops, in baptiſme, in confirmation, in conſecration of Churches and bels, and in time of ſickneſſe, ſeeing this is a renewing of Iudaiſme, yea and an increaſing of the rites thereof. And he ſaith, that it was not uſed in the Church of God under the new Teſtament, for many hundred yeares in the eaſtern parts, which he proveth by the reſcript of Innocent the third, to the Patriark of Conſtantinople, touching the biſhop of Baccharah, who he ſaith came unto him, and he found that he had not been anointed, and thereby gathered, that in thoſe parts anointing was not yet uſed, and this was, anno Dom. 1000. And that Chriſtian Emperours were anciently crowned by the Patriarks, but not anionted he ſaith, that he hath read, as Leo the ſucceſſour of Martian was by the Patriark of Conſtantinople, not that he received his Empire of him, but thus acknowledged himſelf to belong to the Church, and that he aſſented to the truth therein taught and maintaited. Hitherto of anointing in generall, touching the perſons here nominated, becauſe Eliſhah was alſo to be anointed for prophet extraordinary, as the neceſſity of thoſe times required, it is gathered that prophets alſo were anointed, although it is not ſaid after this, that Elijah did anoint him, but onely caſt his mantle upon him, v. 19. For many things were done, which are not recorded in holy Scriptures, as neither his anointing of Aſabel or of Iehu. Onely we read, that Aſabel was told by Eliſhah that he ſhould be king of Syria, and that he ſent one to anoint Iehu, which he did doubtleſſe at the direction of Elijah, to whom God had revealed this. When the Lord bade Elijah then to go and anoint theſe men, he meant nothing elſe, but that he ſhould provide that this might be done by himſelf or ſome other, whom he ſhould imploy in this ſervice, and that neither preciſely according to the word, by uſing the ceremonie of anointing to them all, but doing that which was inſtar, by declaring the Lords will herein unto them, whereupon they were immediatly endued with the ſpirit fitting for thoſe functions. For Chriſt was not anointed, neither are Chriſtians externally, yet he is ſaid to be anointed with the oyl of gladneſſe becauſe of the ſpirit, which deſcended upon him, and they to have an anointing for the ſpirit received, whereby they were taught divine myſteries. Thus, I ſay, Elijah fulfilled what he was commanded, although ſome of theſe were never anointed according to the letter, and yet happily he went in perſon and did it, although his declaring of Gods will to Eliſhah onely be commemorated, and that of anointing Aſabel and Iehu paſſed over in ſilence, till they were dealt withall again by his inſtruments. Comeſtor ſaith, he anointed them no otherwiſe, but by declaring it to Aſabel by Eliſhah, to Iehu by one ſent by Eliſhah, and by caſting his mantle upon Eliſhah. So likewiſe Ioſephus, making no mention of his bidding to anoint, but to declare. But a great doubt ariſeth here, how Eliſhah came laſt to ſlay thoſe, that were left by Jehu, when as he ſlew none but 42. children, 2 King. 2. before Iehu was king, and how Iehu could be ſaid to ſlay thoſe, that were left by Aſabel, when as Aſabel deſtroyed not, till the declining time of Iehu, after that he had ſlain the prophets and ſervants of Baal, and Ahabs houſe, and again in his wicked ſonnes time? But this is anſwered, that the order is not to be inſiſted upon, as if it were preciſely meant, that they ſhould ſlay, Eliſhah after Iehu and Iehu after Aſabel, but onely, as Comeſtor hath it, one ſhould ſlay ſome and the other ſome, no reſpect being had to the time. For Iehu ſlew thoſe that were left by Aſabel, in that they whom he ſlew, fell not by the ſword of Aſabel, and the like may be ſaid of Eliſhah. Thus alſo Martyr, who beſides the children ſlain upon the curſing of Eliſhah, thinketh, that many periſhed by his means by the famine in Samaria called for by him, which Iehoram the king ſhewed to be his opinion, when for this he threatned to take away his head. But that famine came not but by the ſiege which the king of Syria laid againſt it, who was ſpared before by Eliſhah his means, when he had brought him into the king of Iſraels power. Toſtatus thinketh, that beſides the children, which were of Bethel an idolatrous place, whom Eliſhah ſlew, that many of the ſervants of Baal more were by him ſlain alſo, although it be paſſed over in ſilence; and this is not incredible, ſeeing the word of God ſpoken of him, and of his ſlaying ſome idolaters is undoubtedly true, and had the effect as well as that ſpoken of Aſabel and Iehu. Hugo ſaith, that it is not meant, that Eliſhah ſhould ſlay any with the materiall, but with the ſpirituall ſword, and the gloſſe; Aſabel and Iehu ſlew with the materiall ſword, Eliſhah with the ſword of the tongue, herein following Rabanus, and this he may be ſaid to have done, when he curſed thoſe children of Bethel, who as Lyra ſaith, were there to learn idolatry, and they were preſently ſlain, as if they had been ſmitten by him, as Ananias and Saphyra afterwards were by Peter, Act. 5.

Yet I will reſerve 7000. in Iſrael, even all the knees that have not bowed to Baal, and every mouth that hath not kiſſed him.] Lyra will have either the kiſſing of Baal for reverence meant, or kiſſing the hand for the like reaſon, in ſuch as came before him, grounding upon Iob. 31. where kiſſing of the hand in reverence to the Schol. hiſtor. P.Martyr Sun and Moon is ſpoken of as a great wickedneſſe. Comeſtor, kiſſing of Baals hands for reverence, ſo likewiſe Martyr, ſaying yet with Lyra, that ſome idolaters kiſſed their own hand, for reverence to the Sun, as Iob ſpeaketh, becauſe they could not reach to it, but by the idolatrous papiſts of theſe times, who wear out idols by kiſſing them, we may eaſily gather that they kiſſed the image of Baal. And becauſe the godly are deſcribed by theſe outward geſtures, wherein they would not conſort with idolaters, he noteth the errour of thoſe that will be preſent at the Maſſe, and Note. do as others do outwardly, ſaying, that ſeeing their hearts are upright, this is no offence: but the godly of thoſe times abhorred from ſo doing, and ſo do the truly godly in all times, he therefore cenſureth all ſuch as hypocrites, ſaying that they ſerve not Chriſt but the devill. Now of ſuch a number of ſincere worſhippers of God in the midſt of thoſe idolatrous times, the Lord certifieth Elijah for his greater comfort, and to teach us, that God hath his true Church in all times, which keepeth her ſelf pure from idolatrous pollutions, although hidden from the eyes of men, and ſo doubtleſſe in the moſt corrupt times of popery, there were many that abhorred from image-worſhipping, and aſcribing infallibilitie and power to the Pope to forgive ſins, even before Luther and Calvin, yea, and many ſuch are nominated, as not altogether lying hid, in Catalogo teſtium veritatu.

V. 19. And going thence he found Eliſhah the ſonne of Shaphat, but he was ploughing, &c. and he caſt his mantle upon him, &c.] Eliſhah was of Abel-Meholah, v. 16. which was near unto Iordan in the tribe of Ephraim, according to Iunius, upon Iudg. 7. 22. And he is ſaid by the Hebrews to have been the ſonne of a very rich man, which is not improbable, ſeeing he ploughed with no leſſe then 12. yokes of oxen. Upon him Elijah caſt his mantle, by this outward ſigne imparting the ſpirit of propheſie unto him: for ſo Ioſephus ſaith, that he began to propheſie ſo ſoon as this was done. And it appeareth, that he felt ſuch a change in himſelf, that he muſt forthwith leave his husbandry and follow the prophet, as being now of the ſame calling and profeſſion, with him. For he asketh leave of Elijah to go home firſt to kiſſe his father and his mother, ſaying, that then hee would follow him. Which ſheweth, that the ſpirit of God with the mantle came upon him ſo, as that he was enforced, immediatly leaving this, to betake himſelf to another courſe of life. Not, as Martyr ſaith, that there was any vertue in the mantle, but that it pleaſed God hereby to work in him ſingularly, ſo as wee read not in all the Scripture of any other called to this office of propheſying. Yet he ſaith, that anciently they uſed to put their *Ruth.*3.9. coat upon one, that they joyned moſt nearly unto them, as Ruth deſired Boaz to *1 Sam.*18.4. caſt the skirt of his garment upon her, and Ionathan put his coat upon David, hereby unwittingly fore-ſhewing his attaining to the kingdome, to the which he was heir, but it appears, that he did it wittingly, becauſe at another time he told him, *1 Sam.*23.17. he knew, that David ſhould be king, and he next unto him. And in the primitive Church, ſuch as were baptized had a white garment put upon them, to be worn eight dayes after, to ſhew the new kinde of pure living, to which they did now betake themſelves. And in an apiſh imitation of this, a Monk hath the habit of the order into which he entreth put upon him. But Elijah did not ſo put his garment upon Eliſhah, but by a divine inſtinct, as the ſequel ſhewed, whereas Monks after this new habit put on, remain many of them moſt deſtitute of the ſpirit, and carnally minded. Eliſhah being thus inveſted with a propheticall habit, and thereupon coming after Elijah to ask leave, that he might firſt go home and ſalute his parents, as feeling now in himſelf a neceſſity of leaving his husbandry, to attend upon

V. 20. the propheticall function, Elijah bad him, go, return, for what have I now done to thee? This ſpeech is ſomewhat obſcure, becauſe having by this externall ſigne called him from his worldly imployments to go with him, he ſeemeth hereby to P.Martyr. be ignorant of any neceſſity, that he thus impoſed upon him ſo to do. Martyr giveth a double ſenſe of the words; Firſt, that he ſpake thus by way of admiration, to draw him to admire the goodneſſe and work of God in him, that he might be thankfull therefore. Secondly by way of ſtirring him up to conſider, who had now called him, and to what, that howſoever he returned, yet he might know, that he could not now lawfully follow husbandry buſineſſe any more; but leaving it, muſt needs attend upon his new calling of a prophet. The vulgar Latin by ſupplying two words here, [quod enim meum erat feci tibi, I have done that which was my part unto thee] maketh the ſenſe eaſie, as if he had ſaid, return thou maiſt, for ſo ſhort a time as thou deſireſt, as filial duty bindeth thee, neither will I hold thee from ſo doing. For I was not ſo commanded, but in calling thee to this propheticall office, I have done what I was commanded, ſee thou therefore, that thou do ſo, as is of thee required. And ſome conjecture, that Elijah did not onely caſt his mantle upon him to call him, but taking him aſide, told him the Lords will herein, and anointed him, then putting that garment upon him, after which he ſtanding ſtill awhile, as being amazed at the ſtrangeneſſe of the thing (in which ſpace Elijah went away) began by and by to come to himſelf, and then running after him ſaid, as in the text. Junius following the Hebrew [what have I done to thee?] ſaith, it is as if he had ſaid, be mindfull of thy calling by God, and that it permitteth of no delayes. More fully holding to the words in the Originall, I think it is as if he had ſaid, what have I done to thee to hinder thee from going firſt and ſhewing thy duty to thy parents? in calling thee to the propheticall office I have done nothing in this kinde, but to tye thee, when thou haſt acquainted them with this thy calling, and taken thy leave of them, with ſpeed to leave wordly employments, and to attend upon this thy new calling. Whereas Elijah biddeth him, go, return, but one asking leave of Chriſt to go firſt and bury his father, he would not permit him. He did not herein go contrary to Chriſt, for that man ſought a longer delay, viz. to keep with his father till he was dead, and then to follow Chriſt, but this onely to ſalute him and come; again Chriſt knew, that the heart of that man was not right, and therefore gave no way unto him, whereas Elijah knew no ſuch thing by Eliſhah. Laſtly, Chriſt was Lord, and ſo above father and mother, but Elijah a fellow ſervant, and therefore would not take ſo much upon him to diſpenſe with Gods lawes. Hugo noteth herein, firſt the agreeing of the Law with the Goſpell, becauſe under both Diſciples were called, and immediatly obeyed. Secondly, the excellency of the Goſpel above the Law, becauſe now he that is called, is permitted that, which he is not under the Goſpel, in going about the preaching whereof there muſt be no delay. And morally, as Eliſhah having received a new habit, immediately left the world to come after Elijah, ſo he that is truly called to be a new creature, leaveth all worldly things, when he is to attend upon propheſying.

Pellican.

And when he returned, he took a yoke of oxen and killed them, and ſod the fleſh, and gave it to the people.] That is, ſaith Pellican, when he had been with his parents, for a farewell to his neighbours he made this proviſion, that they might eat with him before he departed, in teſtimony of his charity towards them. And he ſod the fleſh with a fire made of the plough, ſaith Martyr, becauſe he would not ſtay, whileſt other wood might be cut down and brought thither to make a fire, and he alſo thinketh, that they, to whom he made this feaſt, were many of his friends, who accompanied him out of the town as farre as the place where he had been ploughing, where alſo they took their leave of him. Others think, that beſides the haſte in which he was, there was another myſticall reaſon of his making a fire with the plough and appurtenances thereof, viz. to ſhew, that he now gave over worldly buſineſſe, and meant not to return to it any more, but conſtantly to follow Elijah. Of ſuch kinde of wood taken before for the uſe of ſacrificing wee reade twice, 1 Sam. 6. 2 Sam. 24. CHAP. XX.

V.1. THen Benhadad king of Syria gathered all his army, and 32.kings were with him, &c.] Of Benhadad it is ſpoken before chap. 15. that at Aſa his requeſt he came and invaded the land of Iſrael, in the dayes of Baaſha, and took divers cities therein, v. 20. from thence till this time was about 29. years. For it may be gathered from the hiſtory following, that Ahab had now reigned 17. years, and Omri his father ſixe, Elah the ſonne of Baaſhah two, and four years paſſed between Elah and Omri, before that he could be quietly ſetled in the kingdome. Wherefore either Benhadad was now an old man, or it was another king of the ſame name Toſtatus. ſucceeding him, that made this warre, and Toſtatus thinketh, that it was his grandchilde. But that he was rather his ſon, may be gathered v. 34. the Chaldee as there, ſo here calleth him Barhadad, Ioſephus, Adad, and ſometime the ſonne of Adad, the Septuagint the ſonne of Ader. Of Adad ſee the hiſtory before upon ch. 11.16, 17, &c. and of his quarrell againſt Iſrael which continued ſtill in his po-ſterity the kings of Syria. And therefore though no cauſe be aſſigned, why he made this war againſt the king of Iſrael, the inveterate hatred of that ſtock againſt Iſrael ever ſince Solomons time was cauſe enough, and the hire given unto him ſometime by Aſa king of Iudah to make warre here, when he had got footing in P.Martyr. that land, put him on the more to ſeek to enlarge his conqueſt, by adding Samaria to thoſe cities, as Martyr thinketh. However there was a divine hand in this his coming, both that Ahab might ſee into the wickedneſſe of his idolatry, which he might well think brought this judgement upon him, and be moved by Gods goodneſſe in delivering him out of it to repent, which hitherto by famine and the miraculous coming down of fire from heaven he would not be moved to do. For Benhadad came againſt him and beſieged him in Samaria, and with him 32. kings with their armies, which altogether made an huge hoaſt, to which the Iſraelites were no way comparable. Inſomuch, that Ahab deſpairing of his power to reſiſt, yielded unto him in whatſoever he required, as touching treaſure. But when all this would not ſatisfie, and he was like to endure the brunt of a bloudy warre, he was comforted by a prophet, and directed ſo to fight againſt the Aramites, that he ſoon got the victory over them, as here in this chapter is more largely ſhewed.
Whereas he had with him 32. kings, it is to be underſtood, that many kings then had but little territories: for in the land of Canaan alone were in times paſt 31.
Ioſh.12.24. kings, and yet it was a countrey not much greater then Wales.
V.3. And ſending Meſſengers to Ahab he ſaid, thy ſilver and thy gold is mine, thy wives alſo and thy children, &c,] The Syrian king being proud of his huge army, which he thought the king of Iſrael was no way able to reſiſt, ſendeth unto him ſuch a meſſage, as he thought that he would by no means conſent unto, and ſo he ſhould the more juſtly enter the battell, and get all that he had. But Ahab being filled with fear baſely yeilded unto him, ſaying, I am thine, O lord and king, and all that I have, not meaning yet, as the ſequel ſheweth, that he would be ready whenſo-V.4. ever he required, to deliver himſelf, his wives and children, and all his goods unto him. But by giving theſe good words he thought to pacifie him, and paying for peace when he ſhould require the tribute, that ſhould be laid upon him. For V.5,6. when Benhadad ſent again to explain himſelf, that to morrow he would ſend for all theſe things by his ſervants, giving him alſo to underſtand, that by his ſilver and gold he meant all the treaſures in the city, which not onely he but his ſubjects had, he by their advice denied him, ſaying, that he would do all that was at the firſt re-V.9. quired, but this thing he could not do; that is, he would be his ſervant and tributary, and ſo ſhould his wives and children be, paying what ſhould be impoſed upon them to their power: but rather then ſuffer his Aramites to come and raſack their houſes, raviſh their wives, and carry away ſuch of them as they pleaſed, and ſuch children as taken captive by the ſword, and that not onely his, but all his ſubjects, they would endure the brunt of the moſt bloudy warre, that he could make upon

upon them. To this effect almoſt P. Martyr ſpeaketh, in giving the ſenſe firſt, but then he mentioneth a ſecond of ſome, who ſay, that he meant he would deliver his own both wives goods and children, for the ſafety of the city, but now that he ſent moreover for his ſubjects goods, and according to his pleaſure to ſpoil them of their wives and children alſo, he would not conſent. And becauſe he in this acquitted himſelf as a good king, preferring the good of his ſubjects before his own, God dealt ſo mercifully by him, to deliver the Aramites into his hands. But this is juſtly by him rejected, becauſe if he ſhould have given his own wives into Benhadads hands to be abuſed, or his children to be at his mercy, the ſinne againſt God and againſt the common-wealth had been as great, as to ſuffer him to make a prey of his ſubjects. For thus the women ſhould have been proſtituted, and the common-wealth robbed of an heir to the crown, which might have been an occaſion of great diſſentions and much bloud-ſhed, and the innocent, who were as dear unto him ſhould unjuſtly have been expoſed to a thouſand hazards. Hugo thinketh, that he would have delivered all, but wives. Lyra, all his own things, but not his ſubjects. Ioſephus, who ſpeaketh nothing of his ſubjects, ſaith, that the difference between the king of Iſraels firſt grant, and the king of Arams ſecond demand, was, that he would ſend ſervants to take, whereas Ahab meant, that what was given ſhould be carried out of the city and delivered, more then which ought not by the law of nations to be required upon a compoſition for peace by any enemy. And this I think to be one difference betwixt the firſt challenge and the next demand, and a ſecond might be, that he thought at the firſt, that he did not require his wives to be his any otherwiſe then as he ſpake of himſelf, ſaying, I am thine, and all that I have, that is, to be his vaſſals and to pay him tribute. A third, he made no mention at the firſt of the goods of his ſubjects, but onely of his own. The laſt difference was in the time, which was not ſet at the firſt, but now he would have all the next day, that he might return immediatly with the ſpoils of the city, as if he had conquered it. And it was Benhadads pride encreaſed by Ahabs baſeneſſe, that made him ſo inſolent now in his demand. But this his pride and confidence in an arm of fleſh went before his fall, which by the juſt judgement of God eft-ſoons followed, as the hiſtory doth immediatly declare. For when he ſaw, that he was denied, he ſtormed and ſwore, that his power was ſo great, that it was no way reſiſtable, making therefore no doubt, but ſoon to obtain what he required.

For he ſaid, the gods do ſo to me and more alſo, if the duſt of Samaria will ſuffice for all my foot-men to take every one an handfull.] Ioſephus differing much from this ſaith, that if the people that followed him, ſhould bring but every one an handfull, it would ſuffice to raiſe mounts againſt the city, as high as the wals thereof.

V. 11. King Ahab hearing this, taketh more courage to him, as thinking happily, that God would never ſuffer one ſo proud of his own forces to prevail, and anſwereth, Let not him that putteth on his armour boaſt, as he that putteth it off: That is, which prepareth to fight, as if he had already gotten the victory, and ſo had put it off again. And when this anſwer came to Benhadads ear, he commanded preſently to aſſault the citie, but did nothing himſelf, nor the kings with him, for they ſate drinking together, as did Belſhazzar afterwards, when Babylon was taken, and Elah before at the time of the ſiege of Gibbethon, and was ſlain in Thirza.

And that this was the end, why the Lord would give ſo great a victory unto Ahab ſo unworthy, that he might know him to be the Lord, this is here expreſſed in the end of his propheſie, although one cauſe alſo might be the pride of Benhadad, which God would pull down. give him this great victory without telling him of it before, that he might not aſcribe it to Baal or to fortune, but to the Lord onely; and therefore he ſetteth down the time when, this day. And he directeth him alſo in the manner of proceeding.
V.14. For when Ahab asked the prophet by whom, he anſwered, by the children of the Princes of the provinces; that is, moſt probably, the noble mens ſonnes which lived at the kings Court, and attended upon him for greater honour to him, and that they Kimbi. might there learn Princely behaviour, ſo Kimbi and Ioſephus. Others ſuppoſe, that Joſephus. they might be the Princes ſervants, who lived at the Court with their ſonnes, to teach them military matters; and ſome, that they were the Princes ſonnes, who abode there as pledges in theſe dangerous times. The firſt is moſt probable, becauſe kings uſed to keep about them noble mens ſonnes, that they might be the more honourably attended: and if ſuch were meant, they were moſt unfit for ſuch an enterprize, by reaſon of their tender and delicate breeding, being alſo young and wanting Note. experience in martiall affaires. And then we muſt inferre that God would by appointing ſuch to be the inſtruments, and not old beaten hardy ſouldiers, magniſie his power the more to his greater glory. But why did Ahab ask, by whom? Anſ.
He thought happily that a power might come from his confederate Iehoſaphat, or that God would by ſome miraculous means ſtrike them, as in Ioſhuah his time, he had done other enemies. Then he asked, who ſhall begin the battell. Hebr. Who ſhall bind the battell. Chaldee, VVho ſhall order it. Septuagint, VVho ſhall joyn it. The meaning is, who ſhall lead them or ſet them forth together in that P. Martyr. forme, wherein they ſhall fight; (Ioſephus) te regente eorum imperitiam, and here it is anſwered; though Martyr ſaith, that ſome will have the meaning of the queſtion to be, whether the Aramites ſhould begin, they awaiting their coming, or they by making an irruption out of the city. But the former is to be preferred, V.15. ſeeing the word doth not properly ſignifie begin, but bind the battell.

Then he numbred the children of the Princes 232. and after them all the people, 7000. It may ſeem ſtrange, that the people in ſo great a city, and ſo populous ſhould be no more. But Martyr conjectureth, and that not improbably, that theſe, were the 7000. of whom the Lord ſpake before to Elijah, that had not bowed Pellican. their knees to Baal, all others being for feare of the enemy fled away. Pellican likewiſe ſaith, that theſe were men fearing God, and believing the Prophet, who at his word were ready at an houre to goe forth to fight, all others drawing back, as V.16. having no confidence in the word of God.

V.17. The time when they went out, is noted to be at noon, Benhadad and his kings being then drunken, and ſo as Lyra obſerveth, it was a time moſt fit for this enterpriſe.
The children of the Princes being come forth firſt and no more appearing yet; Benhadad bad take them alive, as thinking that ſo few were not worth the fighting withall. But when the Syrians attempted to doe ſo, they contrary to their expectation fell upon thoſe that came firſt unto them, and ſlew them. Then followed the reſt of the army and holpe to purſue them, beginning already to turne V. 20, 21. their backs And laſtly Ahab ſeeing this came forth alſo moſt probably with his chariots and horſemen, and ſmote Benhadads horſes and chariots with a great ſlaughter.

V.22. Then the Prophet came to the king of Iſrael and ſaid, &c.] That is, when he returned with victory, and laden with ſpoyls, for he purſued the Syrians far ſaith Ioſephus; Joſephus. and returning took their tents rich with gold and ſilver. God proſecuteth the wicked king with evidences of his power and omniſcience, that he might be without excuſe; for he ſendeth now again the ſecond time to reveal a ſecret unto him, which none but the true God could yet certainly know: viz. That the king of Syria would come again the next year to renew the warre, willing him to conſider of it, and ſo he leaveth him to make uſe of this premonition accordingly, ſuppoſing that this being added to the former, he would happily conſider ſo of it, as that hee would turn from his idols to ſerve the Lord, conceiving that he could never otherwiſe be ſecure from his enemies, And hereby all Kings and Commanders may leran ſome military wiſdome, not to grow ſecure, the enemy being once overcome, but to prepare for another encounter, becauſe otherwiſe victory obteined may turn to greater deſtruction to the vanquiſher. V.23. V.26. As the Prophet foretold, Benhadad and his ſervants conſult about renewing the warre, ſaying, their gods are gods of the mountaines, &c.] and accordingly Captains being ſet up inſtead of kings, they come to Aphek to battell in a plain place. A ſtrange invention the Court paraſites had to comfort their king, being troubled at his late great overthrow, they ſpake nothing of his drunkenneſſe, or their own cowardiſe, but fooliſhly aſcribe the power of the gods of Iſrael, prevailing to montanous places. If it be demanded, why they ſaid ſo? Martyr anſwereth, becauſe Samaria was montanous, and Ieruſalem where the Temple ſtood, and their fathers of old worſhipped in high places. And when they worſhipped idols, it was in high places. Dan and Bethel and many more, as is complained in Ierem. 3.6. But why muſt Kings be turned into Captaines? Anſw. Becauſe they would better be ruled by the King, whereas kings being more high minded through their greatneſſe would doe what they liſted, which might be the cauſe of confuſion in the army, and being uſed to live in pleaſure, they were thought more unfit to endure the hardſhip of warre.

P. Martyr.

He came up to Aphek, which was a great plain according to Martyr lying in the tribe of Iudah, but taking it thus, he is troubled to reſolve how the Syrians ſhould come to pitch there, it being in the dominion of king Iehoſaphat, and is forced to ſay that there was a league betwixt him and Benhadad, and had been with his father Aſa, who begun it in the daies of Baaſhah king of Iſrael. But if ſo, how came it to paſſe that Iehoſaphat yielded ſo readily to goe with Ahab againſt the Syrians to battell? It is better therefore to hold that which he rejecteth, viz. that it was in Aſher, as Iunius alſo doth, proving it from Ioſh. 19. 30. Aphek is a place much celebrated for battels formerly. For here the Philiſtines pitched when they took the Ark, although that Aphek be by Iunius referred to Iudah, according to Ioſh. 15. 53. here again they pitched againſt Saul, 1 Sam. 29. 1. and at the city Megiddo ſtanding upon this plain was Ioſiah ſlain by Pharoah Necho. Adricomius laieth Aphek in Iſſachar which ſome hold to have been now in the poſſeſſion of the Philiſtines, through whoſe friendſhip, being alwaies enemies to Iſrael, the Syrians might well come and pitch there. But Lyra ſaith that Aphek was a ſtrong city in Aſher, taken from the Iſraelites by the Syrians, before which lay a great plain of the ſame name, and this I think to be moſt conſonant to the ſacred hiſtory, and to reaſon; and therefore worthy the rather to be followed: and Pellican, who is for Aphek in Iudah, yet conjectureth, that it might now be in the Syrians hands.

V.27. And the Iſraelites went out like two little flocks of goates, but the Aramites filled the land.] This is here ſet down, that ſo great diſparity appearing between the armies, the power of God might be the more magnified; when in the following part of this hiſtory it ſhould be declared, that the army ſo much leſſer overcame the greater by farre. But here a great doubt may be made, for ſo much as it is ſaid, that the children of Iſrael were numbred, and all found. How it happend that they were ſo few, ſeeing the kingdome of Iſrael not long before this afforded 800000 men in Ierobeams time. Some ſay that the reaſon was, for that many of Iſrael revolted to the king of Iudah, and many cities were held by the Syrians from them. But it were ſtrong, if by theſe meanes their number ſhould be ſo greatly diminiſhed. It is rather to be thought with R. Levi, Ben Gerſom, whom Martyr mentioneth, that the men here ſaid to be numbred, were the ſame that overthrew the Aramites the yeare before; viz. the children of the Princes, and the 7000 faithfull; and therefore they come out again in two companies, as then. In ſaying then that they were all found, it is meant, that they all who went out at that time were ſtill alive, not one of them being ſlain by the enemies, againſt whom they fought, which was not without a miracle. Wherefore Ahab, although warned ſo long before, provided no other forces, but ſent thoſe out onely; believing, that they which ſo valiantly ſubdued the Syrians ſo lately, ſhould now again have the like ſucceſſe, being heartned to the fight by that victory. And good cauſe had he thus to believe, ſeeing he had a promiſe again from the ſame prophet, that they ſhould fall before him, for that they had ſaid, that God was God of the mountains, and not of the valleys.

V. 28. Fot v. 28. it is ſaid, The man of God had come, and had ſaid, as Martyr rendreth it, and the Hebrew text may well bear, ſeeing the preterperfect tenſe in the Hebrew tongue, ſerveth for the preterpluperfect alſo.

V. 29. They pitched their tents therefore over againſt them ſixe dayes, &c.] The way, H. B. Patriarks travels. that Ahabs army went to meet with their enemies, that is, from Samaria to Aphek was 14. miles. The reaſon why they ſtayed ſo long, before they pitched the P. Martyr. battle, ſaith Martyr, might be, that the Sabbath might firſt come. But this is not ſo probable, ſeeing that although in caſe of neceſſity they might fight upon the Sabbath day, yet that being a day of reſt, was not to be choſen for this purpoſe.
Toſtatus. Toſtatus ſaith, that they exerciſed themſelves theſe ſixe dayes, that they might be Joſephus. the more expert: but Ioſephus more agreeably with the Scripture, they reſted in their tents. They ſtayed doubtleſſe to ſee, whether the Aramites would aſſault them here, that they might have the more advantage by reaſon of their trenches.
But when they ſaw, that they expected the coming on of their enemies in vain, they would defer no longer, but upon the ſeventh day, which might as well be another day as the Sabbath, they came forth to fight, remembring happily the victory obtained againſt Iericho, upon the ſeventh. Then the Syrians joyned battle with V. 29. them, and were ſlain to the number of 100000. foot the ſame day. And ſuch as V. 30. eſcaped fled into the city Aphek, where a wall fell upon 27000. and ſlew them.
Theſe moſt probably were horſe-men and chariot men for the moſt part, becauſe no mention is expreſly made of them, whereas it is certain, by that which is ſaid before, that there were ſuch in the army. For the manner of their deſtruction, it is to be thought, that when they were come into the city, ſome gat up on to the wals to repell the Iſraelites purſuing them; and others ſtood cloſe by, to be the better ſheltered from the enemies arrowes or darts. But that God, whom they had ſo blaſphemed in limiting his power to mountanous places, fought againſt them, and finally caſt the wall of the city, which they made their refuge, down upon them to their utter deſtruction, that all the world might know him to be P. Martyr. the Lord, and King over all parts of the earth. Some, ſaith Martyr, hold, that by trenching near the wall it was made to fall, others by being over-laden with buildings: but it was truly the weight of Gods wrath for their inſolency againſt him, happily cauſing an earth-quake as Martyr conjectureth, to caſt theſe walls down.
Note. Whence note, that ſuch as blaſpheme and diſhonour God can no where be ſafe, but even that which they flee unto and have confidence in, ſhall turn to their ruine. For Benhadad their king, whileſt they thus miſerably lay buried under the city wall, he hid himſelf in the moſt ſecret place that he could finde, but it is to be underſtood, that he did ſo whileſt the wall was yet ſtanding, as thinking, that he could not be ſafe any where elſe, if the Iſraelites ſhould break into the city. Now the wall being down, and the city by this means coming into Ahabs power, it was thought vain for him to lurk there any longer, and that it behoved him rather to V. 31. ſeek ſome other means of ſafety. Wherefore he ſendeth ſome to Ahab, as they had deviſed, with ropes about their heads to entreat for mercy, and when they had prevailed, Benhadad cometh alſo to him, and upon the offer of reſtoring to him cities formerly taken away, and the ſubmitting of his chief city Damaſcus unto him, he let him depart. But this did greatly diſpleaſe the Lord: for as ſome Hebrew expoſitours ſay, he was bidden before not to ſpare his life, yet of this we make not, onely it is certain, that he ought by the law of God to put him to death, as a blaſphemer of his divine power, and becauſe he did not, the Lord was highly offended.
But what was the ground, that Benhadads men went upon, when they ventured to go to Ahab for him? The kings of Iſrael (ſaid they) are mercifull. Of any notable example of mercy towards an enemy amongſt them we read not, but as Martyr ſaith, either reference was had to David and Solomon, or it is to be held, that many things were done by them which were not recorded, amongſt which were their acts of mercy. And mercy, when it ſhould be ſhewed to the miſerable, it is a great grace in a king, that ſerveth God, as wherein the vice-gerent is like his lord: and therefore moſt probably kings of Iſrael were not like the heathen kings about them for barbarous crueltie; but mercifull and pittifull. And happily religion did ſo far yet bear ſway with Ahab, although greatly corrupted with idolatrie, that clemencie did ſhine in him ſtill. And if this be a note of kings of Iſrael, that they are mercifull to the vanquiſhed, that are in their power; Popiſh rulers are not of Iſrael, becauſe they are moſt notorious for crueltie ſhewed both in the Weſt Indies, and lately in Germanie; as the tears of Germanie do declare. But mercy now was not commendable in a king of Iſrael, no more then in Saul towards Agag, againſt whom God had made ſo plain a demonſtration, that he was for the cutting of him off, by his miraculous fighting againſt him both in the field and citie, as in Ioſhuah his time he did againſt Iericho and the five Ammorite kings, of whom he would not ſpare one, nor yet of all the other kings, whom God brought into his power. The ſervants of Benhadad preſuming upon Ahabs mercie, come unto him with ropes about their heads, whereby ſome will have meant halters about their necks, in token of their ſubjection to be hanged up, if he pleaſed, and they hereby confeſſed themſelves to have deſerved, and ſackcloth about their loines, moſt forcible motives to pitie, neither were they deceived, for they found mercie. But here by the way, ſee the mutabilitie of worldlie things, Benhadad who but the year before inſulted over Ahab as without all power to reſiſt him, is now brought down before him, that he humblie ſueth for his life, to make all potentates beware how they ſlight the higheſt power, and to teach them to feare and tremble before him, as they are admoniſhed, Pſ. 2. 11. and not to be lifted up for their worldlie greatneſſe, which is ſo vain and tranſitorie.

V. 33. Benhadads men being now with Ahab, and having made their petition, ſaying, thy ſervant Benhadad ſaith, &c. watched for ſome word of comfort, and hearing the king ſay, he is my brother: they replied, inſtead of ſervant, ſaying, thy brother Benhadad; and ſo he requiring it, brought him to the king, who uſed him with all courteſie; V. 34. whereupon he offered to reſtore thoſe cities to him, which his father had taken from his father, and that he ſhould make him ſtreets in Damaſcus. A doubt here ariſeth, how Benhadad could ſay thus; ſeeing in Ahabs fathers time the king of Syria took nothing from him; but in the time of Baaſhah his predeceſſour, when he came againſt Iſrael at the inſtigation of Aſa, king of Iudah. But by his father his predeceſſour is to be underſtood, and therefore Ioſephus relateth it thus; taken from thy Anceſtours, whom he ſucceeded in the kingdom, as a ſonne doth his father, being therefore not unaptly called his father. By ſtreets in Damaſcus what is meant, all are not agreed; for ſome ſaith Martyr, underſtand a court of judgement, which Ahab ſhould keep there, as ſuperiour to Benhadad; for in making him ſupream judge in that his chief city, he ſubmitted all unto him; others underſtand a market place, wherein there ſhould be buying and ſelling under him, as the Lord thereof; and he accordingly taking the toll or tribute, others underſtand certain ſtreets wherein his tribute gatherers ſhould dwell, to receive them for his uſe. Theſe two laſt are followed by moſt, reſolving it thus thou ſhalt make a market place in Damaſcus, and take tributes there. Ioſephus, thou ſhalt have liberty to goe to Damaſcus, but this is a poore offer, and therefore too frigid; when Benhadads father made him ſtreets in Samaria, we doe not read; but Martyr conjectureth, that it was at the time when being hired by Aſa, he came againſt Iſrael.

Vatablus.

Thus the heathen king to ſave his life made large proffers, but meant, as the Rabbins ſay, not to perform them, but onely to deceive Ahab; and it is certain that he did not, although before his departure he bound himſelfe by oath to doe it. For hereupon aroſe that warre againſt Ramoth Gilead, wherein Ahab loſt his life. ch. 22. V. 35. When Ahab had ſhewed this facility towards the blaſphemous king, and entring into league with him diſmiſſed him; a prophet came unto him to threaten him therefore with death, but firſt he procured one to ſtrike and wound him, as if he had come out of the battell, that he might not be known to Ahab, till that he had given ſentence againſt himſelfe. But before he found a man that would ſtrike him at his bidding in Gods name, he required one to doe it, who refuſed; and thereupon had his judgement to be ſlain by a Lion, as moſt think; Cald. Toſtat. Ioſeph. Theoderet, Pro- copius, &c. yet the text ſaith only that he was ſmitten by a Lion, becauſe he would not ſmite when he was bidden in the word of the Lord. Theodoret ſetteth the whole paſſage more fully thus. A certain prophet, Michaiah by name came to a certain Iſraelite, and bad him ſmite and wound him on his face; adding that God would have him doe ſo. But when he would not obey, the prophet threatned him; and accordingly he periſhed by a Lion, that met him. And this may ſerve for a full expoſition upon this place, ſeeing a Lion doth never ſmite but unto death: and hereby a reaſon may be conceived of the prophets disfiguring by his wound being upon his face, when he had alſo ſtrewed duſt upon it, as here followeth. And if this prophet were Michaiah, we may ſee ſome reaſon of Ahabs ſpeech concerning him, ch. 22. that he never propheſied good unto him. And by the example of this man ſmitten by a Lion, becauſe he would not ſmite a good man at the word of the Lord, ſaith Pellican. Pellican, it was taught that a wicked man ought much leſſe to be ſpared againſt his will, as Ahab had done by Benhadad. When the prophet was ſmitten and woun-V.38. ded by another, he came ſlurried and diſguiſed to the king, feining himſelfe firſt to be one that came out of the campe, where one taken priſoner was committed to his cuſtody with a charge, that if he let him goe, his life ſhould pay for his, &c. This the king hearing preſently gave judgement, as David had done before to Nathan coming in like manner to him, and then the prophet wiping away the duſt, manifeſted himſelfe, and told him plainly, that he ſhould die for ſuffering Benhadad to eſcape. If any man ſhall marvaile, why he thus by diſſembling firſt came to threaten the king, and not plainly and directly. It is anſwered, that he learned of Nathan to come thus parabolically; for if he had dealt plainly, and come at the firſt like himſelfe, Ahab being conſcious that he came now for no good, would not have heard him, eſpecially being puft up by his great victory, or elſe he would have been enraged againſt him, whereas now he was brought to give ſentence againſt himſelf before he knew it, and ſo when the prophet came to deale plainly with him, was filled with confuſion inſtead of rage, and if he raged, it was but fretting inwardly at it.

P. Martyr. Martyr expounding this parable, ſaith, that by the man, who committed one taken to him to keep, is to be underſtood the captaine who had power; by the wound given the prophet on the head, the blow that ſhould be given to the head of Iſrael, and for this cauſe he would go wounded before the king and bleeding, to ſhew, that if he muſt dye for ſuffering an eſcape, when he was in this caſe, Ahab was much more worthy to dye, who being in ſuch caſe, that he could more eaſily have held the man appointed to be kept, did yet let him go, and that not through negligence, but adviſedly making a league with him, and that when a greater then any captain had adjudged him to death, and that Ahab ſhould hold him being in his hands, and ſlay him, namely the Lord, as may be gathered, v. 42. Thou haſt let go a man of my accurſing, איש חרמי, therefore it was ſome way ſignified unto Ahab, that he muſt not be ſpared as the king of Iericho, who was accurſed before, might not be, nor any of his city. Some note that חרמי ſignifieth alſo [my net] and going according to this, that Benhadad was taken by God, as in a net, and brought to Ahab to be ſlain, and not by his own power. But for him that was bidden in the word of the Lord to ſtrike the prophet and would not, being therefore by and by judged, it may ſeem hard, becauſe how could he tell, that the Lord would have it ſo done, for even prophets of God ſometime diſſemble, as the old prophet of Bethel: 1 King.13. To ſatisfie this quere, Martyr thinketh, that this man knew, that it was the Lords will, ſeeing he is ſaid in the vulgar Latin to have been his fellow, and in the Hebrew [his near neighbour]. according to others, his ſinne was, that he enquired not further about this precept, but went away as not regarding it, but the former is to be preferred. And if it be demanded why the Lord would have the prophet wounded, when as he could have otherwiſe diſguiſed him? Toſtatus anſwereth well, that he did it to exerciſe his obedience, and to teach us in his example, to be ready to ſuffer willingly to wounds and to death, when he requireth. To conclude this of the prophets threatning death to him, and his people, for diſmiſſing Benhadad, it may be a warning to all Iudges and Kings not to ſave the lives of thoſe, that ought

ought by the law of God to dye, when they are brought before them, leſt the like judgement befall them therefore to that which befell Ahab. If it be doubted, how the people could be juſtly puniſhed, when the king onely ſinned? The like was reſolved before, upon 2 Sam. 24. they had their ſinnes alſo, which made them guilty of death before God, and therefore his ſtriking of them upon this occaſion could not be unjuſt. But it ſeemeth that the people were ſpared when Ahab periſhed, chap. 22. For Benhadad bade his men fight, againſt none but the king of Iſrael. Anſw. They could not fight againſt him being in the midſt of them, but many of his men muſt needs be ſmitten alſo, yea it may plainly be gathered, that many fell with him, becauſe v. 35. it is ſaid, that the warre was grievous that day, and continued till the evening, at what time Ahab died. He was forced, although deadly wounded, to abide in the battle, leſt others by his fleeing ſhould be diſcouraged and by fleeing alſo give more advantage to the enemy, while therefore they fought fiercely on both ſides, and Iſrael was put to the worſe, it could not be, but many muſt periſh, although Martyr ſaith, if not now, yet afterwards this propheſie was verified upon them, viz. in Aſahels time. The Rabbins, as in many other things, ſo in this are ridiculous, that they ſay, this puniſhment threatned againſt Ahabs people, was remitted for the prophets wound, who was one of them.

42. Ahab hearing this repented not, but went away heavie, as fearing, that it would come thus to paſſe, ſeeing this prophet had hitherto ſpoken truly, and enraged ſo farre againſt him, as Ioſephus ſaith, that he caſt him into priſon: ſo, many wicked men ſcorn at Gods judgements, when they are threatned, not having an heart to ſeek by repentance to prevent them, unleſſe it be haply by repentance, ariſing out of a ſlaviſh fear, as in Ahab afterwards, when Elijah threatned him, who is ſaid then to have put on ſack-cloth and to humble himſelf.

CHAP. XXI.

V. 1.
Joſephus.

IT fell out after this, that Naboth the Iezreelite had a vineyard in Iezreel near the houſe of Ahab King of Samaria.] Ioſephus relateth this as done before the two victories againſt the Syrians, but by theſe words it is plain, that this happened after. It is made doubtfull, where this vineyard lay, becauſe the Sept. have it only. Naboth the Iezreelite had a certain vineyard near the floor or houſe of Abub, without ſhewing where it lay. And Hebr. it is a vineyard was to Naboth the Iezreelite, which was in Iezreel; where a doubt may be made, whether the word, which, ſhould be referred to the vineyard, or to him dwelling in Iezreel, but a vineyard he might have lying elſewhere; this hath given occaſion to ſome to place it in Samaria, but to me it ſeemeth plain that it lay in Iezreel, both by the words of the text, and becauſe he was a Iezreelite that ought it, and his fathers before him, being of the tribe of Iſſachar; and Samaria lay 16 miles from it, happily in another tribe: wherefore it is the more improbable that Naboth had any part of his inheritance lying there, and another reaſon appeareth beſides this, that it was the inheritance of his fathers; why he would not ſell it, viz. becauſe inheritances ought not to paſſe from one tribe to another. But letting this paſſe, by the law of God it was fordidden to ſell patrimonies ſo, as that they might never return again. For it is ſaid, if a man by poverty were conſtreined to ſell, he or a near kinſman for him might at any time redeem it again; and if not, it ſhould return in the year of Iubilee. And the reaſon is rendred, becauſe the land was the Lords, and all the Iſraelites were but as tenants to him, and a tenant cannot put away the ground of his Land-Lord any otherwiſe, then he alloweth. Now the Lord allowed not any of them to put away his inheritance, but in caſe of poverty driving him to it, and in this caſe Naboth was not; and he could not without ſinning yield to this requeſt: neither becauſe Ahab would have had it in ſuch a manner, that there ſhould have been no liberty of redeeming it again. Some think that Naboth was to blame for anſwering the king ſo, and not rather declaring unto him the law of God againſt it, and putting him in mind, that he was to rule others others according to his lawes. But what elſe did his anſwer tend unto, when he ſaid, God forbid that I ſhould ſell, &c. He was therefore without doubt a man that feared God, and abhorred greatly from doing againſt his law, and Ahabs very deſiring of this contrary to Gods law was a great ſinne, although he would have bought and paid for it. If it be objected, Samuel told the people, that this was the manner 1 Sam.8.14. of a king to take their olives, and vine-yards, and fields, &c. It is anſwered, that he meant thus many kings would do, who were wicked and tyrannicall, and not that thus they might do, for it is contrary to the duty of a king, Deut. 17.18,19.

P.Martyr. We may note here with Martyr, that ſometime a man hath poſſeſſions in this Note. world to his hurt, for that his life is endangered hereby, that we be not ſo much taken with the love and deſire hereof.

V.4. Ahab being denied the vine-yard, which he ſo earneſtly deſired, and upon ſo equall terms, for he offered either to give the full price, or a better vine-yard for it, was ſo ſtricken, that he fell ſick upon this deniall. And herein he excelled many kings, who without price will take from their ſubjects what they pleaſe, or upon requeſt being denied, will preſently command them to be ſlain. Ahab was not ſo tyrannicall, but thinking now, that he could by no means attain this vine-yard, which lay ſo conveniently for him, and being vexed at Naboths obſtinacie, as thinking it a great indignity to be denied that upon entreaty, which by his regall power he V.6,7. could command, he fell even ſick for ſorrow. Then Iezabel his wife, when ſhe had learned of him the cauſe, preſently meditated revenge by cutting off Naboth, in which kinde of divelliſh cruelty againſt the innocent, ſhe had been a long practitioner.
And it ſeemeth, that although the death of Naboth onely be ſpoken of by and by in this hiſtory, yet ſhe meant not to be ſatisfied with that onely, but of his ſonnes alſo, becauſe 2 King.9.26. they are ſpoken of, as ſlain with their father. The deviliſh woman hearing the cauſe, ſought to comfort him immediately, by telling V.8,9. him, that ſhe would give him Naboths vine-yard. And then ſhe wrote Letters to the Elders of Iezreel in the kings name, to proclaim a faſt, and at the aſſembly to place Naboth on high in a chief place, &c. Why a faſt muſt be appointed to bring Vatablus. her devilliſh intent about may well be a queſtion. But it is anſwered by ſome, that they uſed at times of faſting, to enquire out notorious wicked men, and to puniſh Toſtatus. them. By others, that when any notoriouſly wicked were to be cenſured and cut Lyra. off, the Iudges kept a faſt, that they might not ſeem to give ſentence out of troubled affections, but maturely, the favour and direction of God being thus firſt ſought P.Martyr. for. Martyr, that when a capitall crime was committed in any place, a faſt was appointed, to expiate and to avert the wrath of God from that place, and then the ſin was enquired into and puniſhed, which is the moſt probable. Yet he ſaith further, that R. Kimbi expounds the word עום here uſed, an aſſembly, for ſo it alſo ſignifieth. And if it be ſo taken, nothing elſe is meant here, but that an aſſembly ſhould be called together, before which Naboth ſhould be accuſed and judged, and Ioſephus. he thinketh it indifferent to follow this or the other. Ioſephus hath both, and if there Ioel 2.15. were a faſt, it was not without an aſſembly, according to that, proclaim a faſt, call a ſolemne aſſembly. The ſame Kimbi yet rendreth it both here, and Ier. 36.6. an aſſembly. But the prophet Eſay ſeemeth to allude unto their unjuſt proceedings against the innocent, as uſuall in their faſts, ſaying, *ye faſt unto ſtrife and debate and Eſa.58.4. to ſtrike with the fiſt moſt wickedly, wherefore it is beſt to follow the common exposition.
This wicked woman would have an aſſembly called to faſt, and ſo to proceed againſt Naboth, as doing herein a thing acceptable unto God. For the place, where Naboth ſhould be ſet, Ioſephus thinketh, that it was the moſt honourable, according to the dignity of his houſe, in which ſhe would have him placed, and then upon his conviction pluckt out again, and ſtript of his honour. Others better, will have the high place, in which he was to be ſet, to be a place higher then others, in which they uſed to place the guilty, that were to be tried, that they might be ſeen and heard of all men, Hebr. it is בראשהעם in the head of the people, that is, on high. Then ſhe would have two ſonnes of Belial, that is, two moſt deſperately wicked ſet over againſt him; of the word Belial, ſee more Deut. 13.13. and theſe ſhe would have to teſtifie againſt him, that he had blaſphemed God and the king, that ſo he might be ſtoned to death. For this was the puniſhment of blaſpheming God, but for the King it is only forbidden to blaſpheame him, Exod. 22. 28. onely as he is the father of the country, and to blaſpheame father or mother was death; he might thus alſo be thought worthy of death. The word rendred blaſpheame here is bleſſe, he hath bleſſed God, &c. but the ſame word which ſignifieth bleſſing, is put alſo for curſing, becauſe the Hebrewes ſaith Martyr, did ſo farre abhorre from curſing, that they would not once name it, when the curſing of God was to be ſpoken of. Of the like uſe of this word, ſee alſo Iob. 2. and the curſed hunger of gold, is in latin called auri ſacra fames. The vulgar Latin according to the proper ſignification of the Hebrew word hath it, he bleſſed God and the King. So likewiſe the Septuagint; but Theod. ſaith, that, he bleſſed, is put for he blaſpheamed; Lucifer Calaritanus rendreth it, he curſed; he ſpake vily of God, or detractingly as Pharaoh ſometime did, and Sanneherib afterwards. For thus, or to lift up a mans ſelfe, as God, is ſaid to be a blaſpheaming, as it was judged to be in our Lord, and his Martyr Steven, ſpeaking of him, as at Gods right hand. Whereas the Scripture ſaith, two falſe witneſſes; Ioſephus erroneouſly hath three; and by theſe Naboth being convinced, muſt be ſtoned to death, wherein what blame could light upon the King or Queen; for no man could now think, but that Naboth ſuffered worthily, and the King might juſtly ſeize upon his vineyard, and all his other goods alſo, as forfeited to the King.

Levit. 24. 15. 16
Exod. 21. 17.
Levit. 20. 9.

V. 11.

According to this deviliſh propoſition of Iezabel, there were both elders and falſe witneſſes ready in Iezreel to execute her will, which ſheweth the miſerable ſtate of thoſe times, and wheneſoever the higheſt authority is corrupted; for then the wicked only riſe and are promoted to the order of elders and ſenatours, and they only have favour, who are more ready to obſerve the King or Queen then God. Of Naboths ſpeaking for himſelfe we read nothing, nor of any for him; for it was in vain when the witneſſes had ſpoken, for any to ſpeak; and his ſilence ſhewed his patience in ſuffering to his greater glory. Ambroſe to honour him the more, ſaith that he was a Martyr, and that not untruly, becauſe he ſuffered for the law of God. Naboth being dead by ſtoning without the city, to ſhow a deteſtation of blaſphemers, as unworthy to breath in that holy place, Iezabel is ſoon certified of it, becauſe ſhe and not Ahab was knowne to be the plotter of it, although the letters were written in his name. For they knew well enough that ſhe ruled, and did what ſhe liſted. Then ſhe told Ahab, and ſhe without enquiring; yea happily ſhee told him the manner alſo, went to take poſſeſſion of his vineyard. For if he were dead, unleſſe for ſome capitall crime, whereby his eſtate was forfeited to the king, his kindred or neareſt kinſman ſhould have had the inheritance after him. Martyr ſaith, that ſome hold Naboth to have been Ahabs uncle, which ſeemeth the more probable both for the honourable place, wherein he was ſet at the aſſembly; and becauſe his vineyard lay ſo near Ahabs houſe, and therefore he and his children being ſlain, which is here concealed, but remembred by Iehu, 2 Kings 9. 26. it now of right fell to him. And of rejecting this conjecture I ſee no cauſe, and if hee came not thus to the vineyard, it muſt either be becauſe no other man durſt chalenge it, knowing that it was the Kings deſire, and it would be dangerous to withſtand him; or becauſe the judges that condemned Naboth and his children, gave it to the king for the blaſpheamy, whereby Naboth was pretended to blaſpheame him. For if they would without reſpect to Gods law, puniſh children for the ſinne of the father, it is not to be thought incredible, that in other things they would alſo do what they pleaſed, to humour the king. And both theſe opinions ſaith Lyra, are of the Hebrew Rabbins, let the reader follow whither he pleaſeth, but he ſubſcribeth to the firſt as moſt probable.

Then the word of the Lord came to Elijah, &c.] Ahab having committed ſuch a crying ſin, which was worthy the ſharpeſt cenſure of the moſt thundering and couragious prophet, Elijah the moſt zealous father of the prophets, is again ſent unto him to threaten him with death, and the licking of his blood by dogs, in the place where Naboths was licked; which maketh it manifeſt, that Ahab was ignorant of Iezabels plot, but liked well of it, and ſo became as guilty as ſhee; for to him Eli- jah ſaith, thou haſt killed, &c. Toſtatus alſo noteth, that Elijah came unto Ahab the day after Naboths death, becauſe 2 King. 9. 26. it is ſaid, I have ſeen yeſterday. &c. and the evening alſo is there added, for they avoided the light when they ſlew his ſonnes, leſt ſome uproare ſhould have been among the people upon ſo heinous a fact. This indeed proveth, that Ahab delayed no time, but went to Iezreel the next day, and it is not unlike but that Elijah came upon him at the inſtant. Whereas he ſaith, [in the ſame place the dogs ſhall lick] the event ſheweth, that it is not to be underſtood of Ahabs perſon but of his ſonne. For his bloud was licked at the pool of Samaria, and his ſonnes in that place, 2 King. 9. 25. ſo Lyra. Or by that place, according to others, may be underſtood the place in common extending from Samaria to Iezreel, where this murther was plotted and acted. But by the ſpeech of Iehu, the portion of Naboth ſeemeth to be meant in particular, and when his ſonnes bleeding body was caſt there, his bloud was there to be licked; but then it muſt be yielded, that the licking of the bloud of his perſon is not to be excluded, his bloud ſhould be licked by the dogs then it is meant, and his bloud running in the veines of his ſon in that very vine-yard. Martyr and Junius without rendring מפקום by the word place, expound it onely [becauſe that] and ſo hold, that the ſhedding of his bloud onely is meant, and the licking of it by dogs, as he had done to Naboth. But why then did Iehu, who beſt knew the meaning, cauſe his ſonne to be caſt into the portion of Naboth, when he had ſlain him? Wherefore the place was particularly denoted in the propheſie, and not the thing onely.

1 King. 22.38. Lyra.

In this place, ſaith Hugo, that is, in this countrey.

V. 20. Lyra.

Then Ahab ſaid, haſt thou found me (O mine enemy.) Lyra following the vulgar Latin, Haſt thou found me an enemy to thee?] As if it were meant, did I ever any enemy-like act againſt thee, that thou ſhouldſt thus threaten me? But the Hebr. and Greek have it, O mine enemy. Wherefore Ahab did not expoſtulate with him, as rendring unto him evill, when he had not deſerved it, but ſhewed the malice of his own heart againſt Elijah, as againſt one that he accounted his deadly enemy. And ſo do all deſperate wicked men all the faithfull ſervants of God, which reprove and threaten them for their wickedneſſe.

Note.

V. 21.

The prophet replied, I have found thee, for thou haſt ſold thy ſelf to do wickedly in the ſight of the Lord.] Meaning, that he wholly gave himſelf to wickedneſſe, as a thing ſold for any purpoſe is wholly employed that way, and was altogether in the power of ſin, as that is in the buyers power, ſo Toſtatus and Martyr. Thus the Iſraelites are ſaid to be ſold to ſinning Eſa. 50. And St. Paul ſaith of himſelf, Sold under ſin Rom. 7. In the ſight of the Lord is added to ſhew, that all the evill which he did, was taken ſpeciall notice of by the Lord, and therefore by him he ſhould be judged accordingly.

Toſtatus. P. Martyr.

I will bring evill upon thee, and cut off from Ahab him that piſſeth, &c.] For the meaning, ſee before upon the like threatning againſt Ieroboam, chap. 14. And the dogs ſhall eat Iezabel in the ditch or between the walles, or in the field of Iezrael, in the Hebr. it is בחל, which ſignifieth, according to Pagninus, a fore-wall, ſo called becauſe it is a leſſer before the greater, which Martyr followeth and Junius, calling it pramunitio, or a ditch between wals, or compaſſing the wall of a city, or according to Ioſeph Kimhi a field, for he will have it to come of חלק a field, the laſt letter being taken away. And this ſeemeth to be the beſt, becauſe 2 King. 9. 36. Iehu recounting this propheſie, hath it, בחלק וזר עאל, and there it is ſhewed to have been fulfilled. And this was a greater puniſhment then that of Ahab, as her ſinne was greater: for he had a buriall, ſhe none, he fell in the warres, ſhe by her own attendants, being thrown down through a window as moſt baſe, and trampled under the feet of horſes, to deterre all from being authours and inſtigatours of others to evill. * That which followeth of the dogs eating ſuch of his, as ſhould dye in the citie, &c. is the ſame, that was threatned againſt Baaſha, chap. 16. 4. and that which is added v. 25. of his ſinning more then any, that went before him, was alſo ſpoken before chap. 16. 30. Onely it is made a queſtion by Martyr, whether theſe be the words of the hiſtorian, or of Elijah? but concludeth them againſt many other Expoſitours, to be the words of Elijah, whereas it ſeemeth to me rather, according to other Expoſitours, to be plainly the ſpeech of the hiſtorian, becauſe

*V. 24. The vulgar Latin contrary to the Hebr. If Ahab ſhall dye in the city, the dogs ſhall eat him, &c. neither is it true by the hiſtory, becauſe Ahab was buried. Whereas Toſtatus to ſalve all ſaith, that for his penitency this was remitted, he is taxed by one of his own ſide, Sallianus who goeth from the vulgar Lat. and followeth the Hebrew herein.

cauſe it is in the third perſon, but Elijah ſpake in the ſecond, unto v. 23, 24. which theſe words follow as an inference juſtifying the Lord in his proceedings againſt him, made not Elijah, for then he ſhould have repeated ſomething ſpoken before, but by another man, who alſo compareth him in his idolatries to the Amorites, who were caſt out of the land; intimating that likewiſe both he and all his ſhould be but juſtly dealt withall in being thus ſpued out alſo.

V. 27.

When Ahab heard this he rent his clothes, and put on ſackcloth, and faſted, and went ſoftly.] The Chaldee and vulgar Latin bare-footed, others hanging his head. By his going ſoftly as the Hebrew hath it, is meant, after the manner of mourners. It ſtrook him more to hear of the cruel deſtruction of his wife & family, then of the loſſ of his own life before; or to feel the hand of God in the long continued drought, or to ſee the miracle of fire ſent down upon Elijah his ſacrifice, or any thing elſe, which the Lord did miraculouſly for him. For he was now even overcome with terrors, this being added to the reſt, & he could not but believe that it ſhould verily come thus to paſſe, becauſe he threatned it, of the truth of whoſe propheſies he had had experience formerly. Yet his wicked heart could not be moved to true repentance, only for the fear of theſe judgements he ſorrowed, and humbled himſelfe before the Lord, as is ſaid, *v.*29. whereby is intimated, that in this mournfull manner he ſonght mercy and pardon at his hands, or according to Martyr, believing what was threatned from the Lord by Elijah. For by his malice againſt Michaiah, a prophet of the Lord declared, ch. 22. he ſhewed that this ſorrow was not godly to repentance never to bee repented of, as it is called, 2 Cor. 7. 10. but worldly; not ariſing out of the love and feare of God, and hatred of his ſinnes, for then he would not ſo ſoon have added more ſinne to his former, by impriſoning Gods prophet for telling him the truth, but only from this, that he was now like to ſuffer moſt grievous things for his wickedneſſe, which yet he thought happily might thus be prevented, ſo Theoderet, Procopius, and Martyr and Pellican, call it hypocriſie. Auguſtine a temporany repentance. Lyra ſaith, it is commonly held, that it was only a ſorrow ariſing from from fear of judgements, and whereas it may ſeem true repentance, becauſe God accepted of it ſo far as to deferre theſe judgements that were temporany, therefore he ſaith it was not, for then it would have been of force to exempt him from eternall. Others, amongſt whom is S. Auguſtine, that it was true repentance, but temporany; and therefore prevailed only for the deferring, not the taking away of the puniſhments threatned. Gregory exhorting to repentauce ſaith, if Ahab pleaſed God becauſe he repented for temporall judgements threatned, how much more ſhall they pleaſe him, who repent for that they are threatned with eternall. But Chryſoſtome goeth further then any, ſaying, that for this he had all his ſinnes pardoned; of which, there is no probability for the reaſon before going. Yet Toſtatus following him, ſaith it was true repentance, although he ſoon returned to his former vomit. To conclude, Ambroſe ſaith rightly, even in treacherous Ahab mourning had found grace, if envie remaining had not more heaped up ſin; and Gratian ſaith, that by the inſtigation of his wife, he by and by returned to his old condition and wickedneſſes. De pænit. diſtinct. 3.

V. 29.

For this his repentance ariſing from feare of judgemets, which laſted not; the Lord was ſo moved, that he promiſed to deforre the calamities that ſhould come upon his houſe till after his death, which ſheweth his proneneſſe to merey, where there is ſorrow for ſin unto amendment of life. For otherwiſe the benefit is little, as unto Ahab, a deferring, but not a taking away of future judgements. And if ſorrow to amendment may be wrought upon terrours or any cauſe, they are happy terrours; as to the jaylour, Acts 16.

The Allegory.

Nabuth by interpretation is poſſeſſion; Iezreel, the ſeed of God, according to the ordinary gloſſe, figuring out the ſonne of God. His vineyard the Church Ahab coveted, that is, the brother of the father, as the word ſignifieth; and by him the Iew the brother of Chriſt according to the fleſh is ſet forth to make a garden of hearbs, that is, to plant in it the weeds of traditions; & when Chriſt withſtood this, Iezabel, that is, the Synagogue plotted his deſtruction; and then the Iew poſſeſſed the Church by extirping juſtification by faith, and planting that by the works of the law, thus far the Ord. Gloſſ. But their end therefore was, as of Ahab and Iezzabel, to be rooted out of that land, and to be moſt ignominious, as ſinning in this execrable fact of theirs, viz. murthering the Lord of life, more, then any that were before them, and this judgement ſtayed not here, but extended to their poſterity alſo, from generation to generation. Morally, ſaith Lyra, mighty men with their evill counſellours are here taxed, which ſeek unjuſtly the poſſeſſions of others. Againſt ſuch the preacher ought to inveigh, and this will be the ruine of their houſes, yet ſuch as repent ſhall have their puniſhment changed from eternall to temporall.

CHAP. XXII.

V. 1. B*Vt they were three years without Warre, &c.*] That is, ſince the time that Ahab had diſmiſſed Benhadad, but now judgement ſo long ago threatned, beginneth to work. There being an opportunity of Iehoſhaphats coming to viſit Ahab, betwixt 1 Kings 8.18. whom ſome affinity had been contracted, by his taking of Ahabs daughter Athaliah to be wife unto his ſonne Ioram, he now meditates upon the going up to Ramoth Gilead, with an army to take it out of the Syrians hands, who had unjuſtly hitherto held it from him, contrary to his covenant made with him, when being three years before in his power, he upon ſuch conditions let him go, as may appear ch. 20. And accordingly he moveth Iehoſhaphat to joyn with him in this 2 Chron. 18. 1. warre, who ſhewed all forwardneſſe therein. 2 Chron. 18. 1. Iehoſhaphat his contracting of this affinitie with Ahab is firſt ſpoken of, and then how that after certain years he went down to Samaria, to Ahab; the vulgar Latin more particularly hath it, after two yeares, at whoſe coming he killed ſheep and oxen very many, &c. and then perſwaded him to go up to Ramoth Gilead with him. This good king therefore having already committed one errour, in contracting affinity with wicked Ahab, now by his flattery and kindneſſe to him and his followers, is drawn into another, viz. to joyn with him in fighting againſt the Syrians, as being all one with him: for that he ſinned herein, ſee ch. 19. 1, 2.

V. 5. Ioſephus. But whereas Ahab would have gone to this warre without ſeeking to the Lord firſt, Iehoſhaphat deſireth him to enquire by a prophet, before they went forth, of the ſucceſſe. Yet Ioſephus ſaith, that this was not done till their armies were met at Samaria, and having received their pay from both the kings, were ready to march on. And if it were ſo, as probably it was, for having heard by the Lords prophet, that this expedition ſhould be to Ahabs deſtruction, they went on notwithſtanding. Iehoſhaphat was herein to blame alſo, as enquiring pro forma tantum, but intending to proceed howſoever. Some there are, ſaith Martyr, that lay an- P. Martyr. other fault upon him, that he brake the league made by his father Aſa with the king of Syria, to gratifie Ahab; and ſome laſtly blame him for not bringing ſome Prophets or Prieſts of his own with him, when hee came down to Samaria; with whom he might have conſulted: for kings, ſaith Martyr, ſhould alwayes have ſuch about them, both to perform holy duties at their courts, and to adviſe with about things pertaining to piety. But to the firſt of theſe it may be ſaid, that he was not tied by any league made by his father with an idolatrous king, and an enemy to the people of God. To the ſecond, that Iehoſhaphat knew not of this warre, when he took his journey to Samaria, and therefore brought no prophet with him, yet it is not to be thought, but that he had ſome prieſts attending upon him, who could not yet give anſwer to this quere, unles the Ephod had bin there, or ſome one, by whom God uſed to reveal his will and purpoſe, in doubtfull matters. And there are that juſtifie Iehoſhaphat in his contracting of the affinitie aforeſaid, becauſe Ahab had repented, and he thinking it to be in truth, did not now take him to be one, with whom he might not joyn in affinitie, but thought it moſt convenient, for the ſetling of peace between their two kingdomes thus to do. And preſuming upon this, that he had by repentance made his peace with God, he doubted not of the lawfulneſſe of joyning with him in a juſt warre, ſuch as this was, viz. for the recovering of a city belonging to Iſrael out of the hands of the heathen. But becauſe this is cenſured, 2 Chron. 19. 1, 2. and Ahab is there called the wicked, and enemy to God, it is plain, that Iehoſhaphat faulted, neither was he moved by any other conſideration but in humane policie to joyn thus with Ahabs houſe, but the ill ſucceſſe hereof may be a warning to all godly kings, that none of them ever do the like.

V. 6. Vpon Iehoſhaphats motion to enquire, Ahab calleth together 400. prophets, which moſt probably were thoſe prophets of Baal, who did eat bread at Iezabels table, and eſcaped, when as many more, yea a greater number by 50. were cut off by Elijah. Yet Iehoſhaphat doubtleſſe thought them to be prophets of the Lord, becauſe they uſed his name, and were brought before him as his prophets, for ſuch he enquired after, and when he ſuſpected them as conſenting to flatter Ahab, he asked, whether there were not one prophet of the Lord more. And if they had not made a ſhew of being ſuch, certainly this good king would never have heard them.
Of theſe Ahab enquired, whether he ſhould goe up to Ramoth Gilead, that is, Ramoth a city in Gilead belonging to the tribe of Gad, on the other ſide of Iordan, bordering upon the Syrians; and therefore it was a city, which Benhadad was moſt unwilling to part of all others that he held in the land of Iſrael; howſoever ſay, that he reſtored not this unto Ahab, becauſe it was not taken away by his father, but had bin long before his time in the poſſeſſion of the Syrians, & it was a city of refuge, and belonged to the Pieſtrs, being called Ramoth Gilead, to diſtinguiſh it from another Ramah, which lay in Iſſachar. And Ioſephus ſaith, that it was taken from Amri Ahabs father, by the father of this Benhadad. But ſeeing the Syrians were mightier then Iſrael, and could raiſe farre greater armies, as may be gathered from the premiſes; what was it that Ahab truſted to, that he adventured to move war now againſt them? Anſ. Both his good ſucceſſe in two precedent battels, and the acceſſion of Iehoſh. army, who was a moſt mighty King. The falſe prophets anſwer all with one conſent, go up and proſper, for the Lord wil deliver it into the kings hand.] Lyra.
Wherein Lyra and after him Martyr taxeth them for ambiguous ſpeaking, like unto P. Martyr.
the Oracle to the king of the Epirots, Pirrhus, that went againſt the Romans; Aio te Æacida Romanos vincere poſſe: and that to Chrœſus, that if he paſſed over the river Haly, he ſhould overthrow a very great kingdome, which might bee underſtood as well of his own, as of another man. But the anſwer of theſe falſe prophets was nothing like theſe, ſeeing they firſt ſpake proſperity unto him. 2. By the king, into whoſe hand it ſhould be delivered was plainly meant Ahab, and not the king of Syria, becauſe it was in his hand already. Iehoſaphat not being ſatisfied with this anſwer, as one ſuſpecting theſe of ſycophancy, asketh after ſome other prophet of the Lord, or happily knowing by this time, as Pellican hath it, that they were no prophets of the Lord, but of Baal, although they uſed the Lords name, he required V. 7. a Prophet of the Lord indeed to be brought before him, who would give a true anſwer, V. 8, 9, 10, 11, upon which he might depend. Ahab ſaid that there was one, but whom he 12, 13. hated, becauſe he alwayes propheſied evill to him; yet at the importunity of Iehoſaphat he was brought, and inquired of the meſſenger that went for him, adviſing him by the way to ſpeak good, as the other Prophets had done; and Zedechiah eſpecially, who made him iron hornes ſaying, with theſe thou ſhalt puſh the Aramites, untill thou haſt deſtroyed them. But Michaiah nothing moved hereby, profeſſed to ſpeak only that, which God ſhould put into his mouth. In that Ahab ſaith of Michaiah, that he never ſpake good unto him; ſome gather, that it was he as hath been before ſaid, that in a diſguiſe had threatned Ahab 3 yeares before, that his life ſhould goe for Benhadads, whom he had ſpared. And therefore now he verily expected to heare the like again, from which he was moſt averſe; being willing rather to reſt in the counſell of ſuch, as ſpake pleaſing things to him, although to his deſtruction, then to heare one ſpeaking the truth, whereby he might have been preſerved.
And yet, as Pellican and ſome others have it, he had twice before propheſied Pellican. good unto him, for they would have him to have been the Prophet, that told him, that the Syrians ſhould be given into his hands; but becauſe he once threatned him, after that he hated him. So if the ſervants of God do not alwayes ſpeak good

Note. unto the wicked, they are by them accounted, as never ſpeaking good, and therefore hated of them. The good king Iehoſaphat hearing Ahab ſay, that he hated him becauſe he never ſpake good unto him; thought that no juſt cauſe of hatred, becauſe Prophets muſt ſpeak what God putteth into their mouthes, be it good or evill; and therefore he ſaid, Let not the king ſay ſo.] whereas Ahab ſpake of Michaiah, as if he were the only Prophet that remained, it is to be underſtood, that none but he was near, viz. as dwelling in Samaria, for Elijah was ſtill living, and many Prophets more in Iſrael; but it is moſt probable, that he knew not where to find them, as being hid from the rage of Iezabel. Only by a ſingular providence Michaiah was preſerved near unto him, and was endued with ſuch courage, as that no fear could make him to hide his head, or to refreine from ſpeaking againſt Ahab in his wickedneſſe. And in that now, after his humiliation he ſaith, that he never ſpake good unto him; it appeareth, that Ahabs repentance was not true, but that he perſiſted in his wickedneſſe unto the end, ſeeing the Prophet would not certainly have ſpoken evill to him alwayes, but becauſe he alwayes did evill.

Lyra. Touching the iron hornes of Zedekiah, he imitated in this the true prophets of God, ſaith Lyra, who to move men the more, added unto the word which they ſpake, outward ſenſible ſignes ſometimes, as Ieremiah, a yoake put about his neck.

V. 15. Michaiah being brought unto the king anſwered firſt, as the other falſe prophets had done; goe up and proſper, &c. But uttering theſe words in ſuch an ironicall manner, that it might eaſily be perceived, that he meant nothing leſſe. Some hold, ſaith Martyr, that he ſpake thus, as a man, and lead only by his private opinion, it being not yet revealed unto him what to anſwer; as it was not to Nathan, when David firſt enquired of him about building a temple: others, that he ſpake by way of wiſhing, but he preferreth the firſt, as trueſt. P. Martyr. For an irony is not perceived ſo much by the words ſpoken, as by the manner of ſpeaking; as when Elijah ſaid to Baals prophets, cry aloud, ſurely he is a God, &c. The unanimous conſent of 400, did nothing move Michaiah to goe againſt the truth, as it ought not to move us, that many hundreds ſometimes aſſembled in councell by the Pope or wicked Rulers, have conſented together to determine falſhoods; for if there be but one only that can ſpeak the contrary in the word of the Lord, it is rather to be embraced, than the conſenting determinations of many hundreds ſpeaking againſt it.

V. 16. The King ſaid unto him, how oft ſhall I adjure thee, to ſpeak nothing but the truth, &c.] Here it is manifeſt, that Ahab well perceived that Michaiah had hitherto only repeated the words of the falſe prophets, and not ſpoken any thing as from the Lord, that they might ground upon; for when any prophet did ſo, he uſed to ſay, thus ſaith the Lord.] wherefore, he adjured him to tell him the truth, whatſoever it was; and not to delay him with his mocks. For he apprehended him ſpeaking, as if he had ſaid, ſeeing you would have me ſay, as theſe 400 prophets; I ſay ſo too, but your expedition ſhall be never a whit the more proſperous for this. Whereas he ſpeaketh of adjuring him often; Martyr thinketh that he did it once, but then the prophet had his viſion, which he by and by declareth; for as he was coming, it ſeemeth that it was not revealed unto him, in that he ſaid, whatſoever the Lord ſhall ſpeak unto me, that will I ſay. Being for a while then taken up with the viſion, he did forbeare to anſwer the king, although he happily adjured him once or twice in that time to ſpeak. Wherefore he ſaid now again, how oft ſhall I adjure thee.] The vulgar Latin leaveth no doubt at all here; rendering it, [iterum atque iterum, adjuro te.] But in the Hebrew it is, as before; the meaning yet happily being, as the Latin tranſlation hath it by an Hebrew Idiom: the Septuagint, [illegible] but tranſl. Ald. ποσάκις.

V. 17. Then he ſaid, I ſaw all Iſrael diſperſed, &c. as ſheep having no ſhepheard, &c.] Myſtically the death of Ahab was by this viſion ſet forth, and the flying of his people before the Syrians, as overcome by them. For the king was their ſhepheard, of whom it is ſaid, that they had none; that is, becauſe he was wounded deadly, and could lead them no more, the army was the ſheep ſcattered on the mountaines, when they fled upon thoſe montanous places of Ramoth, and they were chaſed by their enemies the Syrians, and they were bidden to return home, when by proclamation thus much was ſaid, v. 36. Iunius rendereth it in the future tenſe, vidi omnem Iſraelem diſperſum iri.] But whereas it is ſaid, Let them return home in peace; a queſtion is moved, how it could be ſaid thus of a people overcome, many of them being cut off, as was noted before, upon ch. 20, 38, 39, &c. Iunius ſaith, letting paſſe all further thought of warre; Martyr, the people did not now periſh, but Ahab onely; ſo likewiſe, Pellican, Lyra, &c. therefore ſaith Lyra, when it was threatned, ch. 20. Thy life ſhall goe for his life, and thy people for his people; it is not ſaid, the life of thy people, but thy life only; and the people for his people, by being made ſhamefully to flye, terrified, and diſperſed. If it be underſtood according to the expoſition going before, upon ch. 20. although many were ſlain with Ahab, the reſt might be ſaid to return in peace, becauſe the death of Ahab being knowne, againſt whom only the Syrians fought, they purſued not his army flying, but let them goe, as if they were no longer enemies to them; ſo that although whilſt they were in battell, they went by the worſt, yet now all fighting being at an end, they returned as in a time of peace, every man to his own place.

V.18. Ahab hearing this was offended, as preſently apprehending the meaning, and ſaid unto Iehoſaphat, did not I tell thee, that he never propheſieth good, but evill unto me? Thus perſwading the good king, that he propheſied not truly, but out of malice againſt him ſo Lyra. And hereby Iehoſaphat was alſo lead, to the endangering of his own life, which was another fault in him, as Martyr noteth; and Ahab by the judgement of God was carried on headlong againſt the knowne truth to his owne deſtruction, who might happily, if he had harkened to the Prophet, have eſcaped longer. But by this it appeareth, that Gods threatnings ſhall take effect, and rather then not, the wicked ſhall be authours to themſelves of their own ruine.

Note.

V.19. Again, Michaiah ſaid, heare the Word of the Lord, I ſaw the Lord ſitting upon his throne, and all the hoſte of heaven, &c.] The meaning is, that he ſaw him in ſome ſimilitude thus repreſented to his phantaſie, as Eſai. 6. it is likewiſe ſaid, and by Amos, for no man can ſee God and live; but in ſome repreſentation to inform him in particular of that which is to be revealed unto him, ſeeing God is a ſpirit and infinite. When Michaiah ſaw this is uncertaine; but moſt probably it was, whileſt he ſtood to propheſie before the two kings, as Steven, when he ſtood before the councell ſaw the heavens open, and Ieſus ſtanding at the right hand of God, and then he heard the words of the Lord, and of the evill ſpirit, which follow the eare of his mind, no audible voice being uttered. There was a repreſentation made to Michaiah of Gods ſitting upon his throne, and all the hoſt of heaven ſtanding about him on the right hand, and on the left.] Per Anthropopatheian, for God properly ſitteth not, neither hath the right hand or left, as men; but herein he applyeth himſelfe to our underſtanding, as alſo in his conſulting with them, which followeth, v. 20. Who ſhall deceive Ahab, that he may goe up and fall at Ramoth Gilead, &c. For in ſaying thus, he did but as our Lord afterwards conſulted with Philip, how he ſhould doe to feed the people that followed him in the wilderneſſe, who knew well enough before he asked, what he would doe, For God needs no counſellours, which argueth want of underſtanding, but he ſaid thus, to ſhew that all his doings are guided by counſell, and ſo ſhall certainly attain their end propounded. And in ſhewing himſelfe ſitting upon a throne with his hoſt about him, he gave the kings to underſtand his ſupream power over all earthly Princes; they ſate each one upon his throne, but here was a throne of farre greater Majeſty, ruling over all, and judging other thrones at his pleaſure, and having about him an hoſte ſufficient to execute his will, whatſoevever it ſhould be. In ſaying that this hoſte ſtood on his right hand and on his left, it is not meant that they were good and evill Angels; for it was only the hoſte of heaven that ſtood thus, and to ſtand on either ſide to miniſter to the Lord, as here is meant, is an honour, as is intimated by the ſaying of Chriſt to the two ſons of Zebedee, to ſit on my right hand and on my left is not mine to give, but my Fathers.

Acts 7.
*Math.*20.23.

V.22. The evill ſpirit then, which is ſaid to have come forth and ſtood before the Lord, is none of that hoſte, but Satan, who appeareth ſometimes amongſt the holy Angels, as a jaylour or hangman, at the court to execute the kings will. For although he be not here called an evill ſpirit, yet becauſe he ſaid he would be a lying ſpirit in the mouth of Ahabs prophets, we may certainly gather, that he was none of the heavenly hoſte, to whom lying agreeth not, but the devill, who alſo came and ſtood amongſt the good angels, *Iob.*1.6. and is ſaid to have been a lyer and murtherer from the beginning. *Joh.*8.44.

V. 22. This lyer then was he, that ſaid, he would be a lying ſpirit in their mouth, which the Lord alſo bade him to do and prevail. Vpon this a great queſtion ariſeth, whether God be not then the authour of ſin, ſeeing he biddeth the evill ſpirit, to cauſe Ahabs prophets to ſpeak lies, which to do was ſinne both in him and them? To this Theodoret and Procopius and after them Toſtatus anſwer, that Gods bidding here is to be underſtood of nothing elſe but his permitting him, that was ready enough and offered without bidding, to do it, as the thing, that he longeth always to be practiſing. If it ſhall ſeem that his bidding and promiſing ſucceſſe, ſeemeth to imply more then a permiſſion, for no judge doth ſo commit a malefactour to his executioner, but charging and commanding it to be done. It is anſwered, that this circumlocution is made onely to ſet forth the certainty of Ahabs deſtruction, and the means of effecting it, as ſurely, as if God, who hath all power and cannot be fruſtrated in any deſigne of his, had commanded it thus to be done. How farre forth god worketh in ſin, ſee my expoſition on Rom. 9. The conceit of R. Solomon here, that this ſpirit was the ſpirit of Naboth is vain, and therefore well rejected by Lyra, becauſe it belongeth to the evill ſpirit to utter lies, by the mouth of falſe prophets, and not to the ſpirits of the juſt, ſuch as Naboth was. Of which, and of the ſouls of the faithfull departed out of this life, that they wander not about upon earth, but that ſuch apparitions are diabolicall deluſions, ſee Martyr more largely upon this place.

V. 24. Zidkijah one of the falſe prophets and a chief, as it ſeemeth amongſt them, took it moſt heinouſly, that he, who had expreſſed himſelf not onely by word, but by ſigne, ſhould now be accounted a lyar, and therefore he ſmote Michaiah on the cheek. Ioſephus ſaith, that he added two arguments to diſprove the propheſie of Michaiah; firſt, becauſe Elijah had fore-told, that the dogs ſhould lick Ahabs bloud, where they had licked Naboths, that is, in Iezreel, which was farre from Ramoth Gilead. Secondly, becauſe he had ſmitten Michaiah with his hand, and yet it withered not, as it would have done, if Michaiah had been a true prophet ſent of God, ſeeing the hand of Ieroboam being but ſtretched out againſt a prophet of God, withered immediatly.

V. 25. P. Martyr. Michaiah guided by the ſpirit, replied; Behold, thou ſhalt ſee that day, when thou ſhalt go from chamber to chamber, to hide thee.] Which was, as Martyr ſaith, according to ſome, when Ahabs ſonne returning from the warre after his fathers death, ſought to ſlay him, and yet he could not ſo eſcape neither; according to others, the kings friends ſought him to kill him for his vain propheſying, whereby he had ſtirred up the king to haſten to his own ruine.

V. 26. Then Ahab ſaid, take Michaiah, and carry him back to Amon prince of the city, &c.] By this it ſeemeth, that Michaiah was in priſon before, ever ſince he threatned Ahab with death, for letting Benhadad the king of Syria go. Thus alſo Ioſephus ſaith, and that when the king ſent for him, he was fetcht out of priſon to come before him. And now Ahab being offended at his propheſying, ſendeth him thither again, and biddeth to feed him with a little bread and water, to ſuſtain his life, that he might be preſerved unto greater miſery at his return, and yet be kept hungry all that time: for which, this little bread and water, is here called bread and water of affliction. For [Ioas the kings ſonne] which was one of them, to whom Michaiah was ſent back, the vulgar Latin hath [Ioas the ſonne of Amalech] rendring the word המלך as a proper name; and this ſeemeth to be beſt, both becauſe if Ioas had been the kings ſonne, he ſhould have been named firſt, as the chief, and becauſe of a Ioas ſonne to Ahab, we reade not afterwards, but onely of Ahaziah and Ioram. Yet the Septuagint render it alſo the kings ſonne, and Iunius, Martyr, &c.

Joſephus.

2 Chron.18.20.

V. 28. Michaiah nothing danted by his puniſhment and the kings threats implied, when he ſhould return in peace, anſwered, If thou return in peace, the Lord hath not ſpoken by me] adding moreover, [Hear all ye people.] As if he had ſaid, mark what I ſay, and if it falleth out accordingly, know theſe to be all falſe prophets, and me to be the true prophet of the Lord. For when that which a prophet threatneth cometh to paſſe, he is approved to be a true prophet of the Lord, if there be an adverſe party promiſing the contrary, as alſo it was in the dayes of Ieremiah, Ierem. 28. when Hanani propheſied againſt him, and in the dayes of Moſes, when Corah conſpired againſt him. For out of this caſe ſometime the propheſying of true Prophets hath not taken effect, as when Eſay propheſied the death of Hezekiah, and Ionah the deſtruction of Niniveh within 40. dayes; and contrariwiſe the propheſying of a falſe prophet may come to paſſe, as the caſe is put Deut. 13. and then a falſe prophet may be known onely by this, that he ſeeketh to ſet up idolatry.

V. 29, 30. P.Martyr. The two kings, notwithſtanding the threats of the Prophet, go up to Ramoth Gilead, and there the king of Iſrael uſeth a policie, according to Martyr, to fruſtrate the propheſie of Michaiah, viz. by changing his habit, and entering into the battle like a common ſouldier. For he conceived, that not the ſouldiers, who went with him, but he alone ſhould periſh, according to this propheſie, but being diſguiſed he ſhould by no means be known to the enemy, and ſo hoped to eſcape. Others, he ſaith, ſuppoſe, that he heard that Benhadad had bent his forces againſt him onely, therefore he would not be known, but Iehoſhaphat not being ſo much hated of him, might ſafely enough be in the battle in his kingly ornaments: and ſome, that he did thus for honours ſake unto Iehoſhaphat, and that both the armies might be as one fighting under one king, that their forces might be the more united, but the firſt or ſecond ſeem moſt probable.

V. 32. Howſoever, by this means Iehoſhaphat was endangered, when the captains of the chariots did bend all their forces againſt him, as they were commanded, ſuppoſing him to be the king of Iſrael, againſt whom alone they were bidden to fight, untill that by his crying out they perceived that he was not the king of Iſrael. 2 Chron. 18. 31. it is ſaid, that He cried and the Lord did help him. Whereby is intimated, that he cried to the Lord, and hereby the Lord made the Syrians to underſtand, that he was not the king whoſe life they ſought, that they might ceaſe from purſuing him, and this was doubtleſſe by making them to gather from his calling upon the Lord, that he was not Ahab, ſeeing he was not a worſhipper of the Lord, but of idols. But why did Benhadad, whom Ahab had formerly ſaved, when he was in his power, thus earneſtly ſeek his deſtruction? R. Solomon, whom Lyra Lyra. followeth, ſaith, he had ſecret intelligencers, who informed him of Michaiah his propheſie, and therefore he conceived, that Ahab being cut off, this battle would ſoon be at an end, and that he might not eſcape, he thought it neceſſary not to let his ſouldiers fight againſt the whole army of Iſrael indifferently, but to command them to joyn all their forces together againſt Ahab alone, leſt while they were buſied in fighting againſt others he ſhould eſcape. Pellican. Pellican yieldeth none other reaſon, but the providence of God, which he makes the mightieſt kings and all men to ſerve, although they know it not. For as if the king of Syria had been particularly directed by God, he gave this charge to his captaines againſt Ahab; and thus alſo a righteous king, whoſe life was endangered, was ſaved, the Lord contenting himſelf onely to put him in fear of death for his chaſtiſement, for joyning with a wicked king in fight, and before that in affinity and amity. P.Martyr. Martyr alſo reſteth, onely in this of Gods providence, and certainly that of the Rabbin is onely a conjecture; and to aſcribe it wholly to the divine providence, is to attribute more to God, and to make his working in mens hearts the more admirable; then to yield a reaſon, whereby Benhadad was moved to give this charge. Yet beſides the divine providence working ſecretly, Benhadad certainly had his reaſon, viz. to be revenged for the ſhame, that Ahab had put him to, when he had been three times before beaten by him, and ſpecially the laſt, to the compelling of him baſely to beg for his life, and to yield to ignoble termes, that it might be ſpared. For diſgraces do work more upon a naturall heart to ſtirre up to revenge, then the very ſaving of life to be thankfull. Whileſt Gods providence wrought to the ſaving of Iehoſa- phats life, who was moſt expoſed to danger; Ahab, who thought himſelf by the changing of his habit out of danger, was accidentally wounded unto death, by an V. 34. arrow from a Syrians bow; to ſhew, that no policie can ſave him from death, whom for his ſinnes God hath adjudged to it, or keep the predictions of God from taking Note. effect. So Pharaoh king of Egypt laboured in vain to keep the Hebrews continually under, who, he underſtood by propheſie, ſhould be the ruine of his country; and Ioſephs brethren to keep him from riſing, which God had fore-ſhewed, & Saul to keep David from being king. Thus Ahabs threats againſt Michaiah were at an end, as afterwards Iulians againſt Chriſtians, who threatned, that at his return from an expedition againſt the Perſians, he would root them all out, but he alſo was ſlain by a dart in that warre, which wounded him mortally, it being not known Ioſephus. from what hand it came. Ioſephus ſaith, that he who wounded Ahab, was Ama- nas by name, one of the ſervants of Adad, for ſo he calleth Benhadad. Then he commanded the driver of his chariot to drive him out of the battle, but he abode ſtill in the field that his army might not be diſcouraged, till the going down of the ſun, at what time, his ſtrength being ſpent by the aboundance of bloud which ran from him, he died. Thus Ioſephus; who alſo ſaith, that the arrow pierced him to his lungs, not without ground from the ſacred hiſtory. But whereas he ſaith, that Ahab told Iehoſaphat, that he had before committed Michaiah to priſon for propheſying againſt his going up to Ramoth Gilead, is an addition boldly made of his own head.

V. 35. For the time when Ahab died, it is ſaid to have been in the evening, but 2 Chr. 18.
V. 36. 34. He ſtood in his chariot untill the evening, and died at the going down of the ſun.
And here it followeth, about the ſun-ſetting proclamation was made, that every man ſhould return to his city, &c. that is, immediatly after his departure; which muſt therefore needs be ſomewhat before the ſun-ſetting. And thus both parts of Michaiah his propheſie were fulfilled; Ahab, the ſhepheard fell, and the people, that followed him to warre, were ſcattered as ſheep, and bidden to return home in peace: ſeeing they were neither beaten home by the Syrians, nor purſued by them in their return. And the propheſie of Elijah was fulfilled, when his bloudy chariot being waſhed in the pool of Samaria, the dogs licked it: for how the propheſie, that in the place, where the dogs licked Naboths bloud, they ſhould lick Ahabs alſo, was thus fulfilled (ſeeing Naboths was licked in Iezreel, this mans in Samaria) was before ſhewed in explaining that propheſie: although Ioſephus to prevent this doubt, ſaith, that it was done at the pool in Iezreel.

V. 39. What Ahab did more, and the ivory houſe which he built, and the cities, are they not written, &c.] The bookes of the Chronicles of the kings of Iudah and Iſrael, wherein theſe things are ſaid to have been written, are not now extant, neither were they any part of the ſacred hiſtory, which was written by divine inſpiration, that we might believe, but onely annals of thoſe kingdomes, as there be almoſt of all others.

V. 41. The hiſtory of the kings of Iudah being hitherto intermitted, from ch. 15. 24. all 2 Chron. 20.31. but ſo much as concerned Iehoſhaphat joyntly with Ahab, is now entred upon again, v. 41. Iehoſhaphat the ſonne of Aſa began to raign over Iudah, the 4. year of A- hab, &c.] A good ſonne of a good father, but yet as he was not, ſo neither was Ie- hoſhaphat without his faults, the hearts of them both were upright, and they did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, and both took away the maſculine whores in the land, but the ſonne exceeded the father, in that he ſuffered none to remain.
Yet ſome, ſaith Martyr, think that Aſa took them not all away, becauſe he was prevented by death. Their faults were, that they ſuffered the people to ſacrifice in the high places, and as the father in his need entred into a league with the king of Syria an idolater, that he might help him againſt the king of Iſrael, ſo the ſon made 1 Kings 15. a league with the idolatrous king of Iſrael, Akab, and holp him againſt the king of Syria. What the high places were, and the maſculine harlots, ſee before, upon the hiſtory of Aſa, and how the ſon excelled the father in that he repented, when he was reproved for his league with the wicked, 2 Chron. 19. but the father was wroth when he was reproved, and put the prophet in priſon.

The hiſtory of Iehoſhaphat here briefly delivered, is more largely ſet forth, 2 Chron. 17. 1. only it is here ſaid, when he began his reign, which is not there, viz. 2 Chron. 17. the 4th. year of Ahab, and at what age, viz. 35. and how long he reigned; viz. 25. and what his mothers name was: viz. Azubah the daughter of Salai.] Yet all this is ſet forth, 2 Chron. 20. 31. and alſo ſome more of that, which is here briefly ſaid of him, unto which more is added towards the end of his reign. For the time ſet forth by Ahabs 4th year, it may be doubted, ſeeing he reigned 22, and therefore Iehoſ. 18. with him, and yet Ioram, betwixt whom, and Ahab came Ahaziah, began the 18.
Iehoſaphat; 2 King. 3. 1. Sol. Ahabs 4th was even then at end, and his 22 not compleat, and Ahaziah reigned, together with his father ſo long, that although he dyed not till the ſecond year, yet it was the ſame, wherein his father was ſlain. In the Chronicles then is ſet forth the full hiſtory of Iehoſaphat, this briefe in the Kings, and his going forth with Ahab to warre againſt Ramoth Gilead, not being omitted.

And here he is ſaid firſt to have confirmed himſelfe over Iſrael, the vulgar Latine invaluit contra Iſrael.] The meaning is, that his kingdome ſoone after his comming to it grew farre mightier then that of Iſrael. And how this was is ſhewed, v. 2. he placed ſouldiers in all the cities of Iudah, &c. and thus hee V. 2. ſtrengthened them after the manner of Rehoboam, 2 Chron. 11. 11. Neither did his might conſiſt in this alone, but he laid a better foundation, then the king of Iſrael, for he walked in the wayes of David his father, and truſted not in Baal, but in V. 3,4. the God of his father, and ſo God was with him, &c. And from the people of Iudah he had many gifts given him, and waxed very rich and glorious; And he took away V. 5. the high places and groves out of Iudah.] Contrary to this it is ſaid, ch. 20. 33. They V. 6. took not away the high places, for the people had not yet directed their heart to the God of their fathers.

But the like contradiction to this hath been reconciled before upon ch. 14. 3. unto which it may be added, that the fault was not in the good king, that any high places ſtood ſtill, but in the people, who are ſaid not to have taken away the high places, becauſe their hearts were not right. The king was reputed to have taken them away, becauſe he endeavoured and gave order, that it ſhould ſo be done; but the corruption of the people permitted it not, they were ſo wedded to their old cuſtomes, and without his ſubjects and officers, how can a king actually perform any ſuch great work? in ſuch caſes he muſt rather wiſely beare with the people, then ſtrive againſt them to the endangering of the whole kingdome.

And in the third year of his reign, he ſent of his Princes, Benhail, &c. to teach in V. 7. the cities of Iudah, and with them Levites and Prieſts.] Theſe words do ſhew, that not only Levites and Prieſts were ſent to teach the people, but alſo ſome Princes; whereas it is conceived by Expoſitours generally, that theſe Princes went not forth to teach, but by their authority to move the people the more to obey the teaching of the Prieſts and Levites, and to come to hear them. Only Toſtatus, as the Toſtatus. words doe ſound, ſaith, that other men being not of the tribe of Levi, who had learning, might alſo teach in thoſe dayes. But becauſe of hereticks, the office of teaching ſince was by Chriſt tyed to certain men, who are particularly called hereunto.
And Sallianus following him inſtanceth in the prophets which taught, who were not of the tribe of Levi. I hold with the common ſtream of interpreters, that it is not meant that theſe Princes were ſent out to teach in their own perſons, but by thoſe whom they carried with them, to make which plain, Iunius rendreth the Junius. words thus. He ſent with his Princes, &c, theſe Levites I ſay with them. Although the Hebrew text, I confeſſe, will not beare this tranſlation, becauſe it is not עים שריו but לשריך but yet the word following, [to teach] wil bear this tranſlation; for the teaching, that is, that they might ſee them taught. For the Prieſts lips muſt Mal. 2. 7. preſerve knowledge, and they muſt enquire the law at his mouth, ſaith the prophet, and if any, that were not of the tribe of Levi taught, it was not, becauſe it was free for any that had learning ſo to doe, but becauſe they were extraordinarily ſtirred up by the ſpirit of propheſie, ſo as we never read of many Princes, but of ſome rare ones onely, as David and Solomon; and therefore here being many named together, it is not probable, that they were ſuch, but onely godly Princes, like Theophilus, philus, whom the king thought fit to ſend out for the further ing of the teaching. And it is to be noted, that they taught only out of the book of the law of God, not mixing any other herewith as grounds of their teaching, as traditions or decrees of Popes or Councels, or Legends, as the Popiſh doe. V.9. And they went about teaching in every city, where all both men and women might come together to heare and learn the will of God, as it alike concerned them all.

Now the king ſent theſe men out to teach, as is to be conceived, becauſe the people were ſo addicted to worſhip in high places, that it being made by this means to appear unto them, how contrary this was to the law of God, who appointed one place only for ſacrifice, they might be brought, if it were poſſible, to conſent to beat them down, and to leave all their old ſuperſtition. And howſoever this ſucceded not, for ſome ſacrificed in the high places ſtill, as was ſhewed before, yet this godly endeavour of Iehoſhaphat wanted not a bleſſing, V.10. for the fear of the Lord fell upon all the kingdomes of the earth round about Iudah, ſo that none durſt warre againſt him. V.11. But contrariwiſe, the Philiſtines and Arabians ſubmitted themſelves to become tributaries to him, bringing him great gifts.

Pellican. They ſeing him to grow ſo mighty, ſaith Pellican, and ſo good a king, thought that they could not better provide for their own ſafety, then by putting themſelves under his protection, and making themſelves tributaries to him. Toſtatus. Toſtatus thinketh, that by ſome warre made by Iehoſhaphat upon them not here commemorated, they were brought to this, but the text ſpeaketh plainly to the contrary, that it was by the fear which fell upon them from the Lord, when Iehoſhaphat lived quietly within his own kingdom. They were formerly made tributaries by David, and how they were ſince exempted we doe not read, only it is probable, that when in Rehoboams time the kingdome was weakned by dividing, they adventured to withhold there tribute, and likewiſe in the dayes of Abijah and Aſa, who had warres with Iſrael. But now fearing the forces of Iehoſhaphat, they thought it not ſafe to withhold their tribute any longer, and therefore they payd it, and ſent gifts alſo, that no offence might be taken at their former neglect. V.12. And by this meanes Iehoſaphat grew alſo more wealthy and mighty, ſo that he erected ſtrong and goodly buildings in Iudah like towers, Lyra. that if the enemy ſhould come into the city, ſaith Lyra, they might thence be fought againſt and ſlain, and he built walls about his cities. Neither did he ſo only, but alſo placed gariſons in them, v. 19. V.14, 15, 16, 17, 18. And beſides this, his forces are ſet forth to be wonderfully great, even 1160000 under five Captaines, Princes of Iudah, which were alwayes at hand in Ieruſalem, that is, waiting by turns there monthly, ſaith Lyra. But ſeeing their number was ſo great, that if they had been divided into 12 parts, there muſt alwayes have been near 100000 at Ieruſalem, which were too many to attend alwayes upon any one king in the world, I hold rather with others, that the Captaines and ſome of this company attended continually upon the king, the reſt being at hand and ready to come alſo for his ſervice, whenſoever the king would.

V.19. Pellican. And this is the meaning of theſe words, all theſe were at the kings hand.] Neither is it to be thought as Pellican hath it, that ſo great a number of men were kept only for warre, but that they were regiſtred and muſtered ſometimes, the following of their particular vocations & buſineſſes, not being in the time of peace much interrupted hereby. But it is not to be conceived, that al theſe forces were in Iudah alone, but in Iudah and Benjamin, of which two tribes his kingdome conſiſted, but Iudah only is named, becauſe it was commonly called the kingdome of Iudah; yea it is expreſſely ſaid, v. 17. that Eliadah and his men were of Benjamin, although in the vulgar Latin Benjamin be not mentioned. If we compare theſe numbers with thoſe of Aſa his father ch. 14. 8. it will appear, that they farre exceeded them, for they were but 300000 of Iudah, and 280000 of Benjamin. Note. Wherefore the more a Prince excelleth in godlineſſe, the more by farre will God make him to excell in riches, power, and glory, that every chriſtian king may be ſtirred up to ſeek to promote Religion in all parts of his kingdom to the uttermoſt of all his power, as Ieho∫aphat did.

And hitherto chap. 17. the hiſtory of Iehoſhaphat joyning affinity with Ahab, and helping him in his warre at Ramoth Gilead againſt the Syrians, ſet forth chap. 18. hath been already explained. Now Ahab being ſlain in that warre, Iehoſhaphat, 2 Chron. 19. howſoever in great perill of his life alſo, yet was ſo preſerved by that God, whom he ſerved, that he returned to Ieruſalem again in ſafety and peace, the Syrians, whom he had juſtly provoked againſt him by his part-taking, being held from attempting any thing hoſtile againſt him. But Iehu the ſonne of Hanani a prophet, V. 2. was ſent of God to reprove him at his return, for helping the wicked, for which he told him, that he was worthy to bear the heavie wrath of God, but forſomuch V. 3. as good things were found in him, and he did from his heart ſeek the Lord, it was with-held, and this his ſinne was pardoned, as it muſt needs be underſtood. Note. Wherefore in uprightneſſe of heart to ſeek to glorifie God, and to beat down that which is againſt his glory, is ſo highly accepted of before him, that therefore in mercy he paſſeth over and pardoneth that which is done amiſſe, being notwithſtanding to his ſervants a protectour and ſaviour in time of greateſt dangers, that we all may be ſtirred up to ſeek zealouſly Gods glory, as Iehoſhaphat did.

V. 4. When the King had been thus reproved, but yet for his ſeeking of the Lord and the beating down of idolatry approved, he renewed his care for the Lord, and went forth from Beerſheba even to mount Ephraim, to bring them back to the Lord.] That is, according to Pellican, from one end of his kingdome to the other. Pellican. And Lyra ſaith, that Beerſheba was furtheſt ſouth, and mount Ephraim north, which although it belonged to the kingdome of Iſrael, yet he held ſome cities thereof, as being formerly taken by his father. For as weeds being deſtroyed, will grow again, and therefore muſt again be weeded up, that the ground may be kept clear; ſo idolatry being beaten down in the kingdom of Iudah, began, it ſeemeth, to grow again through a proneſſe, that is in naturall men thereunto, eſpecially if there be any to bear them out herein, or they be joyned in friendſhip with idolaters, and converſe amongſt them, as the ſubjects of this kingdome now did: for they were in league with the Iſraelites, and joyned with them in their wars, and navigations, as is afterwards ſhewed; and they had amongſt them an Athaliah, the daughter of an idolatrous king and queen, Ahab and Iezabel, who was maried to Iehoſhaphats ſonne, upon whom they might bear themſelves, and ſo waxe the bolder to return with the dog to their vomit. But the good king Iehoſhaphat perceiving this, went out again to viſit his uttermoſt parts, and to beat down regrowing evill.

V. 5. And he ſet Iudges in all defenced cities of Iudah] to do juſtice to every one that V. 6. was wronged, or had any grievance in civill matters, and he did moſt godly charge them to do, as thoſe, that exerciſed not their own but the judgement of the Lord, V. 7. and expected therefore to be called to account, that is, having no reſpect of perſons, nor receiving bribes to be moved to go out of the way of juſtice hereby, v. 8. V. 8. Alſo in Ieruſalem Iehoſhaphat ſet Prieſts and Levites, and Princes of families, &c.] The Iudges before ſpoken of, were placed in all cities to judge common matters, ſaith Lyra, Lyra. that the people might not be forced to travell farre for judgement, and theſe at Ieruſalem to judge in cauſes more difficult, both in things pertaining to the Lord, and to the king, and therefore the Iudges were both ſpirituall and ſecular, and of either ſort there was a preſident; of the ſpirituall, Amarias the high prieſt, V. 11. over things pertaining to the Lord, and Zabudias, a prince in Iudah, of the ſecular, in things pertaining to the king. And this placing of the higheſt court of judgement at Ieruſalem, in caſes moſt intricate, was grounded upon Deut. 17. 8, 9.

2 Chron. 20. After theſe things ſo worthily done by Iehoſhaphat, that it might appear the more, in what high account he was before God, many enemies were ſuffered to come againſt him, uniting all their forces together, for the deſtroying of him and his kingdome, viz. the children of Ammon, and of Moab, and ſome beyond the V. 1. Ammonites, as Iunius reades it, and v. 2. makes it plain, where it is ſaid, there cometh a great multitude againſt thee, from the places beyond the ſea, that is, the dead ſea, and from Syria; although the words may be rendred, and are commonly, the children of Ammon and Moab, and with them of the Ammonites. Theſe then that came with them were Syrians, who moſt probably were willing to take this V. 3, 4, 5.

from Ierom, lib. de Hebr. queſt. ſaying, that they diſguiſed themſelves and put on the habit of Ammonites, becauſe they were aſhamed otherwiſe to fight againſt the Iſraelites, being their brethren, or rather becauſe they feared Iehoſhaphat if they were known, as being tributaries to him, although to get free they now joyned with the Ammorites againſt him. Iehoſhaphat hearing of them at the firſt feared, but then he did flye to the Lord by prayer, and faſting, aſſembling all Iudah together

Hugo Card. between the wilderneſſe of Tekoah, and the wilderneſſe of Ieruel. Hugo ſaith, that Ierom de Hebr. quæ, affirmeth the place to be called by both theſe names from the event, the terrour of the Lord ſtriken into the nations about, by that which was done here. For Ieruel ſaith the gloſſe, ſignifieth the terrour of God, and Ziz, a cauldron or pot, becauſe in this place they were cut in pieces and made meat, as it were, for the pot.

V.18,19. When Iehoſhaphat and the men of Iudah heard this, they worſhipped, and the Levites ſang praiſes unto God, as if the victory had been already obtained.

V.20. The next morning they went out by the wilderneſſe of Tekoah, and then Iehe-ſhaphat exhorted them to truſt in God and to believe his prophets, which he ſpake for their ſakes, that were puſillanimous, leaſt any not believing ſhould flye away.
And for ſo much as the victory was promiſed without their fighting, Iehoſhaphat V.21. thought it fitteſt to proceed with ſinging praiſes to God, and ſo the enemies were moved to fight one nation againſt another, Ammonites, and Moabites againſt the Edomites, till the place was all filled with dead carcaſes, ſo that Iudah had nothing to doe, but to take and carry away the ſpoyles, which they did 3 daies together, V.27,28. and that the 4th day the whole congregation bleſſed God in ſuch manner, that the place was from hence called alwayes after, the valley of bleſsing.

Here becauſe no mention is made of the Syrians, ſome think that there were no Syrians in this battell, but Edomites onely, with the Ammonites; and whereas it is ſaid before, that this armie came from Syria, that by Syria there the whole tract of ground containing mount Seir, and Syrians is to be underſtood; but for ſo much as mount Seir is no where ſet forth under this name, it is to be thought either that Syrians and Edomites were in this company, according to Iunius, but the Syrians happily being but few, were no more ſpoken of. Whereas v. 22. it is ſaid God turned their ambuſhes againſt themſelves.] The meaning is, that they did not purpoſely fight one againſt another, but they that were laid in ambuſh againſt Iudah, when their own armie came on; God diſpoſing it ſo that they came before their time, thinking them to be enemies, fell upon them, and ſlew them, who it ſeemeth, were that part of the armie, which conſiſted of Edomites. And when the reſt being Am-monites and Moabites, ſaw what they had done, they quarrelled about it amongſt themſelves, and fought one againſt another, till few or none of all that great multitude remained alive.

For the cauſe of theſe peoples coming againſt Iehoſhaphat, none is here aſſigned, but Sallianus will have Iehoſhaphats helping Ioram againſt Moab ſpoken of,
2 King 3.

1 King. 3. the cauſe of their coming, and Ammonites being confederates, might eaſily be drawn to come with them, and Edomites, that if Iehoſhaphat had been overcome, they might have been freed from his obedience. But ſeeing v. 35. Iehoſhaphat is ſaid after this to have aſſociated himſelf with Ahaziah, who died before Ioram was king, it is plain, that as it is placed, ſo that expedition againſt Moab was after theſe things. None other cauſe then can be aſſigned, but on Gods part to try Iehoſhaphat, and on their envie at his proſperity and great power and glory for which they might fear, that he would ere long bring all the nations about under his obedience.

And when Iehoſhaphat was come again to Ieruſalem, they did the like in the V. 27, 28. houſe of the Lord with inſtruments of Muſick. As for the nations about, when they heard of it, they were taken with a feare, which kept them alwayes after V. 30. from banding againſt Iehoſhaphat, ſo that from thence forward he lived alwayes in quiet. v. 31. is the ſame with 1 King. 22. 41. &c. unto v. 34. where the reſt of V. 34.
Iehoſhaphats acts are ſaid to be written in the words of Iehu the ſonne of Hanani, who wrote the Book of the Kings, 1 King. 22. 46. in the Book of the kings 1 Kings 22. 46. of Iudah.

There was then no King in Edom, &c.] This is here commemorated, that it V. 48.
might appear, that the Edomites were kept under ever ſince Davids time, till 2 Sam. 8. 14. after the death of Iehoſhaphat, who ſought the Lord. For when Iorams his ſonne reigned, who was an idolater, and murtherer of his own brethren, as is ſhewed 2 Chron. 21. 4. 6. they revolted from his obedience, 2 King. 8. 20. neither could they be ſubdued any more.

Here it is alſo recorded, that Iehoſhaphat made him ſhips to go to Ophir for gold, V. 49. but they were broken in Aziongaber, and that Ochoſias the king of Iſrael, the wic- V. 50. ked ſonne of wicked Ahab, ſpake to him, that his ſervants might go with his, but he would not. 2 Chron. 20. 35. Iehoſhaphat is ſaid to have made friendſhip with 2 Chron. 20. 35.
Ochoſias, and to have been partner with him in making ſhips to go to Tharſis, and that they were made in Aziongaber. But Eliezer a prophet threatned him, becauſe he joyned with Ochoſias, that they ſhould be broken, and they were broken and went not.

Where Aziongaber lyeth, ſee before 2 Chron. 8. 17. viz. in Edom. Which argueth, that the Edomites were yet under the kings of Iudah; and from hence it may be gathered, wherefore it is ſaid v. 48. that there was no king in Edom, but a deputie to govern in ſtead of a king, viz. to declare, how it came to paſſe, that Iehoſhaphat built ſhips there, it was part of his dominions, and a place moſt fit for the purpoſe, as appeareth by Solomons doing the like before, to ſend alſo to Ophir; the deſcription whereof, ſee upon 2 Chron. 9. And it is ſaid here that there was no king in Edom, that we might know the firſt revolting of the Edomites from the obedience of the kings of Iudah, to have been occaſioned by their wickedneſſe.

For in Iehoſhaphats time they continued ſubject, although even then they were permitted to have a king, as appeareth 2 King. 3. But when Ioram his ſonne reigned, who was an idolater, they revolted, and could be brought under no more. 2 King. 8. 20. But ſeeing theſe ſhips were made to go to Ophir, how is it ſaid, 2 Chron. 20. 35. to go to Tharſis? For the clearing of this, ſee upon 1 King. 10. 22. the like ſaid of Solomons navie. Tarſhis was a place in Ophir, although ſome ſay, that they were as farre aſunder as the Eaſt and Weſt. But againſt this maketh, that, this being granted, the ſame navie could not have gone to two places ſo farre diſtant, in the three years there ſpoken of, and it had been no point of wiſedome to carry about treaſure gotten in one place to another ſo remote from it; and laſtly, although the Weſt India be famous for gold, yet the Eaſt is not, as is well known at this day, but for pepper and other ſpices; wherefore it is beſt to reſt in the firſt.

Whereas it is ſaid that he would not be partner with Ahaziah, it is to be underſtood, after admonition given him by the prophet, he would not joyn with him any more in repairing the ſhips, which were broken in the very haven by ſome mighty tempeſt ſent of God, before their going forth, although the king of Iſrael entreated him to joyn again.

V. 51. And Iehoſhaphat died with his fathers and was buried, &c.] Here the writer of the Kings, concludeth the hiſtory of Iehoſhaphat, who yet died not before Ahaziah V. 52. king of Iſrael, but lived and reigned long after, as appeareth v. 52. where Ahaziah is ſaid to have begun his reign the 17. year of Iehoſhaphat, and to have reigned but two years, whereas Iehoſhaphat made up the time of his reign 25. years v. 42. and therefore died not till 6. years after him. Moreover, 2 King. 3. he is found again joyning with Ioram the king of Iſrael againſt Moab. His death then is here ſpoken of, that the hiſtory of the kings of Iſrael may be again taken up and proſecuted, which the writer of the Kings chiefly intended, that one thing more, which he had to ſet forth touching Jehoſhaphat, being reſerved to be brought in, in the proper time, together with the geſts of the kings of Iſrael, to whom he was but an helper therein. But 2 Chron. 21. 1. after that he is ſaid to have died, he is no more ſpoken of, but the hiſtory of his ſonne Ioram thence forward onely proſecuted. Whereas Ahaziah is ſaid to have begun his reign the 17. year of Iehoſhaphat, and Iehoſhaphat the fourth year of Ahab, v. 41. and the time of Ahabs reign was 22. years, 1 King. 16. 29. but 17. and 4. make no more then 21. [It is to be thought, that Ahaziah began to reign even whileſt Ahab lived together with him, at the leaſt one year, or elſe Ahabs 4. yeares and 22. yeares are not to be taken for compleat,] neither is there any Pellican. need with Pellican ſo dangerouſly to lay the fault upon the copier out of the hiſtory, V. 53, 54. as putting 17. for 19. of Iehoſhaphat. Ahaziah followed his father Ahab in ſinning, and therefore was cut off betimes, and left no heir.

THE SECOND BOOK OF THE KINGS.

CHAP. I.

THe hiſtory of Ahaziah king of Iſrael, begun in the firſt Book, is here continued to his death, which followed ſhortly after; viz. within two yeares; and as is probably thought, the very next year after his father, with whom he had reigned one, and in the ſecond he died. For as he was exceeding wicked, ſo he was purſued with judgement after judgement in this ſhort time of his reign. Firſt, as was before ſhewed, his ſhips which he made together with Iehoſhaphat, were broken. Secondly, Moab rebelled againſt him immediatly after his fathers death, v. 1. V. 1. Thirdly, he fell out of a window and was ſore bruiſed, v. 2. Fourthly, going on in his wickedneſſe and ſending to enquire of Baalzebub, whether he ſhould recover, he loſt ſome companies of his men by fire from heaven. Fifthly, he heard the dreadfull newes of death from the prophet Elijah, and then he died, when by all theſe calamities he had been moved to repentance, but in vain.

V. 2. Touching his fall, of which his mortall ſickneſſe came, it was moſt probably through a window upon the battlement of his houſe, where he walked for his recreation, for the Iews built their houſes with flat tops to walk upon, and thus his Note. pleaſure, by the juſt judgement of God, was turned to his ruine for his ſinnes: for as all things ſhall work together for good to the faithfull, ſo to the wicked all ſhall work to bring them to deſtruction. For the god, to whom he ſent for help in this caſe, viz. Baalzebub the god of Ekron or Accharon, as the vulgar Latin hath it, the ſame in the Goſpel is called Belzebub, ſignifying the lord of flies, becauſe that country being much annoyed by flies, they held that by his help they were driven away, ſo Vatablus. Vatablus. The Septuagint and Ioſephus render it, the one, the lord the flye, the other, the god the flye. Theodoret. And accordingly Theodoret writeth of it, as if it were the image of a flye, ſaying, they deified not onely greater creatures, but even the leaſt and vileſt. For what is more vile, then a flye? and yet they called the image thereof a god; and leaving the true living God, ſought to it for life, yea they called the dead image of that a god, which they drove away with flye-flaps being alive. Procopius. Procopius ſaith, that the devill was called Belzebub, or rather a certain little old woman, whom they put into the number of goddeſſes. Pauſan. in Eliacis.l.5. Pauſanius ſaith, that Hercules the ſonne of Alcmena, when he could not drive away the flies that moleſted him, ſacrificed to Iupiter, and imploring his help, and then they flew all away immediatly beyond Alpheus. Hence the Elians took occaſion to continue the like ſacrificing. And this I rather take to be the truth touching this idol, that it was the image of Iupiter, thus called, becauſe of him help was ſought againſt the anoyance by flyes, then that of Theoderet, and becauſe he was the chiefe of the heathen gods, which were devils, Belzebub was by the Iewes called the Prince of devils. And by Accaron, where his ſhrine was, hell is ſet forth amongſt the Poets, as that ſaying, Flectere cum ſuperos nequeo, Acheronta movebo.

But the ſame Bel or Baal was now ſerved in Iſrael, as well as in Accaron of the Philiſtins, why then did the king of Iſrael ſend thither? It may be concieved that the prophets of the idoll whom he ſerved, had deceived his father, and lied unto him to his deſtruction at Ramoth Gilead, and therefore though he ſerved him as his father had done, and his mother, yet he thought it not ſafe to truſt to him, but rather to ſend out of the land to another Baal. But why ſent he not to Michaiah, or to Elijah, whom he knew to be true Prophets? Anſ. Hee was doubtleſſe of the ſame mind with his wicked father, he hated them, as being againſt him and ſuch as hee was, and therefore not likely to ſpeak any comfort, but terrour unto him.

P. Martyr. Martyr ſaith, that ſome hold that idol to be called Belzebub by the godly in contempt; but he approveth rather the former reaſon, becauſe even by Ahaziah, he was ſo called. And he addeth, that idolaters uſed to ſend in time of ſickneſſe, both to enquire, and for help to idols; and ſometime, that they might be the more deded, obtained it, as ſome that ſent to the temples of Æſculapius,

V. 3. To theſe meſſengers of Ahaziah when they were on the way to Baalzebub, was Elijah ſent by an Angell to threaten death unto him, becauſe hee ſent to an idol out of the land, this being derogatory from the God of Iſrael. But ſeeing by his fall he was mortally bruiſed ſome make a quere, how his ſending to enquire of Toſtatus. Baalzebub, could be ſaid to be the cauſe. Toſtatus anſwereth well to this, that either his hurt was ſuch, as would not have cauſed ſuch, and then the turning of it to be the cauſe of death, was manifeſtly by the hand of God offended at his ſending, or elſe it was mortall, and then his ſending is ſaid to be the cauſe, for ſo much as God happily would otherwiſe have healed him, if he had been ſought unto, as he did Hezekiah afterwards of his deadly ſickneſſe. Where Elijah was, when the Angell ſent him forth to meet theſe meſſengers, it is not ſaid; but v.9. it appeareth, that the place to which he returned, was the top of mount Carmel; at the foot Adricom. whereof he had a cave, in which he dwelt, and Eliſhah after him, ſaith Adricomius, and there alſo was a ſpring. But how happened it then, that the Angell bad him aſcend or goe up to meet the meſſengers? Anſ. Herein reſpect was had to the way, in which he was to meet them, which was from Samaria, that ſtood upon a mountain, ſo that he muſt needs goe up to meet them coming from thence, although he firſt deſcended to the foot of mount Carmel. The meſſengers hearing him, ſoon returned to the King without going further on their intended journey; as appeareth by the kings asking of them why they are returned, v. 5. At which if any man ſhall marvaile, ſeeing Elijah was to them unknown, and in appearance but a mean and poor man; it is to be conſidered, that his very ſpeech diſcovered him to be a prophet of the Lord, in that he ſhewed hereby, that he knew whether they V. 4. were going, and to what end. For he ſaid, is it becauſe there is no God in Iſrael, that yee ſend to enquire of the god of Ekron? and that the king lay then ſick upon his bed, in that he ſaid, thou ſhalt not come down from thy bed, &c. For how ſhould any other, but a prophet of God, know all theſe ſecrets? Being then hereby convinced, that hee was a prophet of God, and that he gave them a true anſwer, they thought it but vain to goe further to enquire about the ſame thing, and happily they feared that they might be in danger of death alſo; if contemning that, which a prophet of the Lord ſaid unto them, they had preſumed ſtill to goe on their way to enquire of another P. Martyr. god. Martyr ſaith, that there are by ſome aſſigned two other reaſons, why they preſently returned, becauſe they gathered from his ſpeech that he was an Angell, ſeeing he knew whether they were going, &c. 2. Becauſe they gathered no leſſe from the manner of his departure, he vaniſhed. But it is not ſo ſaid of the prophet, but that he went away.

V. 8. When theſe meſſengers had related the ſaying of the prophet unto him, he enquired what manner of man he was, they anſwered, an hairy man, and girt about V. 9. with a lether girdle, then he knew that it was Elijah the Tiſhbite, and ſent immediately diately to have him fetcht unto him. The king might well ſo readily gather who it was, becauſe he had doubtleſſe ſometime ſeen him in the dayes of Ahab his father, and being a prophet moſt famous for his zeale and courage to ſpeak againſt any, how great ſoever, he could not but conjecture, before he heard him deſcribed, that it was he. He is ſaid to be hairy according to ſome, becauſe his body, hands and face were hairy; according to * others, becauſe his garments were hairie and courſe, as John the Baptiſt, the moſt probable is, that he was hairie both wayes. And they were thus apparrelled, ſaith Martyr, becauſe they preached repentance, which in thoſe dayes was in ſack or haire cloth, that they might by outward ſign as well as by word move men to repent; contrary to which is done now by chiefe preachers, Biſhops and Cardinals, whoſe apparell and ornaments are moſt coſtly, but preachers ſhould indeed by their example learn to flye ſuch worldly pompe, and not to wear ſo much as gold chain or ring, but that which may ſhew and teach others humility. For the kings ſending to have him brought unto him, it was by a Captain over fifty, who went with his fifty men by force to bring the Prophet to him, happily that he might make him reverſe his ſentence, or otherwiſe put him firſt to death, who was ſo bold to threaten him with death. This Captain found him ſitting uppon the top of mount Carmell, to which place ſaith Vatablus, he aſcended for fear of Ahaziah; but ſeeing the top of a mount is no place for a man to hide himſelf in but rather ſome cave in a lower place, and more hidden from mens eyes; I cannot think that to be the reaſon of his aſcent, but rather to pray, as ſometime before hee had done, 1 King. 18. The Capt. having found him biddeth him in the kings name to come down ſaying, [O man of God, &c.] which Procopius and Vatablus think, was ſpoken ironically by him & in ſcorn, as ſlieghting him and the Lord whom he ſerved, as if his Lord were of more power to fetch him to him, then God to hold and keep him out of his hands. And this ſeemeth to be true by the Prophets anſwer, If I be a man of God, let fire come down from heaven and conſume thee and thy fifty. For it is not to be thought, that meerly for obeying the king, and coming to fetch him to him, when he was ſent, that the Prophet was ſo much incenſed againſt him; but for his pride and prophane inſolency, which ſhewed him to be a man according to the kings own heart, a wicked idolater, and one that regarded not the true God, nor his ſervants, but rather rejoyced to be an inſtrument of perſecuting them, and like unto him moſt probably were his ſouldiers alſo; wherefore Theodoret ſaith well, it is manifeſt that theſe two Captaines and their fifties went out with the ſame ſcope and purpoſe that he had, who ſent them, and therefore they ſuffered theſe puniſhments. And Procopius following him addeth, that becauſe they mocked at the Prophet, they were deſtroyed for example, and to teach others not to raile and mock at the righteous. So that if any call this proceeding of the Prophet tyrannicall, as ſome doe ſaith Theodoret, they ſharpen their tongues againſt God, who moved Elijah by his ſpirit to call for this fire, and when he called for it, ſent it, and deſtroyed them therewith. If any ſhall wonder why one Captain was ſent thus after another, and how it happened, that he took not warning by his fellow, but came and called to the Prophet in the like inſolent manner? It is conceived, that Carmel being farre from Samaria, from whence they were ſent, viz. as Adrichomius ſaith, two dayes journey, neither the King nor he knew what had befalne the firſt Captain, therefore the king impatient of further delay, ſeeing that he returned not again, ſent out this ſecond; that if the other with his men could not bring him, they might doe it with their forces joyned together, or if he could not find him that was firſt ſent out, but was gone to ſeek him one way, this might go another. And when he came to the place of the Prophets abode and found him there, but no Captain or ſouldiers, for the fire had conſumed them, ſuppoſing that he with his men were delayed upon ſome occaſion, as they went another way, he began to ſpeak tauntingly to Elijah, as the firſt had done, and was together with his men horribly conſumed by fire coming down from heaven alſo. Martyr, who agreeth with that, which hath been ſaid touching their calling of Elijah [thou man of God] in ſcorn, yet differeth, in that he thinketh it to have been known to the King and the ſecond Captain, what had befalne the firſt and his 50 men, and that the king hearing ſuch news ſent not again immediately; but being terrified, deſiſted for a time; but that hardening himſelfe he ſent again, and that the ſecond Captain commended himſelfe to his gods to be protected, ſo as he ſuppoſed that the former happily did not, and then adventured to goe, to this effect alſo Pellican. But ſeeing no man would be ſo foolehardy to adventure himſelfe upon ſo apparant deadly danger; neither is there any thing ſaid in the text, which implyeth any delay in the king, or newes brought of the firſt Captaines deſtruction, or this Captaines taking of a better courſe, as being warned by his fellowes example. I rather think with others, that neither King nor Captain knew what had been done, and this made him ſo bold, not onely to bid the prophet in the kings name to come down, but in haſt in ſuch an imperious manner, as that he would have him know, he both could and would fetch him down by force, if he deſcended not immediately. If it be demanded, why Chriſt would not have the like done to a city of the Samaritans, which would not receive him, when two of his Diſciples requeſted it, but rebuked them ſaying, ye know not of what ſpirit ye are; Martyr anſwereth well, that this was done not only to ſhew the lenity of the Goſpell and the rigour and ſeverity of the law, according to many; for Peter alſo ſmote Ananias and Saphyra with death, Acts 5. and Paul, Elimas, with blindneſſe; but becauſe they were moved by their own, Elijah by the ſpirit of God to doe this execution upon groſſe idolaters and contemners of the true God, and of his ſervants. A like example of revenge taken by fire from heaven, were Chorah, Dathan, and Abiram made, when they envied at Moſes and Aaron, and ſtirred up others againſt them. The revenging of the wrongs done to Gods Prophets ſhould be a warning to all men, not to touch his annointed, nor to doe his Prophets any harme; and the revenge by fire intimated the laſt revenge upon all the wicked by fire at the day of judgement, according to 2 Theſ. 1. 8. For as fire now came down from heaven and conſumed ſome, ſo then it ſhall come down for the deſtruction of all Gods enemies, and the enemies of his ſervants, that none may remaine incredulous; but being aſſured, that he who ſent down fire now in one part, both can and will ſend it down in all places of the world, according to his word, repent, that they may eſcape this dreadfull judgement of the Lord.

Numb.16.

Note.

V. 13. To proceed in the hiſtory, the mad king nothing moved to deſiſt from his furious enterprize againſt Elijah, by their not returning, whom he had ſent one after another with ſo great power to fetch him (although it might have moved any man to ſuſpect ſome judgement befalling them, and happily by this time newes was come to the Court how they were deſtroyed, as may be gathered from the ſpeech of him, that was next ſent) calls in haſte for another Captain, and his 50 men, and ſendeth them to fetch Elijah to him. Now he knowing what had been done to his two predeceſſours, inſtead of commanding, humbled himſelfe to Elijah, praying him that his life might be precious in his ſight, & confeſſing in effect, that the judgement ſent upon the former two, and their men was juſt, becauſe they came as armed with a greater power from a king, a mortall man, then that of Almighty God, ſith, that otherwiſe they would never have ſo inſolently behaved themſelves; He therefore contrariwiſe believing Gods power to be above all, and that Elijah was truly the man of God, came to him in another way, viz. by entreaty, and not bearing himſelfe upon his power of men which he brought with him, neither meaning to uſe any violence, but if he would goe voluntarily, as he had ſometime done to king Ahab, he and his men were ready only to wait upon him thither, but not by any means to lay hands upon him. And this Captain, ſay the Hebrewes and Lyra, Comeſtor, and Hugo after them, was Obadiah, who had before found him, when none elſe could, and foreſhewed to king Ahab his coming to him. And this is not improbable, for he then fell upon his face before him, as now upon his knees; and if Ahaziah had yet heard of the deſtruction of his two former Captains, it is not to be thought that he was ſo tyrannicall, that he would put another upon the ſame danger with 50 men more, and therefore now choſe one who was gracious with the Prophet, and knew how to deale ſo with him, as that he would bring him with him; and who could this more probably be, then Obadiah? Certainly it was either he, or ſome other of like condition to him, that reverenced Gods Prophets,

So likewiſe Johan. Hieroſol. and that he turned Diſciple to Eliiah, and had the gift of propheſying beſtowed upon him.

that the king made now choice of to ſend out, ſeeing another an idolatrous wicked Captain, would have ſcorned thus to bow and crouch to a poor prophet, although he had dyed for it.

V.15. With this captain the Angel of the Lord biddeth Elijah to go,and fear nothing, and ſo he came and ſpake to his face, as he had done before to his meſſengers, neither do we reade of any revenge, that he attempted therefore againſt the prophet, but that he died according to his word. God, who hath the hearts of kings in his hands, ſo ſtrook him, when he heard the ſentence of death againſt him denounced from the prophets own mouth, that he had no further courage to attempt any thing againſt him, but languiſhed and ſoon after this died.

V.17. And Iehoram reigned in his ſtead, for he had no ſonne, the ſecond year of Iehoram the ſonne of Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah.] Here a moſt difficult queſtion ariſeth, how it could be the ſecond year of Iehoram of Iudah, when as Iehoſhaphat was ſtill living and reigning, for he reigned 25. years, Ahaziah was made King in his 17. year, and reigned but two years, therefore unleſſe there were an inter-regnum, Iehoram began to reign the 19. or 20. of Iehoſhaphat, and 5. or 6. yeares before his ſon Iehoram; yea, it is expreſly ſaid chap. 3.1. that he began his reign the 18. of Iehoſhaphat, and that king Iehoſhaphat holp him in his war againſt Moab. And 2 *King.*8.16. that Iehoram of Iudah began his reign the fifth year of Iehoram king of Iſrael, how then can he be ſaid to have begun his reign in the ſecond of Iehoram king of Iudah? I finde two wayes, that Expoſitours labour to reconcile theſe differences, either by ſaying, that Iehoram the king of Iſrael was not of full age, when his brother Ahaziah died, and therefore although he were immediately made king, yet the kingdome was under the government of a protectour certain years, even till the ſecond of Iehoram king of Iudah, at whoſe entrance upon his reign he had been king four years, and was then upon the fifth, and yet his father made him king, together with himſelf ſome years before he died; for which cauſe it is ſaid, 2 King. 8. 16. that he began to reign, whileſt Iehoſhaphat his father yet reigned. Or, they reconcile it by ſaying, that Iehoſhaphat made his ſonne Iehoram King, 7. years before his death, to avoid contention betwixt him and his brethren, for he had many, for whom their father otherwiſe provided, that every one might be content,although it fell out otherwiſe through the bloud-thirſtineſſe of idolatrous Iehoram, as is ſhewed, 2 Chron. 21.4. And if this be received, it is to be underſtood here, that Iehoram of Iſrael began to reign the ſecond year of Iehorams reigning together with his father, and that this Iehoram began to reign alone, his father being now dead the fifth year of Iehoram king of Iſrael, thus the Hebrew expoſitours, and after them Lyra. Hebræi. Lyra. But againſt this make two things, although it be followed alſo by Iunius and ſome other learned expoſitours; Junius. firſt, that Iehoſhaphat is ſaid yet to be living and reigning; ſecondly, that Iehoram of Iſrael began his reign the 18. year of Iehoſhaphat, which was not according to this account the ſecond, but the firſt of Iehoram of Iudah,and when he began to reign alone, was not the fift,but the ſeventh of Iehoram of Iſrael. There is a neceſſitie then of leaving this way of reconciliation and looking back again to the former, which together with the other is mentioned by Martyr, P. Martyr. but neither preferred, but only after the mentioning left to the readers choiſe. According to that, if we ſay that Iehoram of Iudah began his reign the 17. year of his fathers reign; the other Iehorams reign will begin the ſecond year of his, and 18. of Iehoſhaphats, and if Iehoram of Iſrael, although king, reigned not by reaſon of his minority, but the kingdome was adminiſtred by a protectour, till three years after, then Iehoram of Iudah came to reign alone in the fifth of Iehoram of Iſrael, and ſo all differences will be reconciled. Onely whereas this may ſeem to make againſt us in this way, that Iehoſhaphats 18. year was the laſt of Ahabs, for he began the fourth of Ahabs reign,underſtanding it to be even now at an end, and ſo his firſt was Ahabs fifth, who is ſaid to have reigned 22. becauſe he was entring upon 22. when he was cut off, as hath been ſhewed upon 2 King. 22. 41. And if Ahab died the 18. of Iehoſhaphat, and Ahaziah ſucceeded before Iehoram reigning two years, he, that is Iehoram, could not then begin till the 19. or 20. It is anſwered, that Ahaziah was made king, whileſt his father lived, as the other Iehoram, whileſt Iehoſhaphat his father lived, and ſo died the ſame year with his father. And if this ſhall ſeem to make againſt it, that Iehoram of Iudah his beginning to reign the fifth year of Iehoram of Iſrael, is ſaid to have been whileſt Iehoſhaphat reigned, 2 King. 8. 16. For if it be meant of his beginning to reign alone after his fathers death, here ſeemeth to be a manifeſt contradiction: but if the text be well conſidered, there is not, for there is no more ſaid, but this, and Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah, it being left to be ſupplied from that, which was ſaid before 1 King. 22. 17. And Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah having reigned hitherto with his ſonne, from the beginning of that Iehorams reign over Iſrael, and two years alſo before that having made him conſort with him in his kingdome, whereupon it was there ſaid, that this Iehoram began in the ſecond year of his reign, now the ſaid ſon of Iehoſhaphat, Iehoram began his reign over Iudah alone, his father being dead. For this muſt needs either be yielded to, to be the meaning, or the writer of the ſacred hiſtory to be very forgetfull of what he had formerly written, which is not without blaſphemy to be ſuffered to enter into any mans minde. Or to make all yet more plain, it may be ſaid, that Iehoram of Iſrael came not to the kingdome, till anno 18. of Iehoſhaphat, and the time ſpoken of here was anno 23. when Iehoram his ſonne began to reign alone, and ſo the meaning of theſe words [and Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah] is, Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah ſtill living. For haply he now waxing old, deſired to ſpend the reſt of his time in devotion, and ſo gave all over to his ſonne before his death, as David to Solomon, and the rather, that before his death he and the reſt being ſetled, might live together the more peacefully after. Pellican maketh ſhort work of that which we have dwelt thus long upon, ſaying, that either there was a fault in the coppier out of this hiſtory, or elſe he confeſſeth himſelf plainly to be ignorant how it may be reconciled. But it is not ſafe to yield to any errour in copying out the Scriptures, except ſome true copie remained whereby the erring might be corrected. Let the judicious reader conſider, and if he cannot finde a better way of reconciling, follow this with me, which is the moſt without all exception.

CHAP. II.

V. 1. BUt it came to paſſe, when God would lift up Elijah by a whirl-winde into heaven, Elijah and Eliſhah went from Gilgal.*] God having revealed to Elijah, as it ſeemeth, that he would take him away alive into heaven, and upon what day, he went with Eliſhah, who miniſtred unto him, and in the propheticall office was to ſucceed him, from Gilgal, a place famous for a generall circumciſion of all the males amongſt the children of Iſrael, at their firſt coming over Iordan into the land of Canaan, and near unto that river, and now, as expoſitours hold, a School or Colledge of prophets, whoſe chiefe inſtructour Elijah was, it being thought fit the rather for ſuch an holy order of men to abide in. becauſe it was famous for the children of Iſrael firſt pitching their tents there, when they came to take poſſeſſion of the land. From hence then, as from a place where he uſed much to be amongſt thoſe his ſchollers that lived there, he went before his departure to Bethel, where hee had more Diſciples, called ſonnes of the prophets, v. 3. to inſtruct and confirm them. For Bethel was a place of note alſo for Iacobs viſion, and his ſacrificing there; thus making it as he profeſſed to doe, and the name ſignifieth the houſe of God. From Bethel he went to Iericho, where were more ſonnes of the prophets for the like end, v. 5. for Iericho was alſo a place of note, for the great miracle wrought there, Ioſh. 6. from thence he returned to Iordan, to go over the place where God would take him up. And all this he might well doe in one day, ſeeing from Gilgal to Bethel was but ſix miles, from thence to Iericho foure, and from Iericho to Iordan ſix. Gilgal indeed was farre from the place where he dwelt, that is, Carmel; viz. 52 miles, ſo that he could not ordinarily be there amongſt his ſchollars, but onely came ſometimes as their chief maſter, ſubſtituting in each place another over them, as the father of the ſons of that place. Two queſtions here offer themſelves. 1. Why Elijah muſt be taken away thus extraordinarily. 2. To what place, whether to the higheſt heaven called the Empyrean, where Chriſt now is, and the ſouls of the faithfull departing hence, or to ſome other place ſet forth by this word heaven? To the firſt, it was, ſaith Martyr, done for the honouring of the prophet, after ſo great and extraordinary zeal ſhewed for God and againſt idolatry, in the time of ſuch a king and queen, as perſecuted to the death all the prophets of God, that they could finde. For who ever before, being but a private man and a ſubject, durſt do, as Elijah did? Twice he threatned Ahab, once with a drought of three years and ſixe moneths; ſecond, with deſtruction both of him and his family. Once he ſharply reproved him as a troubler of Iſrael, and put to death 400. prophets of Baal. And to king Ahaziah he threatned death for his idolatry, and conſumed with fire 100. of his men. As then great king Ahaſhueroſh would honour Mordecai for ſpeciall ſervice done unto him, by making him ride upon his own horſe, ſo God would now honour Elijah, by making him to ride in a chariot up to heaven, that his doctrine might be the more regarded, from the turning of men from idols to ſerve the true God, at the leaſt now after his departure. Elijah was herein a figure of Chriſt alſo, who aſcended viſibly into heaven, and of the taking up of the faithfull, that ſhall be living at the laſt day, according to that 1 Theſ. 4. 17. To the ſecond, it is generally held, that Enoch and Elijah were both taken away into one place, but to what place is not agreed, but divers conjecture diverſly, ſee my expoſition upon Heb. 11. 5. Only becauſe I am there very brief, underſtand now thus much more touching the ſame. It pleaſed God to take away two to himſelf before the coming of Chriſt, one under the law of nature, or of the old world before the floud, and one under the law-written; and under the Goſpel Chriſt aſcended viſibly into heaven, that no age might want ſome teſtimony of the faithfuls being taken up into heaven at the laſt day. Touching the place, I finde divers opinions. Firſt, of Cypr. de Sanai & Sion, and of Tertullian, Epiphanius, and Hyppolitus Martyr, that God onely knoweth, and not man. Secondly, of Irenaus, Athanaſius, Iſidorus, Procopius, and Eccleſ. 44. 16. into that paradiſe, out of which Adam was caſt. And yet in the Greek copies of Eccleſiaſticus, the place is not named, but only in the vulgar Latin, which, ſince the councell of Trent making it authenticall, may not by any Roman Catholike be queſtioned. Thirdly, of Gregory, and Rupertus, into ſome ſecret part of the earth, where he and Enoch live, in all tranquility of the fleſh and ſpirit, after the manner of our firſt parents in paradiſe. Fourthly, of Ambroſe and Ierom, into heaven, ſo Ambroſe plainly and Ieroms calling it paradiſe, is eaſie to be underſtood, that he meant heaven thereby. So likewiſe Eugubinus, and why this ſhould be doubted I cannot ſee, for in the text it is plain into heaven, which Eugubinus explaineth of the heaven, to which Chriſt aſcended. This, I confeſſe, is impugned by many, of whom ſome hold, that Elias and Enoch are ſtill living in ſome other place, till the time of Antichriſt, againſt whom they ſhall then come forth; and ſome that they are not living, expounding that Heb. 11. of their not ſeeing death after the manner of other men, a change being unto them in ſtead of death, as it ſhall be to the faithfull at the time of the reſurrection. But for the firſt, it hath been ſufficiently confuted in my expoſition upon Revel. 11. and for the ſecond, if they died not after the manner of other men, viz. the ſoul departing out of the body, but were changed, it followeth, that as the faithfull being changed at the laſt day, in a moment are taken up into heaven both in body and ſoul, ſo they were, and yet Chriſt onely, and not Enoch or Elijah, opened the way into that moſt holy place, becauſe his aſcenſion had vertue to make us aſcend alſo, but theirs not. Or when he ſaith, the way into the moſt holy was not yet opened, underſtand, it was not yet made manifeſt, how we might attain to the kingdome of heaven viz. by Chriſt, but onely ſet forth obſcurely by types and figures, and accordingly Tremelius rendreth it, Non manifeſtata fuit adhuc via ſanctorum. Therefore this maketh not againſt their receiving into heaven before, nor yet Heb. 11. 40. that they without us ſhould not be perfect. For this is meant, in that Chriſt, in whom our perfect felicity lyeth, and who was therefore by them deſired, came not in the fleſh, untill theſe our times. Laſtly, Martyr thinketh, that they were were caried into ſome place above, but not into the higheſt heaven, where together with the holy Patriarks they remained, till Chriſt his aſcenſion, and then were altogether caried up into the higheſt heaven with him.

V. 2. The Prophet Elijah knowing that he ſhould now be taken up, offered to leave Elijah at Gilgal, and to goe to Bethel alone, and likewiſe at Bethel and at Iericho, but he cleaved unſeparably to him, even to his taking up, ſwearing that he would not leave him, although he often urged him ſo to doe. Why Elijah urged Eliſhah ſo much to ſtay behind and not to goe with him, all doe not yield the ſame reaſon, but ſome, that he did thus out of his modeſty, that none might ſee his glorious departure. Some leaſt Eliſhah ſeeing him carried away ſhould be the more overwhelmed with grief, out of that extraordinary love which he bare unto him, & ſome, that he moved him to ſtay to try his conſtancy in cleaving to him, as Naomi did Ruths in often moving her to leave her to return alone into the land of Iſrael. But we read, 1 Kings 19.3. that when he fled from Iezabel into the wilderneſſe, and ſo to mount Horeb, a long journey through deſert places, where no food was, making none other account, but that the Lord would then take him away, for that was his deſire, he left his ſervant behind and went alone, as thinking it unequall to carry him with him into ſo great dangers, and indeed deſiring to be ſolitary without any other company but God at ſuch a time, and I think, that in like manner at this time he deſired to leave his follower Eliſhah, that he might be found alone, when the Lord ſhould take him up, as not knowing but that the Lord would have him goe alone; for hee ſaid ſtill, as he journied from one place to another, the Lord hath ſent me. And becauſe the journey was great, which he was to goe from place to place, yea it was uncertain to how many places he ſhould be ſent, he did thus to ſpare Eliſhah this labour. Yet Eliſhah out of his moſt earneſt affection and obſervance towards him, not out of any diſobedience, would follow him to the end, ſeeing he heard not from him of any ſuch charge given by the Lord to diſmiſſe him. He found ſo great comfort in his preſence, that he was moſt unwilling to loſe it, till neceſſitie enforced him. And as may be conjectured, the Lord who had revealed to him the taking away of Elijah, as appeareth v. 3. had withall enjoyned him not to leave him, to the end, as knowing well what he meant then to do for him, and how. P. Martyr. Martyr thinketh, that it was revealed to Eliſhah, what ſhould be done unto him, if he cleaved to Elijah to the time of his departure, but not to Elijah. But this ſeemeth improbable, ſeeing he had no ſpirit of propheſie or revelation, but that before ſaid, till the ſpirit of Elijah reſted upon him, neither was he anointed to be prophet but after him; it is more likely then, that afterwards this came firſt into the minde of Elijah by the ſpirit, wherewith he was endued, to offer to Eliſhah his requeſt, being moved by his conſtant adhering and dutifulneſſe towards him. He knew indeed before, that he ſhould be an excellent prophet after himſelf, for ſo God had ſhewed him long ago, that he ſhould be prophet in his ſtead, 1 King. 19. but the way and meanes how he ſhould attain to this, was not revealed unto him, till he came at the very place of his rapture, viz. by asking to have his ſpirit doubled upon him, and by his firſt offering to do for him, whatſoever he ſhould deſire, and fulfilling the condition (of ſeeing him at his departure) propounded.

V. 3. When they came to Bethel, the ſonnes of the prophets there, came forth and ſaid to Eliſhah, [Knoweſt thou not, that the Lord will take thy maſter from thy head this day? he ſaid unto them, I know it, hold yee your peace.] Theodoret. Theſe ſonnes of the Prophets, were prophets, ſaith Theodoret, as the ſonnes of men are men, and hereby it appeareth, that they alſo knew by the ſpirit, that Elijah ſhould then be taken up into heaven. Their coming out was to meet him for honours ſake, and Eliſhah his bidding them hold their peace was, that Elijah might not by their ſpeaking of it together, know, that they knew it, becauſe he perceived, that he was unwilling that it ſhould be known or ſeen by any, in that he had ſo much urged him to leave him to go alone.

V.4,5. V. 7. And the like was done at Iericho, where more prophets lived together, for not they, who dwell at Iericho, were curſed by Ioſhuah, but he that built it. And theſe prophets although being warned by Eliſhah they held their peace, yet they followed Elijah and him going to Iordan afarre off, as deſirous to ſee the Prophets departure, fearing that if they had been near, he that was unwilling to have one go with him, would much more have forbidden them, being fifty men. And yet it was not without a divine providence, as Martyr noteth, that they went to ſee, that there might be many witneſſes of this his aſcent (making ſo much for the confirmation of our faith, touching our future being taken up, to remain alwayes with the Lord) as there were many witneſſes of Chriſts reſurrection. Then Elijah took his mantle and therewith ſmote the waters of Iordan, when he had wrapt it together in a fitting form, and they were divided ſo, that they both went over upon dry ground. This was not done by any vertue in his mantle, but it pleaſed God inwardly to move him to uſe this as an inſtrument, and hereby to work this great miracle, as by the rod of Moſes to divide the red ſea. For, that the vertue was not in the mantle appeareth, becauſe when Eliſhah returning uſed it, at the firſt, no effect followed, till he ſaid, where is the God of Elijah? v. 14. as Toſtatus reaſoneth.

V. 9.

When they were paſſed over, Elijah biddeth Eliſhah ask what he would, and he asked that his ſpirit might be doubled upon him. This was a great offer, and ſuch as one would think, paſſed the power of any man to grant. But it is to be underſtood, that he made not this motion without God ſuggeſting it unto him, neither did Eliſhah ask without the like inſtinct of the ſpirit. By the double portion of his ſpirit, as the Hebrew word פישנים ſignifieth, ſome underſtand twice ſo much thereof, as was in Elijah, which they prove by the event, becauſe he did twice ſo many miracles: for whereas Elijah did eight, he did 16. Some, a double portion in reſpect of other prophets, as the firſt born had a double portion to the reſt of his brethren, that he might be the more fit to ſucceed him in the propheticall office, who was the father and chief of all the reſt. Others laſtly, the two parts of his ſpirit, which were knowledge to underſtand and foreſee things ſecret and hidden, and power to do miraculouſly for the confirmation of the truth, and the beating down of idolatry; And to this Martyr doth moſt encline. And for this St. Cyprian ſeemeth to be, where he ſaith, Eliſhah received the double ſpirit of Elijah, not that the ſpirit is divided into two ſubſtances, but becauſe to the Chriſtian, of whom Eliſhah was a type, a double power was given both in work and word, when they received the holy Ghoſt, and having proſecuted Chriſt moſt earneſtly to his very aſcenſion, as Eliſhah did Elijah, they ſhone in faith and underſtanding, in life, and ſignes, and miracles, and examples. Thus alſo Toſtatus. But beſides theſe three, Vatablus hath another, viz. that Eliſhah asked onely two parts of three of the ſpirit of Elijah, and ſo to have one part of three leſſe then he. But for this I ſee no ground, for if the words be rendred verbatim, they are a part of two, or portion of two of thy ſpirit, not two parts of three. Moreover, if this had been the meaning, Elijah would never have ſaid, that he asked an hard thing, ſeeing what had been granted to one prophet, although moſt excellent, might eaſily be granted to his ſucceſſour, in a degree ſomewhat inferiour. And upon the ſame ground, I cannot but reject the third alſo, and the ſecond expoſition, ſeeing it was not an hard requeſt, to be like his predeceſſour, having as hard a task as he; or to be ſuperiour in propheticall endowments to others, to whom he was called to be as a father and inſtructour. Wherefore I reſt upon the firſt, and commonly received, he deſired a portion of two, that is, a double portion of the ſpirit, or the ſpirit which was in Elijah to be doubled upon him; according to the Septuagint and Tertullian, he deſired to take unto him the portion of Elijah double. The authour of the book de mirab. ſcript. he deſired to have the ſpirit doubled, not out of pride, but that with the more power he might oppoſe idolatry, to beat down which, he ſaw that the ſpirit of Elijah ſufficed not: for if he had asked this with a minde to lift up himſelf, neither Elijah nor the Lord would have granted his requeſt. So likewiſe Auguſtine, Theodoret, and Procopius, and Damianus ſaith, he asked that the ſpirit of Elijah might be doubled upon him in the ſignes of miracles, not in the excellencie of merits, and accordingly we may obſerve, that whereas Elijah did twelve miracles, Eliſhah did 24. though ſome reckon but ſeven done by one, and fourteen by the other. This then was Eliſhah his deſire, and this was his end, although he prevailed no more by

V. 10. Elijah hearing the requeſt of Eliſhah granted it not, but upon condition if he ſhould ſee him, when he was taken up. How this ſhould be available to help Eliſhah to ſuch an extraordinary guift, I cannot ſee. Wherefore it was not propounded as a meanes, that had any vertue in it, but onely God would by this meanes, as Elijah well underſtood, confer this great guift upon him, but without it not, as afterwards Eliſhah promiſed Naaman, that if he waſhed ſeven times in Iordan, he ſhould be clean. 2 King. 5. P. Martyr. Martyr ſaith, that this condition made him the more intent to look after Elijah, and ſo to pray the more earneſtly, when he was taken away. Note. And he well noteth, that Elijah would have him ask, what he deſired of him, before his taking away, to intimate, that who ſo will deſire any thing of any Saint, muſt do it before his departure, for after, there is no asking of any thing of them.

V. 11, 12. Whileſt Elijah and Eliſhah were thus talking, a fiery chariot, came with a whirlwinde, and took up Elijah, then Eliſhah looking after him ſaid, My father, my father! the chariots of Iſrael, and the horſemen thereof; that is, the greateſt ſtrength and defence againſt their enemies. For whileſt he lived in Iſrael, no enemy prevailed againſt them, but onely God corrected them by famine; and when their enemies came againſt them, they were alwayes overcome, till for the murthering of Naboth, the Syrians were ſuffered to prevail againſt Ahab, and to ſlay him in the field. Eliſhah therefore out of his great grief for the loſſe of ſuch a champion, crieth out, and for his own loſſe of one, that had been, as a father to him, carefully to inſtruct and teach him; ſuch a father was St. Paul afterwards to the Corinthians. 1 Cor. 4. 15. And he rent his clothes for ſorrow after the manner of thoſe times, and he mentioned a chariot, which he ſaw, being doubtleſſe Angels in that likeneſſe. For it is ſaid, Pſal. 68. The chariots of God are 20000. of Angels. And whereas they were ſaid to be fiery, He maketh his miniſters a flame of fire, Heb. 1. 7. The Angels then came in this likeneſſe to carry up Elijah to heaven, that there he might henceforth be one of their company, for which alſo he is now called the chariot, &c. But if he were caried away in a chariot, how is it ſaid, Elijah aſcended by a whirl-winde into heaven? Anſw. The whirl-winde, which was alſo Angels in this appearance, caried the chariot wherein he rode, and ſo he aſcended by a whirlewinde: for as it is ſaid, he maketh his miniſters a flame of fire, ſo likewiſe in the ſame place, he maketh his Angels windes, as Beza rendreth it. Thus he departed out of this world, who not onely in his aſcent, but alſo many other wayes was a moſt eminent type of Chriſt. Firſt, in that he is brought in, as another Melchiſedek, without father or mother, no mention being made, as of other prophets, of his father. Secondly, He lived obſcurely a long time, and then ſuddainly began to ſhew himſelf to the king of Iſrael, as Chriſt did himſelf at 30. years of age. Thirdly, he was fed by a widow, whoſe ſonne notwithſtanding died, but he raiſed him to life again, ſo Chriſt having been entertained by Mary and Martha, yet their brother Lazarus died, but he was by him raiſed up again, but not without much ado, as that widowes ſonne by Elijah. Fourthly, Elijah brought fire from heaven, to deſtroy ſinners, Chriſt ſent downe the holy Ghoſt, as fire to deſtroy ſinne. Fiftly, Elijah being full of heavineſſe and alone in the wilderneſſe was comforted by an Angel, ſo Chriſt in the garden before his paſſion. Sixtly, Elijah faſted forty days, ſo Chriſt. Seventhly, the ſpirit of Elijah reſted upon Eliſhah after his aſcent, ſo the Holy Ghoſt upon the Apoſtles.

V. 13. Elijah being taken away, Eliſhah took up the mantle, which fell from him and went and ſtood by the river Iordan. 1 King. 19. 19. This may ſeem to be too ſmall a matter to be remembred, but ſeeing this mantle was the enſigne of his propheticall office, and hereby ſo great a miracle had been then wrought, in dividing the waters of Iordan, it was by a ſpeciall providence, that it was left him, that he wearing the habit of Elias, might be known to be his ſucceſſour in the propheticall office, and ſo be the more readily obeyed, and the rather, when they ſhould ſee that the ſame ſpirit of power accompanied this mantle in Eliſhah by his dividing there with the ſame waters again. P. Martyr. Men of high and eminent place, ſaith Martyr, as kings, do put on the ſame robes which their predeceſſours did weare, ſo Eliſhah the mantle of Elijah. And Chryſoſtome he ſaith, will have this mantle to be a figure of the body and blood of Chriſt, which he left unto his Church upon earth, when he aſcended up into heaven, making yet this difference; Chriſt left us this mantle of his, and yet hath it with him in heaven, Elijah not. From hence the Papiſts inferre, that Chryſoſtome held the reall preſence, but the meaning of that father is not, that the bread and wine in the Sacrament are the very ſubſtantiall body and blood of Chriſt to be corporally received, but ſpiritually, and by faith. For he further addeth, that there was double Elijah, one in heaven above, another in the earth beneath; thus calling his mantle, left upon earth. Elijah becauſe of the ſpirit, and vertue of Elijah accompanying it, when it was in the hands of Eliſhah. In calling the ſacrament Chriſts body and blood, then he meant doubtleſſe virtually, and ſpiritually.

Chryſoſt. Hom. 2. ad populum Antioch.

V. 4.

Then Eliſhah that he might have a way to paſſe over, ſmote the river with the mantle as Elijah had done, but the waters not being thus divided, he prayed and ſaid, where is the God of Elijah? and then ſmote them again, and they were divided. God would not preſently make the Diſciple equall to his maſter, but after a while, leaſt he ſhould be too much puffed up, nor would he meerly by ſtriking the waters with the mantle have the waters divided, leaſt the power and vertue ſhould ſeem to lay in it. But he muſt firſt call upon God, that it might be acknowledged to be his act, and that the mantle was only an inſtrument. By ſaying, where is the God of Elijah, he meant, where is the promiſe of doubling the ſpirit upon me made in Gods name by Elijah, or [oh thou God of Eliah] make good this promiſe unto me, in cauſing the waters of this river to divide at my ſtriking, as thou diddeſt when they were ſtricken by him. The Cald. paraph. receive my petition (O Lord God of Elijah) even thou. He ſaid not, where is the Lord, &c. out of diffidence, as Ambroſe hath it, but as deſirous to be made partaker of his benefits, or as deſiring his preſence thereby. For if he had doubted, he ſhould not have prevailed at another ſmiting; for he that doubteth, is like a wave of the ſea, Iam. 1.5. In the vulgar Latin theſe words are ſupplyed, and they were not divided] to make the ſenſe the more full, for they are not in the Hebrew, but muſt be underſtood, becauſe they were not then divided; as appeareth by his calling upon God, and ſtriking the waters of Iordan again.

V. 15.

But the ſonnes of the Prophets which were in Iericho, on the other ſide, ſeeing him ſaid, the ſpirit of Elijah, reſteth upon Eliſhah, &c.] This is not ſo to be underſtood, as if they being in Iericho had ſeen Eliſhah at Iordan, for Iericho was about 6 miles off, but 50 men of them are ſaid v. 7. to have followed him, and Elijah going towards Iordan, and to have ſtood afar off, and of theſe it is to be underſtood. Theſe ſons of the Prophets who dwelt in Iericho. having placed themſelves conveniently upon ſome high place, from whence, although it were afarre off, they might ſee what was done; theſe I ſay, ſeeing what Eliſhah had done, came forth to meet him, and did reverence to him, as the undoubted ſucceſſour of Elijah, by whom they were now to be governed.

V. 16, 17.

Then they offered to goe and ſeek up Elijah, if happily the ſpirit of God had taken him and caſt him into ſome valley or mountain, and although Eliſhah denied, they importuned him till they prevailed, and ſo went 3 dayes, but all in vain. And theſe 50 men that went, are ſaid to be valiant men, or ſtrong, that is, to endure travaile, not to fetch back Elijah by force. If any man ſhall wonder, why they would take ſo great paines to ſeek him, ſeing they knew before by the ſpirit, that he was then to be taken away, and if they knew not, that he ſhould be taken away, and return no more, but thought that he was only tranſported, as he had formerly ſometimes been, why ſhould they now goe to ſeek him more then in times paſt, when as the ſame ſpirit which then tranſported him, brought him back again without any mans ſeeking in his good time and by the ſpeech of Obadiah we may gather, that it was vain to ſeek him, when the ſpirit had carried him away, ſeeing Ahab ſent into all lands about in vain to ſeek him? No reaſon can be rendred, but that God would have it thus to be done, the more to make manifeſt this miraculous departure of his Prophet, not from one part of the earth to another, but into heaven.

Pellican ſaith, that they would goe to ſeek him out of their curioſity.

Whereas Eliſhah withſtood the motion, it was, becauſe he knew more then they did, that he ſhould return no more; and yet for their importunity he yielded to let them goe, leaſt he ſhould be thought to be unwilling with his return, that he might govern over the ſonnes of the Prophets now alone.

V.18. When they returned to Eliſhah, he is ſaid to have dwelt at Iericho, becauſe he ſtayed there the time of their going to ſearch, not becauſe he abode conſtantly in that place, for v. 23. he went from thence to Bethel, and from Bethel to Carmel, where he had dwelt before with his maſter Elijah v. 25. and that moſt probably was his dwelling place. But in that little time of his ſtay in Iericho, there was an occaſion offered to work a great miracle, whereby it further appeared that the ſpirit of God was in him, as he had been in Elijah. V.19. The waters of Iericho were naught, and the earth barren, wherefore at the requeſt of the inhabitants there, he healeth them with ſalt, which properly maketh water unfit to drink, and ground barren. How the water here came to be corrupted, is not known, but Pellican imputeth it to the ſinnes of the inhabitants, ſince the rebuilding of this city. Martyr ſaith, ſome conjecture this puniſhment to have been laid uppon it, becauſe it was rebuilt by Hiel in Ahabs time, contrary to the interdiction under a curſe, and ſome that it was thus ever ſince the time that Ioſhuah curſed it, that it might not be rebuilt. But Martyr ſubſcribeth neither to the one conjecture, nor the other. Only becauſe the land of Cannaan generally was very fruitfull, he thinketh, that theſe waters had not this ill quality from the beginning, but that it was laid as a puniſhment upon the inhabitants for their ſins, as the land of Sodom and Gomorrah came to be tainted with the mare mortuum, and ſince the land of Iudeah was all made barren, as travailers report; and it is threatned, Pſ. 107. a fruitfull land is turned into barrenneſſe for the ſins of thoſe that dwell therein. Some yet ſaith he, hold it to have come from the dead ſea of Sodom, which was not farre from Iericho. But then it muſt be granted to have been ſo before the coming of that land into the poſſeſſion of Iſrael, which is improbable, ſeeing a faire and ſtrong city ſtood there inhabited by many people, which would not doubtleſſe have been ſo, in caſe that the waters (of which as Ioſephus ſaith, there was only one ſtream watering the plain 70 furlongs in length, and 20 in breadth) had been naught. Neither for the like reaſon is it to be conceived to have been thus ever ſince that Ioſhuah curſed it, for then Hiel would never have expoſed himſelfe to the danger of that curſe by building there, yea it was the fruitfulneſſe of the ground, if we will believe Ioſephus, that allured him unto it. Wherefore it muſt needs follow, that God being offended with the building, corrupted the waters, and made the earth thus barren, by their waſhing thereupon in no ſmall quantity of ground, as was ſaid before out of Ioſephus, whom I have thought it not amiſſe to bring in here ſpeaking uppon this place. There is a moſt large fountain here, and moſt fruitfull in watering the fields, of which it is reported, that ſometime it was wont to make abortive the ſoile of the earth, the fruit of trees, and the great bellies of women, and to corrupt all things with ſickneſſe and plague. But afterwards it was made moſt wholeſome and fattening to the ground by Eliſhah the Prophet, when being courteouſly entertained by the inhabitants, hee remunerated them with this perpetuall favour, by caſting into it a cruſe full of ſalt. And hee prayed the heavens, that is, God, to temper the rivers with more fruitfull ayre, &c. By theſe prayers having alſo wrought many things with his hands, he ſo changed the fountain, that whereas it had formerly cauſed abortion and famin, now it was the authour of fruitfulneſſe and living; For now it is of ſuch vertue, that if it doth but touch the ground, it is made a long time after the more ſavory, &c. According to this, Ambroſe, & after him Iunius, Martyr and ſome others expound the word, as indeed it ſignifieth, which is commonly rendred [barren] abortive, Regio facit abortum, (ſaith Iunius) that is, ſuffereth neither the young of men or of living creatures, nor the fruits of the earth to come to maturity.

Joſephus. De bel. Jud. l. 5. c 4. Hunc fontem aliquando ferunt non ſolum terræ atquo lignorum fructus ſed etiam fæminarum partum obtundere ſolitus, cunctaque pariter morbo & peſte corrumpere.

Junius.

If it be ſaid, how then could that place be inhabited, and much more how can that be true v. 19. The habitation of this place is good?

Anſw. It is meant, that there were good buildings and a good ayr, and had it not been for the ill quality of the water, the ſoil fruitfull enough, but yet howſoever moſt

much detriment was hereby ſuffered, it is not to be thought that the whole tract of ground about the city was thus tainted, but onely where the waters commonly waſhed it, and therefore as they abounded more or leſſe, it was more or leſſe obnoxious to them. However now, by caſting in a cruſe of ſalt into them theſe waters were healed of this ill quality, which plainly ſhewed the hand of God, that Note. wrought by Eliſhah, there being no aptneſſe in ſalt to work ſuch an effect in water, and if there were for ſome kinde of corruption in water, yet not for ſo great a quantity, ſo little being caſt in, nor for ſo long a time, that is, ever after. And this V. 22.
great miracle, was without doubt wrought for the converſion of the men of Iericho from idolatry to the true God, and to make both them and all others, that ſhould hear of it, to magnifie his power and goodneſſe, and to ſerve him, that worketh ſuch wonders with all conſtancy.

Then Eliſhah went to Bethel, where he had been with Elijah, next before their V. 23. coming to Iericho, where was alſo a Colledge of prophets, as was before ſaid. But as he went, little children came out and mocked him, ſaying, come up bald-pate.
Then he curſed them in the name of the Lord, and two Beares coming out of the wood, tore 40. of them. Herein the prophet may ſeem to have been too impatient, but it is to be underſtood, that Bethel was a place tainted with idolatry. For as there was a Colledge of prophets, ſo a golden Calf was there ſet up by Ieroboam, which doubtleſſe was ſtill worſhipped by moſt, and therefore the prophets of God were nothing acceptable unto them, when they came thither, but derided and ſcorned, and as they ſaw older ones do, even their little children did now to Eliſhah.
Wherefore for the puniſhment of their idolatrous parents, and the deterring of all men from contemning the holy ſervants of God, which is to his diſparagement and of his truth, it was juſt in Eliſhah to curſe them, as being ſtirred up hereunto not by impatience, but by the ſpirit of God; and it was juſt in God to take this miraculous revenge upon them, and the rather, becauſe it might happily turn to an occaſion of drawing ſome from idolatry unto him. Thus Auguſt. ſerm. 204. ſaith, that the parents were corrected in the puniſhment of their children, who inſulted over the prophet at the inſtigation of their parents, that the little ones being ſmitten, the greater might receive diſcipline, and learn to fear the prophet doing wonders, whom they would not be hereby drawn to love. And Procopius ſaith, it was for the great benefit both of childe and parents; to them, becauſe it inhibited their malice growing greater in time; to theſe, by teaching them to bring up their children better in the fear of God, and the reverence of good men. And it is well P. Martyr.
noted by Martyr here, that this reproach laid upon Eliſhah by ſuch as would ſay the Note.
worſt of him that they could by way of exprobration, did make much for his credit, ſeeing baldneſſe is no vice, but a ſmall naturall blemiſh, and hereby it ſeemeth, that they could object no worſe thing againſt him. And in like manner, they of the reformed religion, whileſt the papiſts object unto them, the want of veſtments and ceremonies in divine ſervice, and of impoſition of biſhops hands in ordination, &c. do not diſcredit, but credit them, as being acknowledged thus to be free from noxious faults, of which otherwiſe they ſhould be ſure to hear. For baldneſſe, men Suetonius.
are generally aſhamed of it, neither could the Emperour Domitian, who was bald himſelf, endure to hear any other man upbraided by his bald-head; and Iulius Caſar being aſhamed to have this ſeen in him, uſed never to come forth without a garland upon his head, and others commonly hide it with periwigs at this day. Eliſhah therefore took it as a great diſgrace put upon him, and conſequently upon his God, and ſo called for this judgement.

But having done thus, he ſtayed not at Bethel, but paſſed away immediatly to V. 24.
Carmel, the place of his dwelling, as not doubting, but that the men of Bethel would be by this fact greatly exaſperated againſt him, although through the fear which fell upon them, none durſt purſue him, and from Carmel he went to Samaria, which was a place moſt infected with idolatry, as being the metropolis thereof, by reaſon of the idolatrous kings reſiding there, as ch. 3. 1. ſheweth. And to this place, it is to be thought, that he came to inſtruct and ſtay the people, as much as might be, from idolatry; and to this end, he followed the camp when Iehoram went forth with his army againſt Moab, and that he might be at hand to work another great miracle, when need required, to move them the more, as the following hiſtory ſheweth.

The Allegory. In the children mocking at Eliſhah and bidding him, aſcende calve, Auguſtine will have the Iews, who are compared to children ſitting in the market-place figured out; for the place where they crucified Chriſt, was Calvary, and in mocking him they ſaid, deſcend from the croſſe, &c. wherefore two Beares Titus and Veſpaſian deſtroyed them, about 42. yeares after Chriſt his paſſion. Thus alſo the Ordinar. Gloſſe, adding, that as Eliſhah, ſo Chriſt was thus mocked, when he went up to Bethel, that is, heaven, the houſe of God. And here touching the aſcent of Elijah it is ſaid, that he was taken up in a fiery chariot, but Chriſt figured by him, without; becauſe the one was a meer man and ſo needed an help to carry him up, but the other by his own vertue aſcended. And that there were three in three ages of the world taken up into heaven, Enoch begotten and begetting, Elijah begotten but not begetting, Chriſt neither begotten as man, nor begetting, to ſhew, that the faithfull of all ſorts and of all times are received thither.

Gloſ. ordin.

Touching Eliſhah deſiring the ſpirit to be doubled upon him, he is alſo by the Gloſſe made herein the figure of the Church. For the Church being emboldened to ask by the Lords invitation, deſireth alſo a double portion of the ſpirit to that, which Chriſt had, viz. the guift of miraculous operations and remiſſion of ſinnes, which he needed not; and as Eliſhah had his requeſt granted upon condition, if he did ſee Elijah in his aſcenſion, ſo the faithfull which ſee, that is, beleeve not onely the incarnation and paſſion, but alſo the reſurrection and aſcenſion of Chriſt into heaven, obtain their requeſt, yea do greater things through the ſpirit, then Chriſt did, as he promiſed that they ſhould, and it may be noted that the Apoſtles did. Laſtly, as Eliſhah uſed the name of Elijah to work that miracle at Iordan, ſo in the name of Chriſt the Apoſtles did miracles, and in this name he muſt come that would prevail for any thing. Morally Elijah his aſcent in a fierie chariot, ſignified, that the fierie heat of love availeth more to carry a man to the higheſt, then the ſplendour of knowledge: and the fiery chariot accompanied with a whirlwinde, that where the greateſt light of grace is in this life, there is yet ſome darkneſſe. Alſo the waters, upon which Eliſhah wrought his miracle, ſignifie divine doctrine, which becometh naught, when errours are mixed therewith, but by the ſalt of diſcretion, that which is corrupt being ſeparated from the ſound, it is healed, and the ſonnes of the prophets may ſafely drink thereof, that is, reade and meditate upon it.

CHAP. III.

V. 1. BVt Ioram, the ſonne of Ahab, began to reign in Samaria anno 18. of Iehoſhaphat, &c.] Of the time of Iorams beginning to reign, enough hath been ſaid already, upon ch. 1. 17. And from the time of his beginning, to his cutting off by

V. 2, 3. Iehu were 12. yeares. All which time he was ſpared, not becauſe he was good, but not altogether ſo bad as his father. For although he departed not from the ſinne of Ieroboam, in worſhipping the golden calves, yet he put down Baal, whom his

Pellican. father had ſet up; but becauſe nothing is ſaid of his mother, Pellican ſaith, that he touched not her groves, noting, that women are more ſtiffe in their errours, but here ſeems to be no ground for this. How Ioram was moved to put down Baal is not ſaid, but becauſe Iehoſhaphat is by and by ſpoken of, as a confederate whom he ſought to for help in his warre with Moab, and ſo readily yielded to go with him, as before with Ahab, notwithſtanding his ill ſucceſſe and check given

Pellican. him from God therefore, it is conceived by ſome, that Ioram was drawn to this by Iehoſhaphat, who would not otherwiſe help him, but now did, and was never reproved therefore, but graced with a miracle, for his ſake wrought by Eliſhah. For it was no ſmall work in Ioram to do this, both becauſe his father had ſet up the worſhip of Baal, whoſe act he would not lightly reverſe, eſpecially being without the grace of turning from idolatry, and becauſe his mother Iezabel ſtill lived, who was ſtifly addicted unto this idolatry. Wherefore it muſt be granted, that he was drawn to this by ſome other, who had great power with him, and who could this be, but Iehoſhaphat? But why did he not move him to put down all other idolatry alſo? Anſw. He hoped probably, that being brought by his perſwaſion to do this, he might afterwards be drawn to put down Ieroboams idolatry alſo.

Thus much being ſet forth in generall, touching Ioram, now followeth his warring V.4. againſt Moab. Meſa the king of Moab, who had been a tributary to the kings of Iſrael ever ſince Davids time, who ſubdued Moab and made them his ſervants, 2 Sam. 8. 2. paying yearly 100000. lambs, and 100000. rams with their wooll to the king of Iſrael (to whom it ſeemeth, after the diviſion of the kingdome Moab fell, as Edom to Iudah) now Ahab being dead, refuſed to pay it any longer. This wrong Ahaziah that ſucceeded his father Ahab next, revenged not, although it be ſpoken of Moabs revolt at his coming to the crown, 2 King. 1. 1. for both his reign was ſhort after his fathers death, and in that ſhort time ſickneſſe hindered him, but Iehoram his brother no ſooner attained to the kingdome, but he gathered an army together to reduce Moab into this ſervitude again. And to make himſelf the V.7. ſtronger, he ſent to Iehoſhaphat to joyn with him, who was very ready ſo to do, partly for the cauſe before aſſigned, which Martyr mentioneth, as the opinion P. Martyr. of ſome, and partly becauſe it did in ſome ſort concern him to help to ſubdue a tributary king, revolting from the obedience of his ſoveraign, for if this were ſuffered, he might fear, that other nations under his obedience, would offer the like injury to him: and laſtly, he could not, but have ſtill in his minde the attempt of the Moabites with others againſt him, 2 Chron. 20. 1. and therefore took this opportunity to pay them in their own coyn. All which reaſons notwithſtanding, Martyr cenſureth his joyning with wicked Ioram in this warre. But the premiſes conſidered, and eſpecially Gods forbearing to reprove him, which he uſed not to do in caſe of his doing unlawfully in any thing, I dare not ſay, that Iehoſhaphat ſinned herein, but did juſtly and wiſely. Ioſephus relating this hiſtory, ſaith, that Ioram ſollicited Iehoſhaphat by his meſſengers, to joyn with him in this warre, and Joſephus. that Iehoſhaphat promiſed not onely ſo to do, but alſo to draw the king of Moab to be a party in it, whereupon Ioram went to him to Ieruſalem, and being royally entertained, by common counſell they went the way of Edom, moſt probably to call the Edomites with them; And becauſe it was not expected, that an army could come upon them that way, ſo that they were likely to be the more unprepared to reſiſt. But when they had travelled this way ſeven dayes, the Edomite army being V.9, 10. with them, they were in a great ſtrait for want of water, and then Iehoſhaphat V.11, 12. enquireth for a prophet; and hearing of Eliſhah they went unto him, &c. Eliſhah is deſcribed here by powring water upon the hands of Elijah, becauſe he waited upon him, and not for any miraculous dropping of water from his fingers, according to the Rabbins fiction mentioned before, 1 King. 18. 32. Ioram in this ſtreight did nothing but cry out and complain. as a man in deſpair, but godly Iehoſhaphat ſought to the Lord. For, as Lyra hath it, he enquired after a prophet of the Lord, Lyra. that he might entreat the Lord for them, that they might be ſupplied with water in this their great want. Eliſhah ſeeing the king of Iſrael, upbraided him by the V.13. prophets of his father and mother, bidding him to go to them, as being the men, that miniſtred to the idol, whom he ſerved rather then the true God, and not to ſeek to Gods prophets, whom he hated, and his parents had perſecuted ſo lately to death. For it is not to be expected, that they, who hate the ſervants of God, and will not hearken to them to amend their lives, ſhould have comfort from them in time of neceſſity, but be left to periſh comfortleſſe in their diſtreſſes. If neceſſity had not enforced Ioram to it, he would never have deigned to come to ſuch a poor man as Eliſhah, which he knowing well enough, greeteth him accordingly, yet not by way of inſulting over him in his miſery, but as deeming it a fit time to reprove him thus, that he might be aſhamed of his former idolatry, & obſervance of ſuch prophets, as could yield him no help in time of his need, & ſo grow henceforth to a contempt of them. But why did he upbraid him now by idolatrous prophets, when as he had put down Baal, whom his father had ſet up? v. 2. Anſw. Happily he being a ſervitour of Ieroboams calves, ſtill uſed the ſame prophets, as miniſtring indifferently to them both, and of his putting down the prophets of his mother, which were the prophets of the groves, nothing is ſaid before, ſo that he might well have them ſtill objected to him to his diſgrace, as being nothing acceptable to the Lord in putting down ſome idolatry, but retaining ſome ſtill.

V. 13. The king being thus upbraided by Eliſha, as his urgent neceſſity required, gave him no reprehenſive anſwer, but ſaid, No, for the Lord hath called theſe three kings together, that he might deliver them into the hands of Moab.] The meaning is, no, I will not go to the prophets of my father or mother, for neither by Baal nor any other god am I brought into this ſtreight, or can be holpen out of it but by the Lord. He it is, that by his juſt judgment hath brought us into this danger, therefore I flee to thee, as his ſervant; let theſe exprobrations then paſſe for this time, & apply thy ſelf rather by ſeeking to the Lord, that we may be ſuccoured and not ſuffered to periſh for want of water. Theodoret. Eliſhah ſeeing Iorams pride thus pulled down, ſaith Theodoret, thought it a fit opportunity to go on to ſhew him how contemptible his ſinne had made him, therefore without ſpeaking to his anſwer, he proceeded ſaying, V. 14. As the Lord of hoſts liveth, in whoſe ſight I ſtand, but that I reſpect the face of Iehoſhaphat, I would not have looked towards thee, that is, but that Iehoſhaphats danger is now inſeparably linked with thine, who is a godly king, and therefore worthy of all honourable reſpect from the ſervants of the Lord, I would not have done any thing at thy requeſt; but let thee have gone with contempt into deſtruction, as thou haſt at other times contemned the Lord and me. Note. And this he ſpake, not to teach a ſleighting of kings that reign over us, although wicked, but to ſhew, that ſuch as will not hearken to good admonitions in their proſperity, ſhall ſeek in their extremities for help at Gods hands, and be neglected, and if the wicked have any help in this caſe, it is not for their own, but for their ſakes that fear God, Whom whileſt he delivereth, they being in the ſame common danger are delivered alſo.

V. 15. Then he ſaid, bring me a Minſtrell, &c.] The vulgar Latin, a ſinger of Pſalmes, but the word is מְנַגֵּן ſignifying a ſtriker upon a muſicall inſtrument, and therefore it is better rendred, a minſtrell, that playeth and maketh melody with his hand. But why the prophet would thus prepare to his propheſying of comfort to the diſtreſſed, divers, ſaith Martyr, P. Martyr. ſpeak diverſly; ſome, that his minde irritated by Iehorams wickedneſſe, might be pacified, and ſo he might be more fit for divine revelations, which were not wont to be made, when the affections were troubled, but calm and quiet; ſome, that the people preſent might be lifted up in their languiſhing minds, and ſo made more fit to receive comfort, both which are by Junius, Junius. joyned together. Some becauſe the ſpirit of God will not enter into a ſad mind, but into the chearfull; for which cauſe at times of ſacrificing, they were bidden to chear up themſelves by eating and drinking of the beſt, and Iſaack to prepare himſelfe to a propheticall bleſſing, would firſt have veniſon provided him. But Martyr not reſting in theſe reaſons addeth another. viz. That he would have muſick to invite the ſpirit of God to ſpeak comfort by him by reciting in ſome ſweet and heavenly tune the moſt memorable doings of the Lord formerly towards his people, and praiſing him therefore, and praying for preſent help. And this ſeemeth indeed to be the main reaſon, why Elijah called now for a minſtrell, the other not being excluded. He had been ſomewhat ſtirred in his mind againſt Iehorams wickedneſſe, and therefore partly to bring his mind into a calmer temper, and partly, that whilſt muſick was made to the praiſe of God, he praying together might receive direction from the ſpirit, how to provide againſt the preſent evill, he called for one skilfull in ſtriking the inſtrument thus; not any indifferently, but a levite or godly man trained up in this way. Theodoret. Procopius. Thus alſo Theodoret and Procopius, conjecturing that the minſtrell was a levite, and played, and ſung ſome Pſalme of David. Note. And in imitation of this, happily it is now a cuſtome in our Church to ſing a Pſalm before a Sermon to invite the ſpirit to come amongſt us, and inſpire us to ſpeak to his glory, and our mutuall tuall comfort. For this is not obſcurely intimated to be the way of being filled with the ſpirit, Eph. 5. 18, 19. where it is ſaid, Be fulfilled with the ſpirit ſinging to your ſelves in Hymnes and Pſalmes and ſpirituall ſongs, &c. and therefore this way is not only then to be followed, but at other times and places alſo by all ſuch, as would be made partakers of divine and ſpirituall light and comfort.

V. 16.

And the hand of the Lord was upon him, and he ſaid, thus ſaith the Lord, make ditches, ditches, &c.] That is, many ditches. By the hand is meant the ſpirit, which told him, that ditches being made, they ſhould have great ſtore of water without ſeeing any rain, wherewith both they and their cattell might all be refreſhed. And not only ſo, but that Moab ſhould be delivered into their hands, and that they ſhould ſmite every choiſe city, and caſt down every good tree, and ſtop up every fountain of water, &c. which began to come to paſſe accordingly, for in the morning at the time of ſacrificing, waters coming by the way of Edom, filled the land; and the time is deſcribed by the offering of ſacrifice, to ſhew that the ſupplications offered to God at Ieruſalem were regarded in this miraculous ſuccouring of the army abroad. The prophet ſaith Lyra, foreſaw by the ſpirit, that abundance of raine ſhould fall in places not farre off, which by the brook that was now dry, ſhould run thither, and pits being made ready be filled therewith, let them make as many as they could, and thus not only for the preſent, but the water being here held, they ſhould be ſupplyed many dayes after.

V. 18,19.

V. 20.

Lyra.

Ioſephus ſaith, that this rain fell in the higher parts of Idumea, three dayes journy from thence, and by Gods providence came running along to the place where they had digged.

For their deſtroying of good fruit-bearing trees, it may ſeem to be againſt the law of God, Deut. 20. But it is commonly anſwered, that Moab was for their extraordinary wickedneſſe particularly excepted from the benefit of that law, and yet further by the ſaid Lyra, that the law there concerned not other countries, but the land of Canaan only, where the Iſraelites were to dwell, and to have the benefit of fruit-bearing trees afterwards. Martyr ſeemeth to incline to this, that the cutting down of fruit-bearing trees any where was forbidden, but for this time the Lord diſpenſed with this law in Moab for their greater puniſhment.

P. Martyr.

He mentioneth alſo another Expoſition, that the law forbidding the cutting down of ſuch trees was made only in caſe that they beſieged a city and lay long before it, in which time they might have need of the fruit to eat. But in the land of Moab there being no ſuch occaſion, they were not by this law tyed from cutting them down. But I reſt in the laſt of Lyra, and ſo Martyr alſo finally doth. For the ſins of the Moabites, for which God would have their country thus ſpoyled, they were many and great. For firſt they were worſhippers of Baal Peor, and ſought in times paſt to draw Iſrael to the like idolatry, to the provoking of the Lord greatly againſt them. Secondly they hired Baalam to curſe Iſrael. 3. They were now grown proud and would no longer be ſubject to the king of Iſrael, neither pay him any tribute, and therefore it was juſt, that they ſhould be thus ſpoiled, although one of the inſtruments now uſed, that is, the king of Iſrael and his people were little better; for they were not regarded in this no more then in the miracle of water wrought, but Iehoſhaphat a godly king only.

V. 21.

Lyra.

V. 22, 23.

24, 25.

P. Martyr.

They hearing of theſe kings coming, gathered themſelves altogether, that were able to beare armes, and ſtood at their borders; where, according to Lyra, the entrance of the land was narrow, and therefore might be beſt defended. And when they ſaw the confluence of waters coming down through the hoaſt look red, they deeming it to be bloud flowing from the ſlain, conceived, that the three kings had fallen out, and that their armies had ſhed the blood of one another, and therefore they go on diſorderly to take the ſpoile, and ſo were unexpectedly ſmitten by the Iſraelitiſh army, and immediately after their cities were deſtroyed, &c. as was propheſied. There might be a naturall cauſe ſaith Martyr, of the waters ſeeming red at the riſing of the ſun through the reflexion of the beames thereof, ſhewing the more red by means of thick vapours, whereupon they being apt to believe, that it had fallen out as they would have it, reſolved that their enemies had ſlain one another, ther, neither were reaſons wanting to this their conjecture; viz. the king of Edoms unwilling being amongſt them, who favoured rather the Moabites, and the ſtreight in which they were for want of water, which might breed a quarrell againſt thoſe, that were the authours of going that way. But God did plainly infatuate them, in that the appearance of blood, before they knew, whether it were blood or no, or had ſent out to be better aſſured, drew them out of their borders where they were ſtrongeſt; diſorderly to expoſe themſelves to the danger of their potent, and well prepared enemies. Note. This teacheth, that when God hath a judgement to bring upon a land for ſin, they ſhall be ſo farre unable to withſtand it, as that they ſhall rather by their own raſh and fooliſh doings haſten it upon themſelves.

Whereas in ſhewing that all things were done, as the Prophet had foretold to the Moabites cities, fields, fountaines, and trees; it is finally ſaid, ſo that they only left the ſtones in Kirhareſeth. Iunius till at Kirhareſeth, the Moabites left the ſtones thereof. [The vulgar Latin, ita ut muri tantum fictiles remanerent] earthen walls only remained. It is to be underſtood, that Kir ſignifieth a city, and Hareſeth an earthen veſſell, and is here put for a wall of brick, from whence cometh the proper name Kirhareſeth; but being expounded as an appellative, there is ſome colour for the vulgar Latin Expoſitours; yet it muſt needs be granted to be imperfect, ſeeing אבנה the ſtones thereof, and קיר a city are not mentioned herein, but are in the originall. The true reading is, till a leaving of the ſtones thereof the city Hareſheth. That is, the ſtones of every cities walls being pulled down were caſt uppon their beſt fields, till they came at this city, to which the king of Moab was fled, where the wall made of ſtone ſtood ſtill for a defence to ſuch as eſcaped. But why the Moabites ſhould be brought in by Iunius, as cauſing it to ſtand, I cannot ſee. It ſtood indeed the laſt of all their cities, and no doubt, but many fled thither for refuge, it being their ſtrongeſt hold, but the intent of the hiſtory is not to ſhew who upheld it, but only that hitherto it ſtood, as being that, which the Iſraelites left to bee aſſaulted laſt, and therefore the ſtones of the wall of that city were not broken down according to the generall propheſie, and now is ſhewed the occaſion when the ſlingers of ſtones with engines had compaſſed it, and beaten the Moabites off, ſo that the Iſraelites were now ready to be maſters of the city, happily ſome great breaches V. 26,27. being made in the walls, for which it is ſaid they ſmote it. The king of Moab deſperately attempted with 700 men to come forth on that ſide where the Edomites were, but could not, then he took his eldeſt ſonne, and ſacrificed him uppon the wall, which being ſeen, there was great indignation againſt the Iſraelites, ſo that they preſently departed. The king of Moab when all other meanes failed him, ſought to move his God to help him by offering the deareſt ſacrifice that he could, which the Iſraelites ſeeing, compaſſionated him ſo farre, that they could not goe forth on in the ſiege, but immediately broke it up.

Lyra.

Joſephus firſt broached it, and is followed by Theodoret, Toſtatus, and favoured by the Septuagint, where it is, there was great repentance in Iſrael, inſtead of great indignation.

This ſaith Lyra, is the common expoſition, but he rejecteth it becauſe they ſought the deſtruction of the king of Moab, and his poſterity, therefore ſeeing his eldeſt ſon ſacrificed, they would rather have bin animated to hold on the ſiege, conceiving that ſhortly the king, and city, and all would come into their power, their caſe appearing hereby to be deſperate, if there had been no other reaſon of their now departing. And they might have been the more exaſperated to revenge for this groſſe idolatry, then moved to deſiſt from aſſaulting the city. Wherefore he rather followeth, R. Solomon ſaying, that the king of Moab asked his prophets, whereby the Iſraelites came into ſo great favour with God, that they obtained miraculouſly, ſo many famous victories? they ſaid, that Abraham their father in obedience unto him ſacrificed his only ſonne, which he ſo highly accepted of, that ever ſince his favour was ſingularly to his poſterity.

The king hearing this immediatly ſacrificed his ſonne, and then the Angel, which was ſet over Moab, put the Lord in minde of as great wickedneſſe done by the Iſraelites, in that they ſacrificed their ſonnes and daughters unto devils, as is complained, Pſ. 104. or 105. and for this the Lord ſent a plague into the campe of Iſrael, whereby many being deſtroyed they were forced to depart, for it is not ſaid, as in the vulgar Latin, there was great indignation in Iſrael, but Hebr. againſt Iſrael, ſo

Lyra. Iunius ſaith, that the kings ſonne being offered, the Edomites were moved with indignation againſt Iſrael, as the cauſe, and ſo falling out with them departed, and then the Iſraelites, their forces being by this means weakned departed, as unable to prevail any further. Martyr ſaith, that ſome think the king of Edoms ſon is meant, whom the king of Moab having taken ſacrificed; others, that the king of Moabs ſonne being taken by the king of Edom, was thus ſerved by him. But to paſſe theſe over as frivolous conjectures, that which he hath laſt, arrideth me moſt, there was great indignation upon Iſrael, they being likewiſe ſuperſtitious would not proceed in the ſiege any further, as thinking, that if they ſhould, ſo great a ſacrifice being offered, it would coſt them dear; but others in the army not being hereby moved, were filled with wrath againſt them for this their fear, and ſo being diſunited in their affections; they disbanded and went away, thus through their own default looſing the opportunity of doing all to the Moabites, which was propheſied, and of reducing them to their former tributary condition. And this, that they were moved at the ſight of ſuch a ſacrifice, is not improbable, conſidering that it was an errour, which overſpread many nations, that the Gods muſt be pacified, and help of them is obtained, when things be moſt deſperate by humane ſacrifice. The occaſion whereof might firſt be Gods cõmanding Abraham to ſacrifice his ſon, then the Oracle of Apollo being conſulted with, when a great plague raged amongſt the Lacedemonians, how it might be made to ceaſe, anſwered, if a virgin of noble condition were ſacrificed, and likewiſe to the Phereans. Polyxena alſo the daughter of Priamus was ſacrificed, and Iphigenia the daughter of Agememnon. If any ſhall wonder why God would ſuffer any good event to follow upon ſuch an abomination, as here the ſiege to be broken up, ſeeing this tended to confirm men more in their horrible idolatry, it is anſwered, that none are moved hereby, but they that are given over to ſtrong deluſions to beleeve lies, becauſe they obeyed not the truth. For others are not wrought upon by ſignes, unleſſe the thing to confirm which they are ſhewed, be faith and adhering to the true God, and worſhipping him in that way, which he hath appointed. To what god this king offered his ſon, it is not ſaid, ſome, Rabbins think to the true, but ours, to his idol Chamos, or the Sunne.

Deut. 13.

CHAP. IIII.

HEre other miracles wrought by Eliſhah alſo are ſet forth, to prove his God to be the onely true God, as the neceſſity of thoſe times and of the eſtate of Iſrael being drowned in idolatry eſpecially required. And firſt, the widow of a certain prophet being left in debt, ſeeking unto him had her oyl encreaſed to ſo great a quantity, that ſhe therewith both paid her debts, and lived with her children upon the reſidue; a like miracle unto which, had been wrought before by Elijah for a widow in Sareptah. The Prophet, whoſe widow this was, is thought by the Rabbins to be Obadiah, who had fed 100. prophets, hiding them in caves from the fury of Iezabel, by which means he ſpent his eſtate, & became indebted to Ioram the king, ſteward to whoſe father he had been. Thus alſo Ioſephus, whom Theodoret followeth, and Procopius, and Comeſtor, &c. But this is moſt improbable, ſeeing Obadiah was none of the ſonnes of the prophets, as this man is here called, but of another condition, viz. a noble man, that was a benefactour to the Lords prophets, and therefore not likely by ſo ſmall expences, as by feeding ſparingly 100. prophets with bread and water a certain time, to be brought in debt. It muſt then ſuffice us to know onely, that ſhe was the widow of a prophet, and not in particular who this prophet was. But what moved her to ſeek to Eliſhah in this her ſtreight? Anſw. She had heard, what he had done for the whole army in their neceſſitie, and therefore ſhe beleeved, that he could help her in her need, and in this confidence, becauſe her husband alſo was well known unto him, and approved of by him, and of the ſame calling with himſelfe; for which ſhe hoped, that he would be willing, ſhe came to lay her caſe open unto him thus; The creditour is come to take my two ſons for ſervants. Here was a man that feared God, and a prophet, and yet died in debt, not leaving wherewithall to pay it, ſo that it is not alwayes a badge of the wicked to borrow and not to pay again. For into ſuch a caſe the beſt may fall by worldly croſſes, or by the iniquity of the times, through oppreſſions of perſecuting tyrants againſt them, whereby their eſtates are weakned. But if any by ſpending in prodigality and exceſſe, or by negligence and improvidence commeth to decay, ſo as that the creditour cannot be paid, he may juſtly be branded for wicked, and much more, if any fraudulently conceal their goods, or hide themſelves to defeat him of his due. For the law of debts, if any man ow'd ſo much, that he was not able to pay it, he was taken for a ſervant by the creditour, both he and his children, the ground whereof ſeemeth to be, Exod. 22. 3. where it is ordained, that he, who had ſtoln and had not wherewithall to make reſtitution, ſhould be ſold, that this debt might be paid; and *Levit.*25.39. where mention is made of an Hebrew indebted, that ſelleth himſelf. From hence it was gathered, that this was one way of paying debts, and in caſe a man indebted would not voluntarily do this, he was ſold to be a ſervant, or made to ſerve the creditour in way of ſatisfaction, and becauſe as the condition of the father is, ſuch is the condition of the children, when the father was made a ſervant to any man, his children were his ſervants alſo, the creditour took not onely the father, but alſo his children, as appeareth by the parable, *Matth.*18.25. In like manner at this time when the father was dead, the creditour came to take the debtours children. But the law of the Lord in this caſe favoured ſo much the Iſraelites, that if they could after this pay, they ſhould be freed again, if not, yet in the year of jubilee (which was every ſeventh) without paying, and in the mean ſeaſon they muſt be well entreated. Martyr here amplifieth this of debters, by bringing in the lawes of other nations, as of the twelve tables of the Romans, whereby liberty was given to the debter by the Iudges, before whom he was brought for thirty dayes, and if in that time he could not or would not pay, then he was delivered bound to his creditour, who compelled him to ſerve him by hard labour. But this cauſing ſedition amongſt the people, it was decreed afterwards, that the debter ſhould ſatisfie his creditours with all his goods, which if he would not or uſed fraud, then he was committed to priſon till paiment was made.

Aul.Gellius lib. 20.c.1.

Touching the preſent hiſtory, this widow was much grieved, that her ſonnes ſhould be taken for ſervants, becauſe haply the creditour who came to take them, was cruell, and would not uſe them according to the law of God, which was little regarded in thoſe idolatrous times, and therefore ſhe ſought to the prophet, who having not of his own wherewith to help her, enquired, what ſhe had towards the paying of her debts, intimating, that if ſhe had any thing to the valew, ſhe ſhould ſell and pay. But hearing that ſhe had onely a little oyl, which was of daily uſe in thoſe times, either for food, or to anoint the body, (the vulgar Latin hath it, parum oile quo ungar) he willed her to borrow many veſſels, and then being in her houſe and the doors ſhut to her, to pour out the oyle, and not that ſo famous a miracle, able to convert many to the true God ſhould be concealed, but with the greater admiration made known by her borrowing of veſſels, ſelling the oyl out, and paying the creditour. For if there had been any intention that it ſhould not be known, the Lord could either have miraculouſly furniſhed her with veſſels, and not have ſent her about to borrow, or elſe with money, this meanes not being uſed. Lyra ſaith, that when miracles are wrought to confirm and comfort many, they were done publikely, but when for the comfort of ſome one, privately, as when Ieſus raiſed the daughter of Iairus he ſuffered very few to be preſent. According to ſome, he willed her to ſhut out others from ſeeing this miracle for their unbeliefe, that it might be no hinderance hereunto, for it is ſaid of Chriſt, that he would do no great matters becauſe of their unbeliefe.

Lyra.

The widowes oyle being thus miraculouſly increaſed, the prophet biddeth her to ſell ſo much as would pay the creditour, and live of the reſt; teaching that debts muſt be paid, although he to whom be rich, and the debter poore, and when hee hath paid, hath litle or nothing left; for it is by Gods providence, that ſome are rich, and ſome poor, neither may the poor take or withhold any thing from the rich, which is his; but deale juſtly with every one, and if in ſo doing he be deſtitute of means, he muſt remember that he hath ſtill a father to provide for him, that will not ſuffer ſuch as fear him to want any thing that is good, and therefore truſt in him, and cry to him, who feedeth the very ravens that cry unto him. In that, ſomewhat was left for her and her children to live upon, who was the widow of a Prophet; it ſerved to ſhew in ſpeciall, that the widowes and children of faithfull Miniſters of Gods word, are not to be ſuffered to want for their fathers ſake, but to be provided for by thoſe, that have power in the place where they lived, and miniſtred ſpirituall things.

V.8.
P.Martyr.

Moreover it fell out upon a certain day, that as Eliſhah paſſed to Shunem, there was a great woman, that ſtayed him to eat bread therefore as he paſſed that way, &c.] Shunem, ſaith Martyr, was in the tribe of Iſſachar on the Eaſt ſide of mount Carmel, the dwelling place of Eliſhah, and therefore as he went out to teach others, and to confirm them in the truth, and to viſit the colledges of the Prophets, over which he was the ſuperintendent, or to the king of Iſraels court, where it ſeemeth by that which here followeth, that now he was gracious, he often paſſed through this city. It was 16 miles from Carmel. And R. Solomon ſaith, that this woman was daughter to the ſiſter of Abiſhag the Shunamite, whom David took for his concubine in his old age, but this is to be taken rather for a bold conjecture upon a ſlender ground then for a matter of truth. And much more to be ſlighted even as ridiculous is that of his, that ſhe knew Eliſhah to be an holy man, becauſe no flies would come to the diſhes, of which he ate; neither was there any uncleanneſſ upon his table, as Lyra addeth. It is more probable, that ſhe gathered this from his holy carriage and holy ſpeeches, which came from his mouth, and happily ſhee had heard ſomewhat of his miracles, although Martyr thinketh otherwiſe; but how they ſhould be hid from her being one of ſuch quality, and frequented by ſtrangers, I cannot ſee. Therefore ſhe was deſirous, that in his travaile he might alwayes be entertained in her houſe, moving her husband to this end, that he might have a chamber made him, and furniſhed. Being a woman of great wealth ſhe paſſed not for the coſt, and being great in vertue, as the Chald. underſtands her greatneſſe. Shee deſired as oft, as might be, to uſe hoſpitality towards ſo holy a ſervant of God, being aſſured, that this was good and acceptable before him. And if he were thus accommodated with a private chamber, where he might not be troubled with other company, ſhe thought, that he would the rather be induced to come often thither, and ſhee moved her husband in this matter as her head, ſhewing that ſhee thought a wife might not doe any ſuch act without her husbands conſent, ſo a chamber was prepared for him, with his allowance. Eliſhah deſirous to ſhew thankfulneſſe for this kindneſſe cauſed his ſervannt Gehezi to call the Shunamite unto him one day above the reſt, when he had retired himſelfe thither and when ſhe was come to the door, as is moſt probable, for ſo it is expreſſed, v. 15. that at the next calling ſhee came no further; he ſaid to Gehezi, which he would not have done, if ſhe had been in the chamber, tell her, behold thou haſt been carefull for us, what wilt thou, that I doe now for thee, &c.] Her modeſty was ſuch, that ſhee would not enter into the bed-chamber of a man whileſt he was there, becauſe we muſt eſchue not only evill, but all appearance of evill. The prophet thought to gratifie her by ſpeaking to the King or Captain for her, becauſe ſince his miraculous ſupplying of the kings army with water, in their greateſt need, he was in great grace with him. But ſhee anſwered, [I dwell in the midſt of my people.] That is, ſaith Lyra, I live amongſt none but friends, who doe me no injury, ſo that I have no need of the Kings or Captains help againſt any. Martyr addeth, if I had need, I have friends and kinsfolks of good rank and quality, that would be ready to ſpeak for me, and he obſerveth it, as a ſingular providence of God over her and her husband, that dwelling in an idolatrous kingdome, they were ſo free from injuries, they being ſo godly, neither did Eliſhah think it could have been ſo, which cauſed him to make this offer. As evill as the times were, it is to be conceived, that ſome whole cities cleaved to the truth, eth it after R. Solomon, both a ſonne and life is promiſed her within the compaſſe of a year. But it is not neceſſary to expound theſe words, according to the time of life, of her living , becauſe that is implyed in the promiſe , ſeeing otherwiſe ſhe could not have embraced a ſonne. She being much affected with this joyfull news, anſwe-red, Nay my Lord, do not lye unto thy handmaid, the Hebrew word here uſed, ſaith Lyra, ſignifieth either to lye, or to fail, and R. Solomon turneth it fail, it being meant, let me not be illuded by having a ſonne, and then loſing him ſoon again , but when I have brought him forth , let not his life fail , whereby I ſhould have more ſorrow by loſing him, then joy in bringing him forth , and this is favoured by that, which ſhe ſaid by way of challenge to Eliſhah after his death, *v.*8. The prophet in promiceived ſo, that ſhe brought forth at the ſame ſeaſon of the year , at the very time concerning which he ſpake unto her. But after a while the childe died, at which his mother being greatly troubled , laid him upon Eliſhah his bed, and haſtened to vehement heat of that time ſmiting his head , for it is ſaid , that he went into the field to his father , being with the reapers, and then cried out , my head , my head.

It was therefore harveſt time , and then commonly it was exceeding hot, and did ſtrike not onely children , but ſometimes men, as Manaſſeh the husband of Iudith, who is ſaid to have died at ſuch a time of like grief. Iudith 8. 2. For her carrying P.Martyr. of the childe up into Eliſhah his chamber and ſhutting him in there, Martyr ſaith, it was done to conceal his death from the family , that there might be no trouble about it, and it ſeemeth , that it was kept ſo cloſe , that her husband knew not of it, ſeeing he would have ſtayed her from going to the man of God , and enquired the cauſe, as being ignorant of it , v. 23. And this ſhewed the great confidence, which ſhe had of his being revived by Eliſhah, neither was ſhe herein without all ground, ſeeing Elijah had lately done a like miracle upon the ſonne of the widow of Sareptah, 1 *King.*17. 21. partly therefore to prevent ſorrow in ſome, and partly detraction in others, who if they had known it, would have been ready to mock at the benefit obtained by Eliſhah, which ſo ſoon vaniſhed again , ſhe concealed it, till ſhe had been with him for help in this her diſtreſſe, Toſtatus ſaith, that ſhe bid him, that her hus[illegible]d might not know of it, leaſt he ſhould binder her from going through his unbel[illegible]. Having therefore obtained of her husband a ſervant, and an aſſe for the journey, ſhee haſtened to Carmel, being as was ſaid before, 16 miles off, and Adrichomius makes it 8 or 9 hours journey upon a ſwift going horſe, which cannot be, ſeeing ſhe ſpake of it, as one that would goe and return ſpeedily again, yea, it being in the afternoon, when ſhe went out, and not upon an horſe, but a ſlow going aſſe; if it had been ſo farre off, ſhee could not have gone thither that night, whereas it is moſt probable, that ſhe both went and returned, although very late. Her husband wondring at her haſt, asked why ſhe would goe to the man of V. 23.

God at that time, it being neither new moon, nor Sabbath, Theſe times he named, becauſe religious perſons uſed then, ſome to go to the Prophets, where they taught the word of God, and ſome to the Synagogues, and it implyeth, that ſhe had uſed to goe alſo in times paſt, and yet not upon the very day, when it was ſo farre off, and the travaile ſtood not with the reſt of a Sabbath, but the day before, returning home the day after. She anſwered not to his queſtion, but in one word, peace, which Toſtatus rendreth, vale, as being unwilling to diſcloſe the matter unto him, or to delay any time. It was a word uſuall in ſalutations, a wiſhing of good to the person ſpoken to, and therefore no cauſe to enquire here as Martyr doth, whether ſhe lyed unto him. The vulgar Latin rendreth it, [I will goe] very untruly and unbeſeeming ſo godly a woman, who would doe nothing without her husbands conſent, as being her head; for which cauſe ſhe asked leave of him, neither did he deny, but delay her, and ſo with his leave ſhe went on her journy. And that ſhe might come the ſooner to Eliſhah, ſhe haſtened her ſervant. Lead and goe, and make no V. 24. ſtay for me in riding, unleſſe I bid thee. The vulgar Latin, mina & propera, ne mihi moram facias in eundo ſed hoc age, quod præcipio tibi. Martyr for theſe words, in riding] that I may get up or ride, and indeed the word may be indifferently expounded both wayes. But whereas ſome upon this ground, as Martyr hath it, ſay that P. Martyr.
the woman followed the ſervant on foot, ſending him away with the aſſe before to find out Eliſhah, and to certifie him of her coming, commanding him not to ſtay for her, unleſſe ſhe ſpake unto him; and ſome, that the woman riding, the ſervant followed on foot, to beat the aſſe forward, and this ſhe bad him not to forbeare to doe, as thinking that ſhe could not endure to ride ſo faſt, unleſſe ſhe ſpake unto him. (For both theſe he ſaith, are brought by D. Kimhi, and the firſt followed by the Chald. paraphraſt.) I cannot ſee how that can ſtand, becauſe if ſhee had gone a foot, the way being ſo long, he ſhould ſoon have been ſo farre from her, that ſhee could not ſpeak unto him to ſtay, though ſhe would, neither would the ordering of the journy thus have furthered, but hindered and delayed her much in going, neither was it ſeemly for a woman of her condition to travell on foot through that deſolate way alone; neither is it likely, that the ſervant went a foot, for this would not have made for expedition, neither doth the word agree whether it be rendred, that I may get up, or in riding, according to Iunius; for if ſhe bad him haſten in riding, he was not a-foot, neither if ſhe bad him not ſtay for her to get up; ſeeing this implyeth, that ſhe went not up at the firſt; and therefore if he rod not neither, the aſſe went empty, and ſo he could not drive the beaſt with her upon his back with the moſt celerity, to ſay nothing of the word [lead and goe] implying that he lead the way, and therefore could not follow on foot to drive. It is moſt probable therefore, that either they rod both upon the aſſe, and in putting on as faſt as he could, ſhe would not that any reſpect ſhould be had of her becauſe of the haſt, or although no mention be made but of one aſſe, yet ſhe had happily one ready alwayes in the ſtable to uſe, when ſhe pleaſed, and would have a ſervant with another aſſe to come and ride with her, and to lead the way.

She went therefore and came to the man of God to mount Carmel, &c.] That is, V. 25.

And ſhe ſaid thus, that ſhe might not be put off by an interloquutour, as fearing, that thus ſhee ſhould receive no good according to the earneſt deſire of her ſoule.

V. 27. Then ſhe came to the man of God and held him by the feet, but Gehazi came to put her away, &c.] The women, which came to ſeek Chriſt at his ſepulcher, when they met him, did likewiſe hold his feet and worſhip him, Matth. 28.9. ſo this Shunamite fell down at Eliſhah his feet holding them, and happily kiſſing them for reverence, as another woman did the feet of Chriſt at another time, when ſhe was full of ſorrow, as this woman now was. And this was by Eliſhah now permitted, becauſe ſhe was tranſported with paſſion, as he perceived, although the cauſe was yet hidden from him, but not to give example to others, to doe likewiſe. Gehazi thinking it an indigne thing, that ſo great a woman ſhould thus humble her ſelfe to P.Martyr. his maſter, according to ſome, or that a woman ſhould come ſo near him and em- Lyra. brace him, which he knew that his chaſt maſter liked not of, according to others, began to put her away, which Eliſhah forbad him to do, becauſe ſhe did thus, being inwardly troubled for ſome grievous thing, which had befalne her; by her thus lay- Pellican. ing hold on his feet, ſaith Pellican, ſhewing that ſhe would not let him go, but the benefit being firſt obtained by his prayers, which ſhe ſo earneſtly deſired. Eliſhah now expecting to hear what was the matter, ſhe did not plainly open her caſe, but ſpake ſo as that it might well be perceived, ſaying, Did not I deſire a ſonne of my Lord, and V. 28. did I not ſay, deceive me not? The Prophet preſently underſtanding the caſe, ſent V. 29. Gehazi away in haſt with his ſtaffe to be laid upon the face of the child, bidding him for the more expedition to gird his loynes, and to ſalute no man by the way, to avoid all occaſion of delay, as Chriſt afterwards ſaid unto his Diſciples, when he ſent them out to preach the Goſpell, Luke 10.4. But it may ſeem ſtrange, that the Prophet ſhould ſend his man to doe ſuch a miracle with his ſtaffe. Indeed by the rod of Moſes great things were done, but it was in his own hand, and not in the hand of ano- Junius. ther. He ſent him with his ſtaffe, ſaith Iunius, as a ſigne of his preſence in ſpirit, praying for the child for the ſtrengthening of his faith, when he applyed it, and the reaſon why it took not effect, was the womans importunity with the Prophet to goe in perſon, not believing otherwiſe that her child could be raiſed up to life, and happily Gehazi his vain glory, ſtaying by the way contrary to the charge given him, to tell ſuch as he met, that he was going with that ſtaffe to raiſe up a child that was dead, according to ſome Rabbins. And indeed it ſeemeth that it was through ſome fault in others, that it took not effect, becauſe Eliſhah being a prophet would not certainly uſe a means to work a miracle, unleſſe he knew, that it was effectual. Yet after that he had ſent away Gehazi, it ſeemeth alſo, that he ſuſpected the validity of it, and therefore followed with the Shunamite, before that his man returned; but this ſuſpition probably aroſe, not for that he now thought this means inſufficient, which he thought not before, but that it might be fruſtrated by the evill managing of Gehazi, or through want of faith in her, whom it moſt nearly concerned. It would I ſuppoſe have taken effect, if the mother had believed it, but ſhee having no faith in this means, but in the prophets own act, it wrought nothing. Martyr thinketh, that Eliſhah erred in ſending his man with his ſtaffe, as doing it of his own minde, not by divine inſpiration, whereby he was moved afterwards, when he came, where the dead childe was; but to me it ſeemeth not ſafe, to impeach any action done by ſo great a prophet, in a propheticall way. Other notions he hath here touching ſalutations at large, becauſe Gehazi is bidden to ſalute no man by the way, which I omit, as more proper to the inſtruction given by Chriſt to his Apoſtles, when he ſent them forth, bidding them to ſalute the houſe, to which they ſhould come. Touching the charge given to Gehazi, not to ſalute any in the way, he ſaith rightly, that it was given him to keep his minde intent onely to the great work, about which he was ſent.

Eliſhah being importuned by the Shunamite, who ſware that ſhe would not leave holding him by the feet till he went himſelf with her, yielded ſoon to go, and meeting his ſervant by the way, and hearing, that his ſtaffe had been applied without effect, he went into the chamber, and prayed, and lay upon the dead body, his face to the face thereof, &c. and thus it firſt began to be warm, then at his ſecond ſtretching of himſelf it ſneezed, and opened the eyes, as one awaked out of a ſleep. The like unto which, becauſe it was done before by Elijah, 1. King. 17. 21. I ſpare to make any further expoſition here upon it. Onely whereas Elijah ſtretched himſelf three times upon the dead, Eliſhah did it but twice, it may be underſtood, as ſerving to confirm the promiſe before going, that the ſpirit of Elijah ſhould be doubled upon Eliſhah, for by reaſon of the ſpirit of power to do miracles in a greater meaſure in him, then in Elijah, he ſooner wrought this great work. And whereas Eliſhah did one thing ſingular, that Elijah did not, viz. cauſe his ſtaffe firſt to be uſed, and this being without effect, came himſelf and revived the dead, it was hereby allegorically ſignified, that the law was uſed before the coming of Chriſt, to revive men dead in ſinne by doing it in vain, but afterwards Chriſt came with his ſpirit, and gave life unto them that beleeve. And the law, ſaith Martyr, was aptly ſet forth by a ſtaffe, which ſupporteth and beateth. And as Eliſhah revived this childe by applying his own mouth to his, and eyes to his eyes, &c. ſo Chriſt giveth life to the faithfull by condeſcending to be made like unto us in his incarnation. For the childes being revived by degrees, firſt waxing warm, ſecondly ſneezing ſeven times and opening his eyes, like unto which was the reſtoring of that blinde man to his ſight, who firſt ſaw dimly men walking like trees, then all things plainly. This was not done, becauſe it was hard with God to revive the dead, but to make the prophet continue in prayer: for as Toſtatus noteth, both Eliſhah and Elijah did great and hard works by the ſpirit preſently, when they were in publike, that the faith of the ſpectatours might without delay be confirmed, but in private they both were longer in doing to exerciſe their own faith, and to ſhew the property of it to be to perſevere in praying and expecting, till God pleaſeth to anſwer. Moreover, the work now to be done, was greater then any before, viz. to raiſe the dead, and therefore wrought with more difficulty and by degrees, and hereby was myſtically ſhewed, how hard it is to raiſe one dead in ſinne, and that about this, much labour muſt be beſtowed, both before any life beginneth to come, and after it is begun, that it may encreaſe, and more effects of it may be ſhewed forth, as in this childe reviving again. And laſtly, the prophets applying of his mouth to the childe, &c. ſerved to ſhew, how the preacher ſhould condeſcend to the weakneſſe of every one, that he might raiſe him from the death of ſinne, to the life of righteouſneſſe, as St. Paul became all things to all men, that he might win ſome, 1 Cor. 9. 21. That is, bearing with every one as much as he might, the better to inſinuate into him for his converſion and ſalvation. The childe being thus revived, the mother was called, and having bowed her ſelf to the ground (in way of thankfulneſſe) ſhe took him and went away (without doubt) very joyfull.

Patriarks travels.

And Elijah returned to Gilgal, but there was a famine in the land, &c.] From Shunem to Gilgal are 36. miles. To this place he went ſay ſome, when he had done that great miracle of raiſing the dead, to decline the praiſe, and thanks, and admiration of the father, and friends, and neighbours, who hearing of it, would doubtleſſe be ready to come about him. But becauſe they ſuffered by famine then in Gilgal, a place where many ſonnes of the prophets lived under his government, it is rather to be thought, that he went to comfort and help them in this their neceſſity. Or, there being four places of ſtudents in divinity, Carmel, Bethel, Gilgal and Iericho, he according to his wonted manner, having been at the other three before, went now of force to Gilgal to viſit the Colledge there, and to provide for their good.

V. 39. Therefore ſeeing the great want, in which they were, he cauſed a great pot to be
V. 40. ſet on to make pottage for them, and when hearbs were gathered and ſhred and and put unwittingly into the pot which were unwholeſome, and made the pottage to have ſuch an ill taſte, that they could not eat thereof, yea they cried out, that death was in the pot, he made it good again by putting meal into it. The great

P. Martyr. ſlender diet they were content. The gourds, which were gathered unwittingly to be put into the pot, were a drug uſed to purge choller and phlegme, but being taken cauſed great pain in the ſtomack, the liver, and the whole body, ſaith Martyr, according to Gallen and Dioſcorides. There is a kinde of gourds, which is uſuall for the pot, but theſe were wilde and bitter, called, therefore by the Greeks, τὸ λυπη ἀγρία or πικρα. Some of the pottage thus made being taken out, and the evil perceived, meal was by the prophet put into the pot, into which, as is to be conceived the pottage taken out to be eaten, was firſt put again, that it might altogether be healed. Which was not done through any vertue in the meal, but by the ſpirit working hereby, as by an outward ſigne or means, through which vertue Valleſii ſacra came from God to work it. Valleſius ſaith, that wilde gourds are ſo pernicious, Philoſophia. that if above the weight of four half pence be taken, although prepared, they cauſe exceſſive purging, and excoriation, and death, wherefore a little meal could not cure it naturally, but there was herein a ſupernaturall work. Yet he ſaith, that becauſe glutinous and thickening things are a means to cure this evill quality, meal properly might be uſed to help in this caſe, but to work ſuch an effect, there muſt be a proportionable quantity, whereas here was but a little put into a great pot full, and therefore could not do it without a miracle. For the time, when this famine was, it is thought by ſome to be that of ſeven yeares, ſpoken of chap. 8. 1. but if that were now begun, when Eliſhah raiſed the Shunamites ſon to life, how could he fore-tell her of it afterwards, as he did chap. 8. 1. It was then more probably a time of ſcarcity onely about thoſe parts, for a little time, there being food elſewhere, as appeareth by the 20. loaves, which one is ſaid by and by v. 42. to have brought unto the prophet. Whereas it is ſaid, v. 38. The ſonnes of the Prophets

By others, death is in the pot, when a man teacheth for divine doctrine and therefore he, that teacheth any other thing, muſt be accurſed, Gal. 1. 8. but by the meal of Gods word. And when men through their ignorances endure much bitterneſſe and miſery, Chriſt is the grain of whom meal is made to V. 42. ſweeten all again, Rom. 5. 1. becauſe through him we have peace with God, and

V. 43. joy in tribulation. And hitherto, one miracle in feeding the hungry, now followeth Lyra. another, v. 42, 43. A man from Baalſhaliſha bringing to Eliſhah 20. loaves of barley, of his firſt fruits, he fed therewith 100. men, and ſomewhat ſtill remained, when as his ſervant thought, that they were nothing to ſet before ſo many; becauſe, as Lyra hath it, they were little, and moſt probably would not ordinarily have ſufficed above 20. men. Of their ſmalneſſe this is proof enough, that one man brought them and eares of ripe corn in his garment or ſcrip, as Ierom turneth it, and that the prophets ſervant thought it a ſhame to ſet them before ſo many men. Barley loaves are brought, becauſe that grain was ripe firſt in thoſe parts. Baalſhaliſha, from whence hee came, was in the tribe of Benjamin, according to Iunius, the place, that Saul went through in looking for his fathers aſſes, 1 *Sam.*9.4. but Adrichomius placeth it in Ephraim, and the plains of Sharon, which was famous for fruitfulneſſe. This man certainly was godly, and therefore the worſhip of God being perverted at Ieruſalem, and turned into idolatry, ſo that it was not fit to bring in the firſt fruits thither, and to the temple, as they ought otherwiſe to have done, he brought his to Eliſhah the man of God, Yet Toſtatus will not have them ſuch firſt fruits, as belonged to the prieſts, but ſuch as uſed to be preſented to eminent men for honours ſake, which I ſhall believe, when I finde in any place of ſcripture any ſuch firſt fruits ſpoken of. When the man of God would have theſe loaves ſet before 100. men, and his ſervant ſpake againſt it as being too little to ſatisfie ſo many, he urged him yet to do it, ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord, they ſhall all eat, and there ſhall remain. God at that inſtant moſt probably revealed unto him by his ſpirit, that he would work this miracle at his deſire. For although no mention be here made of his bleſſing the bread by his prayer, yet Theodoret ſpeaketh of it, as done immediatly before the diſtributing of the bread amongſt them. Wherefore it is to be conceived, that firſt he prayed for this bleſſing, and then diſtributed the bread amongſt them. And herein Eliſhah did notably figure out that, which was afterwards to be done by our Saviour Chriſt, viz. his feeding 5000. with a fewer number of loaves and fiſhes, as hee was farre more full of the ſpirit then Eliſhah. Myſtically, ſaith Rabanus, by the man bringing from Baalſhaliſhah 10. loaves, &c. underſtand one holding the true faith of the Trinity, becauſe Baalſhaliſhah ſignifieth the Lord three, who by teaching the old teſtament, bringeth loaves, and by teaching the new, ears of new corn, of which all feed to ſanctification, and yet through the bleſſing of that prophet, there remaineth to feed others.

Rabanus,

CHAP. V.

NAaman the Captain of the army of the King of Syria was a great man with his lord: for by him had the Lord given to Syria deliverance*, &c.] As Elijah had wrought one miracle upon a heathen womans meal and oyl, ſo Eliſhah here upon a heathen mans body, infected with the leproſy, of which, ſee what it is Levit. 13. and thus whileſt religion went down in Iſrael, idolatry prevailing, it was ſet up by ſome amongſt the heathen, idolatry being abandoned. Whereas it is ſaid, that by him deliverance or ſaving was given to Syria, the Rabbins ſay, that it is thus ſpoken, becauſe he ſhot the arrow wherewith Ahab was ſlain, which is not improbable, or at the leaſt, that under his conduct, that battell was fought, which freed Syria from all danger of invaſion by Iſrael; for which cauſe the king had him in great eſtimation. But Syria thus prevailed onely for the ſinnes of Iſrael, through Gods juſt judgement giving ſtrength and power to Naaman againſt them for their puniſhment. If it be demanded, whether Naaman were endued with grace, becauſe it is ſaid, that God by him gave deliverance to Syria? Martyr anſwereth, it is not probable that he had any true ſaving grace yet, becauſe there is nothing ſaid to intimate it, and the country of which he was, lay under the great ſinne of idolatry generally, and he might have added, that ſomewhat is ſaid, intimating him formerly to have been an idolater, viz. his reſolving after his healing, to ſacrifice to none other but to the God of Iſrael, and his ſcornfull contempt at the firſt of the meſſage ſent to him by Eliſhah. It is to be underſtood therefore, that God wrought not by Naaman for his grace, but becauſe to deliver a people in any great danger, ſome man muſt be made an ſtrnment, and commonly it hath bin ſuch an one as hath excelled in military vertue, the Lord to commend even this as a good thing to all Captains and military men choſe Naaman, who excelled herein, as he formerly ſaved Iabeſh, Gilead by Saul, and Italy by Marius from the Cymbrians, and Rome by Fabius from the Carthaginans, and Hannibal a moſt powerfull enemy. For the time, Pellican.

ſaying, that God by him gave deliverance to Syria, it is intimated that when any man of valour prevaileth, he is but the inſtrument, and the power is from God alone; that we may look up to him, and learn to love and feare, and put our truſt in him, and not in any mortall man.

For the time when Naaman came to Eliſha, one will not have it, as it is ſet down in order, becauſe ch. 8. 4. the king of Iſrael is ſaid to have talked with Gehazi about the geſts of Eliſha, which cannot be thought to have been done after this, but before it; ſeeing Gehazi was a leper alwayes after, and with ſuch none converſed; but they were forced to live ſeparate, for feare of infecting others. He therefore placeth all the miracles, ch. 6. and 7. and Hazael his coming to Eliſhah for his Lord Benhadad, ch. 8. before this, determining the king of Syria here ſpoken of to be Hazael, and that Benhadad was dead before this.

But this reaſon ſeemeth to me to be too weak to pervert ſo much the order of the ſacred hiſtory, when there is none apparant cauſe; for although lepers were commonly put apart, yet they might upon occaſion come forth with a white wand, and happily the king had ſome occaſion at that time to ſend for Gehazi, and ſo took the opportunity to queſtion with him about his maſters miracles, Serrarius. Serrarius, who is for the ſaid diſorder here, ſaith, that if any man will maintain the order of the hiſtory, he muſt hold that Gehazi repented, after his ſmiting with the leproſie, and ſo was healed again for his particular, although his poſterity was not. But becauſe this is againſt the text, ſaying, the leproſie of Naaman ſhall cleave to thee, and to thy ſeed for ever.] We maintain it not thus, but as hath been already ſaid. V. 2. The means whereby Naaman came to the prophet to bee healed was this; a little maid being taken by the Syrians, as they came out by bands againſt Iſrael, ſerved his wife; and ſeeing her maſter to be a leper, wiſhed that he were with Eliſhah to be healed. If it be demanded how ſhe was brought to this beliefe, that Eliſhah could doe this great miracle, ſeeing there were then many lepers in Iſrael, as our Lord ſaith, Luke 4. and yet he healed none of them? I anſwer, ſhee heard that hee had done greater works, as encreaſing the widowes oyle, and rayſing the dead, &c. and therefore ſhe believed, that he was able to doe this alſo. Now he that heareth this being guided only by the light of nature is ready to ſay, what good luck Naaman had to light upon ſuch a Captive, but we that believe the providence of God to moderate in every thing, muſt ſay, what a providence it was to bring this maid in the Note. way of Naamans ſouldiers, that ſhe ſhould be taken by them, and that ſhee ſhould come to dwell in his houſe, and that ſhe ſhould be moved to ſpeak of ſuch a thing as ſhe had none experience of before, and what a providence it was that Naaman was ſmitten with the leproſie to cauſe him to goe to the prophet, that he might be converted and ſaved, ſo that we ſee God will provide means to accompliſh what he hath preordained touching any man, although it be paſt mans imagination, that we may believe in God, and make uſe of the means as he ſhall bee pleaſed to offer them for the attaining of that which we deſire, as Naaman did; not in regard of his greatneſſe, deſpiſing the ſpeech of his pooreſt ſervant, and ſo as whoſoever doth not, ſhall never attain it.

V. 4. Naaman hearing what the maid ſaid immediately reported it to the king, that with his leave he might goe into the land of Iſrael, which he could not otherwiſe have done, being in ſuch place and authority in that common wealth. The king not only gave him leave, but alſo wrot his letters to the king of Iſrael to heal him, that is, by his great prophet, who lived in his dominion. Wherein Martyr rightly ob- P. Martyr. ſerveth a ſpeciall work of Gods ſpirit in the kings heart alſo, in that he denied not the motion, although he were an idolater, and ſo did vilipend both the true God and his prophets; for God moved his heart ſo, that he gave all approbation and furtherance to the intended voyage. When the letters written by the king of Syria V. 7. came to the hands of the king of Iſrael, he rent his clothes, as accounting them blaſpheamous, ſeeing he aſcribed that power unto man therein, which was proper to God alone, and he feared alſo that he thus wrot only to pick a quarrell with him. Indeed the letters ſeem to come from a proud and imperious ſpirit, ground enough of a quarrel, the words being theſe. When this epiſtle cometh to thee, I have ſent Naaman my ſervant to thee, that thou ſhouldeſt heale him of his leproſie. But conſidering the premiſes that the king of Syria had heard of a prophet within Iorams kingdome that could doe it, there was no cauſe why he ſhould interpret the writing ſo, as being ſent only to pick a quarrell, unleſſe it were for the manner. And yet happily the king of Iſrael did not indeed conceive ſo much of the power that was in Eliſhah to heale, as that litle maid of Naamans, no nor any Prince or Lord about him, nor many in Iſrael; for if they had, ſome or other would have wiſhed their friends that were leprous, to have ſought to Eliſhah for cure alſo. But the king of Syria thinking it to be a thing commonly known in Iſrael, by reaſon of the ſpeech of that Iſraelitiſh captive, wrot ſo curiouſly without mentioning the prophet, whom he meant he ſhould cauſe to doe it, as he reſpected him, or feared his puiſſance; for he doubted not, but according to the maids ſaying, there was one who could do it, and if he would, he could cauſe it to be done; and therefore he would have him by this writing to underſtand, that if it were not done, hee would not take him for his friend, but enemy; and deale with him accordingly. Some think, that the malice of Ioram was ſuch againſt Eliſhah, that though he were put in mind of him, he would not uſe his help or counſell, but ſeeing he once before ſought to him in his need, and ſince that time it ſeemeth, that Eliſhah was gracious with him by his offer made unto the Shunamite, ch. 4. I cannot ſubſcribe to this, but rather attribute the kings aſtoniſhment to his ſimple ignorance, as not conceiving yet by what meanes that might be done, for which the king of Syria wrot; and therefore holding it impoſſible for him or any man in his dominion.

V. 5.
H.B. Patriarkes travels.

But Naaman did not only bring letters, but a great treaſure with him to reward him, that ſhould doe ſo great a work, even ten talents of ſilver, and 6000 pieces of gold, and ten change of garments. Now the Syrian talent was 46. pound, 17. ſhillings, 6 pence, ten talents, 468. pound, 15. ſhillings. The 6000 pieces of gold were 1000 drachmaes, and a drahmah was as much as an Hungarian ducket, that is, of our mony 7 ſhillings 6 pence a piece of gold, then was one ſhilling three pence, and 6000. 315 pound; treaſure enough to give away at the Court, and to the prophets for this favour, and to bear him out like a Prince in his travell with all his train. For he thought that the prophet was greatly to be rewarded by him ſo great a man, and ſuch as the King of Iſrael ſhould imploy to ſend for the prophet, or with him to the prophet, he meant not to let go unrewarded; ſuch is the courteſie even of naturall men towards their benefactours, which ſhould make us aſhamed to be unthankfull for good done to us. And for his travell, being ſo attended much was requiſite, it being from Damaſcus to Samaria 132. miles, and from thence to Iordan 16. and both theſe numbers of miles he doubled, before he came home again.

V. 8.

The tidings of theſe letters being brought to Eliſhah, and how much affrighted the king was, he ſent word that he would have Naaman come to him, that he might know, that there was a prophet in Iſrael, who could do any cure, when the king himſelf could not tell how to get it done. For indeed the king of Syria erred greatly, when thinking, that the king of Iſrael could cauſe the prophet to heal this leproſie by his kingly authority, he wrote unto him to do it, ſeeing howſoever a king can command other things to be done, yet he cannot command that, which is above the power of man, as this was. And therefore neither did he ſend for Eliſhah now or before, when his army was without water, as knowing himſelf in this power to be his inferiour, and therefore unworthy to have Eliſhah come unto him, as the Centurion that came to Chriſt for his ſervant, ſaid that he was unworthy, that he ſhould come under his roof, Mat. 8.

V. 9.

When Naaman came with his traine to Eliſha his houſe, which he had in Samaria, as may be gathered, *Ch.*6.32. he came not out unto him, neither bade him come in, but onely ſent to bid him go and waſh in Iordan ſeven times, and ſo his fleſh ſhould come againe as the fleſh of a childe. This he did not, ſaith Martyr, out of pride, but to avoid the overmuch reverence, which he thought Naaman would be ready to give unto him, that his mind might be intent to God onely, from whom this ſanation ſhould come. But this is not probable, ſeeing after the cure wrought he admitted him to his preſence, *v.*15. when there was more likelihood of this danger. He did thus therefore more probably, both to try his faith, and to make the miracle more illuſtrious, ſeeing the Prophet neither ſeeing him, nor ſpeaking to him, nor touching him, he was yet healed meerely by doing as he ſent Lyra. word unto him. Whereas otherwiſe he might haply have thought, that he was healed by ſome vertue coming from Eliſha, and not have attributed ſo much to Gods power, which being now made ſo apparant might deterre the Syrians from coming againſt Iſrael, which had ſo mighty a God to protect them. Thus alſo Lyra. It was not therefore pride, but great humility in Eliſha out of which he did thus, that nothing might be attributed to him, but all to God, by whom he was alſo directed to doe this, that Naamans pride might be pulled downe, and he by humility and obedience in doing what he was commanded, although ſeeming too weake to produce ſo great an effect, might be prepared to have this miracle V.11,12, wrought upon him. Naaman at the firſt hearing of this waxed wroth, as thinking 13,14. himſelfe mocked, but being better perſwaded by his ſervants, he went and waſhed, and was healed. He imagined another way with himſelfe, that the Prophet would come out and pray for him, and lay his hand upon the leproſie, and by ſuch meanes ſanation might be attained, but in the water of Iordan he could not ſee, how there ſhould be any vertue to doe it, neither could there, but by the working of him, that is Almighty. Thus man ſometimes will preſcribe unto God which way he ſhall helpe him, and if he goeth not that way to work, he deſpaireth.

Note. Whereas we muſt be willing to be ſaved that way which God appointeth, although it may ſeeme fooliſhneſſe unto us. In uttering his choler at Eliſha his anſwer, he ſaid, Are not Abana and Parphar, rivers of Damaſcus, &c. Martyr and Pellican render it Amana, and ſo ſaith Iunius, it is called by Hiſtorians; and ſometime, Adonis; and Parphar, Orontes.

Benjam. Judæus Benjamin in his itinerary ſaith, There is no where ſeen in all the world a citie fruitfull like this citie of Damaſcus, which two rivers falling from mount Hermon, do bleſſe, Amana and Parphar. For the citie lyeth under mount Hermon, and Amana runneth into it, all great mens houſes, and the ſtreets and markets being ſupplied with the water thereof carried by pipes, Parphar runneth by the citie, and hereby the gardens and paradiſes about the city are watered, of which there is great abundance, making it the moſt fruitfull of all other cities. Thus he; and Adrichomius calleth it Abana, or Amana, as he ſaith, it is in Hebrew, but not in any Map that I have ſeen, but onely Abana; he calleth it alſo Aman and Amana, affirming it to be a moſt clear river, and pleaſant. But whereas Benjamin would have this to flow through the city, Adrichomius ſaith, that the other cutteth through the city, and this waſheth upon the Weſt and South thereof. Now the water of theſe rivers being ſo good, Naaman thought it a vain travail to come from them, whoſe waters he had often uſed without any ſuch effect, to waſh in Iordan to be healed. But the ſick wanting skill in phiſick, cannot judge of the operation of the bath preſcribed by the skilfull Phyſitian to heal him, and therefore muſt follow his directions, looking for ſucceſſe out of a confidence in his skill, through Gods bleſſing that preſcribeth, and ſo ought Naaman to have done, as indeed he by and by upon better conſideration did. For his ſervants ſaying unto him [Father, if the prophet had commanded thee Note. ſome great matter, would'ſt thou not have done it? &c.] he went to Iordan, &c. In 1 Pet. 2.18. that they called him father, it intimateth, that he was loving and kinde unto them like a father, to the reproof of all cruell and churliſh maſters like Nabal; and yet if any ſervant be under ſuch, he muſt bear it patiently. But ſuch maſters inſtead of Quot habes ſervos tot hoſtes habes love, get the hatred of their ſervants, whence the proverb did ariſe, Thou haſt as many enemies as thou haſt ſervants. Naamans example, to whom ſo much good redounded from his ſervants, ſhould invite all other maſters to the like humanity towards their ſervants, and not to deſpiſe the counſell of ſervants, or of any the pooreſt and meaneſt, becauſe ſometimes, he that is outwardly deſpicable may conceive P.Martyr. better of a thing, then the greateſt and the wiſeſt. Martyr will have Naaman called father by his ſervants, as he was commonly called for the deliverance, which he had wrought for Syria, parens patriæ, the father of the country, as Ioſeph was called for ſaving his countrey [Abrech] a tender father. But what did his ſervants vants counſell him to do? To think well of the Prophets command, and to follow it, becauſe it was eaſie to be done, and for the effect they doubtleſſe believed, that it would be wrought, becauſe he was a man of God, that commanded him to waſh and be whole, and they had moſt probably heard, that they, who had hitherto followed his directions, had ſucceſſe according to their hearts deſire, as both the army in digging of pits or ditches, and ſuch as brought him ſalt at Iericho to heal the waters, and meal to cure the corrupted pottage. Theſe were faithfull ſervants then, who neither hated their maſter nor flattered him, and therefore are worthy to be followed by all others. If they had not greatly loved, but hated him, they would have held their peace, rather laughing at his proud diſdain, and joying to have him return home again a leper, then perſwading him for his good: if they had been ſycophants, they would have been ready to ſay as he ſaid, and to exaſperate him more againſt the Prophet, who ſleighted ſo much, ſo great a man as he was, as being ruſticall and unable to do any thing for him, or willing to make a mock of him all over Syria, in that he would have him travell ſo farre, to be healed by ſuch weak and ſilly means, as waſhing in common water.

V. 14. Lyra.

Wherefore he went and waſhed in Iordan ſeven times, and his fleſh came again as the fleſh of a little childe.] That is, ſaith Lyra, as the pureſt and cleareſt fleſh of all other, becauſe that is without mixture, whereas the fleſh of others is mixed with the nutriment wherewith the body is nouriſhed. And this ſimilitude is uſed, to ſhew, that this was done in a figure of regeneration by baptiſme, wherein the image of the new man commeth againe, which is in righteouſneſſe and true holineſſe, Epheſ. 4. and to figure out the ſame, the man that was blinde, was ſent to waſh in the pool Siloam; whereupon he was healed. To be regenerated therefore, and to be converted and become as a little childe is all one, and ſuch we muſt be, or elſe we cannot be ſaved. Naamans waſhing ſeven times, ſerved to ſet forth the manifold gifts of the ſpirit, of which they that are regenerate, are made partakers, and not the oftener iterating of baptiſm, as Martyr ſaith. For in theſe two things Naamans waſhing was unlike unto baptiſm; firſt, in that he waſhed ſeven times, baptiſme but once; ſecondly, was healed by waſhing, but juſtification is attained before, and not in waſhing, as Abraham was juſtified and then circumciſed, ſo baptiſme followeth as a ſigne or ſeal of juſtification, not thereby, but by faith before obtained, thus he; but this is to be underſtood of adults, for infants are healed of the foul leproſie of originall ſinne ſet forth by Naamans leproſie in baptiſme, ſeeing they want faith, being onely the ſeed of the faithfull, and ſo having right unto baptiſme, which ſaveth as Noahs Ark, 1 Pet. 3. 21. Faith then juſtifieth and ſaveth by the acceſſion of baptiſme in the adult according to that, he which beleeveth and is baptized ſhall be ſaved, and baptiſme without actuall faith ſaveth in infants coming of faithfull parents, yet they are ſo ſaved as originall ſin, the leproſie of their natures being in baptiſme waſhed away ſpring not up again, as a root of bitterneſſe into actuall and voluntary ſinning. For in this caſe we muſt be renewed by faith and repentance, and ſo we recover juſtice loſt, which baptiſme once received, ſerveth to ſeal up unto us for ever, and therefore is not to be iterated again.

V. 15.

Naaman being thus miraculouſly healed, returneth back to Eliſhah to make profeſſion of the faith, to which he was now turned, and to ſhew his thankfulneſſe: for he ſaid, that he knew now that there was no God in all the earth, but in Iſrael, and he offered him gifts, and urged him to take them, but he refuſed them with an oath. And hereby it appeareth, that Naaman was healed, not onely in body, but in ſoul alſo. Seeing he did both beleeve with his heart. and confeſſe God with his mouth, and after the manner of the truly faithfull, came with an offering, for the great benefit received, to ſhew his thankfulneſſe therefore; as amongſt the ten lepers whom Chriſt cleanſed, one that returned to give thanks is ſpoken of as ſingularly godly. In ſaying, that there was no god in all the earth but in Iſrael, he meant not, that God was concluded within the bounds of that land, for he filleth heaven and earth, but that the God which was worſhipped in Iſrael by Eliſhah, and all that cleaved unto him, as all ought to do, was the only true God, and that the gods worſhipped by other nations, were idols and no gods: for that it is to be underſtood of Eliſhah his God onely, and the God, which had his temple in that land, thus ſaid to be in Iſrael, becauſe there, and not in any other Nation his lawes were taught, and ſacrifices were offered to him, is plaine, becauſe it was that God, by whoſe power Naaman was healed, which neither Ieroboams calves, nor Baal, after whom the great ſort in Iſrael went a whoreing, could have done. But why did Eliſhah refuſe his bleſſing, as he called it? did he by ſo doing teach that it ſhould be unlawfull for the men of God to take any thing towards their maintenance for their paines in their calling? or what other reaſon might there be. For the first cannot hold, becauſe the labourer is ſaid to be worthy of his hire: ſee alſo 1 Cor. 9. Gal. 6.6. It muſt be therefore, becauſe it was and ever ſhall be unlawfull to take a reward for any miraculous healing, according to the charge alſo given by Chriſt to Matth. 8. his Apoſtles, ſaying, Freely ye have received, freely give. Thus Pellican; ſaying alſo, that miracles were done for the glory of God and the ſalvation of men, and not for the increaſe of worldly goods, or to ſatisfie covetouſneſſe. For this were to abuſe the immediate act of God, as if it were purchaſeable by money; as a Phyſicians direction, which is ſo much deteſted before him, that when a certain Scribe would have followed Chriſt to make a gaine of his miraculous ſanations, he rejected him Act. 8. as a crafty foxe: and when Simon Magus would have purchaſed this power for ſuch an end, he was pronounced to be in the gall of bitterneſſe.

P. Martyr. Peter Martyr and others adde, that he refuſed, becauſe he would have Naaman ſtill to fix his minde upon God, and ſeeing how much he was obliged unto him for ſo great a benefit freely conferred upon him, be the more inflamed with his love; and againe, that by this contempt of worldly riches ſhewed by the Prophet, he might be drawne the leſſe to admire them, yea to contemne them alſo in reſpect of things heavenly, which alone he by this meanes plainly ſaw ſatisfied Eliſhah ſo, that he cared not for worldly goods: and laſtly, that he might not be ſcandalized, as he might have been, if Eliſhah had taken his rich rewards offered, for ſo he might have thought that his end was not, but to get worldly gaine by his God, and thus he himſelfe might have reſted in the fruition of outward things, as the higheſt attain- Lyra. able by ſuch as believed in him. Lyra ſaith, that he wold take nothing, that he might ſhew, that he ſought not his things, but the ſaving of him both in ſoule and body. Neither ſhould any man of God in diſpenſing the myſteries of ſalvation ſeeke any other thing, according to that of the Apoſtle, We ſeeke not yours, but you, although 2 Cor. 12.14. he may take maintenance for his labours in the miniſtery to live upon and to pro- 1 Tim. 5.8. vide for his family, as every one is bound to doe. The Apoſtle Paul indeed laboured for his living and preached in ſome places freely, but neither did hee ſo to give us an example, unleſſe it be in the caſe of firſt planting a Church, neither did he totally refraine from taking, for he ſaith, That he robbed ſome Churches to miniſter freely to the Corinthians, that his evill willers, the falſe teachers there might not object covetouſneſſe unto him. And as Paul did, ſo ſaith Martyr, did ſome Waldenſes in ſome part of Poland, which made them to be reputed the true Paſtours, and others that tooke maintenance, bellies. But this was the effect of a blinde zeale in them, ſeeing it is allowed, that he who ſerveth at the altar, ſhould live upon the altar. But if any have living ſufficient of their owne, may ſuch take P. Martyr. maintenance for exerciſing and labouring in their miniſtery? Martyr anſwereth, That if it be ſaid they ſhould not, this were the way to make other miniſters contemptible, that take, and to make pariſhioners not uſed to give their Paſtours maintenance, to thinke more ſtrangely of him, that ſhould come afterwards to take it, wherefore he conceiveth, that ſuch a miniſter ſhall doe beſt to take and give it to the poore; wherein though I aſſent unto him, yet to take it and to diſpoſe of it, as his owne, is not to doe ill (provided, that according to his double meanes he be hoſpitable and charitable) ſeeing it is his hire for his great labours.

V. 17. And Naaman ſaid, And ſhall not I pray thee, two mules loads of earth be given to thy ſervant? for thy ſervant will henceforth offer no ſacrifice to other gods, but to the Lord onely.] The Vulg. lat. As thou wilt, but I beſeech thee. Peter Martyr, Et non Junius. detur quaeſo? Iun. At the leaſt I pray thee, let there be given. And he addeth, that this requeſt, as alſo the next, that God would be mercifull unto him, when his Maſter ſhould bow leaning upon him in the houſe of Rimmon, proceeded from his ignorance, becauſe the true God was to be ſacrificed unto not upon Iſraelitiſh earth, but at his temple in Ieruſalem. Wherefore the Prophet gave him none other anſwer, But goe in peace, meaning that theſe things belonged not to the peace of his conſcience, but rather to the diſquiet thereof, God being hereby provoked. But Lyra juſtifieth Naaman in this his purpoſe of ſacrificing to God out of the peculiar place hereunto appointed, becauſe although the Iſraelites were tied to one place, yet the faithfull amongſt the Gentiles were not, ſeeing the Moſaicall law was not given to them, but to the Iſraelites, as theſe words commonly uſed, when any rite about the worſhip of God was preſcribed, ſpeake unto the children of Iſrael, and ſay unto them, doe ſhew. As Noah then ſacrificed any where before the Law and Abraham, ſo it was lawfull ſtill under the Law for the Gentiles. Whereas he would have earth out of the land of Iſrael to make an Altar for this purpoſe, to which as to the other, the Prophet anſwered nothing but Goe in peace. He asked nothing, but what he might lawfully doe, although not neceſſary, ſeeing he might have reared up an Altar of any other earth, as well as of that, onely he thought the land, where the true God dwelt peculiarly, more holy then any other, and becauſe that herein he had beene healed, he would ſhew a more venerable reſpect unto it. For his ſaying, Goe in peace, to his other requeſt alſo, he hereby ſhewed likewiſe, that he needed no indulgence for it, being alſo lawfull. For he deſired not, that he might be pardoned for diſſembling any idolatry, which he meant not any more to commit either really or feignedly, but onely, that it might not be laid to his charge out of the idols temple, ſo not in it to performe his ſervice to his Maſter the King by leaning to ſupport him with his ſhoulder, upon which he uſed to leane and worſhip Rimmon, which becauſe he might lawfully doe, the prophet made him that anſwer, that he might of this make no ſcruple. Thus Lyra. Hugo Cardin. ſaith, that he meant to feigne a worſhipping of that idol ſtill, and herein the Prophet diſpenſed with him for a time, that living amongſt idolaters he might have the opportunity to preach unto them the true God, he promiſing to Eliſhah, that he would ſhortly leave his place and not come any more in that temple. But this is worthily rejected by Lyra, ſeeing evill is not to be done, that good may come of it, neither can any man diſpenſe with one for doing that, which in it owne nature is evil. Pellican ſaith, that the prophet dealt with him, as with one weak in the faith, but yet truly in him, bearing with him in his weakneſſe, and accepting of him for his heart in ſincerity ſet to worſhip the true God and not any idol more; and ſo he anſwereth him, Go in peace, to ſhew, that he ſhould be accepted of for his godly purpoſe, and that what he did as a weake beleever ſhould not be imputed unto him, which maketh againſt thoſe that are ſo ridged againſt Neophites, as that they looke that they ſhould be exact in every thing at the very firſt, and if they be not, they are ready to cenſure them. Martyr agreeth with Lyra as touching the lawfulneſſe of a Gentiles ſacrificing to God upon any earth; holding that Naaman would have ſome to carry away from hence yet for the purpoſe, that by making an Altar of it in his owne countrey he might make publique confeſſion of the God of Iſrael to be the true God: and hereby be alwaies put in minde of him, and the benefit received in that land by his mercy to be ſtirred up to continuall thankfulneſſe therefore; neither would he have any of the earth of that land for this uſe, but ſo much earth out of Eliſhah his houſe, for which cauſe he asked it of him, whereas otherwiſe he could have taken it without asking, although ſome ſay, that he asked it of him, becauſe taking it by his allowance he thought it might be of vertue to do him good, as the water of Iordan at his word had done, whereas otherwiſe he knew there was no ſuch vertue in it. I thinke, that he asked it of him neither for one of theſe reaſons nor the other, but onely to let him know by this outward ſigne, that the God of Iſrael onely ſhould henceforth be his God; and although he would take nothing offered him, yet his coſt ſhould goe in offering ſacrifice to God, and he moved him in it, becauſe he would doe nothing but by his approbation in matters of ſuch moment. The conceit of ſome mentioned by Martyr and ſome others is not worth the naming, viz. that Naaman would have this earth to put under his feete when he ſtood in the houſe of Rimmon, for both it had beene abſurd, and he expreſly ſhewed for what uſe he would have it, ſaying, I will ſacrifice to none other God,&c. Whether Eliſhah aſſented or no it is not ſaid, but he anſwered to both his requeſts together and ſo aſſented, yet not to countenance the ſuperſtitious bringing of a little earth or ſtones from the Holy Land by pilgrims of all parts as a meanes of bleſſing: but hereby was figured out the tranſlating of Gods favour ſet forth by that earth, whereon he profeſſed to dwell, to us Gentiles, as the Syrians were, being herein ſome of the firſt fruits of the Gentiles, becauſe the ſigne of Gods favour and preſence came thus firſt to be amongſt them. Touching the other paſſage, Martyr maintaineth it to be a ſin for Naaman to do, as he ſaid, although his heart were right towards the true God, becauſe he prayed God in this matter to be mercifull, which he needed not to have done, unleſſe he had known it to be a ſin. Moreover, not onely evil, but all appearances of evil is to be avoided, if he therefore bowed before the idol when his Maſter bowed, although not with any intention to worſhip it, there was an evil ſhow and example to others, that beheld it to draw them to doe the like, for as much as they could not ſee into his heart to put a difference between his act, and his maſters.

And likewiſe if any be preſent at the Popiſh idolatry of the maſſe, they become guilty of the ſin of idolatry, for ſo doing, although their hearts be againſt it. Wherefore he preferreth the piety of thoſe Princes before Naamans, viz. of Saxony and the reſt, who attended the Emperour Charles 5. onely to the Church doore when he went to maſſe, but entred not in with him. Whereas Eliſhah anſwered as not diſliking what he meant to doe, whereby it may ſeem not to be a ſin; he ſaith, that by theſe words, goe in peace] he meant nothing elſe, but that God who had enlightened him ſo farre, as to ſee and know him to be the only true God, and that to be preſent at idolatrous worſhip was ſin, would direct him ſo, as that he ſhould never to keep his worldly dignity, yield to doe this, and that he prayed for him, and even propheſied hereby, that he ſhould never doe it. But ſeeing no man in common ſenſe would thus underſtand theſe words, but as an incouragement to doe what he had propounded without any ſcruple, and Naaman is not to be thought to have underſtood them otherwiſe, I cannot aſſent to them, although our own men, who would ſtreine them to another ſenſe, which was never given by any ancient Expoſitour, that I have ſeen. In ſaying then goe in peace; he doth rather ſecure him from all danger of ſinning in doing his office to his maſter, either out of the houſe of Rimmon or within it, and yet giveth no toleration to him or any other of feinedly yielding any outward reverence to an idoll, for all worſhip in this way of religion both outward and inward, is to be given to God alone, for the arguments brought to prove it a ſin, which Naaman intended, I anſwer, firſt that it was Naamans ignorance which made him feare it to be a ſin, and it is no good reaſon from words ſpoken in ignorance, implying an act to be a ſin, to conclude it to be ſo indeed. Secondly Naamans publick profeſſion made by bringing earth out of Iſrael to make an altar to ſacrifice to the true God onely, freed him ſufficiently from all appearance of evill before all men, and made it apparant unto them, that what he did in the temple of Rimmon, was without all reſpect to the idol in duty to his Lord only. And to be preſent at idolatry for ſome other end without any way countenancing that ſacrilegious act, is not to be cenſured as a ſin; witneſſe the prophet Elijah, who was preſent, when Baals prieſts ſacrificed to him, but to deride them, and the 3 children in Daniel were preſent, when the golden image ſet up by Nebuchadnezzar, was worſhipped. But however Naaman ſinned not in this his ſervice done to his maſter in an idols temple, they cannot be exuſed as free from ſin, who are preſent at idolatrous worſhip only out of curioſity, or becauſe they would not be known to be of a divers religion for feare of danger or diſpleaſure, for this is groſſe diſſimulation and halting, which God cannot endure. To conclude, in juſtifying Naaman in this matter, as if I goe not from the ancient Expoſitours upon this place, ſo I go not farre from Martyr himſelfe, where he ſaith, if the perſon that is preſent at idolatrous worſhip, be known to abhorre from idolatry, he may be thought to be preſent ſent, and to bow the king for ſome other cauſe, eſpecially a proteſtation being firſt made by him, only I differ wherein he differeth from himſelf in his next words; which the ſacred hiſtory doth not ſhew, that Naaman made in that temple before the Syrians, and ſome words uſed before in ſpeaking upon the 2 mules loades of earth, which he asked; viz, he would firſt and chiefly that the altar made of this earth, ſhould be a monument amongſt the Syrians of his faith in the true God, the God of Iſrael; for what was this elſe but to make a publick profeſſion before the Syrians of his being turned from idols to the true God, who was worſhipped in Iſrael.

When Naaman was gone a mile, in his return, the vulgar Latin electo tempore, V.19,20. but the Hebrew is כברת ארץ a milo of ground, Gehazi thought within his covetous heart, that although his maſter had ſpared Naaman, yet he would get ſome-thing of him, and ſo he ſware that he would follow him with ſpeed, &c. The ſin of Gehazi ſaith Lyra, may be noted to be manifold. 1. Covetouſneſſe, making him to Lyra. gape after gaine, by the leper healed. 2. Swearing the Lord liveth, to do that which was to the diſhonour of God. 3. Lying to Naaman, when he told him that two ſonnes of the prophets were come to his maſters, and he would pray him to give them a talent of ſilver, &c. 4. Theft in that he hid the mony received, laying it up for his own uſe. 5. Lying to Eliſhah, when hee ſaid, that hee went no whether, wherefore he was adiudged to be ſmitten with ſuch a leproſie as Naaman had, both he and his children for ever; being herein ſaith Pellican, a figure of the covetous in Pellican.
their childrens holding that which they have unjuſtly gotten. There is another ſin alſo that Lyra here layeth upon Gehazi, that being urged by Naaman, he ſware that Eliſhah bad him ſay ſo to Naaman; for he ſaith, it is in the Hebrew, [Sware, and take two talents] and the more indeed hath this ſignification as well as others, wherefore R. Salomon ſo rendreth it, but other Expoſitours reject it as not agreeing, becauſe after this it is ſaid, he compelled him. Martyr ſaith, that Gehazi ſinned P. Martyr.
alſo in ſpeaking contemptuouſly of ſo famous a convert, calling him this Syrian, and detracting from the diſcretion of Eliſhah, as if he had not done wiſely in ſparing an heathen man full of wealth; and by this meanes wanting wherewithall to relieve poor ſonnes of the prophets, living under his tuition, as Iudas found fault with the ſpending of a box of pretious ointment upon Chriſt when it might have been ſold, and the price given unto the poore, not that he was ſo well affected, but becauſe he bare the bagge and was a thiefe, and ſo thought that comming into his hands, hee might have gotten a good part of it. In like manner Gehazi moſt probably taxed his maſters forbearing to take, becauſe he was diſappointed of a prey, which by this means he expected. Now Gehazi was not ſo covetous and deceitfull, but Naaman was as free and credulous. For he not only ſtayed, when he had heard of his com- V.21. ing after him, but alſo came down out of his chariot, and went to meet him, which was much for ſo great a man to a poor ſervant, but he reſpected the prophet whom he ſerved and his God, to whom he ought all reſpect and honour, although he were now by him abuſed. Which ſheweth, that it is not alwayes like maſter, like man, Note. neither doe the beſt means work upon ſome that live continually under them, but there is more grace in ſome, that want all means, or enjoy but little, then in ſuch; as Naaman excelled Gehazi. But let all be warned by his dreadfull judgement to flye coveteouſneſſe, which being in the heart, no means can work for good.

Moreover Naaman moſt willingly gave him two talents, when he asked one, V.24. and ſent two porters to carry them, which when he came to the Caſtle he tooke and laid up. The Vulgar lat. When he came in the evening. Montanus, into a ſecret place. Vatabl. and the Chald. Into an obſcure place. For all theſe expoſitions the word may beare, and it is likely, that he had this treaſure, that it might not come to his maſters knowledge although he had taken it in his name, as deſirous ſtill to be reputed godly and ſincere before him, when he proved himſelfe herein a very thiefe, and he is ſaid to have laid it up in the houſe, that is, according to Hugo, in his owne houſe. Eliſhah preſently upon his coming before him ſhewed, how vaine his ſeeking to hide it was, for nothing can be hidden from God, or from ſuch, as to whom he maketh his revelations; therefore he ſaith, his heart went with him, meaning, that by his propheticall ſpirit he ſaw him. Whereas in checking him he ſaith

ſaith nothing of the money, but of the raiments, and Olives, &c.

V. 26. Is this a time to receive raiments, olives and vineyards, cattle, oxen and ſervants?] It was to ſet forth the great ſummes of money, to which two talents doe amount, as may be gathered alſo from that, which was ſaid before.

They were ſo much as would ſuffice to buy all theſe things, ſaying, Is this a time to receive, &c. he meanes, when he refuſed to take any thing, that Gods glory might be the more illuſtrated; he taxeth him therefore, as pulling downe that, which he had built up, and indeed all taking of a reward at any time, when God by his Prophets forbiddeth it, implying yet, that there is a time of receiving for the Prophets maintenance of his diſciples.

V. 27. Therefore the leproſie of Naaman ſhall cleave to thee and to thy ſeed for ever.] That is, ſuch a leproſie, he had, viz. the greateſt and moſt uncurable. And this puniſhment was moſt juſt, that having Naamans money he ſhould together with it have his leproſie, for gaping after the filthy lucre a filthy diſeaſe, for his ſelling ſecretly the grace of God, an open infamous brand; for ſinning about the healing of a leproſie, the leproſie, that it might appeare to come not for any other ſinne, but this, for his ſeeking to enrich his children with goods baſely gotten, the debaſing of them by Note. this loathſome diſeaſe for ever. And myſtically this teacheth, that they provide ill for their children, who by unjuſt meanes ſeeke to get riches for them, they get Gods judgements, as is moſt commonly ſeene, in that they are either tied with the ſame ſervile bands of covetouſneſſe, or as is moſt commonly ſeene, they breake out with the leproſie of riotouſneſſe, which can never be healed. The Hebrewes by the ſeed of Gehazi will have no infants or borne after this underſtood, but onely his children growne up, and R. Levi Ben Gerſon by theſe words [for ever] underſtandeth the Iubilee, leſt God ſhould ſeem to be too cruel. But ſeeing Ely was alſo puniſhed in his children then unborn, and Ioab, &c. there is no reaſon thus to limit this judgement againſt Gehazi, ſeeing all are tainted with ſinne, and God to terrifie the more with his judgements may without cruelty for the ſin of the father plague both him and his ſinfull brood alſo outwardly at his pleaſure, as hath beene ſometimes before ſhewed. Wherefore God made Gehazi and his ſeed a laſting monument of the odiouſneſſe of ſacriledge, that in the ages to come it might be pointed at, and ſaid, Behold, the fruit of ſacriledge, to make all others to have it in abomination. Gehazi is laſtly ſaid to have gone out from him a leper as white as ſnow, that is, the moſt incurable, as appeareth, Lev. 13. And he is ſaid to have gone out, becauſe the leprous were to be ſeparated to an out place remote from the Hugo Cardin. ſound, and never to live in company with them any more. Hugo Cardin. ſaith, That ſome thinke, that Gehazi had no ſeed, but that myſtically they are Gehazites, even his ſeed as it were, that ſell ſpirituall things, as they are ſymoniacall, that buy them; or ſuch as when ſpirituall gifts have been freely beſtowed, looke for a recompence afterwards, the ſeller or buyer by pact being both ſymoniacall.

P. Martyr. The Myſtery of Gehazi. Peter Martyr will have the Pope ſet forth by Gehazi in that he taketh of thoſe, that the Apoſtles let goe free, houſes and lands, &c. abuſing thoſe of whom he taketh, with lies, as he did Naaman. But when he thinketh in thus doing to lye hid from Eliſhah, that is, Chriſt, he alwayes beholdeth his impoſtures, and will judge him to depart from his preſence, as moſt foule and filthy, and never to come where his ſaints dwell, but in outer darkneſſe for ever.

CHAP. VI.

V. 1. AFter that Gehazi was caſt out, ſay the Hebrews, who was ſharpe to the followers of Eliſhah, and grudged at his ſpending of the gifts brought in upon them; the number of them encreaſed ſo, that there was not room enough for them to dwell together. Wherefore they conſult about making another houſe at Iordan. Toſtatus. Toſtatus yieldeth another reaſon of this increaſe of his followers, viz. becauſe they were pinched with famine, which yet continued, and Eliſhah, they beleeved, was able either by miracle to provide for them, or by meanes of the proviſion brought in unto him by ſuch as were godly affected. Howſoever it is worth the noting, ſaith Martyr, both that the faithfull encreaſe more, when the wicked are purged out, that ſuch may not be ſuffered in the Church: and alſo that the number of the faithfull is not diminiſhed by perſecution and tyranny, but encreaſed, as the Palme-tree fructifieth the more, the more it is preſſed with weight, becauſe this encreaſe of the ſons of the prophets with Eliſhah, was in the days of idolatrous Ioram. Where the houſe was, that had not room enough for them, it is not ſaid, but it ſeemeth not to have been farre from Iordan, becauſe they move him that they might go to Iordan to cut down timber, and build there, and that he would vouchſafe to go with them. Although they were prophets then, and according to their name ſpent much time in divine reading and exerciſes, yet they laboured and lived not in idleneſſe, like monaſticall perſons now a dayes, neither were they ſuch as vowed to live a ſingle life; for chap. 4. we reade of a wife of one of the ſonnes of the prophets, they were therefore not tied herein, but at their own liberty, and yet lived in Colledges together under a maſter, keeping their wives happily in ſome places not far from them. Which ſheweth, the weak ground of Monkiſh votaries of theſe times, in their practice.

P.Martyr.
Note.

V. 3.

To Iordan they go to build, ſaith Martyr, moſt probably, becauſe there was water for their uſe, and timber growing along the banks. The cauſe why this is related, was the miracle wrought upon this occaſion by Eliſhah, to comfort and confirm the faith of his diſciples the more, in making iron to ſwim upon the water. For when one did cut down wood, the head of his hatchet fel into the water, which made him cry out to Eliſhah, and the rather becauſe it was borrowed, and a juſt perſon is troubled more, if he cannot reſtore that which hee borrowed, then if he had loſt his own. And by the way ſee here, how plain and poor the ſonnes of the prophets were of old, to ſhew, that they ſought not the world by their profeſſion, but Gods glory. Eliſhah pitying his caſe, and being told where it fell in, for God revealed not all things unto him, cut a ſtick and caſt it in, and then the iron ſwam and was taken up again by him from whom it fell. R. Solomon ſaith, that the ſtick cut was a new helve, for the other was broken, and this being put into the water, the head went on to it, ſwimming together to the bank, which Martyr following, noteth a threefold miracle; firſt, in the ſwimming of the heavie iron; ſecondly, in the joyning with the new helve in the water; thirdly, in ſupporting the iron with the wood, when it was able to ſink that down with the weight, or rather we may ſay, that here were two miracles wrought. Firſt, in the ſinking of the helve caſt in and joyning with the head, that lay at the bottom, as if it had been put into the eye thereof by the hand of a man; ſecondly, in the helves ſwimming up again, and bringing the head with it, which according to the courſe of nature would have weighed that down. For this muſt needs be yielded, that the wood caſt in went down to the bottom, or elſe it had been uſed as a means in vain, but thus, demerſam fluvio relevavit virga ſecurim, as Tertullian ſpeaketh, the ſtick lifted up the hatchet drowned in the river. And in another place, the iron ſwam above, but the wood was drowned, which the ſonnes of the Prophets received. Wherefore it was not made ſo to ſink, but that it roſe again and brougnt up the iron with it, as hath been already ſaid. To enquire how God did this, as ſome do, whether by taking away the heavie quality of the iron for the time, or by the miniſtry of Angels, is vain, ſeeing he is almighty, and can at his pleaſure, make heavie things to be born up by the waters, as the body of Chriſt, and fire to loſe the quality of burning, as in the fierie furnace, and wilde beaſts to refrain from devouring a prey expoſed unto them, as in the caſe of Daniel. But that ever he changed the ſubſtance of a body into another ſubſtance, the accidents remaining, we never read, or that he made one body to be in more places at once, as the Papiſts fondly hold touching the body of our Lord in the ſacrament. Allegorically, by the head falling into the water whileſt wood was cutting down, Gregory underſtands a preacher puffed up, whileſt he ſeeks to cut down ſin, for hereby he himſelf ſinketh, but upon his crying out in ſorrow for this, God hath mercy upon him, & ſaveth him frō periſhing in the deep.

And

V.8. And the king of Aram fought againſt Iſrael, and conſulted with his ſervants, ſaying, in ſuch and ſuch a place ſhall my tents be, &c.] Vpon what occaſion this warre was moved it is not ſaid, and it may ſeem ſtrange, that after ſo great a benefit received, in the healing of Naaman the captain of the army, that the king ſhould come againſt Iſrael. But it is to be thought, that this warre was rather onely an ambuſhment, when peace was pretended out of the inveterate malice of the king of Syria, againſt the king of Iſrael, then a warre openly made, as the words alſo intimate. He thought not himſelf ſufficiently revenged for former overthrowes, to have ſlain Ahab in battle, but he ſought now treacherouſly to ſlay his ſonne, when there ſeemed to be peace between them. And haply for Naaman, he was no more now in ſuch eſtimation with him to hinder it, ſeeing he was turned after the God of Iſrael. The words rendred in [ſuch and ſuch a place] Hebrew, are במקֹם פּלינו אלמוני that is, in a place hidden and ſilent, ſo called because obſcure, and to it they ſhould come without noiſe, which although it be not here named, Joſephus. yet it was particularly appointed amongſt the Syrians. Ioſephus ſpeaketh only of one time that he did thus, in ſome place where the king of Iſrael was to ride a hunting. But it is ſaid, not once or twice, whereby it is to be underſtood that he did it often, and ſo was by the prophet often diſcovered. He had power then given him by his propheticall ſpirit, to ſee into things done moſt ſecretly, and farre off from him; as alſo appeared partly before, in his reproof of Gehazi. But why would he do ſo much for an idolatrous king, that eſteemed not of him, nor of his doctrine; when as before chap. 3. he profeſſed, that had it not been, that he reſpected Iehoſhaphat, he would not have looked towards him? Anſw. It ſeemeth, that by the miracle wrought then he came into great grace at the court, as was noted chap. 4. in his ſpeech to the Shunamite, wherefore he ſought ſtill by good offices doing for the king, to oblige him more and more unto God, by whom hee P.Martyr. wrought, if by any means he might bring him to repentance. Moreover, as Martyr noteth, he being a man of God was to promote the good of Gods people, and to keep away evill from them as much as he could, although they were moſt of them revolted from him, becauſe they were the poſterity of Abraham, and ſo within the covenant ſtill. And it is the duty of the men of God to ſeek the preſervation Note. of the king and ſtate wherein they live, although they be wicked and unworthy.

V.10. When Eliſhah gave the king warning of theſe ambuſhments, he ſent ſcouts out Lyra. and found it to be as he had ſaid, and ſo ſaved himſelf from the danger. Lyra, following the vulgar Latin [praeoccupavit eum] ſaith, that he ſent and took the men laid in ambuſh, whereas he onely by ſending found it to be ſo, as the Prophet had fore-told, and thus it was made evident unto him, that Eliſhah was guided by the ſpirit of God, to give the more credit to his words.

V.11. The king of Syria being troubled at this, challenged his ſervants as diſcovering it, but they ſaid that it was Eliſhah; whereby it ſeemeth, that he was famous for his divine ſpirit, even in that country, and doubtleſſe his healing of Naaman was no V.13. ſmall cauſe thereof. The king hearing it, would take away Eliſhah, and underſtanding that he was in Dothan, ſent a great army, and horſes and chariots to take him. Ah fooliſh king, that beleeved Eliſhah to be endued with the ſpirit of God, ſo that he could reveal moſt ſecret conſultations againſt others, and yet conceived V.15. not that he could as eaſily fruſtrate all attempts againſt himſelf. The army of the king of Syria being ſeen by the ſervant of Eliſhah, he cried out to his maſter for V.16. fear, but he to put fear away from him, ſaid, There are more with us then with them; and when he had prayed, that his eyes might be opened, he ſaw the mountaine V.17. full of horſe, and a fierie chariot about Eliſha, the ſingular number being put for the plurall, wherefore the vulgar Latin hath it, fiery chariots. But how could they Hieronym. ſaith Martyr, be about Eliſhah, when as he was in the city, they in the mountain?
P.Martyr. And he anſwereth, that as the Angels like horſes and chariots were repreſented to him upon the mountain, ſo, was Eliſhah alſo in the midſt of them, as for whoſe ſake and guard onely they were now ſent. Dothan, about which theſe Syrians now Adrichom. came, according to Adrichomius, was in the tribe of Zabulon, 12 miles, as Ierom ſaith,

ſaith, from Samaria, but others place it in Manaſſeh, the next tribe unto Ephraim, in which Samaria ſtood. Of Dothan it is ſpoken before, Gen. 37. but upon what occaſion Eliſha was now there, is uncertain. He was the common father and inſtructer of the faithfull in all places, and ſo went to teach ſometime in one place, and ſometime in another, and thus I ſuppoſe, he was in Dothan at that time. If it be demanded, who was the ſervant of Eliſhab now that Gehazi was gone? Some that hold the hiſtory of Naaman to be miſplaced, anſwer readily, that it was Gehazi who was not ſmitten with the leproſie till after this. But of this enough hath bin already ſaid, and in that the ſervant is not named, as Gehazi commonly was, ch. 4. and ch. 5. it is intimated that he now attended Eliſhab no more, but another ſucceeding in his ſervice, which alſo proveth that the hiſtory, ch. 5. is placed in due order.

V. 18.

Eliſhab perceiving that the coming of this army was to have him delivered into their hands, after that, he ſhewed his ſervant what a guard was ſet about him, that he might not fear, went out of the city, and then they came down to him to take him: for Dothan according to Adrichomius, was ſcituated in a plain place between two hills, ſo that to come to him, they muſt needs come down. Then Eliſhab prayed the Lord to ſmite them with blindneſſe, and he ſmote them; and Eliſhab told them, ſaying, this is not the way, nor the city, come after me; and I will bring you to the man whom yee ſeeke.] This blindnes was not the blindneſſe of their bodily eyes, for then they could not have ſeen Eliſhab to follow him, and they themſelves preſently perceiving, in what caſe they were, would not have gone on, as hee directed them; it was therefore a blindeſſe of mind wherewith they were ſmitten, making them like litle children in underſtanding, which cannot diſtinguiſh between one place and way, and another. It is likely, when they came near Eliſhab, that being thus infatuated, they knew him not, but taking him for ſome other man, asked him for Eliſhab, and the way into the city.

V. 19.

Touching his anſwer, although he may ſeem to have ſpoken untruly to them, yet indeed he did not, for they enquired for Eliſhab, and although he at that time was in Dothan upon ſome occaſion, yet his dwelling was in Samaria, as hath been partly touched upon ch. 5. and appeareth, ch. 6. 32. neither was he now in the city of Dothan, but came forth to goe to Samaria. In ſaying therefore, this is not the way, nor the city] he meant, that it was not the city where Eliſhab dwelt, or where they might find him which was moſt true, becauſe if then they had gone into Dothan, they could not have found him there; but in Samaria, he meant to ſhew himſelfe unto them: ſo Lyra almoſt, and Martyr; wherefore Toſtatus erred much in granting that Eliſhab told an officious lie, the ſpirit of God moving him thereunto, for his future glory. For conſidering, that to lie is to ſin, we muſt by no means either grant, that ſo holy a prophet ſinned, unleſſe it may evidently appeare; neither that God inſtigateth to any the leaſt ſin for the greateſt good, that may bee. Eliſhab would have them ſmitten with blindneſſe purpoſely, that when they went about to take him, he might take them and make them ſee how vaine and dangerous a thing it was to come forth againſt God and his ſervant, that if it were poſſible, they might hereby, and by the kind uſage which they had, be converted from idols to the true God, who was able to doe ſuch wonderfull things.

V. 19.

He lead them therefore to Samaria, the metropolitical city of the kingdom, where the king kept his court, and had moſt probably a great guard continually about him, and a number of citizens well appointed, expert in military affaires, and able ſoon to deſtroy the Syrian army being now ſhut into their city. For ſo ſoon as they were entred ſaith Ioſephus, Eliſhab commanded the gates to be ſhut, and ſent to the king to bring forth his bands of men, and to place them round about them; which being done, he prayed God to open their eyes, that is, their underſtanding again, that thus they might ſee, in what danger they were. But that they might not be ſlain, he forbad this to the king; and contrariwiſe bad, that proviſion ſhould bee ſet before them; which being done, and they refreſhed herewith, they departed to their maſter, and never adventured to come in ſuch a ſecret manner any more, into the land of Iſrael.

Ioſephus.

V. 20, 21, 22, 23.

When Ioram coming with his men ready prepared ſaw them, he asked Eliſhab ſaying, ſhall I ſmite them, (O my father) He knowing that they were miraculouſly brought thither by the prophet, would doe nothing without his direction; but hee anſwered, thou ſhalt not ſmite them, but thoſe, whom thou takeſt with thy ſword and thy bow. Seeing his enemies brought now into his power by Eliſhah, he greatly reverenced him, and called him father, but it was in hypocriſie; neither was his heart right towards him, as the ſequele in this ch. doth declare, when he ſent to his houſe to kill him. Touching the prophets anſwer, the meaning is, that they were none of his Captives, but the Lords; and therefore, although he had power of life and death over his own captives, yet he had not over theſe, neither ſhould ſmite them, but doe what the Lord would unto them, viz. courteouſly ſet them to meat,

Prov.25,21. and ſo ſend them away again; according to that, Rom.12:20. If thy enemy hunger, give him meat, &c. Whereas the king obeyed the prophet herein, it was becauſe the Lord overuled him, in whoſe hand is the heart of the king, and he turneth it as the rivers of water, for his will was certainly to have ſlain them; neither could any but

P.Martyr. the divine power have held him from it. Martyr, beſides the ſenſe of theſe words already given; thou ſmiteſt all thoſe whom thou takeſt with thy ſword, &c. hath this, thou ſmiteſt ſuch, but not all ſuch, therefore much leſſe theſe, whom thou haſt not taken. This lenity of the prophet in this caſe was admirable; ſeeing hee was the man that they now aimed at, to take and carry away captive; ſo that a man would think, he ſhould rather have ſtirred up the king to ſlay them as enemies, having them at this advantage; but he thought it an opportunity rather to work in them by kindneſſe a love of his God, who was both of ſuch unparalleld mercy and power, ſeeing none almoſt would have let their enemies goe, coming by any means into their power. Neither was this kindneſſe ſhewed without effect; for it is ſaid, that the Syrian armies came no more into the land of Iſrael. Againſt which if the words following v. 24. ſeem to make, it is to be underſtood, that the meaning is, they came no more ſecretly, and by ſtealth, becauſe they ſaw they prevailed nothing by ſo doing, but from thenceforth they made open warre; to this effect Joſephus, the king of Syria admiring the power of God and the divinity of Eliſhah, determined with himſelfe not to attempt any thing more treacherouſly and cloſely, but openly with a full army to invade Iſrael; and yet happily thoſe forces who were now ſent away in ſafety, never came more; they were by this miracle & mercy ſo much moved. To intimate which it is ſaid, they added not to come any more, viz. the ſame troups, but others were gathered together to beſiege Samaria in far greater multitudes, for which cauſe the words are varied. Benhadad gathered together all his tents, although the vulgar Latin hath it, his whole army; and thus Pellican expounds it, or that they came no more in Eliſhah his life time, or whileſt that king reigned. If it be demanded, whether the prophet did well to ſpare them being idolaters and enemies? I anſwer, although idolaters of the Iſraelites were to be ſlaine, becauſe God had peculiarly choſen them, and by many ſignes and wonders declared himſelfe to be the only true God unto them, and expreſſely taught them againſt idolatry; for which cauſe Elijah ſpared neither the Prophets of Baal, nor the two captaines with their fifties, and afterwards the ſervants of Baal being brought together by a wile into the houſe of Baal were all by Jehu deſtroyed; Yet other nations were not to be deſtroyed for this, but as God appointed, viz. the Canaanites, Perezites, Ammorites, &c. who were all adjudged to deſtruction, and Amalekites, but upon the Syrians the like judgement was not paſſed, and therefore they might ſometime be ſpared, as occaſion ſerved; as when God brought them miraculouſly into their hands, not for this, but another end; when for this end Benhadad was brought into the hands of Ahab, it was a great ſin to ſpare him, as hath been ſhewed before. But now it was a vertue, for hereby was ſhewed gentleneſſe towards enemies able to make their hearts relent, that the Iſraelites might live by them in the more quiet afterwards, and that their God might have honour even amongſt them. Moreover the idolatry that they lived in, was out of ſimple ignorance, and theſe that came to take Elijah, did but as they were commanded by their Lord, whom they were to obey, which extenuated their fault, and pleaded for pity to be ſhewed unto them. Whereas Sallianus thinks, that they had ſuch indignation at Eliſhah his thus mocking of them, that they ſtirred up their king to the following warre, it is improbable, becauſe their coming no more into that land is ſpoken of, as the iſſue of this their uſage, and the heart of Benhadad, as appeareth by his whole hiſtory, was generally bent after one attempt by warre defeated, to begin another ſo ſoon as he could, ſo implacable was his malicious mind againſt Iſrael.

The Myſtery. Lyra. Myſtically by the King of Syria warring againſt Iſrael, by trechery underſtand the devil cloſely ſeeking the deſtruction of the faithfull, by Eliſhab godly Preachers giving them warning againſt his treacheries; and as the Syrian army ſeeking to take Eliſhab away was confounded and made to go home again without effecting any thing, ſo are all the attempts of the devil to take away ſuch Preachers fruſtrated; when ſuch as he ſtirreth up to perſecute are like Saul, firſt ſmitten with blindneſſe, and then receiving their ſight again are no more enemies, but rather friends of the Church, and publiſhers of Gods wonderfull works toward them, as he was, being made of a perſecuter, a Preacher of the Chriſtian faith. Whereas Lyra bringeth for example, not Saul, but Anthony the Eremite a diligent Preacher, whom the devil ſought to ſtrangle, but by the Virgin Mary he was chaſed away; it ſavoureth of a Fryerly legend of inventions put for truths. Note. The army of horſes and fiery chariots about Eliſhab ſhewed, how the Angels of God pitch their tents about those that feare him to ſave them from all dangers, Pſal. 34. and this none ſeeth but he, whoſe eyes God hath opened, as Eliſhab his ſervants, and he onely is to be prayed unto for this and all other things, Note. and not Angels, or any other of the court of heaven, as Eliſhab prayed unto him and not to the Angels, although ſeen neare about him.

V.24. It came to paſſe after this, that the King of Syria gathered together his whole army and went up and beſieged Samaria. And there was a great famine,&c.] It ſeemeth, that howſoever Benhadad was moved at the wonder which was wrought ſo as that he aſſayed not to overthrow the Iſraelites any more by treacheries and ambuſhments, becauſe he found, that there was one amongſt them, that could eaſily defeat all ſuch enterpriſes of his, yet he hardened himſelfe out of the confidence which he had in his great forces wherein he exceeded Iſrael, to come againſt them in open warre, imagining fooliſhly, that although their God could diſcover his moſt ſecret counſels, that they might take none effect and blinde the underſtanding of his ſervants ſent out in the darke of the night, yet he could not helpe them in caſe of a long and ſtrong ſiege, but that they muſt needs thus periſh. For to the like effect almoſt he once before uttered himſelfe, when he had beene overthrowne by Ahab, thet he was the God of the mountaines. And however he was then overthrowne, yet ſince that time he prevailed againe in a pitcht battell at Ramoth Gilead, and ſo he hoped to doe now againe in this Samaritan expedition. And truely hereby the Iſraelites ſuffered grievouſly, for the famine is ſaid to have grown V.25. ſo great in Samaria, That an aſſes head was ſold for eighty pieces of ſilver, and the fourth part of a cab of doves dunge at five pieces. This ſaith Pellican, was the juſt judgement of God upon them, that they, who ſet at naught the word of God, that heavenly manna and moſt precious food of the ſoule, ſhould be inforced through neceſſity to pay moſt deare for baſe things and at other times deſpicable, for the ſatiſfying of their hunger. By an Aſſes head, ſaith Lyra, ſome underſtand the whole beaſt, becauſe in ſelling men uſe to ſay, I will have ſo much by the head, and I bought ſo many head of cattel at ſo much the head: others underſtand it onely of that part, which ſeemeth moſt probable, as Martyr alſo ſaith, for if the fourth part of a cab of Doves dunge were five pieces of ſilver, it is no great marvaile, though an Aſſes head were ſixteene times as much, and in ſo great a ſcarcity it is not to be thought that an whole beaſt was ſold together for food to any of the common ſort, whoſe meat this muſt be ſuppoſed to have beene and not of the greater ones. A Cab, ſaith Martyr, is the ſixt part of a meaſure conteining twenty foure egges, the fourth part a meaſure conteining ſixe egges. By dung Lyra underſtandeth, not dung properly, but the garbage with the maw of the fowle conteining the graines eaten by it, which commonly uſed to be caſt all together away, as dung; but now by great mens Cookes, it was kept and ſold unto the poore for food; becauſe dung properly is fit rather to choke and to deſtroy the body, then to nouriſh it. Yet Martyr holdeth rather, that it was dung, becauſe the word uſed in the margin cometh of דוב ſignifying dung, and ſo it is uſed, Iſa. 38. But he confeſſeth that the word uſed in the text cometh of חור ſignifying a caverne or hole contracted in it ſelfe, by which the Sacred Hiſtory fleeing all obſcurity is wont to ſet forth that, through which the excrements come forth, and not plainly. Joſephus. Ioſephus thinketh that they uſed Doves dung for ſalt, and ſome to maintaine their fire to make ready their meat. Amongſt all which that of Lyra is to be preferred, neither doth it diſagree from the originall word, for the hiſtory ſpeaketh onely of food and not of ſauce or fire, which their hunger permitted them not to look after ſo much, and they might as wel have eaten dirt with the wolf as pigeons dung. For 80. pieces of ſilver the Chald. Paraphraſe hath eight ſhekels, that is, of our money five pounds, accounting Chald. paraph. the peice fifteene pence, and a Cabs fourth part was a meaſure of a pint and halfe, Patriarks travels. ſo H. B. ſaying alſo, that in ſome texts for eighty, it is eight pieces of ſilver; the Septuagint of Sixtus hath it fifty, and likewiſe Saint Auguſtine following that tranſlation. This is thus ſet forth to give us a taſte of their extreme famine, ſeeing Aſſes fleſh was uncleane and might not be eaten, yet now they gave deare for a little for food, which ſheweth, that either this ſiege was in the time of famine ſpoken of before, or elſe continued long.

V. 26. To ſhew the greatneſſe of the famine there followeth another example more ſtupendious, a woman cryed to the King, as he went upon the wall to ſave her, and V. 27. when he underſtood her meaning to be by giving her ſome reliefe and replied accordingly, Joſephus. ſhe explained her ſelfe, as Ioſephus ſaith, that ſhe meant not any ſuch thing; then he asking, what ſhe would have, ſhe ſaid, that there was an agreement 28, 29. betwixt her and another woman, that they together ſhould eate her ſonne one day and the next day that other womans, wherein ſhe having performed her promiſe, the other now refuſed to performe hers. The King ſoone underſtood her meaning to be that he ſhould doe her juſtice, but he replied nothing, onely expreſſing a V. 30. great rage, whereinto he was hereby driven againſt Eliſhah, he ſware to behead him that day. He went upon the wall to ſee, that all parts might be well defended againſt the enemy. He ſaid nothing to the caſe propounded, becauſe it was horrible to heare, but too hard to be judged. But why did he rage ſo againſt the innocent P. Martyr. Prophet ſo ſoon as he heard this? Martyr anſwereth, partly becauſe he thought that this famine was cauſed by him, as the drought before in his fathers time by Elijah, partly becauſe he thought, that he could have kept the city from this ſtreight, if he had would, and partly becauſe idolatrous prophets inſtigated him againſt Eliſhah, as one that the gods would not endure, and therefore had brought the city to this extremity; and he addeth a fourth reaſon which is not ſo probable, that he exhorted the King to hold out and not to yeeld the city, promiſing deliverance, Lyra. which he did to ſave the faithfull, that were there out of the enemies hands. Lyra reſteth upon that one onely, becauſe he delivered not the city by his prayers, which indeed he meant to doe, but yet according to the direction of God, and at the time, when he ſhould appoint, as hereafter followeth. And it may be, that he remembring the diſmiſſe of the Syrians by Eliſhah his meanes, was partly hereby provoked againſt him, becauſe if they had beene deſtroyed when he had them in Samaria, Samaria could not have now beene brought into this great ſtreight by them.

He raged before at the woman, which cryed unto him, ſaying, [the Lord ſave thee not] for it is ſo Hebrew, being as much in effect as, The Lord confound thee, how ſhould I ſave thee? and now he rageth againſt Eliſhah like a mad man, whereas, the cauſe of all this evill was in himſelfe his idolatry and wickedneſſe, of which V. 30. he ſhould now have repented, and deſired the Prophet to pray for him: verſ. 30. He was affected with ſorrow to rend his garments and to put on ſackcloth, but he rent not his heart, which he ſhould chiefly have done, Ioel 2. 13. and without doing which all this was hypocriſie, being yet well uſed by the godly to expreſſe the contrition of their hearts. For the woman, that complained to him, he ſhould have adjudged her to die for her murder, ſeeing ſhe ought rather to have died her ſelf, then to have committed this bloudy ſinne. And however her crying thus to the king was accidentall, there was a divine providence in it, to make him ſee the iſſue of ſo foul ſinning, juſt according to the threatning of the law, Deut. 28. where this judgement of a mothers eating her own childe is particularly ſpoken of.

Abulenſ.

But Eliſha ſate in his houſe, and the Elders with him, &c.] That is, other Prophets, his diſciples ſaith Ioſephus, lamenting the ſinnes and miſeries of the times. And they are called elders, ſaith Martyr, partly becauſe of the age of ſome of them, and partly for the wiſedome and gravity that was in them, as in men of greateſt antiquity. Teſtatus thinketh, that the houſe, in which he was, was not his own, but another mans, but onely he at this time dwelt therein, becauſe he was poor, and had left all, when he began firſt to follow Elijah. But to let this paſſe, as not materiall, although I do not beleeve that Eliſhah left all ſo, as that he had now no houſe of his own, ſeeing he was never required ſo to do. As he ſate in his houſe, he perceived by the ſpirit, that the king had ſent a man to cut off his head; meaning himſelf to follow immediately after to ſee whether it were done, and therefore he ſaid to his company, See ye not, that the ſonne of the murtherer hath ſent to take away my head? calling him ſo, becauſe his father murthered Naboth, and in heart he was already the murtherer of him, and he biddeth them to ſhut the door againſt him; that is, not with a minde to reſiſt authority, although tyranizing, but that whileſt they kept him out by ſtrong hand, the king might come to countermand it, being now, as he knew, touched with repentance and haſtening after him, that execution might not be done; as the next words declare, Is not the noiſe of his Lords feet behinde him? Thus Theodoret. He did not this, but he threatned it, but he being by and by moved with repentance, ran unto him repreſſing the ſlaughter. And to the ſame effect Ioſephus, he bade them delay the man, ſhutting the door againſt him, for the king would by and by be there, repenting him of his command. And accordingly he came with haſte to ſave the prophet from this danger, and being come charged him, that he ſought not by his prayers to ſave the city in the midſt of ſo great calamities; which laſt paſſage is not according to the ſacred hiſtory, wherein he is ſaid, to have ſpoken theſe things.

*Theod.qu.*23. in 4. Reg. Hoc quidem non fecit ſed minatus eſt ſe eum interempturum, ut qui negligeret vel ſponte deſpiceret ſummam calamitatem, ſed ſtatim ductus pænitentia accurrit cadem reprimens.

Joſephus.

V. 33.

Behold this evill is from the Lord, what ſhould I expect from the Lord any more?] And it ſeemeth, according to Martyr, that at his coming ſome words to this effect were firſt uttered by the Prophet, (O King) be not ſo impatient, but wait upon God; then he in replying ſaid thus, meaning, that the Lord had made their miſery as great as he could, and therefore now whatſoever he did, he would no more wait upon him, but yield to the enemy; the ſaying of one, that utterly deſpaired of help from God, and therefore not likely to have blamed the Prophet for not ſeeking unto him by his prayers. Yea ſome, as the Chaldee paraphraſt, think, that the Prophet moved him to pray to the Lord; unto which he replied, this evill cometh from him, which is as great as he can lay upon me, why then ſhould I ſeek any more unto him? The words indeed are ſo brought in, as if they were the words of the meſſenger, for it is ſaid, The meſſenger came down unto him and ſaid, behold this evill, &c. and ſo it is taken by ſome; but moſt expoſitours take it, as ſpoken by the king, both for that the meſſenger was not ſent to ſpeak in the kings name, but to do execution, and alſo becauſe chap. 7. 1. it appeareth, that the king was come thither, ſeeing the prince upon whom he leaned, was there to hear, and to reply to Eliſhah propheſying of plenty. Whereas it is ſaid, then the meſſenger came down to him and ſaid, the words are thus to be diſtinguiſhed; he came to Eliſhah his houſe, but was not ſuffered to enter, and then the king following him at the heels, when Eliſhah had moved him to wait upon God and ſeek to him, ſaid theſe words, implying, that he would hold out no longer in expecting help from the Lord, who had brought him to ſo great a ſtreight, but preſently yield up the city, and ſo the Syrians ſhould triumph over the God of Iſrael, and magnifie their gods above him. Then Eliſhah propheſied as followeth.

V. 1. BVt Eliſhab ſaid, hear ye the word of the Lord, thus ſaith the Lord, to morrow by this time, a meaſure of fine flowr ſhall be bought for a ſhekle, and two meaſures of barley for a ſhekle, in the gate of Samaria.] Although the king had ſent to behead Eliſhab, yet he ſeeing the extremity in which he was, ſtood not to expoſtulate with him about it, but accepting of his recantation, ſpake the greateſt comfort unto him that might be. Whereby is ſhewed, that the Lord is ſo mercifull, that he graciouſly paſſeth over that which is uttered impatiently in extream miſery, and provideth notwithſtanding for his people, as their neceſſity requireth. There could not any thing more joyfull and fully contenting have been ſpoken by the Prophet, then to promiſe plenty, and to ſet the very day and hour; and therefore, as Ioſephus ſaith, the king rejoyced greatly when he heard it, but his impious ſervant on whom he leaned (which argued that he was in great grace with him, as Naaman with the king of Syria) replied ſcoffingly with this great blaſphemy, that if the Lord ſhould make windowes in heaven, and rain down corn, it could not be ſo; as if he had never read or regarded not, what was recorded touching his feeding of the Iſraelites with Manna in the wilderneſſe, being 600000. forty years together, and with fleſh their fill an whole moneth. Moſes himſelf doubted, as Martyr hath it, when God promiſed ſo to do, how it could be done; but his doubting was out of admiration, as the Virgin Maries afterwards, and not out of unbelief, concluding it utterly impoſſible. Touching the meaſure which ſhould be bought ſo cheap, it is Satum in Hebrew and Chald. and this word is alſo uſed by Ioſephus, but in the Septuagint tranſlation, Modius, and likewiſe in the vulgar Latin; but according to Ierom, a ſatum is as much as the meaſure called modius and half, becauſe it contained 6. cabs, the modius but four. A cab then being 6. pints, as was partly touched before, ſix of them, which was a ſatum, amounted to 36. that is, four gallons and half, that is, half a gallon more then half a buſhel, and comparing this with the price of doves-dung at this time, we ſhall finde it to be 120. times cheaper, and barley 240. which was a moſt admirable fall of price on ſuch a ſudden. This prince, that would not beleeve that it could be ſo, was by and by threatned, that he ſhould ſee it, but not taſte thereof, becauſe he ſhould by Gods juſt judgement be troden to death, as hereafter appeareth. If he ſhall ſeem not worthy ſo ſore a puniſhment for not beleeving the Prophet, who ſhewed no ſigne to prove the truth of his propheſie; Toſtatus ſaith well, that he did not onely not beleeve Eliſhab, but not the power of God himſelf, for which he was worthily ſo puniſhed, and he alone beleeved not, as it ſeemeth, when the king and all the reſt that heard it, by reaſon of their former experience, that he was a true Prophet of God, beleeved it.

V. 3. There were 4 lepers at the entrance of the gate, &c.] The meanes whereby God brought it about, that corn proved ſo plentifull on ſuch a ſudden, was by cauſing a noiſe of chariots and horſes, and of a great army to be heard in the Syrian army, v. 6. whereupon they imagined, that the kings of the Hittites and of Egypt, were hired to help Iſrael, and ſo haſted away leaving their tents full of all manner of proviſion; and the means whereby the Iſraelites beſieged in Samaria came to know this, was the deſperate adventure of foure lepers, who for their leproſie were not ſuffered to dwell within the city, but without the gate, they being at the point of periſhing by famine, went to the tents of the Syrians very early in the morning, and ſo diſcovered it. The Rabbins ſay that theſe foure were Gehazi and his three ſons, but without all ground. But whatſoever men they were, it ſeemeth, that they had hitherto received ſome proviſion out of the city, but now they began to be in extreame want, and this made them deſperate. And from their living without the gate all this time of this ſiege, and not being cut off by the Syrians we may gather, that the camp lay a good diſtance from the city, neither did they fight with Iſrael with any other weapon but with famin. For the ſound, which the Lord cauſed the Syrians to heare; ſome think that it was not in the ayre, but only in their eares, becauſe thus the Samaritans ſhould have heard it as well as they; but this followeth not, ſeeing God can keep ſome from ſeeing or hearing that which others heare, as appeareth by the example of Eliſhah and his ſervant in Dothan, and of Saul and his company, Act. 9. If it be demanded what Hittites were theſe, who they thought came to help them, ſeeing they were all bondmen to the Iſraelites, 1 Kings 9. 20, 21. It is to be underſtood that there was Chalim the ſonne of Iaphet, Gen. 10. 4. whoſe poſterity were called Hittites alſo, and the Iſles inhabited; and of theſe Ioſephus underſtandeth them, only they are written with כ, but the Hittites here mentioned with ח. But how came it to be known to him that wrot this hiſtory, ſeeing none of the Iſraelites were there to diſcover it? doe not think with ſome, that he knew it by revelation, but that the Syrians themſelves made it ſo publick, that all nations about could not but take notice of it.

V. 8. The lepers coming to the forſaken tents, where they found nothing, but horſes and aſſes without, and within abundance of proviſion and treaſure went into one, and did eat and drink, and then carried out treaſure and hid it in the ground, and having done ſo the ſecond time, Ioſephus ſaith 4 times, they feared, that if they concealed this good newes, it would be found to be a great ſin in them, for which they ſhould be liable to puniſhment. P. Martyr. And they had indeed ſaith Martyr, done already more then they could juſtifie, ſeeing the prey belonged not unto them, but was to bear the kings diſpoſing, and till he gave liberty to take and carry away any of it, it was theft in ſuch, as did ſo. Sallianus. But others ſay, that the taking of theſe things was lawfull and without all fault, being made ſo by the juſtice of warre, and their own neceſſity. But why then did they hide them? It is ſaid they did this, as not thinking the Syrians to be fled quite away: but this is contrary to the courſe of the hiſtory, ſeeing if they had thought ſo, they could not have come to tell the king, that they were gone. Moreover it had been a great fault in them, when all the city was in ſuch extremity for want of food, to delay longer the bringing unto them this joyfull newes. Here it may ſeem ſtrange, that in flying away they ſhould leave their horſes, and that when they were fled a good way of, and perceived none to follow them, that they returned not to their tents again. But the ſame God which ſent the feare at the firſt, could make it continue and purſue them many miles homeward, and the terrour ſtricken into them to tranſport them ſo farre, as not once to think upon their beaſts to carry them, or not to dare to ſtay to bridle them. The news of the Syrians flight being come to the king, he ſuſpecting that it was done in policy, ſent out two horſe men to ſee whether they were really fled away or not. In conſulting about it v. 13. it is ſaid, let them take five of the horſes which remain. And, V. 14. They took therefore two chariots of horſes.] Kimchi ſaith, ſome of the five which remained; Junius. by two chariots of horſes Iunius underſtandeth, [duos equos vectarios] or road-horſes, ſerving to carry men upon the way. Others better [currus equorum, i. equos curules] of the Kings chariot-horſes. Ioſephus, to make both theſe ſayings the better to agree, hath it thus; Let two horſemen be ſent out, &c. V. 15. And two horſemen were ſent ſaith the Septuagint, as the meaning is. And following them unto Iordan, they ſaw garments and veſſels ſtrewed in the way. They caſt away their garments, that they might run the lighter; by veſſels ſome underſtand their armour and inſtruments of warre, and ſome, precious veſſels of ſilver and gold: but ſeeing the word כלים ſignifieth either, it is rather to be conceived, that inſtruments of warre are here meant, becauſe if their haſte were ſuch, that they would not ſtay to take their horſes, much leſſe would they take any luggage, but their weapons onely, and growing more and more faint-hearted, they would no longer bear the very burthen of them, but truſting rather to their heels, caſt them away.

V. 16. Newes being brought to the king, the people went ſoon out with him to the prey, and the corn which they found there in wonderfull great aboundance being brought to ſell to the citizens (who ſtayed behinde, that were no ſouldiers) in the gate of the city, the unbeleeving prince, was by the King appointed to keep good order amongſt them, that they might not in coming over haſtily throng and bear down one another. But whileſt he attended upon this office, having firſt ſeen ſome corn ſold ſo, as was propheſied, he himſelf was born down and troden to death. And ſo none of the Lords word fell to the ground, but was all fulfilled, that we might not be unbeleeving, but beleeving in things, which have not ſo ſudden ac-compliſhment, for all promiſes ſhall likewiſe take effect in the time ſet by God. Ioſephus, whom alſo Martyr followeth, ſaith, that he was ſet to keep the people from coming out too haſtily, when they went to take the prey, which cannot be, becauſe ſo his treading to death had bin before that any corn had bin ſold, or he had ſeen the cheapneſſe propheſied of. And the ſelling of it at ſuch a price is firſt ſpoken of and then his death; plainly intimating, that it was not in the going out to take the prey that this happened, but after the taking, the ſouldiers returned to ſell it at the gate of the city. And after they had begun to ſell ſo to ſome, the report going throughout the city, ſuch multitudes came thronging to buy, that he who was ſet to keep them back, was troden down by the violence of the comers, hunger, which brought them being impatient of any ſtay. And this judgement is thought by ſome to have come upon him rather then any other, that his ſinne in his former oppreſ-ſions of the people, of which it is not unlikely but that he was guilty, might have a ſutable puniſhment in his being preſſed to death under their feet. But I paſſe this over as probable onely, foraſmuch as kings favourites who are wicked, are com-monly found to be oppreſſours of the people. The puniſhment ſuted well with his ſin howſoever, in that he, who ſlighted ſo much the power of God, trampling the honour thereof, as it were, under his feet, was ſo ſlighted by the multitude in the great and high place, as that they ſticked not to tread him to death under their feet. A like death Martyr noteth, that Conſtantine the laſt ſuffered in the gate of Con-ſtantinople, when the Grecian army preſſed into the city and took it. Whereas Sa-lianus conjectureth, that this prince might be ſet over the gate, leſt any enemies lurking about ſhould enter into it, being empty of people; it is altogether improba-ble, for both they were now ſecure in reſpect of enemies, and all the people were not out to take the prey, but the ſouldiers onely, elſe what need had they to have bought? Touching this huge quantity of corn and treaſure, it is not amiſſe conje-ctured by ſome, that the Syrians came to be thus well ſtored, by pillaging and forra-ging the countrey about during the time, that they lay in ſiege, but how by the power of God, they were forced to his high honour, to leave it there again with advantage; and to flee ſhamefully away. Yet, as all expoſitours note, the ſubjects of that king were ſo hardened in their wickedneſſe through a cuſtome of ſinning, as that no reformation from idolatry, or thankeſgiving to God, followed for this great deliverance, which made the Lord to meditate upon another ſweeping judge-ment by the Aſſyrians, and to bring it afterwards, chap. 17. when by many corre-ctions following after this, they were not yet amended.

Lyra makes a good morall of this, from the beginning to tell of the 4 lepers, ſay-ing, theſe lepers ſet forth preachers, who teach well, but live ill, becauſe the leproſy of ſin breaks out upon them, however they tell good tidings; the tents of the Syrians full of riches left to the men of Samaria, the noiſe of armies only being heard, the na-tions full of all treaſure, coming under the power of the Church, onely by the ſound of the Apoſtles preaching; the unbeleeving prince, ſuch as continue in their infide-lity under the preaching of the Word, who ſhall finally be troden in the wine-preſſe of Gods wrath for ever.

CHAP. VIII.

Here it is commemorated how Eliſhah foretold to the Shunamite, of whom ſee, *Chap.*4. a famine of ſeven yeares, warning her therefore to depart out of the land. For it is not to be conceived, that he now foretold it after the ſiege of Samaria, ſeeing not long after this it ended, and ſhe returned home againe, as is here ſhewed. The foretelling of this then was about the time of his raiſing her ſon to life, ſeeing that within a while after a famine is ſaid to have beene in thoſe parts, *Chap.*4.38. Wherefore by Iunius it is rendered, Eliſhah had ſpoken to the woman, &c. But to what yeare of Ioram to referre the beginning or ending of it, is uncertaine. But moſt probably it being begun before the Syrian army came and infeſted the countrey, it was continued and increaſed by their long lying there and taking away and deſtroying their corne and proviſion, till at laſt it grew moſt extreme. And here Martyr well noteth, that whereas the famine threatened by Elijah was but three yeares and an halfe, this was twice as long; ſo that judgements being removed, and ſinne ſtill continuing, they are aggravated and ſent againe in a much more grievous manner. But ſee the thankfulneſſe of Eliſhah to her, that had beene hoſpitable to him. He not onely obteined a ſonne for her, and reſtored it to life, but thinking that he could never doe enough for her, who had ſhewed ſuch kindneſſe to him, he giveth her in particular warning of, the danger to come, that ſhe might provide for her ſelfe elſewhere. And ſuch ought to be our thankfulneſſe to our benefactors, and will be, if we be the ſervants of God as Eliſhah was, in way of recompence to doe them all the good that we can. But why did he not rather advertiſe her husband, who was the head? Anſw. It is moſt probable, that ſhe was now a widow, for her husband is ſaid long before to have been an old man: or he being now aged and decayed committed all his worldly buſineſſe to her mannaging being religious and diſcreet. And ſhe went and dwelt in the land of the Philiſtines ſeven yeares. David Kimbi, to ſhew the great danger, that ſhe and hers eſcaped by departing out the land of Iſrael aggravateth the miſeries of the famiſhed in Iſrael in thoſe yeares beyond all credit, as if the firſt yeare all their proviſion being ſpent, they had the ſecond yeare lived upon the ſlender fruits, which the firſt yeare brought forth, and the third yeare upon the creatures, which were cleane, the fourth upon the uncleane, as aſſes, horſes, camels, &c. the fift upon creeping things, the ſixt upon the fleſh of their children, and the ſeventh upon the fleſh of their owne armes, as Toſtatus recites, and confutes it. Yet Martyr ſaith, that ſome thinke this to have been the famine of which Ioel ſpeaketh, *Chap.*1 1. which if it were it was moſt grievous. By her removing into Paleſtine it ſeemeth, that other countreyes about were not puniſhed at this time with famine alſo. It was a particular judgement upon this land for the wickednes thereof, and whether Iudah were thus alſo afflicted or no is uncertain; yet it ſeemeth, that it was, becauſe otherwiſe ſhe would probably have removed thither rather, unleſſe the ſtate of that countrey was ſuch, as that they had there no more but what might ſuffice themſelves. The countrey of Paleſtine and Egypt are noted to have beene very fruitfull, yea at the times, when Canaan laboured with famine in the dayes of Abraham and Iſaac, who likewiſe in the caſe of neceſſity removed thither, and therefore this womans going thither to ſojourne ought not to be called in queſtion, how ſhe could, being godly, goe to live in an idolatrous countrey, for Eliſhah alſo went and lived in Syria, *verſ.*7. and then the King of Syria ſent unto him in his ſickneſſe, and if Elijah alſo went and lived in Sarepta, and Moſes many yeares in Midian, for neceſſity hath no law, as the Proverbe is.

David Kimbi.

V.3, 4. She being returned at the end of ſeven yeares, came to deſire juſtice of the King, and to have her houſe and land reſtored unto her, which it ſeemeth, were taken away and poſſeſſed by ſome other in her abſence, and this the King both granteth and that reſtitution ſhould be made of all the fruits of her ground ſince the time of her departing; which ſheweth, that even in this time of the famine the land of Iſrael was not altogether unfruitfull, as neither when that ſore famine was in Iacobs time, *Gen.*43. for he ſent to Ioſeph then ſome of the fruits of the land, *verſ.*1 1. viz. honey, nuts and almonds, &c. The man, whom he appointed to ſee this done, was an eunuch; for ſuch attended much upon Kings in thoſe dayes, and ſpecially upon Queenes, as we may ſee in the hiſtory of Iezzabel, 2 King.9.32. and of Ahaſhueroſh in the booke of Heſter. Yet it may be noted, that the cuſtome of making, and of keeping eunuchs came from the heathen, neither did any godly King ever keepe any: but this is the firſt, as I remember, of the Kings of Iſrael, that are ſaid to have had one.

Now it is noted, that at the time of her crying to the King, he was talking with Gehazi,

P. Martyr.

Gebazi, and asking him of the miracles of Eliſhah his Maſter. From whence ſome gather, as was noted before, that this hiſtory is miſplaced, and ought to come in before the healing of *Naaman, Chap.*5. becauſe after that Gehazi was a leper, he was ſeparated from the company of other men, and ſo the King could not have this communication with him. But it is anſwered, that lepers were not ſo ſeparated, but that others might come and talke with them, and therefore this argument is too weake to prove any thing. Moreover, it being at the end of ſeven yeares of famine that Ioram had this talke with Gehazi and he being ſmitten moſt probably at the beginning of it with the leproſie, it cannot be, that they had this communication together, before he was a leper. Laſtly, Iorams inquiry ſeemeth to have been made, when Eliſhah now growing towards his end had done working of miracles, and was abſent in Syria, as Martyr noteth, becauſe he would have him tell of all the great things, that Eliſhah had done, as ſpeaking of one, that had even now finiſhed his courſe.

V.7.

Chron. Heb.

After this Eliſhah went to Damaſcus, and Benhadad being ſick, it was told him, &c.] Martyr yieldeth two reaſons why Eliſhah went thither, 1 that he might declare unto Hazael, that he ſhould be King of Syria, which indeed, was long before given in charge to Elijah, and Eliſhah moſt probably by his direction given him before he was taken away now went to doe it; 2 to avoid the danger of the great famine, which ſtill continued. And herein Sallianus alſo agreeth, making it the ſixt yeare of the famine, when he went thither. The firſt of which reaſons I willingly embrace, but becauſe it is ſaid expreſly to have been done after theſe things, that is, after the ſiege broken up and the great ſcarcity turned into plenty, I cannot think that the famine was any cauſe of his going thither. Whereas Sallianus ſaith, that howſoever there was plenty in Samaria, yet the countrey might ſtill labour with want: I anſwer, Eliſhah dwelt in Samaria, and therefore he had not need to have departed out of the kingdome, although there were ſcarcity ſtill in other parts, but how it can be, that other parts were in want now, I cannot ſee; Samaria the chiefeſt city of the kingdome being ſo full, that from thence they might be ſupplied in all other places. If it be demanded, how Eliſhah fulfilled that, which was given in charge to Elijah, ſeeing he was bidden to annoint Hazael King; it may be, that he did, although it be not mentioned: for in Chronico Hebræorum, it is ſaid, that he annointed him. If not, his declaring to him, that he ſhould be King, was, as an annointing of him to this office.

Joſephus.

Touching the ſickneſſe of Benhadad at this time, Ioſephus ſaith, that it came by extream ſorrow for his hoaſts late ſhamefull flight, when none purſued them to his ſo great dammage, and ignominy. He alſo thereby conceived that God was againſt him, and ſo he ſhould never proſper in any of his undertakings, which aggravated his griefe without meaſure. Touching the prophets going into an enemies country, ſo lately foiled by his meanes, and before maligned for diſcovering his conſultations to the king of Iſrael, it is to be underſtood, that he was directed thither by God, and therefore feared no danger, there were more with him then againſt him, as was ſhewed him at Dothan. And for the Syrians, their hearts could not but be wonne towards him by his kindneſſe ſhewed them in Samaria in delivering them from the danger of death, the king alſo being now ſick and needing his help, it was no time to offer him any diſcourteſie, but gladly to receive him, being a man whom he knew to be ſo gracious with the higheſt Majeſty, and of whoſe power he had experience in his ſervant Naaman.

V.8,9.

Benhadad being certified of the prophets coming to Damaſcus, ſent Hazael to him with a preſent of all the goood things of Damaſcus, the load of 40 camels to enquire of him, whether he ſhould not recover his health again, meaning doubtleſſe by this great kingly gift to win his favor ſo far as to pray for him. Whereby we may ſee in what honour and eſtimation Eliſhah was even amongſt the Syrians. The king preſumed not to ſend for him, for king Ahaziah doing ſo for Elijah, had his meſſengers deſtroyed by fire; yea 3 kings before humbled themſelves in their ſtreight to come unto him, being warned moſt probably by that example, and now the king of Syria ſendeth a moſt honourable Embaſſadour to him, calling himſelfe his ſon, thy ſonne Benhadad. By all the good things of Damaſcus underſtand ſome of all, and the very beſt. But whether the prophet took this preſent or no, is uncertain; and moſt conjecture, that he did not, becauſe he refuſed Naamans, and if wee receive that Septuagint tranſlation called Complutenſis & Regia. Hazael ſtood before him and ſet the gifts to him, untill hee was aſhamed] he did certainly refuſe it.

Hazael having done his meſſage, Eliſha anſwered, tell him, in living thou ſhalt V. 9. live, yet the Lord hath ſhewed me, that dying, he ſhall dye. Hebr. it is in the text, לא ſay unto him, in living, thou ſhalt not live, and the Lord hath ſhewed me, &c. but in the V. 10. margin it is לו to him, and ſo it runneth in all expoſitions except in that of Iunius, Junius.
who hath it, ſay not, in living, thou ſhalt live] giving this for the meaning, although this diſeaſe be not unto death, yet thou ſhalt not recover out of it, but certainly dye.
But whereas לו in the margine is taken in, and לא in the text left out, take wee them in both, and the ſenſe will be plain. The king ſends to enquire, whether he he ſhould recover, Eliſhah anſwereth, ſay to him no; indeed thou mighteſt live, not-withſtanding this ſickneſſe, but by ſome other meanes, thou ſhalt dye, and not recover; or leaving לו in the margine out, ſay no, thou ſhalt live, &c. David Kimbi ſaith, that the prophet in his anſwer reſpected two divers things, and therefore his Kimbi.
words are divers, firſt reſpecting the diſeaſe, he ſaid that he ſhould live, becauſe he ſhould not dye of that. 2. Reſpecting the evill means, that he ſhould uſe to make him away, he ſaid, that he ſhould dye, ſpeaking the one to be delivered by way of anſwer to his enquiry, and the other to prevent the calling in queſtion of the truth of his propheſie, which otherwiſe might have been queſtioned, when the king died ſo ſoon after.

But others, which Martyr moſt approveth, ſay that the imperative is put for the P. Martyr future tenſe, as in many other places; particularly, Gen. 20. 7. and Prov. 3. 4. Say, that is, thou ſhalt ſay, or maiſt ſay, if thou wilt, unto him, thou ſhalt live, for I both know, that he ſhall not dye of this ſickneſſe, and that thou wouldſt willingly ſpeak pleaſing things unto him, but the Lord hath ſhewed me, that before he reco-vereth, he ſhall certainly dye by ſome other meanes. Other expoſitions of ſome, which he alſo mentioneth, are not worth the naming, as that he would not have the truth plainly told him, leaſt being ſtrucken therewith, he ſhould preſently dye, and ſo the prophet be endangered by his ſubjects for the great love that they bare unto him, or that he meant that he ſhould live eternally, as being one that was converted to the true God, but this is both to preſume upon that which is improbable, and to make him to equivocate, from which he abhorred. Of all theſe expoſitions I pre-ferre that of Iunius, and ſo the prophet neither bad him, nor permitted him to ſpeak otherwiſe, then as the event ſhould prove, although as the ſame Iunius hath it, he no leſſe truly reported his anſwer, v. 14. then he dealt faithfully with his maſter, when as he ſtrangled him and ſtopt his breath the next day; and upon this Lyra final- Lyra. ly reſteth, ſaying that the Prophet told him that he ſhould not live, ſo that Hazael manifeſtly lyed in returning his anſwer.

And he ſet his countenance, and ſet it till he was aſhamed, and the man of God wept] V. 11. thus it is in Hebr. being rendred word for word. How the Septuagint have it hath been ſhewed before, and in the Septuagint Franckfort, he ſet the gifts to him, till they were corrupted and he was aſhamed. The vulgar Latin, He ſtood with him and was troubled even to the ſuffuſion of his countenance. Iun. Quamvis contineret vultum ſuum & componeret dudum, flevit tandem vir dei. Here becauſe it is not ſaid, who did thus? although Iunius hath it expreſly the man of God, and Toſtatus and Vatablus expound it of him, ſome refer it to Hazael, as the Septuagint and Ioſephus, and that I take it, more rightly; both becauſe when it is ſpoken what the man of God did, he is expreſly named, and ſomething was ſpoken, wherewith Hazael might be affected, when he was told, that his maſter ſhould ſurely dye, it being then hap pi-ly in his minde, which he did ſoon put in practice; but he would now feign ſorrow at the hearing of it, and ſet and offered him the gift howſoever, to expreſſe which another word is uſed after the firſt ſetting ſpoken of, and he continued thus to do; till he was aſhamed; as thinking, that the man of God knew that he did it not ſeriouſly, but feignedly, having other things in his minde tending to treachery againſt his maſter, and cruelty againſt his brethren, the Iſraelites. Then Eliſhah wept forſomuch as he ſaw into the inhumane malice of his heart againſt the people of God.

V. 13. And Hazael in ſubmiſſe words asking the reaſon, he ſaid, that he ſhould break down Fulfilled 2 Kin. 10.32. the ſtrong holds of the children of Iſrael, ſlay their yong men with the ſword, daſh out the infants brains, and rip up women with childe. Of which when he thought ſtrange, ſaying, am I a dog? he anſwered, the Lord hath ſhewed me, that thou ſhalt be king of Syria. And upon this it is likely, that he began to meditate the death of his maſter. If it be demanded, how Eliſhah may be juſtified in telling him thus, P.Martyr. which was a way to ſet him on to practice this treaſon againſt his king? Martyr ſaith well, that prophets muſt declare what God hath committed unto them, although the wicked turn it into an occaſion of rebellion, as did Ieroboam before, that the word of God, which is to ſalvation to ſome, might turn to their juſt damnation.
For that propheſying of ſuch things, doth not neceſſarily put men on ambitiouſly to ſeek them, appeareth in the example of David, who being anointed King by Samuel, was yet moſt averſe from practiſing any thing againſt king Saul. Theſe words of Hazael, What, am I thy ſervant a dog? &c. are by ſome drawn to another ſenſe, being read thus without any diſtinction, What am I thy ſervant a contemptible dog for power, that I ſhould do theſe great things? and the Prophet anſwers accordingly, 1 Sam.24.15. Thou ſhalt be King of Syria, and then thou ſhalt have power. This had bin probable indeed, if he had ſaid [a dead dog] as David ſometime to Saul, but becauſe it is the nature of a dog to rend and tear without reſpect, it is better to take it as ſpoken in regard of ſavage cruelty, as abhorring then there from, but he anſwered, that he ſhould be King of Syria, and ſo he would change his minde, as many Lyra. men do; according to that proverb, honores mutant mores. Lyra joyneth both theſe expoſitions together, I am not ſo potent that I can, or ſo cruell that I would do thus. And indeed this was ſuch horrible cruelty, that no heart could think upon it without relenting, and therefore Eliſhah fore-ſeeing it by the ſpirit, could not but weep, as Ieremiah afterwards for the miſeries of his people preſent, and Chriſt for their miſeries, which he foreſaw ſhould come.

V. 14,15. Hazael returning to his maſter told him, that he ſhould live, but the next day he took a thick cloth, and having dipped it in water ſpread it upon his face, and he died.
P. Martyr. This, ſaith Martyr ſome expound, he did as done in good will to cool him, being extreamly hot with a feaver, but whileſt the cloth was too hard preſſed, his breath was ſtopped: but it is cōmonly & beſt taken for a voluntary act under a colour of cooling, to haſten his end. And he being his great friend, could not ſo much as be ſuſpected as guilty of his death, when he had done thus; becauſe neither could the King cry out, neither did any ſcar appear upon his dead body afterwards. The cloth laid upon Chald. Paraph. operimentum villoſum; whatſoever it were, it was a treacherous part in him, neither did the propheſie of Eliſhah bear him out in ſo doing, becauſe although he told him that he ſhould be King, yet he told him not when, neither did he preſcribe him ſuch means to come to the kingdome. He was in ſhew an obedient ſervant and friend, but indeed did bear a treacherous minde againſt his maſter, for his kingdomes Note. ſake. As Martyr noteth it to be the caſe of many princes, which maketh their eſtate miſerable, their neareſt friends and thoſe, in whom they truſt moſt, proving their moſt dangerous enemies to their deſtruction; ſo Claudius Cæſar had his bane given him by his wife Agrippina in a poiſoned bullet, that her ſonne Nero might the ſooner come to the Empire; and Livia, the wife of Octavius Auguſtus was his death, when hee lay grievouſly ſick, that hee might not alter his will, whereby he had given the Empire to Tyberius, her ſonne by another husband, and give it to a grandchild that he had then by his daughter. To conclude the hiſtory of Benhadad, Benjamin the Iew ſaith, that in Damaſcus there was a moſt rare building, which they ſaid, was the pallace of king Benhadad, called Gumagh Dameſk, that is, the Moſche of Damaſcus, which had a wall of glaſſe built by art Magick, in which were ſo many holes, as there be dayes in the year, for the Sunne to ſhine into one

each day, ſo that hereby the day of the moneth and year might be known; within the houſes were alſo bathes of gold and ſilver, and in them a great tub like a throne, of the ſame matter, in which two or three might ſit and bath themſelves. And Ioſephus ſaith, that Benhadad and Hazael were worſhipped by the Syrians as gods, becauſe they ſo much enlarged the kingdom, and beautified the city with many Temples and other fair buildings.

V. 16.

To leave now again the hiſtory of the Kings of Iſrael, and to bring on that of the Kings of Iudah, v. 16. The fifth year of Ioram the ſonne of Ahab and of Iehoſhaphat, Ioram the ſonne of Iehoſhaphat reigned, &c.] It is ſaid before, 2 King. 1. 17. that Ioram began to reign over Iſrael, the ſecond year of Ioram the ſonne of Iehoſhaphat, how then could he begin the fifth of Ioram of Iſrael, when as in his fifth year he had been ſeven years king, according to that Chronology? But I have been large already in reconciling this difference, upon 2 King. 1. 17. reſting in fine upon this, that there by the ſecond year of Ioram of Iudah, is meant the ſecond year of his fathers making him his conſort in the kingdome, here he having been a titular king together with his father 7. years, beginneth to have all the government cõmitted to him, the old king thenceforth medling no more with matter of government, but giving himſelf to prepare for his death, and therefore it is ſaid, the fifth year of Ioram king of Iſrael, and of Iehoſhaphat; that is, in his life-time, although he departed out of this life ſoon after. Here it is to be noted, that in the regia Biblia, both Latin and Greek, theſe words [and of Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah] are wanting, and although they be in the Hebrew, and Chaldee, and Græc. Sixti, yet Toſtatus rejecteth them as redundant, and Vatablus thinketh they are to be read with a parentheſis, and Iehoſhaphat king of Iudah ſubintellige (was dead) but this is forced. Some to make the ſenſe perfect underſtand theſe words, and the fifth of Iehoſhaphat, although it were much more, ſaying, that here his time is counted from the time of his deliverance in the warre againſt the Syrians, 2 Chron. 20. but this is both an unheard of way of counting, and needleſſe, ſeeing it may be ſufficiently ſupplied with theſe words at large, in the dayes of Iehoſhaphat. Martyr conjectureth, that when he went with Ahab to battle at Ramoth Gilead, he made Ioram his ſonne King, and from that time a new account of his reign is to begin, it being now the fifth year, as of Ioram of Iſrael, therefore the fifth is onely once named for them both, it being the fifth of Iehoſhaphat reigning together with his ſonne. And from this time of Iorams reigning alone, muſt his eight years be counted, that there may be an agreement with the time of his death, the 12. year of Ioram of Iſrael, verſ. 25. when Ochoziah his ſonne ſucceeded him, and yet neither will it agree ſo, unleſſe the fifth year of Ioram of Iſrael be counted one, and his twelfth another of theſe eight, parts of years being put for years, which is not unuſuall.

Toſtatus.
Vatablus.

2 Chron. 21. 1. Ioram is ſaid to have reigned in Iehoſhaphats ſtead after his death, not before, and v. 5. beginning at this time, he is ſaid to have been 32. years old, when he began to reign, and to have reigned eight years. And if he began his reign whileſt his father lived, how is it ſaid, that he reigned in his ſtead he being dead? and if after his death he were but 32. and reigned eight years, how can it be that he was 32. his father yet living, and that he reigned no more then 8. years? Anſ. Ioram is ſaid at three ſeverall times to heve reigned, or to have been King. Firſt, when his father made him King together with himſelf, of which that is to be underſtood, 2 King. 1. 17. Secondly, when waxing old, and deſirous to diſburthen himſelf of worldly employment, he comitted all the government of the kingdome to him, of which that 2 King. 8. 16. is to be underſtood, and happily verſ. 3. of this chapter. Thirdly, when his father being dead he reigned as ſole King, of which 2 King. 22. 51. and this 2 Chro. 21. 1. And from hence his years of reigning are to be reckoned, and of his age when he began, and this moſt probably was within the compaſſe of the ſame year, that his father committed all the government to him, as David had done before to his ſonne Solomon, that ſeeing him in his full kingly authority before his death, and that which might ſatisfie his other ſix ſonnes being at the ſame time conferred upon him, according to v. 3. there might be none occaſion of contention amongſt them, although it fell out otherwiſe, as is by and by ſhewed, v. 4. For

2 ch.21.4. the kingdome being delivered to Ioram, and great gifts of gold and ſilver, and penſions, and fenced cities in Iudah to his other ſix ſonnes, wherein they might ſit as preſidents, he moſt cruelly ſlew them all, being impatient of any honours conferred upon them, as derogatory to his royall dignity, ſoon after the death of his father, and alſo ſome Princes that he might have the whole power of collating their dignities upon whom he pleaſed.

Tradit. Hebr. In Tradit. Hebr. it is ſaid, that he ſlew his brethren becauſe they were godly, and inſiſted in the ſteps of their good father, from which he was moſt averſe, as being wholly addicted to the wayes of the houſe of Ahab; and if ſo, moſt probably the Princes ſlain alſo were their ſpeciall friends, and like affected to them for matter of religion. And for this it ſeemeth to make, which followeth, v. 6. He walked in the wayes of the kings of Iſrael, &c. And it is not improbable, that he was put on this wickedneſſe, as not thinking himſelfe ſecure in the kingdom, whileſt they lived, or any that might revenge their death, as he might fear, that they being ſlain, theſe Princes would doe. But why are the Princes called [Princes of Iſrael] when as he reigned not over Iſrel, but Iudah? Anſ. by the ſame reaſon that Iehoſ. 6 ſons are ſaid Hebr. to be the ſons of Iehoſh. king of Iſrael, v. 2. The word Iſrael is not here put for the kingdom of the 10 tribes, but for the whole ſtate of Iacobs children called Iſrael, and thus he is ſaid to be king of Iſrael ſynechdochically, becauſe he was king of part of Iſrael, and accordingly theſe are called Princes of Iſrael, becauſe of Iudah, a tribe of Iſrael; Lyra. and that the chiefeſt and moſt principall. Lyra ſaith, that he ſlew his brethren, becauſe he feared leaſt that he being caſt out for his wickedneſſe, any of them ſhould bee made king in his ſtead, and to get the goods and poſſeſſions which their father gave them, and ſome Princes, becauſe they diſliked his evill doings. But before he did theſe things, it is ſaid, that he ſtrengthened himſelfe in his kingdom, that is, by gifts obliging many unto him, that he might the more ſecurely thus tyrannize. And V.6. it is further added, that he walked in the wayes of the kings of Iſrael, as the houſe of Ahab did, for hee had his daughter to wife. Vnto his cruelty like that of the Turks, laying the foundation of his kingdome in the ſhedding of his brothers blood, he added idolatry, or becauſe he was an idolater he was thus cruell, this being a ſinne for the moſt part unſeparable from idolaters; for the devill, whom ſuch ſerve, delights in blood, as being himſelfe a murtherer from the beginning. And the primary cauſe of all this is noted to have been his unequall yoking in marriage with the daughter of Ahab, Athalia, as it appeareth, that her name was ch. 22. 2. But only ſhe is there ſaid to be the daughter of Amri, the father of Ahab; but ſhe might be called daughter either of the one, or of the other if ſhe were, the daughter of Ahab, ſeeing Grand-fathers doe commonly call their ſonnes daughters, their daughters.
And it may be conceived, that ſhe was called firſt daughter of Ahab, then of Amri his father to denote the deep ingraffing of idolatrous precepts within her breaſt, as taking them from them both, who were Arch idolaters, and moſt unreclaimable.
P. Martyr. For I doe not like that way of reconciling this which Martyr mentioneth, that Amri being her father, ſhe was very young when he dyed, and ſo for her being brought up with Ahab her brother, ſhe is ſaid to be his daughter; for never yet was any woman ſaid to be daughter to her brother for her education with him. By this marriage of Ioram with Athalia, Iehoſhaphat is ſaid to have contracted affinity with Ahab, 2 Chron. 18. 1. He was a wiſe and godly king indeed, but herein he did neither wiſely nor godly. He thought to enjoy the more certain peace with the kings of Iſrael by this meanes, and hoped to draw them from idolatry to the true God, but it fell out clean contrary, his houſe was hereby perverted to idolatry, and conſequently his race well nigh extinct; and for this cauſe happily he is not named (as making himſelf guilty hereby) with the blameleſſe kings, David, Hezechiah, and Ioſiah, who are ſaid not to have ſinned, that is, by idolatry, or being any way acceſſary to the promoting of it, Eccl. 49. 5. whereas he was, his houſe not onely being by V.7. this means corrupted, but his kingdom. Let no Prince therefore in any politick reſpect marry ſo for fear of marring all, 2 *Cor.*6. 16. But the Lord would not deſtroy the houſe of David for the covenant, which he had made with him. 2 Kings 8. 19. He would not deſtroy Iudah for Davids ſake, as he had promiſed him, to the ſame effect.

Of this promiſe, ſee 2 Sam. 7. and it is ſaid, that he might give him a light, and his children for ever.] By light kingly glory being meant, which maketh a family to ſhine, and this, howſoever it ended about the time of the coming of Shiloh, that is, of Chriſt, according to the propheſie of Iacob, Gen. 49. 10. in reſpect of a worldly kingdome, yet it ſhineth by the light of a ſpirituall reigning in Chriſt, who was of the ſeed of David now much more and ſo ſhall continue for ever and ever. And this is added, as implying, that for the wickedneſſe of Ioram he and his were worthy to be cut off, that none of that race might reigne any more; ſo much doth the Lord abominate idolaters and murderers, and ſo much is his wrath ſtirred up againſt them.

V. 8. In his dayes Edom rebelled, and would not be ſubiect any more to Iudah, &c.] As he had beene ever ſince Davids time, untill the end of Iehoſhaphats reign, 1 King. 22. 48. 2 King. 3. 9. thus God began to leſſen his dominion for his ſinnes by cutting off Edom from him; and although he ſought with all his might to recover it, and by ſetting upon them in the night ſlew many, yet Edom would no more be brought under, but they ſet up a King of their owne, and Lybna, a city of Iudah Joſh. 15. Pellican. Lyra. alſo neare unto them fell away at the ſame time, and as ſome thinke came under the King of Edom, as joyning with the Edomites in their rebellion. And that his V. 10. ſinnes were the cauſe of this it appeares, for it is added, verſ. 10. For he left the Lord God of his fathers, and built high places in the cities of Iudah, and made Iudah to tranſgreſſe. The words, whereby Iorams expedition againſt the Edomites is ſet forth are ſomewhat obſcure, therefore Ioram paſſed into Seir, a city in Edom, and not the mount Seir, becauſe it is written with צ whereas the mount is written with ש and all his chariots with him. And when he had riſen up in the night and ſmitten Edom, which had compaſſed him and the Princes of the chariots, the people fled to their tents. Pellican therefore expounds them thus. The army of Edom riſing in the night ſmote the Princes of the chariots in Iorams army, and the people of Iudah with their King Ioram fled to their tents, leaving the worke undone, neither was it ever attempted any more, becauſe Libnah, a noble city of Iudah and nigh unto Edom joyned with them alſo. But he confeſſeth, that the Hebrews expound it otherwiſe, and ſo to expound it is more agreeable to the Hebrew text, if it be not through the negligence of ſome corrupted, which far be it for us to imagine. The true ſenſe is that given by Martyr, that Ioram with his chariots being come to Edom, the Edomites came and compaſſed about his army; but he ariſing in the night brake through their forces ſlaying many of them, and returning home again; and then they returned to their tents; this warre for the recovery of Edom being thus ſoone ended without effect, after one skirmiſh onely. And the propheſie of Iſaac, Gen. 27. 42. that Eſau ſhould breake off his yoke was now fulfilled. And it was a juſt judgement of God againſt Ioram, that his defection from God ſhould be puniſht with the Edomites defection from his obedience, and his breaking of covenant with G[illegible] with their breaking covenant with him. Lyra hath another expoſition, which hee makes here viz. that Ioram had many Edomites with him, that were valiant men, and ſerved him in his warres, whoſe revolt he now fearing aroſe up in the night and ſlew them.

V. 12. But there were letters brought unto him from Elijah the prophet, ſaying, &c.] Elijah being long before this received up into heaven, ch. 2. how could he now write unto Ioram, to reprove and threaten him for his wickedneſſe? Anſw. I doe not thinke with the Hebrewes, that theſe letters were written by Elijah after his taking up, and miraculouſly preſented to Ioram although Lyra holds the ſame. Nor with Pellican that they might be written and ſent by him yet living, the relation hereof being miſplaced: for Iehoſaphat was dead, before that his ſonne Ioram thus fell away from God, & that Elijah was taken out of this world, whileſt Iehoſaphat yet lived and ruled appeareth, 2 King. 3. where Eliſhah, who had not the ſpirit of working miracles, till after the rapture of his Maſter, is ſaid to have ſupplied the armies miraculouſly with water for Iehoſhaphats ſake there preſent. I hold then P. Martyr. with them, that ſay, theſe letters then might be written before by Elijah, foreſeeing by the ſpirit, that Ioram would doe ſo wickedly and left with Eliſhah to be ſent unto him, when he ſhould ſee his time; becauſe Eliſhah his part, as it ſeemeth, was to helpe and to doe miraculouſly for the diſtreſſed, but not to threaten judgements, or ſeverely to proceed againſt any, that part being aſſigned to Elijah his predeceſſour, and accordingly acted by him. And it is the more probable, that he committed this buſineſſe to Eliſhah, becauſe he certainly left another to him, which he was to doe after his death, viz. the declaring to Hazael, that he ſhould be King of Syria. To yield to any ſending of letters out of another world is to yield to that which is ſtrange, yea contrary to the Sacred Scriptures, which deny all dealing in this kinde in the parable of Dives and Lazarus.

V. 13. In theſe letters the idolatry of Ioram is upbraided unto him and his going after the Kings of Iſrael, and not after Iehoſaphat and Aſa; and he is threatened therefore V. 14. and for killing his brethren better then himſelfe, that God would ſtrike him V. 15. with a great ſtroak; him, his children, his wives and people, and all his ſubſtance; and that he ſhould be ſtricken with a lothſome diſeaſe in his belly, untill his guts ſhould come out. This threatening of him for killing his brethren ſeemeth to Lyra to be a good argument that this epiſtle was written after the rapture of Elijah, becauſe they were ſlain after and not before. But it muſt be remembred which hath beene already ſaid, that Elijah wrote thus out of his propheticall ſpirit, whereby he foreſaw this. Some thinke, that they were the letters of another Elijah and not of Elijah the Tiſhbite. The event proved this epiſtle a true propheſie, and it could not be long after the coming of it to his hands, for he lay two yeares after that he was ſmitten in his bowels, and his reigne was but of eight yeares. Moſt probably he was one yeare in making friends, that might ſtick to him; the ſecond he adventured to ſlay his brethren, and ſome Princes; the third he built high places and forced men to idolatry; the fourth the Edomites and Lybnah rebelled and he went V. 16. againſt them and returned doing nothing; the fift he being no whit moved hereby
V. 17. to repent had theſe letters ſent unto him; and the ſixt the Philiſtines and Arabians
V. 18. that were borderers upon the Ethiopians came and waſted Judah, and tooke away V. 19. all his ſubſtance, and his ſonnes, and wives, onely Iohahaz remained, who was the youngeſt; and laſtly, in the ſeventh yeare at the beginning his moſt dolorous ſickneſſe began whereof he died moſt miſerably; and unto all this was added moreover a diſhonour in his buriall, the people made no burning for him, as they had done V. 20. for his anceſtours, neither did they bury him in the ſepulchre of the Kings, but only in the city of David in ſome common burying place, as thinking him unworthy and too baſe for his wickedneſſe to have that honour done to his dead corps ſo marked by Gods hand as moſt vile, whileſt he lived. Of the rite of burning ſweet odours to Kings departed, ſee before, 2 Chron. 16. 14. in the hiſtory of Aſa his grandfather. Here is to be noted, that whereas verſ. 17. the Arabians are ſaid to have taken away his ſonnes and wives, it is to be underſtood, by killing them: for Chap. 22. 1. they are ſaid to have killed all his ſonnes, but the youngeſt, and Ioſephus ſaith, that they ſlew his wives alſo. A juſt judgement of God, that he, who ſo cruelly ſlew his brethren ſhould have his ſons ſlain; and he that took their goods which their father had given them, ſhould have his ſubſtance taken all away, and come ſoone after himſelfe to a more miſerable end, then his children. Vpon what occaſion the Arabians came thus againſt Joram it is not ſaid, but onely that God ſtirred them up; yet it is moſt probable, that the Edomites inſtigated them hereunto, that the King of Iudah being by theſe meanes weakened, he might the leſſe infeſt them for their revolting from his obedience. For that Ioram had an army abroad at that time to waſte the Edomites, although he could not againe reduce them to his obedience, is intimated, Chap. 22. 1. where it is ſaid, that the Arabian robbers ſlew the Kings ſons, when they ruſhed into the tents.

2 Chron. 22. 1. Ioram being dead, the inhabitants of Ieruſalem made Ahaziah his youngeſt ſon King in his ſtead, for all his elder ſonnes were ſlain, 2 Kings 8. 25, it is ſaid only that Ahaziah his youngeſt ſon reigned in his ſtead. But in both places the name is divers from that, 2 Chron. 21. 17. where his youngeſt is called Iehohaz, but the ſame man is alſo called Azariah, 2 Chron. 22. 6. ſo that it ſeemeth he had 3 names. Ahaziah was of 42 yeares when he began to reign, 2 Kings 8. He was 22. and indeed how could he be more, ſeeing his father Ioram was but 40 when he dyed, for he was 32. when he began his reign, and reigned but 8 yeares as kings, and Chronicles doe both conſent. Some Hebrewes ſay, that Chronicles reckon from the beginning of Amri, whoſe daughter Athalia is here ſaid to be his mother, for ſo the years agree; Amri 6. Ahab 22. Ahaziah his ſonne 2 Ioram his brother 12. But becauſe this is too much forced, other Hebrewes ſay, that 20 yeares of his fathers reign are concealed, and that he is ſaid ta have reigned 8 for 28, becauſe that from the time of his troubles he made Ahaziah his ſon conſort with him in the kingdome, and when he had reigned with his father 20 yeares he dyed, and then the men of Ieruſalem confirmed the kingdome unto him anew, after which hee reigned but one yeare. And thus it is true, which is ſaid, 2 Kings 8. He was 22 when hee began to reign, that is together with his father, and reigned one yeare only alone, and it is alſo true, which is here ſaid, he was 42 when he began to reign alone. And this Martyr preferreth as moſt probable, and Lyra following Ierom, and proving it by the like in Saul, unto whoſe reign only 2 yeares are counted, when as he reigned manifeſtly more, as hath bin ſhewed upon 1 *Sam.*13. 1. even 18. but he is ſaid to have reigned two, becauſe he reigned well ſo long, & no longer. So Ioram is ſaid to have reigned 8 years, becauſe ſo long he reigned well, or innocently as Ierom ſaith, but then he ſlew his brethren, & from hence forward wickedly, his kingdom alſo declining 20 years, which cauſe that time is not reckoned to him, but to intimate ſo much time more of his reign, and that his ſon Ahaziah reigned all or part of it together with him, he is ſaid to have bin 42 when he began to reign, leſt going upon the number of 22. when he is ſaid, 2 Kings 8. to have begun his reign, 20 whole years ſhould be cut off from the Chronology, and ſo an errour be committed in reckoning the time by reaſon of the number there put, when as it is meant, that from the beginning of his reign with his father, he was 22. and then all the time that his father lived after this being paſſed over in ſilence, he is ſaid to have reigned one year, that is, alone. And this is held by moſt, Vatablus, Toſtatus, Azorius, Gordon, &c. And this is certainly the beſt way of clearing this doubt. Whereas it is objected, ſo Ioram muſt not have begunne his reign at 32, but at 12. or elſe to have lived not 40, as is commonly counted, but 60. it may be granted that he lived ſo long, ſeeing it is not ſet down, how long he lived.

But whereas Ierom is brought affirming Ioram to have lived but 40. and Ioſephus likewiſe, and all the time both of Ioram the father, and Ahaziah the ſon, is included within the reign of Ioram of Iſrael, and the time of his reign was but twelve years, 2 King.8.16.25. I muſt needs confeſſe, that I cannot ſee what may be anſwered. Wherefore ſome have found out another way, ſaying, that a tranſpoſition is to be made of the words thus. When Ahaziah began to reign, his mothers name was Athaliah the daughter of Amri, he was of 42. years, that is, Amri, or ſo many years paſſed from the time of his beginning to reign, till now, as hath been before accounted. But ſeeing there is no warrant thus to tranſpoſe the years, which are plainly ſpoken of one, as meant of another, a king of another kingdome, who was alſo dead long before, this is not to be admitted. Nothing then remaineth to be ſaid, but that this place hath been erroneouſly copied out, and ought to be corrected by 2 King. 8. as in the Septuagint tranſlation it is, where it is ſaid, as 2 King. 8. ſo 2 Chron. 22. Achaziah was 22. years old when he began to reign. And yet this is no diſparagement to the holy Scripture, ſeeing ſome tranſlation is right, and the text 2 King. 8. and pregnant reaſon is a ſufficient ground to evince the truth. Whereas the time of Ahaziah his beginning to reign, is ſet forth not onely by his age, but 2 King. 8. 25. by the twelfth year of Ioram king of Iſrael, but ch. 9. 29. by his eleventh year. Martyr ſaith, that the twelfth was ſo little begun, that it is not ſpoken of in the ſecond place, but the eleventh, which was then complete. But if the twelfth were begun, it could not be ſaid in the eleventh with any colour of truth. Lyra therefore and others better, he began to reign alone, his father being dead, in the twelfth year; but that we might know, that when his father lay languiſhing of his laſt ſickneſſe, and grew by reaſon thereof unfit to govern, that the kingdome was not without a governour, for he made his ſonne king together with him, a year before his death, that is inſerted of his beginning to reign in the 11. of Ioram of Iſrael. Neither can any reaſon otherwiſe be conceived why after his death mention ſhould be again made of his beginning to reign in a divers year, ch. 9. 29. but to intimate ſomewhat before omitted, viz. that beſides the one year of his reign before ſpoken of, he reigned another whileſt his father lived, as was the manner of divers other kings, and of Ioram his father, who reigned together with Iehoſhaphat his father, as hath been already ſhewed, upon 2 King. 8. 16.

V.3, 4. Ahaziah being made King, was as wicked as his father for matter of idolatry, for he followed Ahab, as his mother enforced him, and they of the houſe of Ahab are ſaid to have been his counſellers, thus to bring him to deſtruction, and he is ſaid to have walked in their counſels. 2 King. 8. 27. all this is compriſed in fewer words; He walked in the wayes of Ahabs houſe, and did that which was evill before the Lord, for he was the ſon in law of Ahab. His mother provided him a wife of Ahabs houſe, and thus he was ſo ſtrongly carried on, as if he had been enforced to that wickedneſſe, partly by his mothers command, and partly by his wives importunity. Thus idolatry brought in by marrying with idolaters, was ſo rooted, that it could not be rooted out without rooting up the corrupted ſtock, for a warning to all generations to come, to take heed of ſuch unequall yoking.

V.5, 6. How deſtruction came from hence unto him, the next words declare, verſ. 5.
He went with Ioram king of Iſrael to warre againſt Hazael at Ramoth Gilead, where Ioram was wounded by the Syrians, and and ſo returned to Iezreel to be healed, V.7, 8. then Ahaziah followed to viſite him. And this is noted to have been by the will

CHAP. IX.

V. 1. THen Eliſhah ſent one of the ſonnes of the Prophets to anoint Iehu king of Iſ-rael at Ramoth Gilead, which ſheweth it to be true, that was noted out of Ioſephus before, viz. that Iehu was left as Generall or chief captain over Iorams forces at Ramoth Gilead againſt the Syrians. And this Iehu is further ſaid to be the ſon of Iehoſhaphat the ſonne of Nimſhi, and becauſe the Prophet is bidden to go into Ramoth Gilead, v. 2. and bring Iehu not into a tent, but into an inner chamber, P.Martyr. Martyr conjectureth, that Ramoth Gilead was taken by the Iſraelites, and that Ioram left his army there, thinking, when he ſhould be whole of his wounds, to return and purſue the Syrians further, which is not improbable. Yea, Ioſephus plainly affirmeth it, and the words v. 15. do further confirm the ſame. The Prophet ſent Chron. Hebr. c. 18. Epiphan. Hieronym. to anoint Iehu is thought by ſome to be Ionah, whom Elijah raiſed from the dead, viz. the widows ſon of Sareptah, who afterwards propheſied againſt Ninivehː but the holy Scripture ſaith onely in generall, one of the ſonnes of the Prophets, therefore to paſſe over mens conjectures, not determining who he was by name, we reade that he is bidden to gird up his loyns, that he might make the more haſte, becauſe now there was ſuch an opportunity for Iehu to execute Gods judgements, as he ſhould hardly have another time, Iorams forces being abroad and he diſabled by his wounds, and Ahaziah, who was now one of Ahabs family by marriage, and as wicked as he, in the ſame city together with Ioram, and that the city Iezreel appointed for the place, where this execution ſhould be done. And he is bidden take

a cruſe of oyl for the anointing of Iehu, which was a thing given in charge before to Elijah, but he onely took order with Eliſhah, that it ſhould be done, whereby we may gather, that the Lord enjoyned him not to do it in perſon, but to provide to have it done. And whereas Eliſhah did it not himſelf neither, but ſent another to do it, ſome think, that becauſe he was old and could not travell with ſuch ſpeed, he ſent a younger man; others, that he ſent one unknown, that the thing might be the more ſecretly done, which could not have been by ſo famous a Prophet as Eliſhah. P. Martyr. Theodoret. And I think, that not one, but both of theſe conſiderations might move him thus to do, or haply the ſpirit of God directed him to ſend and not to go. For his taking of a cruſe of oyl with him, it was done, that the intended buſineſſe might be kept the more ſecret; wherefore it is generally held, that he took common oyl, and none of the holy oyl kept in the Sanctuary, for this neither the haſte would permit him to fetch, nor could he doe it without diminiſhing the matter: and a cruſe not an horne, as to annoint David and Solomon, was taken to intimate, that the kingdome ſhould not alwayes continue in his family, as in Davids; and the like veſſel was uſed for Saul before for the ſame myſticall end. But ſeeing no King of Iſrael, but Davids poſterity onely was annointed King, ſince Saul, why was Iehu annointed? Anſw. Becauſe he had an harder taske by God impoſed upon him, then any of his predeceſſours, who were appointed by God to reigne over Iſrael, viz. to execute his judgements upon Ahabs poſterity, as is expreſſed, verſ. 7, 8. that he might be the more encouraged unto it and not feare any thing, when he had received authority, as it were, from God by this meanes ſo to doe, and a ſigne of aſſurance, that he ſhould be enabled from above. And Eliſhah telleth him, that he ſhould finde Jehu in the midſt of his brethren, that is, ſitting amongſt other Captains in counſell, and biddeth him call him forth and carry him into an inner chamber, and there annoint him King and then flee away, all which he did accordingly; and this was ſo done, that none might know of it, till afterwards, leſt if it had been rumoured abroad, ſome means ſhould have been uſed to make the execution the more difficult. And becauſe it was dangerous for any man to doe this, whileſt Joram lived, he immediately opened the doore and fled, not tarrying to heare, what Iehu would ſay.

Note. Thus the Prophets of God ſometimes put their lives in hazard in doing their office to which they were appointed, and ſome ſuffered death therefore: but no ſervant of God muſt paſſe for that, but courageouſly doe the duty commanded him, yet when there is danger, and it may be, we learne by this example to be ſecret and wary in the performance of it. And here we ſee what authority the Prophets of God had even in diſpoſing of kingdomes, for which the Lord ſometime ſaid to ſuch, I have ſet thee over kingdomes and nations to plant and root up. For this Prophet as Gods inſtrument, now pulld downe Ioram and ſet up Iehu, and Abijah before, Ieroboam; and Samuel, David; yet none pretending himſelfe to be the man of God, and his vicar may now of the motion of his owne minde preſume to doe the like, as the Pope hath done, becauſe every ſoule is ſubject to the higher powers, and the greateſt Prophet, that ever was, never did this, but by the expreſſe command of God: V. 5. when this Prophet came where Jehu was, he found him ſitting amongſt the Captaines and contrary to the manner of inferiour perſons, when they are to ſpeake to Princes, he awaited not his riſing, but called him forth, being haply in ſerious conſultation about the warre, and Iehu came forth unto him, knowing him doubtleſſe to be a Prophet, and ſappoſing him to be ſent by Eliſhah, whom even the greateſt reverenced for his great power. He told him that he had a meſſage to doe unto him, which he could not, but preſently conceive to be from the Lord, and therefore leaving the buſineſſe in hand, of what great weight ſoever, he came forth to heare it, which ſhewed ſome piety towards God to have beene in him, although it was ſoone overthrowne, by his vaine glory.

When the Prophet had annointed him in ſecret as he was appointed, he told him, V. 6. that he ſhould ſmite the houſe of Ahab his Maſter, becauſe it was the will of God, V. 7. who made him King, that he ſhould thus doe: for that he had ſhed the bloud of V. 8. his Prophets and other ſervants by his wife Iezabel, upon whom it ſhould now be revenged, and he added more according to that, 1 King. 21. 21, 22, 23. where the words are already expounded. Theſe words indeed are not mentioned in this chap. before, when Eliſhah gave him his charge, but it is to be thought that they were ſpoken being onely for brevities ſake there paſſed over in ſilence. And when he had ſaid thus, he opened the doore and fled, for he had before ſhut in, when he brought Iehu into the chamber, that none might ſee, what he did, and now he flyeth, leſt any neare unto Ahabs family or of his friends ſhould know of it, and finding him ſlay him.

V. 11. Then Iehu went in to the ſervants of his Lord, and they ſaid, Is it peace? Wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? &c.] They called him mad fellow, becauſe the Prophets ſometimes, when they were moved by the Spirit of God, did as if they were beſides themſelves: in imitation whereof it was common with thoſe that ſpake by an evil ſpirit at the time of their propheſies uttering, to be caſt into a fury, D. Kimbi. P. Martyr. ſo Kimbi. But Martyr denieth this, and ſaith, that was proper to ſuch as ſpake by an evil ſpirit; but they which ſpake by the Spirit of God underſtood well, what they ſaid. Onely idolaters, ſuch as theſe were, who loved them not, counted and called them fooles and mad men, becauſe they declaimed againſt their wickedneſſe, and contemned the profits, pleaſures and honours of this world, which they ſo much eſteemed. So the kinſmen of our Lord ſometime thought him to be beſides himſelfe, and Feſtus ſaid to Paul, that much learning had made him mad.

Pellican. Lyra. Scholaſt. hiſt. Thus alſo Pellican and Hugo Card. and Lyra, and becauſe they oft times ſpake things that ſeemed ſtrange to other men. Comeſtor, they called him ſo, becauſe they counted the ſonnes of the prophets mad men, or becauſe he ranne away like a mad man, ſo ſoon as he had ſpoken. I think with Kimbi, that becauſe the prophets when they ſpake by the ſpirit were ſometimes in ſhew like men diſtracted through the ſpirit coming upon them, the prophane called them mad fellowes, when as indeed they were not diſtracted, but well underſtood what they propheſied, as appeareth by their writing out of their propheſies ſometimes, and becauſe it is ſaid, 1 Cor. 14. the ſpirit of the prophets, is ſubject to the prophets. But that there was a ſhew of diſtraction appeareth by that which was ſaid of Saul, 1 Sam. 19. 22, 23. Hee caſt off his clothes when the ſpirit came upon him, and did after the manner of the prophets being naked all that day, and night v. 24. ſo that the prophets ſometimes were as in an extaſie, when they propheſied, and ſo behaved themſelves.

Iehu anſwered, yee know the man and his ſpeech.] Some take this as ſpoken interrogatively, Pellican. Doe yee know the man and the truth of his ſpeech, and whether he may bee believed? ſo Pellican taking it, as ſpoken doubtingly by Iehu, and likewiſe Hugo Card. but Martyr, and Lyra, and Iunius, P. Martyr. Lyra. Iunius. without an interrogation expound it, ye know by his habit that he is a prophet, and therefore what he ſaid, to be by way of propheſying, or doing me a meſſage from the Lord. Then they anſwering, it is falſe, V. 12. and urging him to tell them what he ſaid, he told them all, and they immediately, their hearts being moved by the higheſt, haſtened and ſet him up for king. For it muſt needs be acknowledged the wonderfull work of God, when as they but even now prejudged what he had ſaid, as falſe, and yet preſently believed it, and did accordingly. Ioſephus. Comeſtor. Ioſephus and ſome that follow him, expound it thus; I ſee yee know the man and what talke he had with me, for he ſpake madly unto me indeed, then they urging him to tell more particularly what he ſaid, as if they would make no other account of it, then as of words coming from a diſtempered brain, he declared the whole matter unto them, and God immediately wrought herewith ſo, that they haſted to confirm it. And this ſeemeth to come neareſt to the true meaning, but the reader may without errour follow this, or that of Lyra. Whereas they replyed, it is falſe, when Iehu ſaid, yee know the man, &c. ſome underſtand it as meant, that they knew him not, nor his talke, and therefore deſired to have it related unto them; but I reſt in the former, as more agreeable to their calling him mad fellow, and making moſt for the glory of God in changing their minds ſo ſuddenly.

V. 13. Then they haſtened and put every man his garment under his feet, and ſounded the trumpet, and ſaid, Iehu is king.] The vulgar Latin, they packt every one his garment under his feet in the likeneſſe of a Tribunall, and Ioſephus. Ioſephus ſaith, that they made of them a throne, and ſet Iehu thereon. Hebr. it is, on the height of degrees] that is, upon a place, unto which, as unto a throne it is aſcended by degrees, to declare him to bee king, as God had appointed; they ſet him upon a place ſome what elevated for want of a throne, and covered it with their garments, as with carpets for the greater ſtate. The word uſed, ſaith Martyr, ſignifieth either a ſtone, or a bone, whereupon ſome underſtand it meant of a diall of ſtone, in which degrees are to note the hours of the day, as the Chald. paraphraſt; others, as of ivory made of the Elephants tooth, imagining a ſeat of ſuch matter to have been there, upon which the judge was wont to ſit; for putting their garments under him, it ſeemeth to have been done amongſt the Iewes in way of moſt highly honouring, Math. 21. 7.

V. 14. So Iehu conſpired againſt Joram.] That is, he with the other Captains, and the army at Ramoth Gilead agreed together, binding themſelves moſt probably by oath againſt Ioram to root out him and all his race, that Iehu might reign in his ſtead, which is not properly called a conſpiring, becauſe God had expreſſely appointed it ſo to bee done. Hazael, who was likewiſe anointed king of Syria, cannot bee counted for the manner of his aſpiring to the kingdom better then a traytour, becauſe he was not bidden to deſtroy Benhadad, but did it out of his ambition putting him on with haſt to get that crown, but Iehu was willed to doe thus againſt Ahabs race. But I*oram had kept Ramoth Gilead with all* I*ſrael from Aſahel*, &c. Iunius [had ſet a cuſtody at Ramoth, &c. the vulgar Latin had beſieged] the word שקר here uſed, may be taken either for keeping or beſieging, ſaith Salianus, for ſo it is uſed, 2 Sam. 11. but untruly, for the word there uſed is, יצרך, neither is שקר put for any thing elſe, but keeping. But how can he be ſaid to have kept it, when as it was in the hands of the Syrians. Anſ. I*oſephus* ſaith, that Iehu with the army had taken it, and ſo by him he kept it, untill himſelfe ſhould come thither again. And of the cities being in the poſſeſſion of Iorams men, it hath been ſpoken a little before. V. 15. And a repetition is here made, ſaith Martyr, of I*orams* going from hence to Iezreel to be healed of his wounds, that it might be underſtood, what an opportunity Iehu and the captains at Ramoth now had to ſet up a new king, which they could not have done, if he had been there, unleſſe he had been firſt killed, and this was needfull to be remembred, that it might appeare, what was the ground of I*ehu* his ſpeech here following. If it be your will, let none eſcape out to tell it in Iezreel.] If yee mean that I ſhall be king, provide that it be kept from Iorams knowledge in Iezreel, leaſt he ſave himſelfe by flying away. Hereupon ſaith Ioſephus, all the wayes were beſet, that none might goe out. V. 16. Then Iehu going up into his chariot, haſtened towards Iezreel; not alone, for a company is ſaid by and by to have gone with him, being doubtleſſe a band of ſouldiers from Ramoth. And here again it is repeated, that Ioram lay ſick there, and Ahaziah was come thither to him, that the over-ruling power of God might be marked, which brought them both together to one place to be with the more facility joyned together in deſtruction, as they had been joyned together in ſinne. V. 17. Then the watchman ſtood upon the tower in Iezreel, &c. of a watchman ſet upon on high alſo in Davids time to eſpye and give notice of ſuch, as came towards the city in time of warre, ſee 2 Sam. 18. 24. This telleth to ſome of the kings houſe that he ſaw a company comming, which the king hearing, biddeth an horſeman to goe out and meet them, and aske whether it were peace, which he did, and was anſwered, what haſt thou to doe with peace, get thee behind me, and ſo he returned not. V. 19. Then a ſecond horſeman was ſent out in like manner, who returning not neither, V. 20. the watchman told that his march that was the leader, was like the marching of I*ehu*, for he marched furiouſly. V. 21. Hereupon I*oram* commands to bring forth his chariot, and went out to meet him, and Ahaziah with him, and found him in the field of Naboth the Iezreelite, V. 22. and asking him, is it peace Iehu? he anſwered, what peace? the whordomes of thy mother Iezabel, &c. V. 23. Iehoram then perceiving, that he ſought his deſtruction, turned and fled back again, but Jehu ſhot an arrow through his body and ſlew him, &c. Thus it was verified which is ſaid, Pſ. 127. Except the Lord watch the city, the watchman watcheth in vain. King Ioram was by this means brought the ſooner to his death, neither ſhall any watching or warding, profit the wicked, when the time is come of Gods judgements for their their ſinnes. Ioſephus differing ſomewhat from the Scripture, relates it thus; Ioram Joſephus. bad, that an horſeman ſhould be ſent out and aske who it was that came, then hee approaching, asked what was done in the army? for the king deſired to know; but Iehu bad him not to be ſollicitous about that, but turn and come behind him with the reſt of the company. Hee would not ſuffer him to return, that the king might know nothing, till he came at him, but hee ſuddenly ſurpriſed. The Chald. paraph. rendreth theſe words, he marcheth furiouſly, he leadeth quietly, Ioſephus he marcheth ſlowly, and with a well ordered troop] but the ſame word שגע is here uſed, which was uſed before by the Captaines when they asked, wherefore came this mad fellow to thee? It is beſt therefore rendred furiouſly or madly.

The king underſtanding, that it was Iehu, haſtened with the other king to meet him for honours ſake, as ſome ſuppoſe, he being his chiefe captain; and now thought by him to come with good newes from the army, which becauſe he would tell himſelfe, and would not be prevented by any other, hee thought that hee would not ſuffer any of the meſſengers to returne, but would have them follow after him.

And it is to be noted, how the divine providence carried him to the very place, where execution was to be done, to the field of Naboth the Iezreelite. Touching Iehu his anſwer, when he asked, whether it were peace, The whoredoms and witchcrafts Lyra. of thy mother Iezabel, &c. By both theſe Lyra underſtandeth her idolatries, for idolatry is ſpirituall fornication, and commonly called whoredom and adultery; becauſe the Church is unto God, as his Spouſe, and therefore as when a mans wife goeth after another man, ſhe is an whore and adultereſſe; ſo when any, that ſhould worſhip the true God onely, follow after idols, they are adulterers and adultereſſes.
And witchcraft ſpitituall it is, becauſe it intoxicateth as witchcraft, ſo that idolaters are hereby carried headlong as by an evil ſpirit to their deſtruction.

Joſephus. Ioſephus underſtandeth whoredoms properly, Martyr both ſpirituall and corporall P.Martyr. whoredome, becauſe they commonly goe together. But why is not Ierams owne wickedneſſe objected to him, but his mothers? Anſw. She was the head thereof, and the firſt bringer of the worſhip of Baal into Iſrael, and now, by her and her daughter Athaliahs meanes, Iudah was corrupted therewith. Moreover it was his part being King, not to have ſuffered her to goe on in her idolatry, as Aſa ſuffered not his Mother Maachah. For by thus doing he made it his owne, and was worthy with her to be deſtroyed: which was Iehu his meaning, when he objected Note. theſe things unto him, and asked, What haſt thou to doe with peace? Note then, that where idolatry and whoredoms are common, the State cannot be quiet, but the ſword and ſlaughter muſt needs follow; therefore the way to have peace is to purge the land from theſe evils, as all good Kings have done.

He turned his hand and fled:] That is, he bade him, that guided his chariot horſes to turne them and flee away. When Iehu tooke his bowe to ſhoot, it is ſaid, [That he filled his hand with his bowe] by an Hebraiſme: Then Iehu bad Bidchar his Captain V.25. take and caſt him into a part of Nabothi field: recounting the propheſie, whereby it was thus appointed. Bidchar in Hebrew is called שלשה which cometh of a word ſignifying three, becauſe, as alſo Ioſephus hath it, the third part of his army was committed unto him, he was then Captaine of the third part. But how did the propheſie touch Iehoram, when as Naboth was not put to death by him, but by his father, and it was Ahab his father, that was threatened, that the dogs ſhould lick his bloud there, 1 King. 21. 19. For the meaning of thoſe words ſee my expoſition there. But the Lord then threatened not Ahab alone but his ſonnes, v. 21. and upon his humiliation ſaid, that he would not bring this evill in his but in his V.26. ſonnes dayes, v. 29. wherefore Iehu taking all the propheſie together maketh this conſtruction of it, I will reward thee in this field, for the bloud of Naboth and the bloud of his ſonnes: in which words he intimated that, which was no where before expreſſed, that Naboths ſonnes were ſlaine alſo, that Ahab might obteine his D.Kimhi. vineyard; unleſſe with ſome we ſhall underſtand their bloud to be ſpoken of, becauſe when their meanes were taken away, their bloud was, as it were, ſhed; but I rather think, that they were ſlaine alſo, as I partly touched before upon 2 King. 21.

becauſe many, that have no lands or goods, live upon their hands. In that place then this heinous wickedneſſe was revenged now, Ahab being here puniſht in his wicked ſonne. And in that he bad caſt his body there, it is intimated, that another part of the propheſie was now fulfilled alſo, viz. by his bodys lying unburied to be eaten up of birds, 1 *King.*21.24. And in ſpeaking of the propheſie againſt Ahab he called it a burden laid upon him, becauſe it is to beare an heavy burden to ſuffer ſuch puniſhments. And in uttering the propheſie he ſaith, I ſee, ſaith the Lord, the bloud of Naboth yeſterday, &c. To note, that bloud unjuſtly ſhed is alwayes before the eyes of the Lord, how long ſoever before, as if it had beene but yeſterday, till it be throughly revenged, ſo Pellican. But indeed theſe words uttered by the Prophet then, ſerve rather to ſet forth the time of Elijah his threatening of him to have beene the day after that murder committed.

Note.

V. 27. When Joram was ſlaine, Ahaziah the King of Iudah fled by the way of the garden houſe and Iehu purſued him, and ſaid, Smite him alſo in his chariot in the going up to Gur which is by Ibleam, then he fled to Megiddo and died there, 2 *Chron.*22.9. it is ſaid, That Iehu ſeeking for Ahazia found him lurking in Samaria, and when he was brought unto him, ſlew him. Here ſeemeth to be a contradiction, but it is by Lyra thus expounded, Ahaziah fled by the way of the garden houſe; and although Iehu bade kill him in the going up to Gur, he came firſt to Samaria, and there ſought to hide himſelfe, but by thoſe of Iehu his company being found out, he was brought unto him to the place before named and being deadly wounded haply with an arrow, as Ioram had been, he fled to Megiddo and there died of this wound. Thus, but more briefly Lyra, but more largely ſet forth, for the more full clearing of the doubt. Another more improbably ſaith, that he cauſed his wounds to be dreſſed at Megiddo according to Ioſephus, and then fled to Samaria being fourteene miles off, from whence being found, he was brought back to Megiddo againe and there ſlaine by the command of Iehu. For the Sacred hiſtory ſpeaketh not of his being ſlaine at Megiddo, but dying there of the wounds formerly received; nor of his fleeing any whither after that he came to Megiddo. Martyr followeth Lyra, but onely he ſaith, that Ahaziah was wounded at the commandment of Iehu in Iezreel, and then fleeing to Megiddo he died there. Sallianus moſt unreaſonably ſaith, that he lay hid in Megiddo, ſeeking to make this expoſition good by taking Samaria the chiefe city of the Kingdome for the Kingdome of Iſrael, within which Megiddo was. Thus alſo Iunius, in Samaria, that is, in the Kingdome of Iſrael for which the Metropolis is put Synechdochically. But ſeeing Samaria is no where thus taken, I paſſe this over, as a groundleſſe invention, and conclude, that he fled by the Kings garden in Iezreel near Naboths field, where Iehu bade ſmite him, but the purſuers could not then reach him, he having gotten ſo much ground, whileſt I*oram* was taken out of his chariot and caſt into the field of Naboth, that he got into Samaria ſeeking to be hidden there, but they coming ſoone after, found him out and brought him to I*ehu* about Iezreel, and then he ſhot him alſo, and not doubting, but that his wound was deadly ſuffered him to flee to Megiddo foure miles off, and there he died. Megiddo was a towne in Manaſſeh, *Ioſh.*17.11. Ioſephus ſaith, That having received this wound he left his Chariot and fled on horſeback. Now for the juſtifying of this expoſition it is to be noted, that he ſaith, 2 *King.*9.27. Iehu bade ſmite him; but theſe words, and they ſmote him, are not in the Hebrew, but onely ſupplyed by the Vulg. Lat. and Iunius, and in ſome Septuagint; and ſo to ſay with the Chronologer, that after this bidding he went and hid himſelfe in Samaria, is not contradictory to the Kings, but onely a declaring by way of ſupplement of that which is here wanting, that he was not ſmitten ſo ſoone as he bade ſmite him, but ſome time after being brought back from Samaria to which place he had firſt eſcaped, to Iehu to be ſlaine. Then he gave him a deadly wound with an arrow, as I*oſephus* alſo ſaith expreſly, whereof he died at Megiddo, whither he fled thus wounded, and therefore it is ſaid there, that not they, but he ſlew him.

Ioſephus.

If it be demanded, whether did not I*ehu* goe beyond his commiſſion, which was onely to ſmite the houſe of Ahab, in ſmiting Ahaziah, who was none of his linage alſo? It is generally anſwered by expoſitours, that Iehu did herein no more, then God willed: for to ſhew this, 2 Chron. 22.7. it is ſaid, It was the will of God, that Ahaziah came to viſite I*oram*, and went out with him againſt I*ehu*, that he might deſtroy the houſe of Ahab. God brought them both together into I*ehu* his hands, the one as a naturall member of his houſe, and the other being made ſo by marriage, 2 King. 8.27. and becauſe he came of Athaliah his daughter, and therefore in ſlaying him alſo he did no more, then was required, viz. deſtroy Ahabs houſe.

V. 28. Ahaziah being ſlain had more honour done to him, then I*oram*, for he was carried to Ieruſalem and buried there in the ſepulchres of his fathers, but 2 Chron. 22.9. this was onely for I*ehoſaphats* ſake, of whom he deſcended. For that which followeth, verſ. 29. Ahaziah reigned the eleventh year of I*oram, &c.* It hath beene already expounded upon, 2 King. 8. 26. the ſeeming contradiction being reconciled. Note. And the Spirit of God in repeating the ſame thing twice, viz. that he reigned but one yeare, would have us note, what a ſhort time he reigned for his wickedneſſe, wherein he exceeded even his wicked father I*oram*, as I*oſephus* ſaith, and we may eaſily gather, if we compare their hiſtories. Righteouſneſſe prolongeth a Kings life in glory, but wickedneſſe cutteth it off betimes.

V. 30. Ioſephus. Toſtatus. Vatablus. And Iehu came to Iezreel, then Iezabel painted her face and tyred her head, &c.] To what end ſhe thus did, Ioſephus ſetteth forth, ſaying, that ſhe ſtood in the tower in her royall attire, that appearing in the Majeſty of a Queen, ſhe might the more move Iehu, as Toſtatus and Vatablus, and haply ſhe thought that whatſoever ſhe ſhould ſay, Iehu would not diſhonour himſelf ſo much, as to embrew his hands in the bloud of a woman. Wherefore ſhe caſt out this reproach againſt him, had 1 King. 16.10. Zimri peace that ſlew his maſter? for he himſelf indeed periſhed, within ſeven days after that he had thus gotten the crown, ſo ſhe hoped, that Iehu ſhould do, ſhe having many more ſonnes, of which ſhe made account, that ſome one would be preſently ſet up, and be revenged upon Iehu, for the death of her ſonne Ioram. Thus ſhe made a treacherous Zimri of Iehu, who was anointed of the Lord to do this execution.

V. 32. But ſhe ſoon paid dear for this and all other her wickedneſſes: for Iehu lookt up and ſaid, who is on my ſide? and immediatly two or three Eunuchs lookt out at the window, and he commanded them to caſt her down, which they did, and ſo ſhe died, and was troden under the horſes feet. A miſerable and deſperate end, but ſuch as ſhe was well worthy of, for cauſing innocent Naboth to be ſtoned to death, Note. and for perſecuting and killing up the Prophets of God. For it is to be noted, that being in apparent danger, ſhe ſought not to hide her ſelf, neither had any remorſe for her ſinnes before ſhe died, but went on in her pride and vanity, thinking to daunt and to outface the executioner of Gods judgements upon her now in preſence, an example to all the wicked bloud-thirſty enemies of the truth, wherein they may ſee their own deſtiny, viz. that continuing to fill up their ſinnes unto the end, they ſhall then ſuddenly be horribly deſtroyed by ſuch meanes as they leaſt feared; as ſhe by her own attendants. But they herein ſhewed their falſe hearts to her their Lady and miſtreſſe, for which cauſe ſuch are rightly called by a certain Emperour, ſorices aulæ. It is ſtrange to ſee, what an expoſition, Lyra ſaith, the He- Lyra. brews make upon this place, contrary to all our Doctors, and yet by him alſo favoured, that Iezabel painted her face, &c. to allure Iehu to love her, and whereas her words ſeem to make againſt this, Had Zimri peace that ſlew his maſter? He wreſteth them ſtrangely, rendring them thus, can there be peace? there making an interrogation point, and then adding Amri ſlew his maſter, leaving it to be ſupplied, and yet reigned many years in peace, underſtanding her demand, can there be peace? as a wiſh that there might be ſo to him. But the text ſpeaketh not of Amri, but of P.Martyr. Zimri, neither did Amri ſlay his maſter, but the murtherer of his maſter, and Iezabel being now an old woman, it had been abſurd for her to think of alluring any man to love, by thus trimming up her ſelf, but rather to deride her, as Martyr reaſoneth.

V. 34. Iehu then went in to take his repaſt, and when he had ſo done, he bade ſome about him to viſite that curſed woman and to bury her, becauſe ſhe was a kings daughter. He thought haply, that he ſhould be the more maligned by other kings about, and ſpecially by the kings of the Sidonians, of whom ſhe came, if he ſhould ſuffer her corps to lye unburied. If it be ſaid, by the ſame reaſon he ſhould have taken order for the buriall of Ioram, it is anſwered, he cauſed him to be caſt out to fulfill a propheſie, and although there was the like propheſie touching Iezabel, yet V. 35,36,37. he might for the preſent forget it; but when he heard, that the dogs had eaten her up, he ſoon called it to minde, and repeated the words thereof, that the dogges ſhould eat her up, and that ſhe ſhould be as dung upon the earth, neither ſhould any man ſay, this is Iezabel, meaning, when he ſhould paſſe by her ſepulchre, as is common to ſay of great perſons, for ſhe had no ſepulchre or monument, whereby to be remembred, and ſo it was verified in her, which is ſaid Prov. 10. 7. The memory of the wicked ſhall rot.

By Iezabel we may with Hugo allegorically underſtand this world, which being moſt vile, ſheweth yet a painted face, to allure to the love of her, but all the pomp and pride of this world will not uphold it, but when the time of judgement commeth, it ſhall all be ruined and conſumed, and all that are drawn by the glory thereof together. Martyr by Iezabel underſtandeth the Pope of Rome, who painteth and ſetteth forth himſelf as a vice-god upon earth, when as he is full of fornications and witchcrafts, by his idolatries and powerfull illuſions bewitching mens mindes with the love of him. But when the time of his judgement cometh, all his glory ſhall ſuddenly be overthrown, he ſhall be cruelly deſtroyed, and become as baſe as the dung upon the earth, even to thoſe that have honoured him, which is according to the revelation, where he is likened to a great whore, that cometh finally to deſtruction upon the ſudden. Yea, any great ſeducer to things idolatrous may be underſtood by her, as Rev. 2. 20. thoſe that ſeduced ſome in the Church of Thiatira to eat things offered to idols.

Touching painting of faces, Martyr here taketh occaſion to inveigh againſt it, as being cenſured by Cyprian, Chryſoſtome, Auguſtine, and the reſt of the fathers, and as coming from pride and fleſhly luſt, it being hereby ſought to allure men, and a changing of the naturall face into an artificiall, but indeed not to the bettering, but marring thereof; alledging Cyprian, ſaying, that the devill taught the daughters of men to make themſelves ſeem fair thus, to allure the ſonnes of God to their deſtruction. He that deſireth to read more at large of it, may look into his diſputes thereupon, 2 King. 9.

CHAP. X.

NOw Ahab had 70. ſonnes in Samaria (that is, of his own, and the ſonnes of his ſonnes and daughters) and he wrote letters to the Princes of Iſrael, and the Elders in Samaria, who brought them up, &c.] That is, ſaith Iunius, to ſuch princes, as Ioram had ſent to Samaria with his children, to keep there with them, and to tutour them in the houſes of the Elders, who were as Aldermen in that city, when he went out to war againſt the Syrians. Although I cannot ſee, but that we may well grant, a longer time of their abode in that City, as being the chief City of the kingdome, that amongſt the great ones, there they might have noble education. But to let this paſſe, Iehu having ſlaine Ioram, the chiefeſt of Ahabs family, it remained now that he ſhould caſt about, how to cut off all the reſt, and to this end he offers the Samaritans and Princes of Iſrael reſiding there for the cauſe before ſaid, if they would, to ſet up one of their maſters ſons for king, and to fight for him, telling them, that they had means ſo to do, chariots and horſes, a defenced city, and armes. Which ſome interpret, as ſpoken ironically, ſeeing the chariots and armes were now in his own power, he being generall of the whole army at Ramoth Gilead, others as ſpoken ſeriouſly for the great ſtrength of Samaria, and becauſe moſt probably, although a great army was then in another place, yet Samaria was not left without ſufficient ſtrength, there being ſo much of the bloud royall there, and other princes with them. It ſeemeth to me, that he was not ſerious, becauſe if there had been ſuch ſtrength, he would not have delayed the time by writing, but immediately have haſtened thither with his army to deſtroy Ahabs poſteritie, leſt forces being gathered together for their defence, that work might have proved difficult and tedious. He wrote then thus unto them, as conjecturing, that it would fall out as it did, that they apprehending his great power, having the command of an whole army ready prepared, and their own inability to reſiſt him, would preſently yield unto his will.

V.5. Iehu having received anſwer to his letters, that they were all his ſervants, and V.6. would doe whatſoever he commanded, wrot again that they ſhould bring him the V.7. next day by that time, all the heads of their maſters ſonnes, which was done accordingly, V.8. they being all inſtantly ſlain. Then Iehu bad that they ſhould be laid by the V.9. gate upon two heaps till the morning, whereby it ſeemeth that they were brought thither late in the evening, wherefore he deferred his going out to ſee them, till the morning, and then coming to the gate, he ſaid to all the people whom hee moſt probably appointed to be there, together with the men that came from Samaria, ye are juſt, I have conſpired againſt my maſter and ſlain him, but who ſlew all theſe?] Thus juſtifying himſelfe by their fact, who had now ſhed much more of the royall blood then hee, and the more to juſtifie both himſelfe and them, he applyeth the V.10. propheſie of Elijah againſt Ahabs houſe as now fulfilled, ſaying; know yee now that P.Martyr. nothing of the word of the Lord ſhall fall to the ground, &c. P. Martyr notwithſtanding this propheſie, chargeth the Princes of Samaria with too much timerouſneſſe, perfidiouſneſſe and parricide, becauſe they did not firſt entreat for the ſparing of their lives, who were committed to their care and cuſtody; but to ſave their own lives and eſtates, at the command of Iehu committed this great murther, ſaying, that although this was to be done, ſeeing God had decreed it, yet they not knowing that it was committed to Iehu to ſee this execution done, neither firſt conſulting with any prophet about it, but being carried with a baſe fear of looſing their own lives, may juſtly be condemned therefore. But for ſo much as their king was now dead, and Iehu was known to be king, and moſt probably known to be ſet up to cut off the wicked houſe of Ahab, yea happily he intimated ſo much in his letters unto them, although it be not expreſſed; I think rather that they ſinned not herein, but did according to their duty to God, whoſe will they would not reſiſt, and to the Rom.13.1. new king, to whom they yielded ſo ready ſubjection, according to Gods law. There may ſeem indeed to have been much puſillanimity in them, becauſe they were moved to yield by this conſideration, that two kings could not ſtand before him, and therefore they concluded, that they ſhould be much leſſe able to make head againſt him, but it was an higher power that moved them thus unanimouſly to ſubmit unto Iehu, whom he had ſet up, and therefore though they feared, and without any reſiſtance obeyed his command, it is not to be marvelled at, as too much timerouſneſſe.

Note. Thus the word of God alwayes takes effect, and all the wicked thereby threatned, are at the length puniſhed moſt ſeverely. Neither is it cruelty in the executioners that being hereby ſet a work, kill and ſlay them; but zeale and juſtice, ſeeing it is moſt juſt for any man to doe whatſoever God willeth to be done, his will being the rule of juſtice.

V.11. And Iehu ſlew all that remained of the houſe of Ahab, and his nobles, his acquaintance, and Prieſts.] They were all a company of idolaters, and although they came Lyra. not of Ahab, yet they were of his houſhold, and ſo were included in the name of his houſe, which Iehu was bidden utterly to deſtroy. Some by the Prieſts here ſpoken that her ſonne had ſome, whom he kept in his houſe. By the word notas, ſignifying tell things to come, wherefore he readeth it γνωστους knowers. But the word קירצן ſignifieth rather men known unto him, as converſing dayly with him when he had thus cut oft the houſe of Ahab in Iezreel, he went to Samaria, and upon the way thither, he met with the brethren of Ahaziah at Bethekedi of the ſhepheards] according to Iunius, that is, the houſe of binding ſheep to be ſhorne, unleſſe it had the name from that which was done there at this time, viz. the ſlaughter of the 42 brethren of king Ahaziah here, becauſe kings are ſhepherds of the people. But this is farre fetcht, ſeeing although kings be ſometimes ſo called, yet not without further explication, and their brethren are not ſo called, neither were they bound here, but ſlaine; and it was now the knowne name of the place, and not afterwards uppon this occaſion ſo called.

V. 13.

They being asked, did not only tell who they were, but that they went to ſalute the children of the king and Queen. Here it may firſt be doubted, how theſe can be ſaid to be the brethren of Ahaziah, ſeeing he was the youngeſt, and that he was made king, becauſe the Arabians had ſlain all his elder brethren? 2 Chron. 22. 1. Sol. By brethren, kinſmen alſo were underſtood amongſt the Hebrewes, and theſe are called v. 8. ſonnes of the kinſmen of Ahaziah, miniſtring unto him, and Princes of Iudah. Secondly, whether Iehu did well in killing theſe who were none of Ahabs houſe? Sol. God himſelfe juſtifieth him, v. 30. and therefore he did undoubtedly, that which was right herein. For although they were not of Ahabs houſe, yet there was great familiarity betwixt theſe and them, they were birds of a feather, and joyned to Ahabs houſe in idolatry, for which by the law of God, they ought to be put to death. Thirdly, whether they were going to viſit the children of Ioram and Iezabel, becauſe if Iehu met them in his going to Samaria, they were come paſt the place where they lived; I doe not think with ſome, that they were travelling to Iezreel, ſuppoſing them to be there, for betwixt great perſons ſo linked together in love, there is often certain intelligence, that they may not miſtake the place, but as they came from Ieruſalem towards Samaria, he might meet them, where the way from Iezreel met with theirs. Fourthly; why were they ſo fooliſh to put thẽſelves into ſo great danger meerly upon complement at this time? Sol. They were doubtleſſe ignorant, that the kings children were ſlain, or Ioram or Ahaziah, which alſo their free acknowledging, for what end they came, argueth; ſo alſo Joſephus and Toſtatus, though ſome think otherwiſe, and that they lurked at this place to hide themſelves, having heard before this, how things went.

Joſephus.
Toſtatus.

But the place, where they lived being farre South and Samaria Northward, they might well be ignorant of that, which had been ſo lately done, as Lyra reaſoneth.

Lyra.

Fiftly, why 2 Chron. 22. 8. theſe are ſaid to be ſlain, and then Ahaziah, whereas he was ſlain before? 2 King. 9. 27. and theſe ſome dayes after, ch. 10. 12. Sol. The hiſtory being ſo fully, according to all the circumſtances, ſet forth in the Kings, the Chronicles do onely ſet forth ſomewhat of it briefly, not reſpecting ſo much the order, as the thing done, with ſome particulars before omitted. And therefore becauſe nothing was ſpoken before of the ſlaying of Ahaziah by Iehu, it is finally ſet down, though out of place, becauſe Iehu was now going to Samaria, where he is ſaid to have been found hiding himſelf, of which ſee before ch. 9. 27.

Judg. 1. 16.

Then going forward he found Ionadab the ſonne of Rechab, &c.] Rechab came of Iethro the father in law of Moſes, otherwiſe called the Cynean, from the place where he dwelt, and Rechabs father is ſaid to be Chamoth, who it ſeemeth, came of Heber, which of old ſeperated himſelf from his own nation to go and dwell with the Manaſſites, when they went and dwelt in the mountanous parts of Iudah, and this Iethro was alſo called Hobab. He was a moſt godly man, and full of zeal for God and againſt idols, and led a moſt ſtrict life, and enjoyned the like to all his children, as we may ſee Ier. 35. And for this cauſe he was had in great honour among the people, wherefore Iehu ſeeing him upon the way, thought it would be a great grace unto him to take him along with him, and for this cauſe after ſalutations he cauſed him to come up into his chariot to ride with him to Samaria, ſaying, come with me and thou ſhalt ſee my zeal for the Lord.

Joſephus.

Ioſephus ſaith, that he was his old acquaintance, and now told him, what he had done at Iezreel againſt Ahabs houſe for idolatry, and if ſo, then Iehu was well diſpoſed poſed before, ſeeing otherwiſe he would not have been linked in friendſhip with ſuch a man. But there ſeemed by this his ſaying, to be ſome tang of hypocriſie in him, becauſe he would have his zeal ſeen by men, which appeared more afterwards, when having put downe the idolatry of Baaliſme, he fell to that of Ierobeams calves, v.29.

V.17. When Iehu was come to Samaria, he ſmote all that remained more unto Ahab,

P. Martyr. ſlain. If it be demanded here, whether Iehu ſinned not in thus diſſembling? Martyr anſwereth, that he did, becauſe he lied to the encouraging of the Baalites to ſin, who haply for fear would otherwiſe have left their idolatry many of them, and by this his diſſimulation he grieved and gave occaſion to many good men to think hardly of him, as deſtroying the houſe of Ahab for none other cauſe, but to get his kingdome.
And what is ſaid by others in juſtifying Iehu he taketh away: as that it was but an officious lye, that he made it ſoon appear with what minde he did this, and God knew the goodneſſe of his intent, to which he anſwereth, that to make an act good, not onely the intention muſt be good, but the thing lawfull, and that ſin may be committed as well in a ſhorter as in a longer time, and that although it were but an officious lye, it was a ſinne, which he illuſtrateth by the practice of ſome againſt the Priſcillianiſts in Saint Auguſtines time, who were a Sect that could not be diſcovered, that they might be puniſhed accordingly. For when any of them were taken and examined, they would deny all their tenets, wherefore ſome Chriſtians, who ſtood for the truth, feigning themſelves to be Priſcillianiſts alſo, had in private all which they held, declared unto them, whereby they were diſcovered.
Auguſtine. But this fact of theirs Auguſtine condemneth, lib. de mendacio ad Conſentium. Neither was this of Iehu an officious lye, that is, tending to good to ſome, and to no hurt to any, becauſe, as hath beene already ſhewed, this tended to evil to divers.
Lyra. Lyra alſo ſaith, that this lying was not commendable in Iehu, but onely his fervent zeale to deſtroy idolatry, and to finde out idolaters appeared, for an example to all Hugo Cardin. Chriſtian Kings. And H. Cardin. agreeth with Martyr, ſaying, why ſhould we ſeeke to excuſe him from lying, when as he ſinned ſo fouly by idolatry? Yet Pellican Pellican. calleth it a godly deceit, wherewith it was juſt with God, that they ſhould be deceived to their deſtruction, who had deceitfully drawne others to their damnable Toſtatus. ſuperſtition. And Toſtatus ſaith, that Iehu ſpake ironically, as Eliſhah did, when he bade the Baalites to take a ſacrifice to offer to Baal, and to call upon him, and when they were calling, to cry aloud, for ſurely he is a God. And this is not ſo much to be laboured about to juſtifie Iehu, as other godly Princes, who have by all meanes ſought to finde out and to puniſh idolaters, as Conſtantius, the father of Conſtantine the Great, who being a Chriſtian in heart, made an Edict, that all, who were Chriſtians ſhould loſe their places, becauſe he would not be ſerved by any ſuch in his warres; but when all ſincere Chriſtians had hereupon forſaken his tents, they were recalled againe, and the other put out.

It is true, to lye or to diſſemble is a ſinne, ſo likewiſe it is a ſin to kill, but when any are by God adjudged to death, as all idolaters in Iſrael were, as the Magiſtrate may kill them, and root them out of the land, ſo he may uſe any ſubtile meanes, to circumvent and finde them out, which to others it is unlawfull for to doe, but Epheſ.4.25. they muſt be dealt truly and plainely withall, as being fellow members, and not lyed unto. Otherwiſe Ioſhuah to winne Ay might not have uſed that diſſimulation to make a ſhew of fleeing away to draw them into the danger of an ambuſhment; nor the children of Iſrael have borrowed jewels of gold and ſilver of the Egyptians, making a ſhew hereby, as if they meant to reſtore them againe within a few dayes, when they never meant it. To take uſury alſo is a ſin, but of Canaanites who were appointed to deſtruction, it might be taken, although not of their brethrē

To returne to Iehu, the Lords approbation is ſufficient to beare him out, as in killing the kinſmen of Ahaziah, as was ſaid before, ſo in this his diſſimulation alſo. For after it, he praiſeth him, and having done that, which was right in his ſight, although otherwiſe a wicked Idolater, and promiſeth him a reward therefore, v. 30. And the Lord even ſeemed to worke with this diſſembling by infatuating the ſervants of Baal to beleeve that which he had ſaid, when as they both ſaw Ionadab, a man zealous againſt ſuch as they were and their religion, with him in great familiarity, and brought, as a ſpectatour of his doings, and could not but heare of the ſlaughter of Baals prieſts in Iezreel, and of their King I*oram*, and his Mother Iezabel for her advancing of the worſhip of Baal, called whoredoms and witchcrafts. Contrariwiſe the faithfull, who had their underſtanding, conſidering theſe things could not, but conceive, that what he ſaid, was in policy, to deceive the Baalites, and rejoyce thus to ſee him plotting their deſtruction, inſtead of being offended at it.

The ſervants of Baal, who were now invited to the ſacrifice are generally thought to be his Prieſts onely, becauſe they had veſtments brought out to be worn in ſacrificing: For the devil is Gods ape, for ſo much as Gods ſervants, the Prieſts ſerved him in peculiar garments, the devil would have his to ſerve him likewiſe. But I cannot ſee, how the temple of Baal, which certainly was very great in ſo great and populous a city, ſhould be full from one end to the other of Prieſts onely, ſeeing it might conteine, as the temple of Dagon in Sampſons time, not hundreds, but certaine thouſands. It is to be conceived then, that the veſtments brought out were onely for the Prieſts, which aſſiſted in ſacrificeing, who onely are meant by all the ſervants of Baal, viz. who ſerved at his altar, but many more came in and ſo the houſe was filled. Now to bring theſe together into one ſlaughter-houſe, no ſuch ready way in the world could have beene deviſed as this. For the ſervants of Baal hearing of the deſtruction of their great patrons could not but feare and hide themſelves in divers places, ſo that otherwiſe it would have beene hard to finde them out, and would have required a long time, but by this policy they were ſoone brought all together to ſuffer death, as they were well worthy. If it ſhall ſeeme ſtrange, that Iehu ſhould ſuffer them, untill that they had finiſhed their ſacrifice P. Martyr ſaith well, that moſt probably he delayed the execution till this time, P. Martyr. becauſe haply there came ſtill more and more; and it may alſo be thought that he ſtayed, till the ſacrifice ended, that he might take them at their coming out, and lay their puniſhment upon them, when they had fully acted their ſinne. For his going in with Ionadab and bidding them ſee, that there were none of the ſervants of the Lord amongſt them, but the ſervants of Baal onely, herein he would ſeeme to them, as if he had a care, that their ſacrifice might not be defiled by the preſence of any, that were enemies to Baal and derided his worſhip, for even the heathen uſed to cry out, when they went to their ſacrificing, Procul, procul eſte prophani: V. 25. but ſecretly he meant, to provide, that whileſt the Baalites were deſtroyed, none of the ſervants of the Lord ſhould periſh together with them; for which cauſe ſome thinke, that all the Baalites had veſtments put upon them, whereby they might be knowne. The ſervants of Baal being all ſlaine, their dead corpſes were not buried, but caſt out to lye rotting as dung upon the earth for their greater debaſement, ſeeing to be buried was alwayes counted an honour.

Then they went to the city of the houſe of Baal, and brought out the images and V. 26. burnt them, and they brake downe his image and houſe and made it a jakes to this day.] V. 27.
Which was all done to ſhew the greateſt deteſtation of idolatry, that might be; and to purge the land ſo of Baaliſme, that it might never be ſet up againe in Iſrael. For when Conſtantine the Great put downe idolatry in his Empire, he onely ſhut up idols temples, but for ſo much as they ſtood ſtill, Iulian eaſily opened them and ſet up idolatry againe. Wherefore Theodoſius to prevent this for time to come, Note. demoliſhed them. And it may be noted, that the idolatry of Baal was never practiſed in Iſrael more: Iehu and his ſucceſſours indeed even to the Babylonian captivitie, chap. 17. idolized with the golden calves after the manner of Ieroboam, but from this of Baal they were free alwaies after this execution.

Wherefore to purge this land from Popiſh idolatry it had beene neceſſary at the firſt, although not to demoliſh temples to this wickedneſſe abuſed, becauſe they were not at the firſt built, but purely to ſerve God in, yet to bring forth and burne the images, croſſes and veſtments, to breake downe the altars, and burne the maſſe bookes, &c. abuſed to ſuperſtition, a new table and liturgy being prepared inſtead thereof. For becauſe it was not thus done, this idolatry continueth to this day, and of late there was great danger of its overſpreading this whole Nation againe, but that it hath pleaſed God out of his infinite goodneſſe beyond our expectation to turne it away. And he, who hath done this, inſpire the great counſell of Parliament, that by doing now, what hath beene formerly neglected, they may with Iehu put this Baal quite out of this our Iſrael never to returne for the corrupting of it any more.

P.Martyr.

Touching temples built for idolatry, Martyr maketh mention of two that were converted into churches for the uſe of Chriſtians: one the temple of Pantheon at Rome, the other of Mars at Florence, adding that there were alſo many more uſed in like manner: wherefore he urgeth not to the demoliſhing of temples, but of images and Papiſts ornaments, as the ſafeſt way for thoſe, that embrace and profeſſe the truth. Junius. Iunius hath, They went into the houſe of Baal in every city. Reſpecting rather the meaning, then the words, which are ſo both in the Hebrew, Septuagint, and Vulgar Latine, and

Vatablus. Vatablus, who yet expounds them, that is, into every city, where there was an houſe of Baal. Some by this city underſtand the houſe of Baal it ſelfe, that was like a city for ſpaciouſneſſe; ſome a little city by Samaria, wherein was an houſe of Baal; but Joſephus. Ioſephus, Samaria, called the city of the houſe of Baal, becauſe it was famous or rather infamous for the magnificent houſe of Baal built there by Ahab and Iezabel. They that ſtand for other cities in Iſrael meant by this city ground partly upon the words here following, Thus Iehu deſtroyed Baal out of Iſrael, and not out of Samaria onely, and partly upon a conjecture, that Jezabel being ſo earneſt in promoting the worſhip of Baal would not content her ſelfe to have one temple onely for his ſervice in Samaria, but alſo in all the chiefe cities of the Kingdome. But for as much as the Text ſpeaketh but of one houſe, and there is nothing here ſaid, whereby we can gather, that they did theſe things in any other city beſides Samaria, to which Iehu and his men were come, I take it to be plaine, that Samaria is meant by the city, out of the gates whereof they having gone to caſt out the dead bodies of Baals ſervitours, they now entered againe and fetched out the Images and burnt them, and finally deſtroyed the houſe it ſelfe. And if Baal had but one houſe in Iſrael and that ſtood in Samaria, as we read, 1 *King.*16.32. it might well be ſaid when that was deſtroyed, and Baal was there rooted out, that he was deſtroyed out of Iſrael. And that being but a conjecture, whereby it is conceived, that many more houſes were built in other places to the honour of Baal doth thus eaſily fall to the ground.

P.Martyr.
Note.

But I will not here paſſe over the note of Martyr, that aptly Baals houſe was turned into Iakes: for both גלולים by which name idols are called, ſignifieth dung, and from hence, as from a great Iakes came a ſtinke infecting the whole city, viz. the ſtinke of idolatry and ſuperſtition.

V. 29.
V. 30.

But Iehu departed not from the ſinnes of Ieroboam, &c.] Therefore the Lord ſaid to Iehu, becauſe thou haſt done that which was right in mine eyes, &c] The firſt words here are inſerted by a prolepſis, and not to ſhew, that God made Iehu a promiſe that his children ſhould reign unto the fourth generation, when he ſinned like Ieroboam. For it is moſt probable, that at this time Iehu ſinned not ſo, but after that he was ſetled in his kingdome, onely the ſacred hiſtorian having ſpoken ſo much hitherto of his well doing, could not longer forbear to ſhew, what a wicked heart and ungratefull to God, that had thus advanced him, he had all this while within him. The words of v. 30. then have reference to thoſe going before the 29. God made him this promiſe for the zeal which he had ſhewed in throughly executing his will againſt Ahab and Baaliſme, brought in by Ahab to the offending him in ſo high a degree. For God reſpecteth the good done by any, although his heart be not right, as he did before Ahabs repentance in ſack-cloath and aſhes, ſo now Iehu his doing of theſe executions, as he willed, becauſe he would have, even the wicked and reprobate, have all encouragements to do well, and to ſee, that it is not a fruitleſſe labour to execute his will, that thus comfort and relaxation might be to his ſervants, and they not being moved by this his goodneſſe to ſet their hearts upon the right, might at the laſt day of reckoning be without excuſe, and likewiſe all others of the ſame ſtampe by their example. Toſtatus holdeth, that God ſaid thus to Iehu, when he was a worſhipper of the calves, not by way of encouragement but of checking, meaning that they ſhould have reigned ever, but now onely the fourth generation: but this is a preſumption without ground which the words cannot beare: for it is not ſaid, becauſe he had done ill, but all which was in the Lords heart, &c. ſo that it was plainly a reward promiſed for this, not a cutting of any ſhort threatened for his ſinne.

Note.

But it is to be noted, that whereas David, whoſe heart was upright was promiſed the throne to him and his for ever: Iehu whoſe heart was not ſo, had a promiſe onely to the fourth generation, a temporary reward for a temporary doing of good. But it may be demanded, how Iehu his doing good could pleaſe God, if it came from an evill heart, ſeeing that without faith it is impoſsible to pleaſe him. yea whatſoever is not of faith, is ſin. I will not here anſwer with ſome, that the thing, which he did being good pleaſed him, but not as it came from him that had this evil and unbeleeving heart; for if it had not pleaſed coming from him, he ſhould never have beene ſo approved by God and rewarded: but without faith a man cannot ſo pleaſe God as to be ſaved or to enjoy his favour to the advancing of him to his everlaſting kingdome, as thoſe faithfull perſons there ſpoken of, although he may pleaſe him ſo farre, as to be graced with temporary honour and bleſſing, that God may not ſeeme to be endebted to any man and not come out of it. If it be ſaid, then God is in ſome ſort pleaſed with ſinne; I anſwer, It is called ſin, which is not of faith, not becauſe it is every way ſinfull, for it may be morally good, and then the act is in it ſelfe not evil or ſinfull but good; onely it is ſtyled ſinne becauſe for want of faith and ſincerity in the doer corruption is contracted, which ſhall be puniſhed eternally, although God liketh ſo well, that the thing is done that he rewardeth it temporally. The Prophet, by whom the Lord ſpake this to Iehu, is thought by Rab. Solomon to be Ionah, who had anointed him: but by Toſtatus Eliſha. And Lyra noteth a proportion betweene Amri and Iehu in their reigning untill the fourth generation. For ſo likewiſe his ſonnes, Ahab, Ahazia, and Ioram reigned after him: but the proportion holdeth not, becauſe Iehu had foure that reigned after him, Amri but three onely, neither continued the kingdome in his race ſo long for any good act done, as by Iehu, or upon any promiſe made therefore. To let this obſervation go then as frivolous, we may rather note what a great grace Iehu had herein done unto him, ſeeing no race, ſince the diviſion of the kingdome reigned ſo long as his, untill the end of it at the Babylonian captivity. And here it may ſeeme ſtrange, that Iehu ſhould be ſo addicted unto the golden calves, as to be a worſhipper of them, when he had put downe Baal: for what was there more in one idol to draw him to it then in another? Anſw. He had beene bred and brought up in this idolatry, as being the Religion of Iſrael ever ſince it began to be a kingdome in Ieroboams time, and therefore although he obſerved the Lord to execute his will in that, for which he was made King, and haply to worſhip him alſo, as the words, verſ. 31. doe intimate, He regarded not to walke in the wayes of the Lord with all his heart. He could not give over the worſhipping of theſe calves alſo, for that he was bred up in this ſuperſtition appeareth in that it is ſaid, He turned not from the ſinnes of Ieroboam] as if it had beene ſaid, Notwithſtanding the great favour by the Lord done for him and promiſed to him and his as he had beene before, he continued a worſhipper of Ieroboams calves ſtill. To note which probably the ſame thing is ſaid both before the approbation given him by the Lord and after, although at the firſt ſpoken by a prolepſis, as hath beene ſaid, Iehu not doing ſo then. For although he had formerly ſinned ſo, as he was blindly led, yet it is likely at the time, when he was executing the will of God, and making the kingdome ſure, he for a time refreined himſelfe, but it being ſtill in his heart he left it not altogether to his his dying day. And it is not to be doubted, but that he was much moved by the conſideration of his kingdome being generally for this Religion, ſo that if he ſhould quite forſake it, he feared, that the people would be ſtirred up againſt him, and ſome going to Ieruſalem to worſhip, would draw others to the endangering of all Iſrael to returne to the obedience of all the houſe of David againe, which of old was Ieroboams feare, when he firſt ſet up theſe gods. And it could not but increaſe his feare, becauſe he had ſlaine the King of Iudah; and therefore if his power had beene ſo increaſed, that ſucceeded him, he ſhould have beene ſure to have beene cruelly deſtroyed. But what needed he to have feared, when he had Gods promiſe? certainly he needed not, neither would he, if he had had a true faith, but for want of faith both he and ſome other Kings better then he have done like unbeleevers, for which they have beene reproved and puniſhed. Note. So that we had need to get a firme faith to have power to forgoe our evil cuſtomes, and to goe againſt the ſtream of the multitude, and to be ſafe from being moved by carnall policies againſt that which piety and conſcience require.

V.32. From that time God began to cut off from Iſrael, and Hazael ſmote them in every coaſt of Iſrael.] After Iehu his ſinne, here followeth his puniſhment in his people by Hazael King of Syria, whom God appointed to be King by the miniſtery of Eliſhah; 2 King. 8. 13. and now is fulfilled what was then propheſied, although his cruelty towards the Iſraelites be not here particularly expreſſed, but thence to be learned, nothing being here ſaid, but that he ſmote them, there that he ſhould overthrow their ſtrong holds, ſlay their young men, kill their children, and rip up their women with childe. And this was done in all the moſt fruitfull parts of the land, where the Reubenites, Gadites, and halfe tribe of Manaſſeh dwelt. V. 33. It was indeed a puniſhment threatened for Baaliſme and putting downe the worſhip of the true God of which Elijah complained, whereupon he was bidden to anoint Iehu King of Iſrael, Hazael of Syria, and Eliſhah Prophet in his ſtead, threatening to deſtroy by the ſword of one, what was not by the ſword of the other deſtroyed. But the worſhipping of the calves being idolatry as well as it, and growing now to be an inveterate evil, both it and Baaliſme, of which they never repented, (for no ſinne is thoroughly repented, when the like abomination is ſtill lived in) were puniſhed together, and great was the miſery of this kingdome.

V.34, 35. And this is all which in the ſacred hiſtory is recorded touching Iehu, who reigned 28. years, and then he dying, Iehohabaz his ſonne reigned in his ſtead. He did nothing of worth, after that he fell to the worſhipping of the golden calves, his valour ſaid to be written of in the book of the Kings of Iſrael was before, not after, for then he had no courage to defend his coaſts from the Syrians, but loſt both Ramoth Gilead lately recovered, and all the rich countrey beyond Iordan, where the Reubenites, Gadites, and half tribe of Manaſſeh dwelt. For that not onely the people in thoſe parts were now ſmitten, but that Iſrael was truncated, part of the kingdome being taken away and brought under the Syrian, appeareth, becauſe Ieroboam is ſaid about 60. years after, to have recovered the border of Iſrael from the entring in of Hamath, 2 King. 14.25. ſo that it ſeemeth all this while to have been held by them. Note. Wherefore let Kings keep all idolatry out of their kingdomes as bringing ruine thereunto, and not ſome onely, as Iehu did, having thus alſo the ſpirit of courage turned into puſillanimity, and his glory into ſhame.

V. 1. WHen Athaliah (the mother of Ahaziah King of Iudah) ſaw that her ſonne was dead (as being ſlain by Iehu in Iſrael) ſhe (to ſhew of what kinde ſhe came, for ſhe was Iezabels daughter, who was both moſt earneſt in promoting Baaliſme, and of a domineering ſpirit) roſe up and ſlew all the Kings ſeed] her own grandchildren, thus through an ambitious deſire of reigning extinguiſhing in her ſelf all ſparks of naturall affection. And ſhe was carried on to this tragicall fact, as

Martyr

P.Martyr.

Note.

Deut. 17.

Martyr noteth, that by her authority Baal and his worſhip might be upheld in Iudah, although exterminated out of her father Ahabs kingdome of Iſrael by Iehu. For ſuch is the fury of idolaters, that they paſſe not for embruing their hands in the blood of any for the promoting of their idolatry, and therefore ſhe fearing, that the people would take one of the royall ſeed and make him King, which might be prejudiciall to her ſuperſtition, ſhe haſteneth and cutteth them all off that ſhe could come by. And it is not to be doubted, but that ſhe made this deſtruction of the bloud royall, as well out a deſire of revenge upon that ſeed, which ſhe thought ſhould be favoured as coming of David and Iehoſaphat, of whom ſhe would not leave one alive, as Iehu had not of her fathers houſe; as out of an ambitious deſire of reigning. But what had ſhe to do to reign, although all had been dead, ſhe was an alienigena, deſcended from the daughter of the Sidonian King, and not wholly Iſraelitiſh, and a woman; and ſo uncapable of the kingdome, ſeeing by his law God provided, that no ſtranger, but one of their brethren ſhould reign over his people? But ſhe moſt probably having the adminiſtration of her ſonnes kingdome in his abſence, had now power in her hands to ſet up her ſelf, the juſt judgement of God working with her deſignes for the puniſhment of Iudah for their idolatry, to which they were drawn by her means. Yet whileſt ſhe tyrannized thus, behold the providence of God, according to his word unto David, preſerved a light of his ſeed, one ſucking childe called Ioas.

V. 3.
V. 4.

Ioſabeah ſiſter to Ahaziah, wife to Iehoiadah the high Prieſt, ſtole him away from the midſt of the ſlain, &c.] And ſo this royall ſtock, now greatly in danger of being quite cut off, continued even untill the comming of Chriſt, who is King and reigneth for ever. This Ioſabeah is called Ioſabeath, 2 Chron. 22. 11: and whereas here ſhe is ſaid to have taken him away and his nurſe in the bed-chamber, there, ſhe hid him and his nurſe in the bed chamber, when the reſt were ſlain. His nurſe then, it ſeemeth kept him out of the ſight of the executioners, till this was done, and ſo ſhe was taken away with him to nurſe, and to bring him up in ſecret, none knowing of it, as Ioſephus ſaith, but ſhe and I*ehoiadah*, who is ſaid to be her husband. About the place where they were kept, all are not of an opinion, for ſome think, that it was one of the lodging-chambers one ſome ſide of the temple, for there were many, and R. Solomon that it was a room above the moſt holy place, wherein the ſacred veſtments and veſſels, and treaſure were kept. P. Martyr, that he was caried firſt into the one, and then for more ſafety to the other, to which I cannot ſubſcribe, becauſe one place onely, where he remained hidden ſix years, is ſpoken of, and R. Solomon is confuted by the text, wherein it is ſaid to be a bed-chamber, and not a treaſury. It was then a room amongſt thoſe, which the high-prieſt had peculiarly to himſelf on one ſide of the temple, which was very ſecret, and ſo fit for this purpoſe, and Ioas being here by the care of his Aunt preſerved ſixe yeares, whileſt Athaliah reigned, in the ſeventh was brought forth and ſhewed to certain with whom Iehoiadah made a covenant, that they ſhould joyn together to ſet up him for King, viz. to centurions, captains, and other officers, whom he ſent for to this end to come to him to the houſe of the Lord.

2 Chron. 23. 1, 2.

In the Chronicles centurions onely are mentioned, who are alſo named, and they are ſaid to have gathered together the Levites all over Iudah, and all the chief of their fathers houſes. Theſe centurions Martyr thinketh to have been a kin to the Levites, and ſuch as were well known to Iehoiada to be faithfull, to whom therefore he might ſafely communicate this matter. But I cannot think with him, that he had at the firſt made ſome Levites acquainted with this matter, that in time to come they might teſtifie, that this was the kings ſon, and not ſuppoſititious; for his teſtimony being of that high place and credit, was ſufficient for this amongſt all the faithfull, eſpecially his wife and the nurſe who was known at the Court, being agents herein alſo, neither indeed was it ſafe, till this time to diſcover it to any.

But why was he now brought forth, not ſooner nor later? He anſwereth, for two cauſes. Firſt, leaſt Athaliah continuing longer, ſhould be more confirmed in the kingdome, and prevaile to appoint a ſucceſſour and doe more hurt in ſetting up and ſpreading Baaliſme into more places. Secondly, becauſe Ioas now growing paſt a child ought in reaſon not to be kept as a child ſtill in obſcurity, but be made known, that henceforth he might live like one of royal dignity. I think that he ſtayed till this time and no longer, becauſe he doubted whether the people would be ſo inclinable to accept of him for their king being an infant, but ſo ſoon as he thought him fit to be ſhewed unto them, he brought him forth, and happily he delayed it, till now that the people being weary of her tyrannicall government, might be the more ready to receive him.

Moreover touching this Ioas, there are ſaith Martyr, who think him to be of the poſterity of Nathan another of Davids ſonnes, and not the ſonne of Ahaziah, although called ſo, becauſe he ſucceeded him in the kingdome, who ſtrengthen this their opinion from hence, that Athaliah would never have been ſo unnaturall, as to ſeek to ſlay the child of her own ſonne, who living and reigning, ſhe might have exerciſed the power of a regent at her pleaſure, but for ſo much as Ahaziah her ſonne and late king had no naturall ſonne, and by this means the kingdome was in danger to be tranſlated to another ſtock, ſhe thought it neceſſary to provide for the ſafety of her ſelfe, and favourites of her religion, by rooting all others out, that might bee brought in to reigne, and ſo to put her down, and her great God Baal withall. And to this he confeſſeth, that he moſt enclineth, but I muſt needs confeſſe that I ſee no ſuch force in this reaſon to move me ſo to do. For ſhe was of an haughty and ambitious ſpirit, & therefore would not be ſatisfied now with a ruling power under another, though never ſo near unto her; but would rule as Queen her ſelfe alone, like unto Semiramis the mother of Ninus, who put her ſonne into a womans habit, that ſhe might reign, and Irene the mother of Conſtantinus Copron: who put out her own ſonnes eyes to make him uncapable of the Empire, that ſhe might enjoy it. And he is ſo plainly ſaid to be the ſonne of Ahaziah, v. 2. and when he was ſhewed, it is ſaid, he ſhewed them not the kings kinſman, but the kings ſonne, that he cannot poſſibly be any other, beſides the conſideration of her, by whoſe care he was ſaved giveth no litle light into this matter, ſhee was ſiſter to Ahaziah, in whom naturall affection wrought to preſerve her brothers ſonne, and being of the ſame family, ſhe might well have opportunity ſo to doe, but not a little one of another family.

By their gathering together of the Levites, it ſeemeth that they were in theſe corrupt times moſt obſervant of the ordinances of God above others, but becauſe the chiefe ſtrength of the kingdome lay in the heads of the families, they were called together alſo to goe about this great work to ſet up a new king, who had right, and to put down a bloody Queen which had none.

V. 5. And he ſaid unto them, the third part of you ſhall be of them that enter upon the Sabbath, and ſhall ward the kings houſe,&c.] That this is to be underſtood of the Levites appeareth, becauſe they are ſpoken of that enter in upon the Sabbath, and v. 8. they which goe out upon the Sabbath. For they were by David numbred and diſtributed into 24 courſes, of which each courſe ſerved about the temple a week, and then the Prieſt of that courſe with his troop of Levites going out, he of the next courſe with his troop came in. Now there were of the Levites, 38000. whereof 24000. ſerved at their times in the houſe of the Lord, beſides 4000 door-keepers, and 4000 ſingers, who attended there by turnes, alſo, only 6000 were diſperſed over the land for judges. They that came in then were the courſe coming to ſerve at the temple, and they that went out the courſe, which had ſerved the week before, and each of theſe, if they held, as in Davids time, were 1500 and upward. By this then we are to underſtand, that Iehoiadah ſtayed that courſe of Prieſts and Levites, which had ſerved the week before, and now went out to help to defend the king, and as he uſed them that came in in three companies, one to ward about the kings houſe to withſtand any that ſhould be ſent out by Athaliah, againſt the king, one to keep the gate Sur. 2 Chron. 23. 5. The chiefe gate, which was the largeſt ſaith Iunius, and ſtood Eaſtward, and it was called Sur, ſaith Martyr, from declining, as the word ſignifieth, becauſe the door-keepers ſtanding before it made the unclean to decline from coming in that way, as the moſt common, and one the gate behind the guard, which carried ſhields, 2 Chron. 23. 4. Ianitores luminum, according ding to the Vulgar lat. in the gates; but another gate in particular, ſaith Iunius, is hereby meant, which ſtood South. As he diſtributed this courſe of the commers in, I ſay, into three companies and placed them thus, five hundred in a company, ſo he divided the goers out into two, whom he ſet to guard about the King on both ſides, for which Iunius calleth them Laterales cuſtodiæ. The Chronicles make it more plaine, that theſe were Prieſts and Levites, and whereas nothing is here ſaid 2 *Chron.*23.4,5 of the reſt of the men, that were preſent, there they are appointed to be in the courts of the Lords houſe, and the Prieſts onely and Levites, who were holy might enter in and be about the King, that is, thoſe Prieſts and Levites, who were laſt diſtributed into two companies, and if any others entered, they muſt be ſlaine, as not V.6. coming in the way of good will, but to ſeek the young Kings deſtruction. More- V.9. over Iehoiadah put weapons in the hands of the Centurions, ſpeares and ſhields, which were in the houſe of the Lord, and bade the Levites hold weapons in their V.7. hands alſo; and when he had made the guard ſtrong in all places about, he brought forth the King and crowned and anointed him, 2 King.11.12. 2 Chron.23.11. Iehoiadah and his ſonnes anointed him and cryed out, God ſave the King.

1. Here many doubts occurre, as firſt, whether Iehoiadah being a ſubject did rightly to conſpire againſt the Queen, who then reigned? although he might have withſtood her taking the government upon her at the firſt, yet it ſeemeth, that being in the throne it was not lawfull for any ſubject to pluck her out, becauſe all muſt be ſubject to the higher powers?

Anſ. She was an uſurper and the true King abode in his cuſtody, & therefore how long ſoever ſhe reigned, that obliged not the ſubjects of that kingdome any more unto her, but they might without all ſcruple proceed againſt her, as an enemy to the true King and State, eſpecially he that was by his place the ſecond man in the kingdome, and to ſee the doing of right to the King, who ſuffered wrong all this time. They that live under a King, who hath unlawfully atteined to the Crowne, and poſſeſſeth it are not by this example juſtified, that conſpire againſt him being private perſons, and not having right unto it, or lead by theſe, that have, or by ſuch Peeres of the kingdome as ſtand for the right of another unable to helpe himſelfe. For to ſuch it may be ſaid, He that ſmiteth with the ſword ſhall periſh by the ſword, becauſe he doth this, when it is not committed unto him.

2, Secondly, whether Prieſts and Levites might beare armes, as he appointed theſe to doe, ſith the word is the ſword of the Clergy, and Prophets pull downe, root up, and plant not by the materiall ſword, but the ſpirituall, viz. propheſying?

Anſ. It was no new thing for men of this tribe to take arms no more then of any other, for both Moſes commanded them to goe every one with his ſword in his Exod. 32. hand, and to ſlay ſuch, as committed idolatry with the golden calves, and when an army was ſent againſt the Midianites Phinees the Prieſt went as captaine over it, and this tribe made an army, when they marched in the wilderneſſe, as well as any other. And well they might, becauſe, as hath beene already ſhewed, many of them were ſet over civill affaires, and their ſervice being ſo ſeldome required about the temple, viz. not above twice in a yeare, they might eaſily be ſpared, at ſometimes to doe this ſervice to the common wealth, namely, when great neceſſity required it. But otherwiſe I doe not thinke, that they were employed as ſouldiers, becauſe they did alſo read and inſtruct the people in the Synagogues in all parts every Sabbath day.

If the queſtion be of Miniſters under the New Teſtament: whether they may be required to doe likewiſe? I anſwer, that our Lord ſeemeth to take all armes from us, when he forbiddeth his Diſciples to take a ſtaffe with them; and our miniſtery is a kinde of warfare for God, whoſe ſouldier Timothy is called, which muſt not be entangled with ſecular affaires, yea, a Biſhop muſt be no ſtriker, but 1 Tim. 3. muſt give himſelfe wholly to meditation, reading, and preaching, except extraordinary neceſſity requireth the drawing of his ſword; as to reſiſt theeves and robbers, or enemies ſetting upon him, or the place, where he liveth; in which caſe it is no good citizens part to ſit ſtill, but to reſiſt to the uttermoſt of his power.

Thirdly, Whether the temple were not polluted by giving order to have bloud ſhed there? Anſw. It is requiſite, that the place dedicated to the worſhip of God ſhould as much as may bee be ſpared from ſhedding bloud therein; but the Lord himſelfe biddeth to pluck wilfull murderers from his Altar and to ſlay them, and inſpired Solomon, who cauſed Ioab to be ſlain there, did by his fact ſufficiently juſtifie this of Iehoiadah, but of this enough hath been ſaid before upon that touching Ioab; and yet indeed by his military preparation there was no bloud finally ſhed there, for Athaliah was carried forth and ſlain.

V. 12. To returne therefore to the Kings coronation, here are three things ſaid to have been done unto him about his inauguration. Firſt, a diadem or crown was ſet upon his head. Secondly, the teſtament was put into his hands. Thirdly, he was anointed, P. Martyr. although ſome for (the teſtament have) the ornament, as Martyr ſaith, and rendereth it, howſoever in commenting upon it he preferreth, this reading, the teſtament: and indeed, it is to be preferred, although the word may alſo ſignifie an ornament, and both Pagninus and Vatablus take it ſo. For Deut. 17.19. it is commanded, that the King ſhould have the book of the teſtimony by him, and read therein all the dayes of his life; neither do we read in any place of other royall ornaments beſides the crowne, and of putting this book into his hands, according to the Vulgar lat. there was now good reaſon, becauſe it had been in the dayes of his grandmother, father, and grandfather ſo much neglected. The crowne ſet upon his head glittering with gold and precious ſtones ſerved to ſhew his kingly dignity, that he might be honoured the more: the book of the teſtimony, the care, that he ſhould have to maintaine the worſhip of God, and to beat down idolatry ſo much condemned in this book; and the anointing, other kingly endowments of wiſdome, fortitude, and juſtice.

Theſe things being done, acclamations were made, [God ſave the king] and trumpets ſounded, and there was clapping of hands for joy. Whereupon Athaliah hearing the noiſe came forth, into the temple, and ſeeing what was done, and the V. 14. Vulg. lat. ſtanding upon his tribunall. King ſtanding by his pillar, rent her clothes and cried Treaſon, Treaſon; and if Ioſephus may be credited, bade them take the new King and ſlay him, and the people Joſephus. contrariwiſe cryed out, God ſave King Ioas, and let Athaliah dye. But Iehoiadah V. 15. bade thē have her forth out of the houſe of the Lord, that ſhe might be ſlain, which V. 16. was immediatly done, & in the way of the horſes entrance into the King houſe ſhe Note. was ſlain, no man, that we read of, ſeeking to reſcue her, whereby we ſee the miſerable condition of tyrants, they may have mens bodies and lives ſubject unto them, but their hearts they can never have, that they who are in Regall dignity may feare to tyrannize or unjuſtly to uſurpe. As the mother Iezabel came to a baſe end for her tyranny before being trodden under the horſes feet; ſo moſt probably did her daughter for the like cauſe, becauſe it was in the way of the horſes, that ſhe fell. Lyra. Which was ſo called, ſaith Lyra, becauſe the Nobles about the Court might come riding thus farre, but then alighting they went on foot to the temple. Wherefore Ioſephus is not to be heard, when he ſaith, that ſhe was carried downe to the brook Cidron, and ſlain there.

Touching her rending of her clothes, ſhe did that in deteſtation of the fact, and out of extream ſorrow, it being a ceremony in uſe not only amongſt the Iſraelites, P. Martyr. but the heathen alſo, as Martyr noteth out of Suetonius, who ſaith, that Iulius Cæſar made an oration unto the people with his clothes rent when civill wars were began, the tribunes of the people being violated, & compelled to depart out of the city

Then Iehoiada made a Covenant between the Lord and the King, and the people, &c. V. 17. and between the king and the people. Things being ſo much out of order, the wiſe Prieſt thought it neceſſary now that he had made Ioas king, to direct him and the people to make a Covenant with the Lord to root idolatry out of the land, and to reſtore and maintain the worſhip of God pure according to his word, and to joyne the people and king again together as one in doing this to direct him to make a covenant with them to rule them in juſtice and equity, and them to make a Covenant with him, to obey and ſerve him as their King and Lord. Neither was this done without effect, for immediately they went about that, which their Covenant V. 17. tyed them to, viz. to deſtroy the temple of Baal and the idols therein, and ſlew Matthan the Prieſt before his altars. And thus doing, they had godly Aſa going before them, who coming after idolatrous Abijam, and Rehoboam together with the people, made a covenant with the Lord, and did mightily beat down idolatry. Oh that as the houſe of Commons hath entred into ſuch a Covenant, ſo the King and Lords would bee pleaſed to doe likewiſe, that all the people and not ſome only might follow them, and ſo together joyn their forces to root out popiſh ſuperſtition, which of late hath been ſo much magnified amongſt us. And the Prieſt ſet governours over the houſe of the Lord.] 2 Chron. 23. 18. And Iehoiadah ſet profeſſureſhips in the houſe of the Lord, which were committed to the Prieſts, the Levites, whom David had diſtributed, &c. It may ſeem by this in the kings, that ſome Captains with their bands were ſet to ward about the temple, that the Prieſts might ſecurely in thoſe tumultuos times doe their office therein, as ſome underſtand it, but the Chronicles maketh it plain, that nothing elſe is meant hereby, but that he appointed the 24 courſes of Prieſts firſt inſtituted by David to ſerve in the Temple, as formerly they had done, and verſ. 19. the porters to keep out the uncleane.

V. 19.

After this the Centurions and the guard, and all the people conducted the King to his palace, and ſet him upon the throne. But all that went before touching the deſtruction of Baals houſe, and the ſetling again of the Prieſts in their courſes could not be ſuddenly done, but required ſome dayes for the doing thereof, wherefore it muſt be conceived either that the king was conducted to his houſe before all this was done, yea they being but begun only, as ſome hold, or that he remained certain dayes after his coronation ſtill in the temple, happily where he had been kept before till they were done, and then this company repairing to him again, conducted him to his houſe with great joy, which is the more probable, both becauſe according to this order, his carrying to his houſe is ſet forth, and becauſe it is ſaid, Iehoiadah tooke the Centurions, Captains, &c. as implying his calling them thither again, after the buſineſſes before ſpoken of ended. And now the city had quiet, they had an unquiet life before under a tyrannicall Queen, who together with her husband, as Ioſephus ſaith, built a Temple unto Baal and ſet up his worſhip, which doubtleſſe was the occaſion of many quarrels betwixt the Baalites and the ſervants of the Lord, but now there was an end put unto them all, neither did any riſe up to revenge the death of Athaliah, and ſo they enjoyed great quietneſſe and peace.

V. 20.

The Allegory.
Rabanus.

Rabanus upon Athaliah maketh this Allegory; ſhee ſeeking to deſtroy all the ſeed of David, ſetteth forth the ſynagogue of the Iewes ſeeking to deſtroy Chriſt and Chriſtianity, for as Athaliah, ſo ſhe reigned, whilſt the Temple and ceremonies of the law ſtood. But Iehoſhabeth ſetting forth the Church, kept Ioaſh cloſe and ſo preſerved him in an inward place of the Temple, in like manner the Church preſerved the faith and love of Chriſt in the hearts of the elect by preaching him, untill that the ſynagogue Athaliah being deſtroyed in the time of Titus and Veſpaſian the city of God had quiet and no trouble from thenceforth any more by it.

CHAP. XII.

V. 1, 2.

Ioas was ſeven yeares old when he began to reign. In the ſeventh year of Iehu he was made King and reigned 40. yeares, &c.] The kingdome of Iudah being much diſordered by Athaliah, cometh now by the divine providence to be under a childe; from whom in humane reaſon, what could be expected for the amending of their condition. But it pleaſeth God, by weak means oftentimes to do wonderfully for the magnifying of his own power and mercy, and ſo he did at this time, Ioaſh by the good inſtructions of Iehoiadah the high-prieſt, did well, and was accordingly rewarded with a long reign, whereas his father and grandfather that were wicked, reigned but a ſhort time. His mothers name alſo was Sebia of Beerſhebah, which was one border of the kingdome of Iudah, that we might know, that ſhe was not alienigena, but rightly bred as his fathers mother was not, which turned to his ruine.

V. 3.

But this good high-prieſt lived not alwayes with him, as is afterwards ſhewed, and then he did evill.

V.4.

But the people ſtill ſacrificed in the high-places.] That is, as hath been before ſhewed, upon ſuch mountains, as whereupon their holy fore-fathers had anciently ſacrificed, but it was unto the true God and not unto idols, and therefore yet tolerated, as it had formerly been by godly Aſa, the great grandfather of this King, of which ſee more there.

V.5.

And Ioas ſaid unto the Prieſts, all the money of the Saints, the money of him that paſſeth, the money of ſouls, and the money of him that willingly offereth, the Prieſts ſhall take to themſelves, and repair the ruines, &c.] The vulgar Latin, to make it more plain, The money of the ſaints, which is brought into the houſe of the Lord by thoſe that paſſe, which is offered for a price of the ſoul, &c. Here Lyra reckoneth but two ſorts of money; firſt, that of the half ſhekles, which all were appointed to pay when they were numbred by the poll from 20. years old and upward. Secondly, voluntarily given by ſuch as were more wealthy. Wolfius beſides theſe two, nameth a third, viz. the money vowed by any for the preſervation of their lives in danger. But forſomuch as the ſame is ſaid to be paid for the life or ſoul, which is paid by thoſe that paſſe under this reckoning, for it is ſaid, he ſhall give for the redemption of his life, that there be no plague amongſt you, and this ſhall be given by every one that paſſeth to the numbred, it is plain, that the money of every ones life, and the money of him that paſſeth, is all one, and if we make a third ſort of money here appointed to be gathered, it muſt be founded upon theſe words, the money of the ſaints, but hereby nothing elſe ſeemeth to be underſtood, but the money of the holy things, as the word [ſanctorum] ſignifieth, as well as ſaints, and ſo the firſt words ſet down only the genus, or the money in generall to be taken, and the next the two ſorts, redemption money being about 10. d. and money voluntarily given, as we read was afterwards done, when Chriſt ſitting over againſt the treaſury, rich men caſt in much, and the poor widow her two mites.

Wolfius ſupplens Martyris comment.

2 Chron.24.5.

The Prieſts are bidden by the King to go through all the cities of Iudah, to gather moneys for this end from year to year, but the meaning is, the redemption moneys, and what any would voluntarily give, as in this place. For when all from 20. years old and upward, had paid it once, others ſtill attaining to the age of twenty, were to pay it the next year, and others the year following, &c. unleſſe we ſhall think with Iunius that the work of repairing the temple, at this time laſting more years, it was gathered of all over again from year to year, as in a caſe extraordinary it might ſometime be done, ſeeing it is ſaid unto Moſes, When thou numbreſt the people, &c. ſo that it ſeemeth when ever they were numbred, theſe moneys were to be taken, yea as I have ſhewed upon that place, this numbring was from year to year, for the maintenance of divers things pertaining to the ſervice of the temple, although Junius thinketh otherwiſe, and now moſt probably whileſt the temple was in repairing, the ſervice being intermitted, about which theſe moneys had been formerly beſtowed, they were taken for the uſe of reparation. Whereas 2 King. 12. 6. it is ſaid, that they ſhould take theſe moneys of their acquaintance, but here that they ſhould go out to gather money in all cities, it is moſt probable, that as the Prieſts dwelt in divers parts of the land, ſo they that dwelt neareſt to ſome cities, where they were moſt acquainted, ſhould go thither to gather it, and others to their neighbour cities. But it is to be noted, that before this 2 Chron.24.4 it is ſaid, that Iehoiadah took him two wives, and this ſurely was not till he was of riper years, as may alſo be gathered by the age of his ſon Amaziah, who was 25. when he began to reign, therefore born, when he had been King fifteen, that is, anno 22. of his age, moſt probably then he took him not theſe wives till he was 20. or 21. years old, about the 14. year of his reign, and after this, he took order for repairing the houſe of the Lord, and yet it is ſaid that it remained undone till Anno 23 of his reign, v. 7. If any man aske why Iehoiadah ſo godly a man took not order with the young king, about this ſo holy a work ſooner? It may be conceived, that the decay was not yet grown ſo great, or at the leaſt that the people not thinking it yet neceſſary to repaire, were unwilling to contribute unto it, or Iehoiadah being very very old, for he dyed at 130. and therefore was 90 when Ioaſh was made king, thought not upon all things that were needfull to be done, or if hee thought upon this, he feared the peoples unwillingneſſe, although it proved otherwiſe, and ſo delayed the time, at length yet as Ioſephus ſaith, moving the king to provide, that this work might be done.

Junius in Exod. 30. 12.

Joſephus.

What this decay was is not here expreſſed, only it is called the breach of the houſe, or the place or places broken through, as the word בדק ſignifieth. But 2 Chron. 24. 7. it is ſaid, Athaliah being moſt wicked, her ſons brake into the houſe of God, and took away all the conſecrated things of the houſe of the Lord, to adorn Baal. The vulgar Latin, deſtroyed the houſe of the Lord.] Whereupon Ierom according to the tradition of the Hebrewes, they deſtroyed it either by carrying out of it the ornaments, or as they ſay, becauſe when Athaliah endeavoured to bring idolatry into it, there was an earthquake renting it, and the Chald. calleth it the ſciſſure or cleft place of the houſe. This of the Hebrewes I paſſe over as an imagination of the Rabbins, becauſe it is not ſpoken of in the ſacred hiſtory. But we may well gather that ſome violence was done to the Temple in the time of ſuch impious rulers, whereby breaches were made in the walls thereof, although the deſtroying of it was not attempted, and ſuch a great rupture; and where ever elſe any decay was through antiquity for the Temple had now ſtood 155 yeares according to the Hebrews greater Chronicle, and as may eaſily be computed, or by any other means, the kings meaning was, ſhould now be made up, and if there came in mony enough, that ſuch ornaments as were taken away, ſhould be repaired again, as is partly ſhewed, that it was done v. 1. Iunius calleth the breach of the houſe, Labes domus. The Prieſts having the care of this reparation committed to them, were negligent in gathering the money, becauſe no benefit ſhould thereby redound unto them, or the people delayed to pay it; as not being willing to commit it to their truſt, or having gathered it in part as it ſeemeth, v. 7. where they are bidden to reſtore it, they neglected to ſet upon the work: wherefore the king calleth for Iehoiadah, anno 23. of his reign, challenging him for this neglect, and forbidding the prieſts thenceforth to gather any more money. For he had commanded, that this work ſhould be done with ſpeed, 2 Chron. 24. 4. and v. 5. in challenging them for that they made no more haſte, he ſaith, that they might bring from Iudah and Ieruſalem the gathering of Moſes the ſervant of the Lord, and of the congregation of Iſrael to the tabernacle, &c. pointing at the firſt ordaining of this numbring money, of which it hath been already ſpoken, and hereby it is implyed, that it was an annuall revenue of the tabernacle. To return to their neglect, the king for this would have them to meddle no further in this matter, and chid with Jehoiadah about it. Whereby becauſe it appeareth, that the king had power over the high-prieſt (which the Pope can by no means endure now) Toſtatus ſaith, that then the prieſts and laity were all alike ſubject to the king, but under the new Teſtament, the prieſts dignity received infinite encreaſe, ſo that he can both remit ſinnes, and make the holy body of Chriſt. But this is a meer deluſion, witneſſe St. Paul, who chargeth every ſoul to be ſubject to the higher powers, even under the new Teſtament, Rom. 13. 1.

V. 9.

Then Iehoiadah the Prieſt took a cheſt, and having bored an hole therein, ſet it on the right ſide of the altar, where men entred into the houſe of the Lord, &c.] 2 Chron. 24. 8. Therefore the King commanding, they made a cheſt fit, and ſet it in the gate of the Lords houſe without. Whereas Iehoiadah is ſaid to have prepared and ſet this cheſt, 2 King. 12. 9. it is to be underſtood by the kings appointment, then proclamation was made that they ſhould bring the gathering of Moſes appointed in the deſart. Then all the Princes and people brought and caſt in rejoycing, untill they had finiſhed. That is, they who were employed about this, repair the whole work belonging to it. For the placing of the cheſt, it was ſet in a place, to come into which a man muſt go through the prieſts court, whereinto it was not lawfull for the people to enter, for it ſtood by the door of the houſe, therefore the offerers did not put in the money with their own hands, but giving it to the prieſts and levites to put it in, to ſhew which, it is ſaid 2 King. 12. 9. that the prieſts who kept the door, put all the money that was brought to the houſe of the Lord there. And this was a means wiſely Wolphius. deviſed to draw the people to a willing offering, when they were thus aſſured that their moneys ſhould certainly be employed, as was intended, as alſo the ſetting of keepers, and placing of the cheſt near the altar, that men might be encouraged to it, as to an offering made unto God, as Wolphius noteth.

V. 10. And when they ſaw, that there was much money, the Kings and high Prieſts ſcribes came up, &c.] V. 11, 12. After that money in aboundance was brought in, now they fall to the diſpoſing of it, giving it into the hands of ſuch as were appointed to overſee the 2 Chron. 24. 11. work, and they here with hired carpenters and maſons, &c. 2 Chron. 24. 11. this is more fully ſet forth thus, they emptied the cheſt and ſet it again in his place, and ſo they did from day to day, till they had gathered money in aboundance. That is, from time to time, ſo oft as they perceived that any good ſumme was put in. And v. 12. this the King and Iehoiadah gave into the hands of the overſeers of the worke, who hired therewith carpenters, &c. and thus the work went on, till it was all finiſhed, v. 13. ſomewhat being added, 2 King. 12. 16. in way of commending the fidelity of thoſe that were choſen to take care of this work, they called them not to account, V. 16. for they were faithfull.] v. 134. before this we are given to underſtand, that neither baſons, pſalteries, trumpets, or other veſſels of gold or ſilver, were made of this mony, V. 13, 14. but that it was given wholly to repaire the houſe withall, v. 14. But 2 Chron. 24. 14. it is ſaid, that of the mony which remained when the reparations were finiſhed, Inſtruments both of gold and ſilver were made, for miniſtration in the houſe of the Lord. To reconcile which it is to be held, that the meaning of the Kings is nothing elſe, but that theſe monies were not given to the overſeers of the work in part to make any ſuch veſſels or inſtruments, but onely to repaire the houſe, yet there being much mony remaining ſtill, ſaith that of Chron. the fidelity of the overſeers was ſuch, that they brought it to the king and the high Prieſt, who cauſed theſe inſtruments to be made therewith. So then by the care of the overſeers appointed no ſuch veſſels were made according to Kings, but by the care of the King and Prieſt, they were of the ſuperabounding mony brought back unto them, Wolfius. Rabanus. according to Chron. ſo alſo Wolphius rejecting that of Rabanus, who ſaith that the mony whereof thoſe inſtruments were made, was the mony voluntarily given, and not the redemption mony, which went wholly for reparations.

V. 16. Finally becauſe other monies by the law of God were alſo to be paid for attonement, and conſequently the ſafety of the offerers ſoule, viz. for treſpaſſes and ſinnes, which went to the Prieſts maintenance, it is ſhewed, that ſuch equity was now uſed, that this belonging to the Prieſts of right went to them, neither was any part thereof taken for the foreſaid uſes. What mony this was, ſee Levit. 5. 15, 16. even the price of any mans fraud in keeping back part of the holy things, and Sallianus. a fift part more added hereunto. Sallianus addeth, that in caſe that he who was to offer was afarre off, he ſent mony to the Prieſts to buy all things for the ſacrifice, and what was ſpared out of this, when all things were brought, went to the Prieſts, which is not improbable; for difference between treſpaſſes and ſinnes, Toſtatus ſaith thoſe were omiſſions, theſe commiſſions, ſee before upon Levit. 5.

Pellican. An Allegory. Pellican maketh the negligence uſed about repairing the Temple, a figure of the neglect to reform abuſes in the ſpirituall Temple, that is, the Church; for as breaches made the Temple ruinous, ſo corruptions put the Church of God in great danger of ruine, and yet in ſeeking to purge theſe out, great negligence is commonly uſed. And he noteth, that Iehoiadah was the onely prieſt, that ever took care about repairing the Temple, but he ſhould have ſaid, till the time of Iudas Maccabæus.

All things being prepared about the Temple, as was aforeſaid, ſacrifices were there conſtantly offered unto God all the dayes of Iehoiadah, 2 Chron. 24. 14, 15, 16. 2 Chron. 24. 14, 15, 16. but then he being very aged, viz. 130 yeares dyed, and was honourably buried for his good deſerts in the ſepulchers of the kings of Iudah. And the princes of Iudah after this comming flatteringly to Ioaſh with moſt lowly reverence ſo wrought upon him, who had alwayes hitherto ſhewed himſelfe a moſt godly king, that they drew him to idolatry, to worſhip idols in groves, leaving the houſe of the Lord, to the provoking of his fierce wrath againſt Iudah and Ieruſalem, v. 17, 18.

The

v. 17, 18. The good demerits of Iehoiadah are thus expreſſed in the text. For the good, which he did in Iſrael towards God, and towards his houſe. That is, in Iudah, and not in the kingdome of the ten tribes, with which he had nothing to do [towards God] ſaith Ierom in beating down idolatry, and (to his houſe) in repairing it. For this alſo God bleſſed him with long life beyond any, that went before him ſince Iacobs time, who was of the ſame age, when he went down into Egypt. And his ſo honourable a buriall, is to be aſcribed to the piety of Ioas, to whom he was as a father, as long as he lived, and therefore was by him accordingly honoured both in life and death.

Hieronym.

After the death of Iehoiadah the court-ſycophants, whoſe hearts had been all this time towards the idolatry formerly practiſed by his father and grandfather and grandmother, in all humility move him, that this religion might be ſet up again; in the text no more is expreſſed, but that the Princes of Iudah came before Ioaſh worſhipping him, to whom he hearkened, and ſo they left the houſe of the Lord and worſhipped groves and idols. Whereupon Lyra following R. Solomon ſaith, that they perſwaded Ioaſh to accept of divine honour, and to this he yielded, becauſe one idolatry eaſily draweth on another, they ſoon added hereunto idolatry with groves and other idols alſo. And he feigneth, that they drew an argument from his living in the temple ſixe years, where none, but the prieſts muſt come upon pain of death, yet he continued there ſo long without any hurt, which proved him to bee more then a man, a god, and this is followed by Hugo Cardinalis and Pellican. But the ground of this opinion is too weak, viz. their bowing of themſelves to him, which is no more then Bathſhebah and Nathan the prophet did to David, or then is commonly done to any king. Whereas it is ſaid, that he hearkened unto them, it is a forcing of the words to ſtrein them to this, that he was willing and agreed, that worſhip ſhould be given to him as to a god, neither was the like ever done to any king of the Iews before or after. However the heathen Emperour Caius Caligula preſumed to ſet himſelf ſo up. Neither is it probable, that God would any time have tolerated it in him, being ſo well inſtructed, as he was, but preſently have ſtricken him with ſome miſerable death, as he afterwards did Herod. The words of the text indeed are ſo brief, that hereby it becometh queſtionable, whether they moved Ioas to turn idolater with them, or onely to give them leave to ſerve ſuch gods, as they had formerly done, becauſe nothing elſe is ſaid, but that they came and bowed unto him, and he hearkned to them, & that then they forſook the houſe of God, &c. But what they requeſted is not expreſſed, nor that they made any requeſt at all unto him, but left to be gathered. So that from this Scripture we can rightly gather no more, but that they leaving him free, if he pleaſed to go on in ſerving the Lord in his houſe, as he had been by Iehoiadah taught, deſired, that they might have liberty, as in times paſt they had, to ſet up in other places ſuch worſhip as was uſed in other nations, which were moſt flouriſhing. And this being granted, they did ſo, but that the king did thus alſo, it is not ſaid. Yet Ioſephus ſaith, that both king and people did it. But no more can hence be certainly affirmed, but that he tollerated idolatry in his kingdome, being drawn by their flattery, who durſt not move him herein all the dayes of Iehoiadah his life, but now he being dead, moved for it and prevailed. Yet becauſe he degenerated ſo farre, that he commanded Zechariah, a moſt godly prieſt, and ſonne of Iehoiadah to be ſlain, when he reproved him, as is by and by ſhewed, it is moſt probable that he turned idolater alſo together with them, ſeeing this is peculiar to idolaters to be cruell and bloudy, by the inſtigation of that murtherer the devill, whom they ſerve. We may note hence, firſt, what need we have alwayes to pray, that wee may be upheld in the truth, ſeeing Ioas being godly ſo long, yet now deſtitute of his old tutour, fell ſo fouly. 2, that it is of great avail to cōmit youth to good tutours & governours. Thirdly, that there is not a more peſtilent way of corrupting princes or others, then flattery, that by ſhewing an hatred alwayes of ſuch, we may keep out of their danger. Fourthly, that to tolerate a falſe religion, is the very way for kings to overthrow themſelves and their kingdomes, although they embrace it not themſelves, as the ſequel here declareth.

He ſent unto them his prophets, who proteſted unto them, but they would not hear them, them,&c.God being ſo greatly provoked,yet judged them not immediately,but firſt admoniſheth them to turn from his great wickedneſſe, and it is ſaid not a prophet, as if he had ſent one onely, but prophets, that is, many one after another, who exaggerated this ſinne unto them, and threatned them with judgements, if they did not, laying before them doubtleſſe the examples of other wicked kings and people, as of Ieroboam, Baaſhah, and Ahab, for thus prophets uſed to deale in the like caſe. He deferred therefore long to bring his judgements upon them, out of his accuſtomed goodneſſe, ſeeing it is not to be ſuppoſed, that theſe prophets were ſent altogether; but firſt one, and then another, afterwards a third, that when by no means they would be reclaimed, their cenſure how ſevere ſoever, might follow the more juſtly. But they were ſo farre from being moved by theſe admonitions, and this long patience, that they went on in their wickedneſſe, without regarding what the prophets ſaid. And they perſwaded the king moſt probably, that he being greater then they all, needed not to regard them, but doe what he pleaſed, notwithſtanding their admonitions and proteſtations, as other kings of the heathen did.

2 *Chron.*18.1.
1 *Chron.*11.8.

Then Hazael king of Syria fought againſt Gath and took it, and then ſet his face to goe to Ieruſalom.] For here moſt rightly commeth in the hiſtory of the kings again not ſooner, as Cajetan would have it, when he ſaith that this warre happened before the death of Iehoiadah, for puniſhments follow ſins, and go not before them, nor latter, as Toſtatus, and Genebrard, and Ioſephus, would have it, when they ſay, that Zachary had firſt impugned their idolatry, and was ſlaine; ſo making but one only coming of the Syrians againſt Ieruſalem, for they came manifeſtly twice. Firſt taking a bribe without doing further hurt, and then this ſhaking off the rod over them, as it were not working, at the end of another year, when they had raged againſt holy Zachary to the ſhedding of his innocent blood, with a few, killing and ſlaying many, and all the princes of the people, &c. Thus alſo Iunius. Touching Gath, it was a city of the Philiſtines ſubdued by David, & ever ſince that time till this held by the kings of Iudah, for Rehoboam is ſaid to have repaired it, and Ioſephus writeth of it, as being now under the king of Iudah. Hazael therefore in beginning his warre, here fought againſt Ioaſh, and prevailing went on to the chief city of the kingdome, Ieruſalem, thinking to take that alſo.

V. 19.

But Ioaſh fearing it tooke all the ſacred things, which Iehoſaphat, Ioram, and Ahaziah had conſecrated, and his own ſacred things, and all the gold,&c.It may ſeem ſtrange that Ioram & Ahaziah being idolaters ſhould conſecrate any thing to the houſe of God, but it is to be conceived, that they did it in the beginning of their reigns, before they declared themſelves, according to the accuſtomed manner of the kings of Iudah their predeceſſors, that their reigns might be the more auſpicious. Whereas it hath bin already ſaid, that the temple was before ſpoyled of all the ornaments which were carried into the houſe of Baal, ſo that it may ſeem there were now no pretious things therein remaining, it is to be conceived, that when Iehoidah cauſed the houſe of Baal to be deſtroyed, he firſt took and brought theſe ornaments out, and being ſanctified, reſtored them to the houſe of God again, but now the temple being forſaken, and groves frequented, it was juſt with God to give theſe pretious things into the hands of the heathen, and ſo the king of Syria departed from Ieruſalem home againe for that time.

V. 20.

For his other comming againſt Ioaſh, as this is wholly omitted in the Chronicles, ſo is that here, there being only a reference made to the book of the Chronicles of the kings of Iudah, for the reſt of the acts of Ioaſh in this place. Wherefore we muſt now again look to 2 Chron. 24. 20, 21, 22, 23.

Moreover when the ſpirit of the Lord comming upon Zachariah the ſonne of Iehoiadah] he from an higher place threatned them with Gods judgements for their foule ſinnes, they conſpiring againſt him, ſtoned him in the court of the Lords houſe by the kings command, who remembred not the kindneſſe of Iehoiadah his father towards him, Therefore at the end of the year certaine bands of the Syrians comming up, deſtroyed the Princes, &c. When this holy man ſaw that the judgement before going made the King and his Princes no whit the better, he according to his place, as the ſpirit moved him, inveighed moſt earneſtly againſt them, and threatned a greater judgement to come upon them by the Syrians, at what time they ſhould have no help from the Lord. For ſome hold that he was high Prieſt after his father, as Toſtatus and Wolphius, Pellican, &c. But in the Hebrew Chronology Pedaiah is ſaid to be high Prieſt now, and Zachariah a prieſt and a prophet, Genebrard followeth this Chronology, Ioſephus calleth him that was high-prieſt now, Phidaas. And becauſe the Scripture ſaith nothing of Zachariah his being high-prieſt after his father, we may well follow the Hebrew Chronology, holding that Iehoiadah had another elder ſon, who ſucceeded him in this office. And if Zachary were not high-prieſt, yet he was a prieſt and a prophet, and ſo a ſacred perſon, who ſhould have been reverenced, and the rather, becauſe he was the ſonne of ſo well-deſerving a father. But ſuch is the madneſſe of idolaters being oppoſed in their idolatry, that all reſpect of perſons being laid aſide, they breath out nothing but ſlaughter and bloudſhed, againſt thoſe, that tell them the truth, and ſo did Ioas and the princes of Iudah againſt Zachary, and not onely againſt him, but as may be gathered from verſ. 25. againſt his other ſonnes alſo, for it is ſaid, his ſervants conſpired againſt him for the ſlaughters of the ſonnes of Iehoiadah. Vnleſſe with ſome wee hold, that the plurall number is put for the ſingular, which is not unuſuall in the holy Scriptures, as where Sarah ſpeaketh of her giving children ſuck, when ſhe had but one, and of the theeves crucified with Chriſt, it is ſaid, that they railed upon him, when onely one did ſo. Therefore the vulgar Latin rendreth it by the ſingular number, and Ioſephus alſo, yet Ierom ſaith, that Zachary was ſlain together with his ſonnes, and that not improbably, although he onely be firſt ſpoken of, ſeeing it is ſaid likewiſe of Naboth at the firſt, but afterwards by Jehu his ſonnes are ſpoken of, as ſlain alſo. Our Lord reciting this parricide ſaith, Zachariah the ſonne of Barachiah, whom ye ſlew between the temple and the altar. Iunius and Hugo Cardinalis, Lyra, and others ſay, that the ſame man had two names, as many more have had, or that he was called Barachiah commonly by the people, the bleſſed of the Lord, as the word ſignifieth, becauſe he enjoyed the bleſſing of ſo long a life, farre beyond others, and was a bleſſed inſtrument of ſo much good, to reſtore the decaying eſtate of that kingdome and church. But why the murthering of this man is inſtanced in next to the murthering of Abel, when as it was 800. years before the time that Chriſt ſpake thus, and in that ſpace they had murthered many more prophets? is a queſtion. Iunius reſolveth it by ſaying, that Zachary dying called for revenge, as Abels bloud had firſt done, for he ſaid, the Lord ſhall ſee and require it, 2 Chron. 24.22. and the like is not ſaid of any other martyr. Wherefore our Lord threatning revenge, nominateth two examples alike, and paſſeth over all others, leaving all the righteous bloud alſo ſhed from Zachary till his time, to be underſtood hereby. What other opinions there are touching Zachary the father of Iohn Baptiſt meant there, or Zachary one of the ſmall prophets, ſee my comment upon that place. Genebrard relateth a tradition of the Iews, that his bloud continued bubling up, untill the time of Nebuchadnezzar, as calling for revenge ſtill, ſo long after. And out of Epiphanius, that after this bloud-ſhed the anſwers of God ceaſed, becauſe the temple was hereby polluted. Whether this were ſo or no is uncertain, becauſe many wonders are invented and paſſe for old traditions, but this murther indeed was moſt heinous, as the ſacred hiſtory noteth, ſaying, the King remembred not that kindneſſe, which Iehoiadah his father had ſhewed towards him. For he ſaved a venemous ſerpent from deſtruction, to be the death of his moſt dear and godly ſonne, which was the higheſt degree of ingratitude, and a childe of the family, where he had been tenderly brought up, which was moſt unnaturall, his father and mother alſo adventuring their lives to ſave him, that gave out this bloudy command, which was unparaleld tyranny, and that for nothing but zeal for God, and againſt moſt abominable idolatry, and obedience to his ſpirit moving him, which was a very preſumptuous fighting againſt God himſelf, and therefore if he did miraculouſly a long time after ſhew his diſpleaſure againſt it, he did but thus brand it to deter all men from the like ever after.

Therefore at the end of the year, certain forces of the Syrians coming up againſt him, invaded Iudah, &c, v. 24. And although theſe forces were but few, yet the Lord delivered multitudes into their hands, &c. ſo they executed judgements upon Ioas. After ſo horrible a ſin, judgement was not long deferred, the king of Syria himſelf came not, for it is thought by ſome, that Hazael was now dead, and a new king ſet up in Syria, who not regarding the great price not long before paid to his predeceſſour by the king of Iudah for his peace, entred his kingdome with ſome forces to ſpoil and deſtroy thoſe, whom the Syrians commonly counted their deadly enemies, as they did them. And it ſeemeth, that he was extraordinarily ſtirred up by God, who hated ſo much the abhominable wickedneſſe of Ioas, becauſe otherwiſe he ſhould have done like a deſperate man, to ſend out fewer againſt many more, unleſſe it ſhal be thought that he preſumed upon the valour of his men, and the cowardiſe of Ioas, who had formerly without making reſiſtance compounded with very great treaſure with Hazael. However, the hand of God was certainly in it, as the words of the hiſtory do imply. Therefore the forces of the Syrians came up, &c. viz. Becauſe when he conſented to idolatry he dealt ſo tyrannically with Zachary reproving it, and God delivered great multitudes into their hands being fewer. Thus fulfilling that which is threatned in the law againſt tranſgreſſours, Levit. 26. 37. ye ſhall have no force to ſtand againſt your enemies. For their invading of Iudah and Ieruſalem, it is moſt probable that it was done in this order, firſt their comming being heard of, the king gathered a mighty army and went out to fight againſt them, but the Syrians having ſlain many of them, and put the reſt to flight, went on to Ieruſalem, and having ſlain the Princes and done what they would to the king, moſt probably wounded him incurably, they took the ſpoyl of the Princes and ſent it away to their king in Damaſcus; the vulgar Latin hath it] in regem ignominioſa exercuere judicia, that is, ſaith Ierom, they uſed hiw baſely, or ſlaying his ſonnes before his face, they upbraided him by his wickedneſſe committed againſt Zachariah. Whatſoever the judgement was, it ſeemeth that he was evill entreated by them in that they left him grievouſly ſick and full of pain and torment by reaſon thereof. For it is ſaid, they left him in moſt grievous diſeaſes, v. 25. Vatablus thinketh, that by their executing judgements upon him is meant that they puniſhed him diverſly, and it is moſt likely, that hereof he fell thus ſick. Lyra, that they wounded him with divers wounds, which were not mortall, and ſo left him languiſhing. And it is to bee noted, that having him and his city in their power, they neither ſlew him outright, nor took poſſeſſion of the city, nor carried him away to be ranſomed; for in this the ſingular providence of God appeared, who would have him reſerved after much miſery endured in his body, for his foule falling into the abominable ſin of idolatry, to be ſlain by his own ſervants, who ought to have reverenced him, for his ſhamefull murthering of Zachariah, whom he ought to have reverenced for his fathers ſake, to whom he had been more obliged, then any of his ſervants to him. For ſo it followeth, 2 Chron. 24, 25. His own ſervants conſpired againſt him for the murther of the ſonnes of Iehoiadah, and in his bed ſlew him; and they buried him in the city of David, but not in the ſepulchers of the kings.] v. 26. They that conſpired were Zabad the ſonne of Shimhathah an Ammoniteſſe, and Iehoſhabad the ſonne of Shimrithah a Moabiteſſe. 2 Kings 12. 21. he is ſaid to have been ſlain by his ſervants in the houſe of Millo, of which, ſee 1 Kings 11. 26. it was a building reared up by Solomon upon a prerupt place, which he filled up, which goeth down to Silla, where the houſe ſtood which Solomon built for Pharoahs daughter, when he had levelled the ground. Iunius underſtandeth Silla appellatively, as ſignifying an heap of earth, and not as a preper name. It was then in his own houſe, that he was ſlaine. And of his murtherers one is ſaid to be Ioſachar the ſonne of Simeath, the other Iehoſabad, the ſonne of Somer, ſo that it ſeemeth, that the firſt had two names, and the mothers of them both likewiſe.

Joſephus.

Wolphius.

Ioſephus ſaith, that they were a kinne to Zachariah, who thus revenged his blood-ſhed. But wee may rather with Wolphius obſerve the ſutableneſſe of the judgement with the ſin of Ioaſh. One of his murtherers was an Ammonite by the mothers ſide, the other a Moabite deſcended from two nations, that came of Lot, whom Abraham had ſaved from deſtruction out of the enemies hands, whereinto he fell in Sodom; but as they ungratefully ſought the deſtruction of the Hebrewes, the children of Abraham, ſo did Ioaſh againſt the children of Iehoiadah, to whom he was obliged for preſerving his life, when he was in danger to looſe it, and therefore fore it was juſt with God, that he ſhould now periſh by the hands of ſome of theſe nations, and thoſe moſt probably his ſlaves, born of women, that were enthralled unto him. He was as an Ammonite in condition, and therefore an Ammonite was made his executioner; lib. trad. Hebr. ſaith, that this is ſet down to denote the wickedneſſe of the Iewes, they would not take revenge upon Ioaſh for that foule murther, therefore men of another nation were ſtirred up to doe it. But ſeeing they were murtherers for this, it is to be held, that their malice ſtirring them up, God permitted it for the blood of Zachariah.

V. 25.

And they buried him with his fathers in the city of David.] which leaſt it ſhould be underſtood of the ſepulchers of the kings, the Chronicles ſaith, that it was not there, as he was unworthy of it, ſo he had not that honour; the high Prieſt who acted a kings part better in reſtoreing and well upholding all things, had this honour, but the king thought unworthy to lye near him, whom he ſo much wronged in his poſterity, was buried leſſe honourably in ſome other inferiour burying place. If any ſhall marvell that his ſonne would ſuffer it, moſt probably his body was ſo corrupted with his diſeaſe, that it was not to be buried with any ſolemnity, and therefore not amongſt the kings; and the hand of God ſo grievouſly upon him, ſhewed him to be ſo hatefull unto him, that men durſt not thus honour him, ſo it was verified in him, pride went before, with which he ſwelled through the flatterie of the Princes, ſo as that he thought he might doe what he liſted, as having all power, and diſhonour followed after. And Amaziah his ſonne reigned in his ſtead.] From hence ſome gather, that the tradition before ſpoken of, is not true, viz. that the Syrians ſlew his ſonnes, determining this to be one of the judgements which they executed upon him; for if this had been ſo, ſaith Lyra, he ſhould not now have had a ſonne to reign after him, and therefore he ſaith that book of the Hebrew queſtions wherein this is conteined, is none of Ieroms, as alſo appeareth by the ſtile; and becauſe in lib. de illuſtr. viris, where Ierom reciteth all the books by him written, hee mentioneth the book de Hebr. queſt. upon Geneſis, but not any any other. Wherefore he concludeth, that it was written by ſome Iew, who mingled together things true and feined. In which his cenſure touching that book, although I deny not, but it may be juſt; yet his argument againſt that particular touching Ioaſh his children is not good. For ſome might then be ſlain, and yet one eſcape by a ſingular providence to reign after him, that the promiſe made unto David might ſtand. There was great perill of cutting off all his poſterity before, when Ioaſh was preſerved; which yet the faithfull not knowing, were tryed 6 yeares together, whether they would continue to believe it, even all the time that he was hidden, and now again the like danger was renewed by the Syrians, touching whom being maſters of Ieruſalem and of the king, it may be wondred that they deſtroyed not all his ſonnes. And no leſſe illuſtrious was the divine providence once before both theſe in preſerving Ahaziah, when all the reſt of Iehorams children were taken away by the Philiſtines, that in him Davids line might be continued, ſo that God in judgement remembreth mercy, and how greatly ſoever provoked, will never falſifie his word, to the comfort of the faithfull. But his ſonnes and the burthen impoſed upon him, and his founding of the houſe of God, behold they are written in the book of the Kings, and then followeth. Amaziah his ſonne reigned in his ſtead. For the place where theſe things are written, Iunius referreth us to 2 Kings 12. but there is no mention made of his ſonnes, nor in any Canonicall Scripture, but only in generall, 2 Chron. 24. 3. that he begat ſonnes and daughters, and of his building the Temple decayed is leſſe ſaid, then in Chronicles, and although the treaſure which he ſent to the king of Syria to depart from him be there ſpoken of, yet nothing is ſaid of a burthen of tribute impoſed upon him. Wherefore it is moſt probable, that not 2 Kings is meant, but ſome other book, wherein the hiſtories of the Kings were more largely written, which was not Canonicall Scripture, and ſo as many other writings of the Iewes periſhed in the many mutations, which befell them.

hands of the King of Syria, whereas the victories by Ioas obtained againſt the Syrians were after the death of Iehohaz. But Lyra was herein much miſtaken: for it is not ſaid in the text, he was delivered, but God gave a deliverer to the people of Iſrael, & liberatus eſt populus, the people of Iſrael, not the king, of whom no mention is made. Wherefore notwithſtanding this objection, that expoſition may be good. God gave Ioas, a ſaviour to the people, although not in his fathers time, yet ſoon after. Whereas it is ſaid, yet they ceaſed not from their ſins, as if the deliverance were then; it may be conceived that immediatly there was by Gods mercy a ceſſation from war, ſome good angel of God being ſent out for this purpoſe, to ſtay the king of Syria from coming againſt them any more, by ſtriking a terrour into him and his people, or ſome other way as ſeemed beſt unto him, as the ſame Lyra con-Tostatus. ceiveth. Toſtatus ſaith, that by this ſaviour is meant Ieroboam, the ſon of Ioas, becauſe Chap. 14. 27. it is ſaid, that by him God ſaved Iſrael. By the ſavior then here ſpoken of, is not meant one onely at one time, but three. Firſt, immediately upon their humiliation he ſent a good ſpirit inviſibly to ſtay the Syrians from coming any more againſt them in the time of Iehohaz. Secondly, Ioas ſaved them yet more through the propheſying of Eliſhah, v. 19. when he went three times againſt them, and overcoming them, recovered his cities formerly loſt out of their hands. Thirdly, Ieroboam moſt of all, who recovered all the land of Iſrael out of the enemies hands, from the entring in of Hamath, unto the ſea of the wilderneſſe by the propheſying of Ionah, chap. 14. 25.
Josephus. Ioſephus ſaith, that God made Iehohaz himſelf a ſaviour to Iſrael, who having but 500. horſemen and 10000. foot left him, (he ſhould have ſaid 50.) went with them againſt the Syrians, and took from them many great cities, and made great ſlaughters of them. Which is manifeſtly falſe, becauſe it is expreſly ſaid v. 25. that Ioas the ſon took the cities, which his father had loſt; and of the ſtate of Iſrael, whileſt Iehohaz lived, no more is ſaid, but that they came out of the hand of the Syrians and ſate in their tents, as in times paſt; that is, being quiet and no more vexed with warres, the Syrians being held by a divine power, thenceforth from making warre upon them. For the name [ſaviour] it is commonly given to men extraordinarily ſtirred up by the ſpirit of God to ſave Iſrael, being oppreſſed by his enemies a long time before.

V. 6. But they departed not from the ſinnes of Ieroboam, &c. but walked in every one of them, and the grove ſtood ſtill in Samaria.] Of which grove ſee 1 King. 16. 35. and V. 7. how it was planted by Ahab. And thus they did, although they were beaten by warres of the Syrians, even as the duſt under our feet, and of ſo great multitudes, which might formerly have been raiſed to go to war out of Iſrael, now there were left onely 50. horſemen, 10. chariots, and 10000 foot. Which is ſet down, as to make Note. it appear, how deeply grounded this wickedneſſe was in them by a continuall accuſtoming themſelves to it, that we may be ware of ſinfull cuſtomes. So to magnifie the goodneſſe of God, that he would be entreated, and his power, that he could by ſuch an handfull of men (who could not be much encreaſed in ſo ſhort a time, as between this and the time that Ioaſh went againſt the Aramites) give ſo great victories to Iſrael. But it was not for any complacency that he had in their ſeeking to him with their lips, when their hearts were farre away from him, but to keep his covenant with Abraham, Iſaac, &c. as is expreſſed chap. 14. 27. and becauſe he had yet ſet them a longer time, before he would deſtroy them, that his exceeding great patience might be admired by all men, and praiſed, who ſtill upheld their ſtate, when they were ſo near to utter ruine, and that when afterwards having ſo long a time of repentance granted, they abuſed it, and were deſtroyed by the Aſſyrians, his judgements might be acknowledged to be moſt juſt.

V. 8. Wolphius. Note.

For the reſt of the acts of Iehohaz and his valour, we are referred to the book of the Chronicles of the Kings of Iſrael, that is, their annals; and his valour ſaith, Wolphius, is mentioned to intimate, that Iſrael was not brought ſo low in his time, through his ſloth or cowardiſe, but by the judgement of God, juſtly making the valour of the wicked vain. For no power or fortitude is of any avail againſt enemies invading us, if God be forſaken, and ſo becometh an enemy.

V. 9. V. 10. Iunius. Wolphius.

Then Iehohaz dying (and being buried, his ſon Ioas reigned in his ſtead, anno 37. of Ioas king of Iudah he began, &c.] Whereas v. 1. Iehohaz is ſaid to have reigned 17. years, beginning anno 23. which muſt needs be to the 39. of Ioaſh, the king of Iudah at the leaſt, it is conceived by expoſitours, that he made his ſonne conſort of the kingdome with him two years before his death, or as ſome think three, and he reigned 16. years, whereof two or three paſſed in his fathers time, the reſt he reigned alone. The Septuagint reconcile this difference by rendring it thus, anno 39. of Ioas, not reſpecting ſo much the Hebrew verity, as the making of the matter plain.

V. 11, 12, 13.

The wicked life and death of Ioaſh is ſpoken of by anticipation, and Ieroboams ſucceeding him in the kingdome, as appeareth v. 14, 15, &c. where his hiſtory is again proſecuted, and ch. 14. 8, 9, &c. The reaſon of this brief running over the hiſtory of Ioaſh at the firſt, as Wolphius well obſerveth, may be, becauſe all which he did worthy of remembrance, was to be brought in under the hiſtories of Eliſhah and Amaziah, which here follow, by the propheſying of the one he being encouraged and made ſucceſſefull in his warres againſt the Syrians, and by the provocation of the other being drawn out to that victory againſt him. The ſacred hiſtorian therefore ſtayeth not in telling any thing of Ioaſh, but of his wicked life and death, and ſo haſteneth to Eliſhah his laſt ſickneſſe and death, where there is occaſion again to ſpeak of him, and then to Amaziah, in the time of whoſe reign, what happened between him and Ioaſh is recorded.

V. 24. Seder Olam.

And Eliſhah was ſick of the ſickneſſe, whereof he died, and Ioaſh went down unto him and wept, &c.] This was according to the Hebrew Chronology, anno 10. of Ioaſh; from whence it is gathered, that Eliſhah had been a prophet above 60. years, as the ſame Chronology ſpeaketh, ſeven under Iehoſhaphat, five under Ioram, ſixe Athaliah, forty Ioaſh, eight Amaziah, unto which if twelve be added, whileſt he followed Elijah and the years of his age, when he called him thirty, as may be conjectured, the whole time of his life, was 108. Yet others, ſaith Wolphius, think, that Eliſhah died in the beginning of the reign of Ioaſh, unto which he rather aſſenteth, becauſe even in the time of Iehohaz his father, it is ſaid, that God ſent them a ſaviour, therefore ſaith he, it is not probable, that it was deferred to his tenth year. But if they were quiet and free from the invaſion of the Syrians all that time, the fulfilling of this was begun long before, and from henceforth more. Touching Ioaſh his viſiting of Eliſhah and weeping, although he were a wicked king, yet herein he gave a good example to viſite the ſick, and to ſhew other Princes, in what account they ſhould have the holy prophets of the Lord. And yet I cannot think, that this viſite was without the ſingular hand of God leading him, that he might be made by the miniſtry of the prophet, a deliverer to Iſrael from the hands of the Syrians. And therefore the hand which brought him, made him weep when he was come, to ſee ſo worthy a man as Eliſhah ready to depart, who was as he called him, as a father to care for him and his kingdome, although unworthy, and the chariots of Iſrael and horſemen thereof, that is, the greateſt ſtrength to defend it, that he might be moved by the ſpirit, wherewith he was endued, to do ſomething for him now before his departure, ſeeing his caſe and the peoples would be lamentable, as he conceived, when they had loſt him their greateſt ſtrength, by reaſon of the power which he had with God. And it is to be noted, that he ſpeaketh to him in the ſame words, wherewith Eliſhah ſpake to Elijah when he was taken away, 2 King. 2.12. as if he were led by the ſame ſpirit of love and reverence towards him. Wolphius obſerveth it as a remuneration of Eliſhah his piety towards Elijah in that the like was now aſcribed to him. But how could Ioaſh ſpeak thus to Eliſhah when as he yet living the Iſraelites were ſo greatly oppreſſed by the Syrians, as hath been already ſhewed? Anſw. He had heard of his aſſigning the kingdome to his grandfather Iehu, Ioram being ſlain, and that his propheſying was verified, ſeeing he was mightily ſet up, and his ſon after him, and now himſelf being the ſecond generation of the four, to whom the promiſe was made, and in the dayes of Ioram, that 2 Kings 6. he had divers times diſappointed the Syrians forces, by diſcovering their plots, and laſtly, bringing them into the kings power. Wherefore he conceived, that if he would, he could ſtill do as great things for Iſrael, if he might live amongſt them, and hereupon he ſo ſtiled him, that he might inſinuate into him, and obtain his favour to do as much for him before he died, as in times paſt for others, his predeceſ-ſours in that kingdome.

V. 15. Then Eliſhah bade him take bow and arrowes, and lay his hand upon the bow, which done, the Prophet laid his hands upon the Kings, having firſt bidden him, open the window towards the Eaſt. Then at the direction of the Prophet the King ſhot, and Eliſhah ſaid, the arrow of the ſalvation of the Lord againſt the Syrians, &c.] By an outward ſymbol or ſigne of bow and arrowes, he would, that he ſhould underſtand and not by word of mouth onely, what the Lord would do by Ioas, as the inſtrument for the ſaving of Iſrael from the Syrians, and for their deſtruction who had now long oppreſſed them. So the prophet Abijam formerly ſhewed Ieroboam, that the Lord would make him King over ten tribes, by renting his garment into twelve parts and giving him ten, for his further confirmation, and to make in him the deeper impreſſion, and alſo to ſtrengthen him to this mighty work, and the prophets afterwards did often uſe ſignes, of all which, as of holy ſacraments, this was the uſe.
Lyra. And this of ſhooting an arrow towards Syria, for it ſtood eaſtward, ſaith Lyra, to which part the window opened, was a moſt apt ſigne to ſhew the piercing of the Syrians with the Iſraelites arrowes, through Gods power, who hereby ſhewed, that he would ſtrengthen the kings and their hands for this end, when the Prophet laid his hands upon the kings, although Lyra derogating from God ſaith, that it ſhewed victory to come unto him by the merits of the prophet. But whereas Eliſhah addeth, thou ſhalt ſtrongly ſmite the Syrians, till thou haſt conſumed them, he being about to ſhew it by a further ſigne, wherein Ioas not doing according to his expectation, he retracted and ſaid, now thou ſhalt onely ſmite the Syrians three times.
V. 17, 18, 19. For he bade him take the reſt of the arrowes and ſmite againſt the ground, and he ſmote three times and then ceaſed, at which the Prophet waxing angry, ſaid, thou ſhouldſt have ſmitten five or ſixe times, and ſo thou ſhouldſt have ſmitten the Syrians to conſumption, &c. It ſeemeth, that God had revealed to Eliſhah, that if Ioas being bidden by him to ſmite the ground, ſhould ſmite with his arrowes five or ſixe times, the Syrians ſhould by him be utterly deſtroyed, but if under that number, he ſhould onely ſo many times overcome them, this work of their utter conſumption, being reſerved for another, as it was indeed, for his ſonne Jeroboam after his death.
Wherefore Eliſhah ſaid no more, but bade him ſmite, ſuppoſing, that he would have continued to do ſo, till he had cried enough. But ſeeing him give over ſo ſoon, he was greatly offended for the diſcredit of his propheſie, which now could not take ſuch effect through Ioaſh his fault, he had ſtinted himſelf to the number of ſmitings, wherewith he ſhould ſmite them, and therefore ſhould now go no further in victories over them. The word tranſlated here [fortiter] ſtrongly, by Iunius who I follow in this particular, is Aphek in Hebrew, and commonly rendred, thou ſhalt Wolphius. ſmite them in Aphek, a certain place ſaith Wolphius, being named, the more to aſat this laſt moſt probably this deſtruction of the Syrians ſhould be made, the very place, to which they formerly choſe to come in the time of Ahab, and were deſtroyed unto 127000. and therefore it is now again appointed to be the place; for more confirmation. Pellican ſaith, that Aphec in Iudah is meant. For the myſtery of this, that Ioas ſmote the earth onely three times and no more, doing thus againſt himſelf to his hindrance, in reſpect of the utter deſtruction of his deadly enemies, which for this his remiſſeneſſe he could not compaſſe. It is according to Wolphius, hereby ſhewed that we through our own negligence cannot conquer over our ſpirituall enemies, becauſe having begun well and with a good ſpirit to fight this ſpirituall battell we perſevere not, but ſo give in, that they continue ſtill to hinder our felicity, ſeeing ſuch as endure to the end only, ſhall be ſaved. Or according to Rabanus, that who ſo believeth onely in the trinity ſet forth by the three times, and doth not adde unto his faith alſo charitable and vertuous actions, prejudiceth himſelfe in reſpect of everlaſting ſalvation, for he muſt ſmite the earth five or ſix times, that the Syrian like evill ſpirits hindering his ſalvation, may be utterly ſubdued; for faith without works is dead.

Then Eliſhah died and was buried,&c.] It may be marvailed, that the death and buriall of ſuch a worthy is paſſed over with ſo few words. But Ioſephus ſaith, that he was honoured ſepulchro magnifico, but telleth not the place where, therefore ſome will have it in Samaria, ſome in Carmel, and ſome in Sebaſtea. They that are for Samaria, hold it and Sabaſtea all one, as Epiphanius, Beda, and Iſidor. For Carmel is Adrichomius, ſaying that he was afterwards tranſlated to Samaria. Toſtatus thinketh that he was buried in the Sepulchers of his fathers, as it was ſaid before of Samuel; the holy Scripture is ſo briefe, that the place is left uncertain, as not materiall to be known, but when he is ſaid to have been buried, it is left to be underſtood, that he had a buriall according to his worth, ſeeing the king himſelfe did ſo much honour him. And haſt is made to tell of another thing happening about his Sepulcher, which honoured it more then if men had done all that they could to honour it, and ſo the mentioning of all ſolemnity is omitted. It is ſaid onely that they buried him, ſaith Wolphius, to condemne ſuperſtitious rites, ſince invented about the dead, and the ſuperfluity of coſt, alleadging the example of Cyrus, who charged his ſonnes when he ſhould dye, not to delay the time of his buriall by making coſtly preparation, but ſo ſoon as might be to put his body into the ground, as being the moſt kindly thing that they could doe for it, that it might again be mingled with the mother earth, out of which all things ſpring and grow. The thing that happened, after his putting into his ſepulcher was this, certain forces of the Moabites coming, whileſt they went about burying another man, they for fear caſt him into the prophets ſepulcher, and ſo ſoon as he touched his bones, he revived and aroſe, and ſtood upon his feet.

V. 21.

Note.

Theſe forces or troops, as the word ſignifieth, were robbers, which came into the land of Iſrael for booty, whereby the miſerable eſtate of the Iſraelites appeared, now that they were ſo much weakned and diſheartened by Syrians, they became a prey to other nations alſo, and were without all courage to reſiſt, like fearfull deer, at the ſight of them they ran away. They had by their ſinnes loſt Gods protection, and ſo lay open to all their enemies to be robbed and pillaged, as the Miſians, when their king Telaphus was gone into a farre country, were made a prey to all their enemies. But God out of this evill bringeth good at this time, as he doth often, turning the malicious attempts of the enemies of his people, into an occaſion of good; for thus occaſion was given to this miracle for the comfort and confirmation of Ioaſh and his people, who moſt probably had not yet attempted any thing againſt the Syrians, for then the Moabites would not have been ſo bold, but now ſuch vertue coming from Eliſhah being dead, and hereby it being ſhewed, that God by his propheſying could ſtrengthen the Iſraelites, which were made to be of a dead heart towards any warlike undertakings through the Syrians manifold oppreſſions, hee and they might well rouze up themſelves, and prepare to goe againſt the ſaid Syrians, as is by and by ſhewed that they did, and ſtood up ſo ſtoutly againſt them, that they overcame them time after time unto three times, as Eliſhah had propheſied, and took away from them their cities formerly loſt; when this was done, viz. the reviving of the dead man is ſhewed in theſe words, the yeare coming or beginning, according to Iunius, the year following, according to Wolphius; the vulgar Latin, in ipſo anno, but ſeeing it is in Hebr. שנה בא the yeare coming, I reſt in the firſt. It was in the beginning of the year after the burying of Eliſhah, at what time being the ſpring, they moſt commonly went out, that invaded others; as is noted, 2 Sam. 11. and if Eliſhah dyed, Iune 14. as the Roman Martyrology hath it, this happened about ten months after in the month of March, the Chald. in the entrance of the year, Toſtatus in the return of the yeare, that is, ſaith he, in the beginning of the ſpring, or in the month of March. By their caſting in of the dead man ſo ſpeedily into the ſepulcher of Eliſhah, it appeareth that hee was not laid into a grave and covered with earth, as the manner now is, but in a ſepulcher of ſtone, having either a cover of ſtone to it, or ſtanding open in ſome vault or cave; for ſo they buried Lazarus of old, and our Lord; and thus we may well conceive, how the dead mans corps being caſt in, came ſoon to touch the corps of Eliſhah, if the ſtone covering him were but only remoued firſt. What became of this man the Scripture ſaith not, but the Rabbins bold to invent any thing and to ſet it forth as a truth, ſay that he by and by fell down dead again, being raiſed to come out of the ſepulcher becauſe he was unworthy for his wickedneſſe to lye ſo near the holy prophet. But if this had been ſo, it might well have been ſuſpected, whether he was indeed raiſed up or no. It is therefore more probable, that he lived and went to the king with his bearers, as witneſſes, that both he and all the people might reverence Eliſhah the more, and give credit to his laſt propheſie to be ſtirred up immediately to prepare and goe againſt the Syrians, being aſſured, that his God that ſet him a work to propheſie ſo, was as well able by weak means to give life unto that ſtate now after a ſort dead, as by the bones of Eliſhah touching this man only, to give him life againe. This is made a ground by papals of going in pilgrimage to the bones of the Saints departed, and by praying at their monuments to ſeek help againſt their maladies and ſalvation to their ſouls. But forſomuch as we read not of any ſuch uſe made of this miracle by the faithfull of thoſe times, it is to be condemned, as groſſe ſuperſtition. For if God for ſome myſticall end, of which by and by, and to confirm Ioaſh, as hath been ſaid, touching the propheſie of Eliſhah did work at this time miraculouſly by his bones, but never did any more wonders hereby after, nor at any time before either by Samuels bones or Davids, Ioſephs or Ioſhuahs, or the bones of any other of his deareſt Saints, what a madneſſe is it, or giddi-headedneſſe to goe to the dead bones of Saints, purpoſely to have help by vertue coming from them, as if this had been propounded for a preſident unto us to invite us thus to doe? They had no ſuch cuſtome in the primitive Church, as we may gather from Ambroſe, who ſaith no more of this, but that as the Virgin Mary being full of the ſpirit propheſied, ſo Eliſhah being dead, raiſed a dead man by the touch of his bones. And Chryſoſtom only that by vertue coming from them, none believing this great miracle was wrought.

ſaid there, it is to be conceived, that the Syrians were even then by Gods providence reſtreined from vexing them any more; for Iſrael might ſtill notwithſtanding

But now God enlarged his mercy towards them more for his Covenants which was right in the ſight of the Lord? Anſ. Hee refreined from worſhipping idols, and reſtreined the people alſo from them, and both came himſelfe and cauſed others to come and worſhip the Lord only, and this was right not only in the ſight of godly men, but of God alſo. But in that he did it not out of conſcience and piety, but being moved hereunto by ſome other thing (as Ioaſh his father had done by the inſtructions and authority that Iehoiadah had with him: ſo he ſeeing the ruinous eſtate of the kingdome, when he came unto it, becauſe he thought by this he ſhould obtein mercy to be ſaved from his enemies, by whom his father had ſuffered grievouſly, when he turned to the favouring of idolatry) he is ſaid to have done right, but not with a perfect heart, as David who bent all the forces of his heart to promote he prudently firſt ſetleth himſelfe in the throne, and by lenity and kindneſſe winneth the hearts of his ſubjects, and then being by ſuch means eſtabliſhed, he doth juſtice upon thoſe murtherers. Some from hence gather, that although they were the kings ſervants, yet they were no mean perſons, but men of might, ſo that Amaziah had need firſt to make himſelfe ſtrong, and then to proceed to judgement againſt Note. them. Note from their example, that wicked murtherers may eſcape for a time, but they ſhall at length be puniſht moſt certainly as they deſerve, and ſo ſhall other becauſe he is ſet up of God; he is his annointed, and therefore not to be laid hands the government, which had hitherto been Ariſtocraticall, For Caſſius when hee had joyned battell with Brutus at Philippi, when he ſaw his army give way, ſlew and his dead body being ſent by Antonius to his mother and wife to be buried, his wife Portia ſeeing it through extream griefe ſought to kill her ſelfe, and when ſhe could by no other meanes, ſhe did it by thruſting hot burning coales through her own throat. The like was the end of Cato Minor. And D. I. Brutus falling into Antonies hands was put to death, neither did any of the other conſpiratours eſcape.

V.7. He alſo ſmote Edom in the valley of ſalt, 10000 men. That which is here omitted of 2 Chron.25.5. his preparations to this warre is ſupplyed, 2 Chron.25. 5. Then Amaziah gathering the Iewes together, made them Captains over thouſands, and Captains over hundreds, &c. and numbring them, he found them to be 300000 choſen men, &c. This number although it may ſeem to be great, yet if we compare it with the number in the days 2 Chron.17.14. of Iehoſhaphat his great grand-fathers father, who reigned ſcarce ſixty yeares before, it is ſmall, for he had under ſeverall Captains 1160000 beſides thoſe that were put into fenced cities; ſo greatly were the people waſted under wicked Iehoram, Ahaziah, Athaliah, and Ioaſh. And unto theſe Amaziah hired out of the kingdom of Iſrael, 100000 more for 100 talents of ſilver to goe againſt Edom. What the cauſe was may be gathered from 2 Chron. 21. 8. they had revolted from the obedience of the king of Iudah in Iehorams time 60 yeares before, and therefore being now free from the oppreſſions of the Syrians, as alſo the Iſraelites were, he thought it would make for his honour to reduce them to his obedience again; wherefore he made this mighty preparation to goe againſt them with 400000 men. But a man of God was ſent unto him to bid him diſmiſſe the Iſraelites, becauſe God was not with them, and this he conſented to doe, but was ſorry for his 100 talents given unto them, which might ſeem a ſmall price for the hire of ſo many, although it H.B.Patriarkes travels. were a great ſum. For a talent, if it were the common one, was 187 pound 10 ſhillings; if the kings talent 281 pound 5 ſhillings, of the ſanctuary, 375 pound; now it is moſt probable that the king counted by his owne talent, and if ſo, 100 talents amounted to 28925. pound, and yet the hire of each ſouldier, accounting one talent for a thouſand men was little, viz. 27. pound eight ſhillings four pence, to a hundred, that is, about five ſhillings ſeven pence a man; but ſome reckon a talent at leſſe, as Sallianus, who will therefore, that it may not ſeem too little, have it underſtood of talents of gold; but this is againſt the expreſſe text, which hath it, talents of ſilver. But it is rather to be ſuppoſed, that money was more ſcarce then, ſo that twenty ſhillings will not go further now in buying any proviſion, or hiring a man,

man, then five ſhillings at that time. And it is alſo to be conceived, that theſe men were drawn as much by hope of ſpoils, as by their hire. When king Amaziah was troubled in regard of this mony, the Prophet comforted him by ſaying, that God was able to give him more, and ſo he diſmiſſed them, but they taking it to be a diſgrace unto them, departed home full of wrath. And Amaziah with his own men went on againſt Edom, and in the valley of Salt ſlew ten thouſand.

Here it may be demanded, how it could be ſaid, that God was not with the Ephraimites, or thoſe of the kingdome of Iſrael, ſeeing about that time he gave them ſuch victories over the Syrians? Anſw. He did that out of his great mercy, and pity that he took on them, being a long time before grievouſly oppreſſed by the Syrians, and not becauſe his favour was towards them, for he was even then offended at their idolatry, and therefore he threatned, that if Amaziah took them with him, he ſhould fall before the Edomites. For although he doth wonderfully ſometimes even for wicked idolaters, as for Ahab alſo before, and for Ieroboam after, yet he is greatly offended, and fighteth againſt his own ſervants, when they joyn their forces with idolaters, as Iehoſhaphat with Ahab, and with Ahaziah his ſon. In that the kingdom of Iſrael was now able to ſupply Amaziah with 100000. men, which was brought to ſo low an ebb in the time of Iehohaz, the father of Ioas, from whom, till this warre, were but 14. or 15. years, for according to the Hebrew Chronology, this was the 12. year of Amaziah, and he began to reign the ſecond year of Ioas, the great bleſſing of God to multiply them ſo much in ſo ſhort a time, is to be noted, in that they were grown from 10000. which was their number then, to 100000 which might be ſpared to help another king in his warres, beſides them, that moſt probably ſtayed at home for the defence of that kingdome, which were not a few. But it is likely that they encreaſed greatly, by the return of their own cities from the Syrians into their own hands again, and by the acceſſe of ſuch as before fled and hid themſelves for fear of the Syrians.

Touching the Valley of ſalt, which is ſaid to be the place wherein the Edomites were ſmitten, ſee before Gen. 14. 8. where a battle is ſaid to have been fought between the Sodomites and their enemies, and 2 Sam. 8. 13. David ſlew 18000. of the Edomites in the ſame place. For Edomites the Chronicles hath it, of the children of Seir, becauſe the Edomites who came of Eſau, otherwiſe called Edom, inhabited a place called mount Seir; and he took Sela and called the name of it Iokteel to this day. Iunius, he took the rock which men call Iokteel to this day, expounding it of a city in Arabia Petrea, from whence it had the name Petra or Rock; and yet he referreth us to Ioſh. 15. 38. where Iokteel is numbred amongſt the cities of Iudah, but bordering upon Edom ſouthward. v. 21. the vulgar Latin, he took the rock and called it Ieſhekel, that is, ſaith Lyra, gnaſhing of teeth, becauſe they that were thrown down from thence and ſo killed, as 2 Chr. 25. 12. made a lamentable noiſe through their teeth. But in the Hebrew it is Iokteel, according to Bede coming of קהל cœtus, a company, and אל God, this name being given for a remembrance, that the company coming with Amaziah, took this place by the help of God, and if ſo, it was piety in Amaziah to call it thus. H. B. deriveth it from Iakah heareth, and El God, becauſe God heard to give him victory. Some derive it from קאורת a bird called Onocratilus, which maketh a lamentable noiſe, holding it to be ſo called, for the reaſon before rendred by Lyra. Vatablus thinketh, that becauſe it was a very ſtrong place, and yet taken now by one Iokteel, it was called after his name, and this is the moſt probable. But whereas Iunius calleth it firſt Selah, and then ſaith men called it Iokteel, as if it were not now firſt called by this name, but indifferently by either of theſe names, referring us to Ioſh. 15. 38. where the name Iokteel is found long before, ſetting it forth alſo as the metropolitan city of Arabia Petrea. He was certainly miſtaken, for it is manifeſtly ſpoken of, not as a city, but a rocky place, as Selah ſignifieth, and may further be gathered from 2 Chr. 25. 12. but a ſtrong hold of the Edomits, which made the taking of it ſo remarkable, neither is the manner of the holy Scripture to ſpeak thus of the name of a place, but of ſuch as was not called ſo before. And it is manifeſtly to confound places to ſay, that Iokteel in the borders of Edom pertaining to Iudah, was a city in Arabia. And hereunto adde, that Arabia Petrea was farre from Edom, and when this was done, Amaziah was not fighting there but againſt the Edomites, wherefore it could not be a city in Arabia, but a rocky hold in Edom, which Ioſephus ſaith, did imminere Arabiæ, look towards Arabia, and therefore was not in it.

At this place what company was alſo ſlain, is not here recorded, but 2 Chron. 25. 12. it is ſaid 10000. more, by caſting them down from that rock, thus cruelly breaking their bones in pieces. This being done, the hiſtory of 2 *Chron.*25.13. proceedeth to tell, how the diſmiſſed forces of Iſrael called Ephraimites, becauſe that tribe was the moſt populous, raged againſt the kingdome of Iudah in that part, which lay neareſt to them, viz. from Samaria, which was the metropolis of their own kingdome to Beth-horon, that is, according to Iunius, all the latitude of the kingdome of Iudah, which bordered upon the kingdome of Iſrael, ſlaying 3000 and carrying away a great prey. It is well noted here, by Lyra, that this was not done immediately after the Ephraimites diſmiſſing by Amaziah, but as it is ſet down in order, after his victory againſt the Edomites, and that cruelty ſhewed towards them: for God now moſt probably ſaw his heart lifted up with pride, and through diſpleaſure taken hereat, ſecretly wrought in their hearts now to take revenge for the ſuppoſed diſgrace done unto them by their diſmiſſion, after they been hired. For if this had been done before in their return homeward, it had would have been ſaid, from Bethhoron in Iudah to Samaria, whereas it is ſaid, from Samaria as farre as Bethhoron, to denote the place, from whence they then came, and to confirm this more, it is ſaid verſ. 10. that being diſmiſſed they departed, though full of wrath, to their place. Neither would God certainly have ſuffered this their wrath to have thus broken out, for the credit of his Prophet employed about that diſmiſſion, but that Amaziah immediately upon his victory againſt the Edomites, had his heart, which was not perfect before, corrupted with pride and inſolent cruelty, whence more ſinne followed, as is by and by ſhewed. Touching Bethhoron it was double, the one called the nether, lying in the tribe of Benjamin, the other called the upper in the tribe of Ephraim, wherefore it muſt be underſtood of the nether Bethhoron in the kingdome of Iudah, againſt which they went.

2 *Chron.*25.14.

Lib. de hebr. quæſt.

Lyra.

Then Amaziah took the gods of the children of Seir, and ſet them up for his gods.] It is a marvell, that by Gods help he having obtained victory over the Edomites, as he knew well enough, becauſe Eliſhah had ſhewed him ſo much, and ſeeing the helpleſſeneſſe that was in theſe idols towards the people that ſerved them, that he ſhould ſo ſuddenly be beſotted with their outward ſplendour, as that he ſhould fall to the worſhipping of them. But the Hebrewes, that this may not ſeem to have bin done without all reaſon, feign, that when thoſe 10000 Edomites were caſt down from the rock there was a voyce heard coming from the idols, this happeneth unto you becauſe ye have been negligent in the worſhip of us, which Amaziah hearing, carried them home with him and worſhipped them. But Lyra well confuteth this, becauſe no gloſſe ever yet yielded this reaſon, and when a prophet ſent unto him challenged him for it, v. 15. he could, if it had been thus, readily have anſwered him accordingly, but he did onely check him, as being to ſaucy with the king, v. 16. And it is reaſon enough againſt it, becauſe, if it had been ſo, the holy hiſtoriographer, who ſo diligently ſetteth down all things of moment in the Chronicles, would not certainly have paſſed it over, to ſay nothing, that the Rabbins are known well enough to be audacious forgers. It is reaſon enough, pride ariſing in his heart after his victory againſt the Edomites, as he is chardged by Ioaſh, v. 19. God who alwayes deſpiſeth the proud, ſeeing it (for he ſeeth into the heart) was angry, and left him to himſelf, and being left, it is no marvell that he ran into any abhominable wickedneſſe. For when he by the encouragement of a prophet promiſing him victory had obtained it, to be lifted up in his heart was ſo againſt God, that nothing could be more, for it was in effect the taking of the glory due to God for this victory, unto himſelf. Wherefore it was juſt with God to withdraw his grace from him, that he might abaſe himſelf to worſhip ſtocks and ſtones, and becauſe he had now a proud opinion that victory was pinned to his ſleeve, into what other wars ſoever he ſhould (as the ſequel ſheweth in his ſending to Ioaſh) enter, v. 17. he cared not for ſerving the Lord any longer, to which he had hitherto been neceſſitated, when he was weaker, and therefore did it outwardly, but never from his heart. Laſtly, as the old Romans having ſubdued any nation, ſet up their gods alſo to themſelves to win their favour, that as they had not, ſo they might never be againſt them to withdraw the obedience of that nation from them, or in caſe of revolting, to ſtand to defend them, ſo haply Amaziah ſet up theſe idols of Edom.

2 Chron. 25. 15.

God ſeeing this, was full of wrath, and ſent a prophet unto him, that he might the more juſtly proceed in judgement againſt him, when he ſhould contemn his admonition, as he did. For when he expoſtulated with him about the ſerving of thoſe gods, that were not able to ſave their own people, he did nothing but check and threaten him, and bade him be gone, leſt he ſhould ſmite him, but the prophet anſwered, that he knew, the Lord determined to ſlay him, becauſe he would not hearken to his counſell. This prophet, ſaith Hugo following Ierom, was Eleazar the ſonne of Dodo his uncle, and ſome ſay that he was Amos the father of Iſaiah, who is ſaid 2 King. 14. 25. to have been a while after ſent to Ieroboam the ſonne of Ioas. But it is more probable, that it was one dwelling in Iudah, that had cauſed Amaziah to diſmiſſe the Iſraelitiſh army, whereby they were provoked in his abſence to do him ſo much miſchief; therefore he was now ſo angry with this prophet, as the cauſe hereof, but what his name was, is to us unknown.

V. 8. Then Amaziah ſent meſſengers unto Ioas, ſaying, &c. Go to, let us ſee one anothers face, &c.] After admonition by a prophet, there following no reformation in Amaziah, but an obſtinate ſetling of himſelf to his idolatry begun, now followeth his puniſhment, of which he was made the occaſion to himſelf. He returning from Edom with victory and great ſpoils, when he heard what the Iſraelites, the men of Ioaſh had done in his abſence, in ſpoiling his countrey, and ſlaying his ſubjects, was greatly exaſperated, as well he might, and to be revenged after counſell taken, ſaith 2 Chron. 25. 17. ſent to challenge Ioaſh the king of Iſrael, to come and fight with him; for this he meant by the conſent of all expoſitours, when he ſaid, Let us ſee one anothers face. As if he had ſaid, let not thy men come thus cowardly to fight and kill up my ſubjects, and to take booties by ſtealth, but if thou beeſt a man, come in perſon and bring all thy forces with thee, and I will meet and fight with thee face to face openly in a ſet battle, and not infeſt thy borders by ſtealth and then run away again, as thy men have done.

2 Chron. 25. 17.

Joſephus.

Ioſephus addeth, that he alſo challenged him for uſurping the kingdome over the ten tribes, which of right belonged unto him, as being lineally deſcended of David and Solomon, from whoſe kingdome they were rent by rebellion. Now although Amaziah had a juſt cauſe to go againſt the king of Iſrael, for the wrong which he had done him in his abſence, yet it was temerity and no adviſed wiſdome (although he be ſaid to have taken counſell) thus to challenge him. His counſellours moſt probably were ſuch, as thoſe young men of whom Rehoboam took counſell in times paſt, and loſt the greateſt part of his kingdome. A wiſe King would rather have ſent to require ſatisfaction for the wrongs done him, or without ſending, taken the advantage of ſudden coming upon him, thus ſeeking to ſalve himſelf again for his loſſes. But when God meaneth to bring the wicked to deſtruction for their wickedneſſe, he enfatuateth them, that they may run to their own ruine, and ſo he did Amaziah at this time. He let him be lifted up with pride, ſo as to think his forces were now invincible, becauſe he had overcome the Edomites, and withall recounting what the prophet had ſaid unto him, when he went againſt Edom, that the Lord was not with Iſrael, to ſlight all the power, that the king of Iſrael could raiſe. But of his own idolatry, which he was lately faln into, he was nothing ſenſible, although the prophet had threatned him, to fear an alteration of ſucceſſe in the warres, that he ſhould henceforth make; therefore Ioas having received his meſſage, returneth anſwer by way of allegory.

V. 9. The thiſtle of Lebanon ſent to the cedar of Lebanon, ſaying, give thy daughter to my ſonne to wife, but a beaſt paſſing along trod down the thiſtle, &c.] Hereby moſt aptly ſhewing him, how unequall his forces were to his own; and if he proceeded according to his challenge, what the event would be. For the cedar is the talleſt and firmeſt of all the trees of the forreſt, one being found in Cyprus, according to Pliny, 130. foot long, and as big about as three men could fadome, and for the laſting of the wood hereof, it is reported to be inccoruptible, but the thiſtle is ſo vile, that it is not to be accounted a tree, but a weed. And hereby he would ſet forth Amaziah, contrary to the proud opinion that he had of himſelf, to be moſt mean and contemptible, in compariſon of the king of Iſrael. And he compareth their meeting together to fight, to a moſt unequall mariage, which tendeth alwayes to great hurt to the over-matched; by the beaſt treading down the thiſtle, he meaneth, his ſoldiers, who would make no more ado to ſubdue him and his men, then a great beaſt to tread down a thiſtle. Thus Wolphius; but Lyra following R. Solomon, ſheweth further the originall of this compariſon. The Iews counted Shechem affecting a mariage with Dinah Iacobs daughter, as a thiſtle requiring the cedar to give his daughter to wife unto it, becauſe Iacob was a great Patriark, and Shechem a baſe Ethnick, and becauſe when Shechem ſought that mariage, the ſonnes of Iacob like a mad beaſt came and deſtroyed him, and the people of his city, it went for a proverb amongſt them, when any man would ſet forth one undertaking a thing too hard and dangerous for him, to ſay, the thiſtle ſent to the cedar, &c. and ſo Ioas now uſed it to Amaziah.

V.10. 11,12, 13,14.
2 Chron.25.20.

Thou haſt done valiantly againſt the Edomites; be content with this glory, and keep at home, &c.] Here Ioas ſhewing plainly this to be his meaning, that he challenged him but to his own deſtruction, giveth him good counſell. But he had not the power to follow it, the Lord working ſo by his judgement for his idolatry with the gods of Edom, that he hardened himſelf to go to this battle, wherein he was ſo overcome and ſubdued, that Ioas took & ſpoiled what he pleaſed in his dominions, even to Ieruſalem, anp the temple it ſelf, as is expreſſed 2 Chron. 25. 20, 21, 22, 23. carying away all the treaſures found therein, with Obed-edom, and in the kings houſe, and taking pledges.

V. 11.

Joſephus.

The place where they met to fight was Bethſhemeſh in Iudah, ſo called, becauſe there was another of the ſame name in Nephthali, Ioſh.9 38. and this was near to Kireath-Iearim, where the Ark ſometimes reſted divers yeares, when it was brought back out of the Philiſtims country, and not above four miles from Ieruſalem. Ioas then ſeeing, that Amaziah was fully bent to warre, ſtayed not for his coming, but haſtened to meet him in his own kingdome, as is the part of a wiſe prince, thus keeping his own from being ſpoiled by a multitude of ſouldiers, which was alſo the policy of Hanibal the Carthaginian afterwards, to keep his countrey from the invaſion of the Romans, to make warre upon them in Italy, and theirs at length on the other ſide to do the like by Africa, and Carthage. The two Kings meeting at Bethſhemeſh, the challenger Amaziah paid for his arrogancy and raſhneſſe: for he was ſoon overcome, and his men put to flight, he was taken, and at the mercy of Ioas, as the Edomites lately were at his, but found none. So it was juſt with God, that he ſhould now be under the power of his enemy, then which nothing certainly could more vexe him, being proud of his former victory, and expecting nothing leſſe, as his challenge before-going ſhewed. Being taken, Ioas leadeth him away in triumph, as a priſoner, to his chief city Ieruſalem, and there breaketh down the wall from the gate of Ephraim to the corner gate, 400 cubits. The gate of Ephraim was that which looked towards the kingdome of Ephraim and ſtood northward, and the corner gate that, where the wall began to turn again, which was weſtward, according to Ioſephus, who in ſetting theſe things forth ſaith, that when the two armies were now ready to joyn battle, ſuch a fear fell upon thoſe of Iudah, that without fighting they began to flee away, and ſo the king was left to come into the enemies hands. And Ioas having taken him, brought him to Ieruſalem, and there commanded him to cauſe his people to open their gates and yield their city unto him, or elſe he would preſently put him to a cruell death. At his perſwaſion therefore the city was yielded, and becauſe Ioaſh would have room enough for his army to enter, he brake down thus much of the wall, the citizens looking on, and not daring to reſiſt. Then he riding in, in his chariot triumphantly, took all the treaſures, as was before ſaid. Obed-edom, in whoſe hand the treaſure and veſſels of the Lords houſe were, was a Levite, to whoſe cuſtody theſe were committed. The pledges which they took, was mens ſons of the higheſt rank, whom he caried away with him, to be his ſecurity for the paiment of ſuch tribute and ſtanding to ſuch conditions as he pleaſed to propound. Thus Amaziah and his people ſmarted for their idolatry, Ioas, who himſelf was no better, being made the inſtrument. V. 15.16. And to ſhew, that God uſed him but as his rod to puniſh ſin in Amaziah, the relation of his death followeth next, as moſt probably happening the ſame year. For Ioas reigned but to his ſixteen year, 2 King 13.10. Amaziah began his reign in his ſecond year, and anno 12. fought againſt Edom, wherefore the war between him and Ioas muſt be anno 13. that is, the 15. year of Ioas, and this moſt probably near expired when he returned to Samaria and then he lived not a year after. And unto this agreeth that, which is here added, v. 17. Amaziah lived after the death of Ioas V. 17. 15. years, and the whole time of his reign was 29 v. 2. wherefore in his 14 Ioas died. Now although Amaziah lived ſtill fifteen years, yet there is nothing memorable recorded of him in all that time, but that after he left following the Lord, his 2 Chron. 25.27. owne ſubjects in Ieruſalem growing weary of him, conſpired againſt him, and V. 19. thus hee was forced to flee to Lachiſh, to which place hee was notwithſtanding purſued, and ſlain there. Their hatred moſt probably was ſtirred up againſt him for the great miſeries, into which the kindome was brought by his means, who after his overthrow by the king of Iſrael grew puſillanimous, not daring to attempt any thing more like a valiant king, for the good of his kingdome, but lay in the abhominable ſinne of idolatry, ſpending his time idly and baſely. Of this the princes and nobles being at length impatient, when his ſonnes were grown up to 16. years of age, conſented together to depoſe him and ſet up his ſon, then he hearing of it fled. Ierom thinketh, that this conſpiracy was begun in ſecret immediately after Hieron. de Hebr. qu. that their kingdome was made tributary to the king of Iſrael, and not brought to perfection till this time, and that Amaziah perceiving what they went about, fled; but being immediately followed, was taken and ſlain. Others think, that it was the fift year after the death of Ioas, that they made this conſpiracy, and that he lay hid after this in Lachiſh ten years, before he was ſlain. But this cannot be, ſeeing he is ſaid to have reigned 29 years, wherefore they are rather to be followed, who hold, that this conſpiracy was made, and he thereupon fleeing, was purſued and cut off, all in his laſt year, no time being given him at Lachiſh to fortifie himſelf againſt them. If it be ſaid, it is not likely that they would conſpire againſt him 15 years after, for the miſchief brought upon them by Ioas; the longer they were held under by the king of Iſrael, the more weary doubtleſſe they grew, and now to be rid of this bondage they agreed to depoſe this king, who by oath was obliged, and to ſet up another, who was free. Whereas ſome are of opinion, that Amaziah in all this time patiently bare his miſeries, and turned from his idolatry, as the cauſe hereof, yielding this for the reaſon, that his ſonne Vzziah is ſaid to have done that, which was right in the ſight of the Lord, as his father Amaziah, 2 Chron. 26.4. they go upon a moſt weak ground, ſeeing the like is ſaid before of Amaziah, compared to Wolphius. Ioas his father. Their opinion then is rather to be preferred, who ſay, that when they conſpired againſt him, he ſhould have better provided for himſelf, by fleeing the idolatry which he had ſet up, and go to God by true repentance, then by fleeing to Lachiſh; but whereas in all his miſeries he did not, this is ſet forth as another judgement of God coming upon him, as the words imply. After he left following the Lord, they conſpired againſt him in Ieruſalem. And it ſeemeth to have been a ſtrong conſpiracy, that he was not able to repreſſe, and therefore was conſtrained to flee from, neither did his ſonne after him attempt to puniſh it, as he had done to thoſe that ſlew his father Ioas. It ſeemeth then, that it was made by a generall conſent, as that ſometime againſt Athaliah, and ſo the ſucceeding King was fain to paſſe it over.

Junius. Lachiſh, the city to which he fled, was in the tribe of Iudah, upon the borders of the Philiſtims, of which ſee Ioſh. 15. it ſometime had a King, and 2 King. 18. it was beſieged by Sanneherib, when he had overcome the Philiſtims, whence we may gather, that it was a place of ſtrength, in which Amaziah haply thought to defend himſelf, it was 20 miles from Ieruſalem.

V.20. Hieronym. trad. Hebr.

When they had ſlain him, they carried him upon horſes to Ieruſalem, and not upon mens ſhoulders ſaith Ierom, becauſe he ſerved the idols of Edom, whom he brought to Ieruſalem upon horſes, therefore his dead body was carried ſo likewiſe, they thinking it unworthy to be carried upon mens ſhoulders, as the Ark of God upon the ſhoulders of the Koathites, becauſe he had forſaken him.

V.21. 2 King. 15.30. He is alſo called Vzziah. 2 Chron.26.3.

Then all the people took Azariah and made him King,&c.] 2 Chro.26.1. Vzziah. It ſeemeth that he was called indifferently by either of theſe two names; his age alſo is ſet down 16 years, and his mothers name Iecolia of Ieruſalem, and the time of his reign 52. years, 2 Chron. 26. 3. Vzziah, ſaith gloſſ. ordin. ſignifieth the vertue of God, and Azariah, the help of the Lord, according to which names he did, and was holpen in the beginning of his reign, as here followeth, v. 4, 5, 6, &c.

V. 22.

He built Elath after that he had recovered it to Iudah, and ſlept with his fathers.] This Elath was in the land of Edom near to Ezion-gaber, 1 King. 9. 26. and if it were by Amaziah his father taken, when he went againſt the Edomites, it is moſt probable, that after the great blow given him by Ioas King of Iſrael, he loſt it again, the Edomites waxing bold upon his being brought under, to ſet upon it, and take it from the Iews again. But now Vzziah coming to a better eſtate, taketh it and layeth it to Iudah, and fortifieth it for his uſe, as being of great importance, ſith it was a port town. And this is all that is in this Chapter ſet down touching Vzziah in the Chap. 15. 1. hiſtory of the Kings. But ch. 15. 1. returning again to the beginning of his reign, it ſetteth forth more. Anno 27. of Ieroboam king of Iſrael, Azariah began, &c. touching which deſcription of the time, a great queſtion ariſeth, how it could be 27 of Ieroboam, ſeeing his father lived and reigned after the death of Ioas, father to Ieroboam 15 years, as was before ſhewed, and if he began immediately after his fa-Wolphius. ther, it muſt be the 15 and not 27 of Ieroboam. Some anſwer this by ſaying, that there was an inter-regnum after the death of Amaziah, of twelve years, but the granting of this, maketh the Chronology of the Kings of Iudah uncertain, whereas the end of reckoning the years of every ones reign is, that the whole time might be certainly known, as from the Creation to the Floud, by the fathers of the line of Sheth, and from the Floud to Moſes and the Iudges, by the fathers of the line of Shem, ſo from thence to the carrying of Iudah captive into Babylon, by the Iudges and the Kings. Moreover, becauſe ch. 15. 8 Zechariah the ſonne of Ieroboam, is ſaid to have begun his reign, anno 38 of Azariah, it cannot be admitted, that there ſhould be an interregnum of twelve years, ſo that from the death of Ioas of Iſrael, ſhould be 27 before he began, ſeeing from the 27 to the 41 of Ieroboam, are but fourteen years, and this was the whole time of his reign. It muſt needs then be yielded, that there was no interregnum in Iudah, but an ante regnum in Iſrael, Ieroboam being made conſort of the kingdome together with his father, twelve years before his death, and this might be well upon good reaſon, ſeeing he made warre with the Syrians, the firſt, ſecond, and third time, that in his abſence he might rule and if he ſhould have happened to dye in thoſe warres, the kingdome being ready provided of a king, might ſuſtain no danger for want of one, through diviſions: And if we count it thus, twelve years to Ieroboam with his father, and fifteen after to Azariah, we ſhall fall juſtly upon his 27 year, when Azariah began. But then a greater difficulty remaineth, ſeeing Azariah by this account, had not reigned above fifteen years when Ieroboam died; and betwixt fifteen and 38 are 23 years difference; Here I do not finde any one Expoſitour, that doth fully ſatisfie this Junius. doubt, not Iunius by ſaying, that he was taken and made King eleven years before his fathers death, when he fled to Lachiſh, for 11 added to 15 make but 26, and if all the time of his age before he began, viz. 16 be added, they will together make Toſtatus. but 31. Nor Toſtatus by ſaying, that there was an interregnum in Iſrael after Ieroboams death, before Zachary began, of eleven years, for they being added to fifteen, do much leſſe make up the number of 38; and Genebrard and Functius come yet ſhorter, who allow an interregnum but of eight years. But if we allow both unto Azariah eleven years in his fathers time, before he came to reign alone, which is not not improbable, conſidering the enmity of the people againſt his father, and an interregnum in Iſrael of twelve years after Ieroboams death, theſe two numbers put together unto fourteen or fifteen of his reigning alone, make juſt 38. And that it was ſo, muſt neceſſarily be held, to come to the thirty eight of Azariah when Zechariah began. And it is moſt probable, that it was thus through contention in Iſrael, keeping Zechariah from the regall dignity a long time, becauſe when he had gotten the crown, he kept it not long, viz. but ſixe moneths, being ſlain openly by Shallum, neither did he enjoy it above one moneth, but was ſlain by Menahem, chap. 15.8, 9, 10. So that it ſeemeth, under the warlike and victorious king Ieroboam, ſuch as were employed as great captains, grew to that height of ambition, that they kept his ſonne, haply being young, or of weak parts, under, that they might be regents, till at the laſt Menahem with his faction conſented to ſet him up for king, Shallum another great commander not conſenting, wherefore he taking opportunity came with his power, and aſſaulted and ſlew Zechariah, taking upon him to be king, which Menahem ſeeing, came with his forces and ſlew him.

To return again to that, which is further ſet forth 2 King. 15. 2, 3, &c. his age alſo, and his mothers name is ſhewed, and his doing right, as his father had done, and the high places not being put down, and laſtly, how he was ſmitten with the leproſie, died, and was buried. But becauſe all this is more fully ſet forth, 2 Chron. 26.4, 5. where he is ſaid to have done that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, as his father Amaziah had done, for he was intent to ſeek the Lord all the days of Zechariah that informed him. I will here take into that hiſtory, in which a doubt ariſeth, who this Zechariah was, for he could not be that Zechary who was one of the ſmall prophets, for his time agreeth not. Ierom ſaith, that he was the ſonne of Zechariah the ſon of Iehoiadah, born after his father was dead, whom Ioas cauſed to be ſtoned, and if it were he, as is not improbable, he was above 30 years old, when Vzziah began to reign, and ſo might continue many years to guide the young king aright. And in that time he is ſaid to have proſpered: firſt, againſt the Philiſtims, prevailing ſo, as that he brake down the wals of their ſtrongeſt cities, Gath, Iabnes and Aſhdod, and built cities there. It is not likely, that he did theſe things, ſo ſoon as he came to the crown: becauſe he was then both young and tender, and found the kingdome in a poor eſtate, as it was left by his unhappy father. But after certain years, he having gotten much wealth, by Gods bleſſing upon him for his piety, began firſt with the Edomits that held Elath from him, as hath been already ſaid. Then he went againſt the Philiſtims, but upon what occaſion is not expreſſed, onely we may gather, from 2 King. 12. 17. that partly occaſion was taken to fight with them about Gath, which David had formerly ſubdued and put under tribute, but towards the latter end of Ioas his reign, who was grandfather to Vzziah, this Gath is ſaid to have been taken by the Syrians, and moſt probably, their ſtate declining, it came into the Philiſtims hands again: for Ioas king of Iſrael overcame the Syrians ſo often, that they could not but hereby be made very weak, and unable to hold what they had formerly gotten. Therfore Vzziah now being ſtrong, after he had dealt with the Edomites, ſetteth himſelf to recover this city alſo from the Philiſtims, and when they being overcome there refuſed to be tributaries unto him, he brake down their wall and purſuing them, who haply from other cities made head againſt him, he ſerved their cities likewiſe, and ſo he came to break down the wals of Iabnes and Aſhdod alſo. Partly that cruell inroad made into Iudah, both by Philiſtims and Arabians in the dayes of Ioram, his fathers great grandfather, recorded 2 Chron. 21. 16. (when they carried away his treaſures, his children and his wives) might come into this kings remembrance, to be revenged upon both theſe peoples, v. 7. Gath, here ſaid to be taken by him, and the wall to be broken firſt, was one of the five principall cities of the Philiſtims countrey, and of great ſtrength by reaſon of the Giants there; for of this city was Goliath and four other of the ſonnes of Anak, 2 Sam. 21. 19. Iabnes was another ſtrong city of the Philiſtims by the ſea ſide, not above three hours travell from Gath, according to Adrichomius. Aſhdod was another of the 5. cities, formerly alſo ſtrengthned by Giants, Ioſh. 11. 22. and herein was the temple of Dagon, 1 Sam. 5. Theſe three, Vzziah did not onely reduce to the ſtate of villages, which are without wals, but alſo built in Aſhdod and other parts of the Philiſtims countrey, defenced cities for his people to dwell in, the better to contain the Philiſtims thus ſubdued in obedience. And it is ſaid, v. 7. that God did help him herein, and not onely againſt the Philiſtims, but alſo againſt the Arabians, who joyned their forces of old with the Philiſtims againſt Iudah, as hath been already ſaid. And more particularly, theſe A-rabians are ſaid to be inhabitants of the plain of Gur, that is, near unto Egypt: for Joſephus. which cauſe it is ſaid, v. 8. that his name was famous to the entring in of Egypt. Ioſe- phus ſaith, he ſubdued all that way as farre as Egypt. And moreover, he is ſaid to have prevailed againſt the Ammonites, as the vulgar Latin rendreth it, and the words following do intimate, v. 8. where it is ſaid, the Ammonites brought him preſents. And both are expreſſed by the ſame letters in Hebrew, but onely in the firſt place מ is ſet before ע, it being written המעונים, in the next ע after מ, it being Junius. written העמונים. Iunius rendreth it indigenas, expounding it of ſuch as dwelt Stephanus. diſperſedly, and yet Iudg. 10. 12. 11. 6. he calleth them Ammonites. Stephanus Hieronym. ſaith, that they were Arabians dwelling near the red ſea; and Ierom, that Gur before ſpoken of, as the place of the other Arabians habitation, was Gerar, where A- braham had ſometime ſojourned. But it is moſt rightly underſtood of the Ammo-nites, there being onely a tranſpoſition of one letter. And all theſe peoples were borderers upon Iudah, as Iunius noteth, the Arabians upon the ſouth, the Philiſtims upon the Weſt, and the Ammonites upon the Eaſt. And it is ſaid, that the Ammonites in token of ſubjection, brought him preſents. Moreover he fortified Ieruſalem with towers, even to the gate of the corner, and of the valley, &c. v. 9. In the dayes of Amaziah his father, the wals of Ieruſalem next unto Syria were bro-Joſephus. ken down by Ioas, but now he reared them up again, ſaith Ioſephus, and whatſoe-ver decayes elſe there were, he repaired and fortified. Touching the limits, unto which, the corner gate, and the gate of the valley, it is before ſaid, the corner gate, Hieronym. and the gate of Ephraim, chap. 25. 23. but that of the valley and of Ephraim, Ierom ſaith, are one and the ſame, and upon the corner] that is, where theſe two wals met.

Junius. Iunius rendreth the word tranſlated corner, as a proper name, Miktzanah and Neh.
3. 19. he expoundeth it, a tower in a moſt high place of the city of David, ſo called for the prerupt ſcituation: but then it muſt not be read upon Miktzanah, but to it, he built towers as to the corner gate, and the gate of the valley, ſo to this tower, that 2 *Chron.*26.10. is, as farre as was needfull, the vulgar Latin renders it, & reliquas in eodem muri la- tere, but without any ground in the originall, wherein are no ſuch words.

He built towers alſo in the deſert, &c.] that is, ſaith Iunius, of Arabia, which was full of paſtures, for the more ſafe keeping of his cattell, wherewith he abounded, and he digged ciſterns alſo, at which they might be watered. For he had many husbandmen, and vine dreſſers, for he loved husbandry, and it is ſaid that he had them both in the mountains and the fields, rendred in vulgar Latin, Carmel, according to the Hebrew word here uſed, בכרמל denoting fields moſt fruitful, as Carmel was, for that it is not to be underſtood of the place ſo properly called, appeareth, becauſe the fruitfull Carmel was in the tribe of Iſſachar in the kingdom of Iſrael.

V. 11, 12. From hence he proceedeth to ſet forth the greatneſſe of this kings forces, viz.
2600 Princes or Captains, under whom were of able warriours 370500 all well armed by the king, &c. But it is not to be thought, but that Vzziah prepared theſe great forces to goe forth to warre againſt the Philiſtians, Arabians, and Ammonites, before ſpoken of, although they are not mentioned till now. Thus it appeareth how ah, now followeth his foule falling and puniſhment. His great proſperity made him proud inſomuch that he went into the houſe of the Lord to offer incenſe, but Azariah the high Prieſt with his company reſiſted him and when he was angry, therefore the Lord ſmote him with leproſie, &c. 2 Kings 15. 5. It is onely ſaid, when the Lord ſmote the King ſo as that he was a leper to the day of his death, he dwelt in an houſe apart, and Iotham his ſonne was ſet over the kings houſe, the cauſe and occaſion being altogether omitted, wherefore in the Chronology this defect is ſupplyed, and by Ioſephus more fully, ſaying, He being puffed up with the poſſeſſion of fading riches, ſet light by divine and ever enduring riches, the reverence of the divine majeſty, and the keeping of his law; wherefore upon a certain ſolemn day, to ſhew that he was above the condition of other kings, and nearer to God by a peculiar ſuperexcellency, in the ſight of all the people hee entred into the Lords houſe to offer incenſe, and when Azariah the high Prieſt, with 80 othet Prieſts withſtood him, alleadging the law of God, which appointed the Prieſts only, the ſonnes of Aaron to doe this, he waxing angry threatned them with death, and ſo perſiſted in his enterprize, untill that a terrible earthquake came, and a rent was made in the temple upward, through which the Sun-beame ſmote the wicked face of the king, and then preſently the leproſie appeared. And at the ſame time another prodigy happened in a place called Eroge, before the city, halfe a mountaine Weſtward was pluckt away by the ſame Earthquake, and removed four furlongs off to the Eaſt part of the ſaid mountain, damming up the way to the city, and with the ruines filling up the kings gardens. Thus the Lord miraculouſly ſhewed the greatnes of this his ſin, and how highly he was diſpleaſed at it, that all men might learn by this example to keep their hearts humble and not be puffed by their great wealth, honour and proſperity. For the earthquake happening now, of which Ioſephus ſpeaketh, ſee alſo Zachariah 14. 5. although ſome that will have it the ſame with that ſpoken of, Amos 1. 1. doe hereupon deny it, becauſe it was in Ieroboams time who died long before that Vzziah was ſmitten. But that which Amos ſpeaketh of might be another, ſome yeares before this. For he that now was ſuperiour to all men of thoſe times in all theſe, when his heart was hereby lifted up, in an inſtant was brought to ſuch an eſtate, that he was ſequeſtred from the ſociety of men, as unfit for his loathſome diſeaſe to live amongſt them, having no liberty any more to dwell in his own royall palace, or to reign as king, or to come to the houſe of the Lord for this once carrying of himſelfe ſo proudly there. Wolphius to aggravate his ſin, whereby hee deſerved to be thus puniſhed, ſaith, that it was not only a breach of the law ratified with pain of death, Levit. 16. but alſo a confounding of the orders of men, which God had diſtinguiſhed, that one ſhould doe the office both of King and Prieſt, and that by him that was the head, whoſe part it was to keep every one within his own order: yea forſomuch as the Prieſt in offering incenſe typified Chriſt, it was a treading under foot of that ſacred myſtery for another to take upon him to do the ſame. Laſtly to doe this in contempt of the grave admonitions of the High Prieſt being ſeconded by ſuch a number of Gods Miniſters, putting him in mind of the law of God forbidding it, and threatning him with the danger of ſudden deſtruction, which by ſo doing, he ſhould incurre. Chryſoſtome alſo ſheweth divers ſinnes to have concurred in this one fact of his. 1. Ambition, in that he could not be content to enjoy the kingly dignity, but he muſt uſurp that of the high Prieſt alſo. 2. Arrogancy, becauſe he thought himſelfe fit to execute both theſe high offices. 3. Pertinacy, in that he was not ſtaid by the admonitions of the High Prieſt, but madly went on notwithſtanding to doe that which he had conceived in his mind. 4. Humane folly, in that ſeeking to aſcend to higher dignity, he fell from that which he had. 5. Humane vitiouſnes & pronenes to ſin, in that having before done ſo worthily, he now fell ſo fouly. 6. Impiety, in that he durſt break into that holy place, which to come into was interdicted to all others, but the High Prieſt, from which piety in reſpect of the ſtrict law of God againſt it, and ſo many venerable men endeavouring to keep him from it, ſhould have held him back upon the leproſie ariſing in his face for this. Hugo well noteth, that the puniſhment was moſt ſutable to his ſinne, in that as the High Prieſt wore a plate of gold upon his fore-head to adorne him when he offered incenſe, this proud king contrariwiſe was made to weare for ever the filthy mark of the leproſy upon his forehead to his perpetuall ignominy, and becauſe he had ſo brazen a forehead, as without all ſhew of modeſty or ſhame thus publickly to preſume through his pride, he was compelled to ceaſe from that by puniſhment making aſhamed, Note. which modeſty could not make him to do. In this example is ſhewed, that when a man doth excellently, ſo as that he cometh into great grace with God, and the devill cannot prevail with him to draw him into any groſſe ſinne, yet he is not out of all danger of falling, and judgement therefore, if for the grace conferred upon Jam. 4.6. him, he be lifted up in his heart: for God deſpiſeth the proud, and giveth grace to the humble. Again, it is pride, that God will not endure, to preſume to execute a miniſteriall office, in him that is not called thereunto. Laſtly, who ſo ſeeketh to make himſelf glorious, ſhall have ſhame for glory, and inſtead of riſing ſhall fall from the glory that he already hath, to be the vileſt amongſt men, as leprous perſons were.

V. 20. When the King was ſmitten with the leproſie, the high Prieſt with his aſſiſtants began by force to thruſt him out of the temple, becauſe no unclean perſon was to be ſuffered there; and he ſeeing a neceſſity reſiſted not, but departed and dwelt in an houſe alone to his dying day, as the Lord had appointed that all leprous perſons Procop. in Eſa. 6. ſhould do, Levit. 13. 46. Procopius ſaith, that he would not go out of Ieruſalem, as he ought to have done, but dwelt in an houſe there by himſelf, by which meanes the whole city was polluted and counted unclean, inſomuch that the Lord would not then reveal himſelf to his prophets there, (Chryſoſt. alſo in Eſay 6. ſaith, that the people were deprived of propheſie, becauſe they expelled him not out of the city) and when after this kings death, Eſa. 6. 1. Iſaiah had a viſion, v. 5. he crieth out, that he was unclean, and dwelt in the midſt of a people polluted. But no ſuch thing can be gathered from the words of the prophet, and it is rather the pollution of ſin for which he crieth out, then of the leproſie. And becauſe there is nothing ſaid of this his refuſall in the hiſtory, it is rather to be concluded, that he went out of the city, where an houſe might be had ſtanding alone, which could hardly be in the city, where they ſtood in rowes, one being joyned to another. For the time, when this leproſie befell him, it cannot be, as ſome conjecture anno 25. of his reign, becauſe his ſon Iotham ruled the court and judged the people, from this time forth to his dying day, whereas in that year he was yet unborn, ſeeing chap. 27. 1. he was but 25 when he began to reign after his fathers death, and his father reigned 52 years. And it is improbable which ſome others hold, that it was in the laſt year of his reign, both, becauſe it is ſaid, that when he was confirmed, his heart was lifted up, v. 16. and this moſt probably was ſome years before the end of his reign; and becauſe he is ſaid to have dwelt in an houſe apart to the day of his death, no mention being made of this happening to him ſo ſhortly after, It is therefore moſt probable, that he was ſmitten ſome years before he died, and if we ſhall pitch upon the particular year, it was anno 48 of his reign; becauſe then he might moſt of all be ſaid to have been confirmed, ſeeing Ahaz the ſonne of Iotham was born that year, as appeareth chap. 28. 1. he was 20 years old when he began to reign, and his father reigned but 16 years, therefore he was born 4 years before Vzziah died. Moſt probably then, when he had not onely a ſonne to ſucceed him, but a ſonnes ſonne to reign after him alſo, in a kingdome now ſo glorious and flouriſhing, his houſe being thus confirmed, he was lifted up with pride. And if this were the 2d year, Iotham his ſonne was now 21, and ſo fit by his age to govern, when he was excluded.

V. 22. The reſt of the acts of Vzziah, were written by Eſaiah the ſonne of Amos the Prophet.] That is, ſaith Iunius in the ſecond Book of the Kings, and in the Book of his propheſie; but Lyra, in ſome book of his which is loſt, and not in his propheſie, which is more probable, ſeeing in the Kings little is ſaid of his acts, and leſſe in Eſay his propheſie. It is to be ſuppoſed to have been a book of annals written by Eſay, as there were divers written by others, which were onely as Chronicles of other nations, and no canonicall Scripture; thus alſo Pellican.

V. 23. Then Vzziah died, and they buried him in the field of the Kings ſepulchres, for they ſaid, he is a leper.] Therefore they laid him not into their ſepulchers, but onely in the ſame field where their ſepulchres were, in a place ſomewhat remote. Thus Vzziah was puniſhed and abaſed for his preſumption, both in life and death, and although we reade not of his repentance, it may be hoped, that he repented, and ſo

Ieroboam is ſaid to have done this, by the encouragement of Ionah, for he did it according

CHAP. XV.

THe hiſtory of Azariah or Vzziah conteined in the ſeven former verſes being already explained, as being but the briefe of that which is more largely ſet forth, 2 Chron. 26. and the queſtion ariſing about his beginning, Anno 27. of Ieroboam reſolved, 2 Kings 14. 21, 22. now followeth the time of the next kings beginning to reign in Iſrael, viz. of Zachariah the ſonne of Ieroboam, who is ſaid to V. 8. have reigned Anno 38 of Azariah 6 months, where again if a queſtion bee made how this could be, ſeeing Azariah began Anno 27 of Ieroboam, and from thence to the end of his reigne were onely 14 yeares, ſee the reſolution; alſo 2 King. 14. 21, 22. There was an interregnum as ſome think, during the minority of Zechariah, when the kingdome was governed by regents, whereof Shallum was one. And that we might know the cauſe of his ſo ſhort a reign, v. 9. he is ſaid to have V. 10. followed Ieroboam in ſinning, and therefore he was rewarded with death, which he Joſephus. ſuffered at the hands of Shallum the ſonne of I*abeſh*, who having ſlain him openly, Lyra. raigned in his ſtead. I*oſephus* calleth him the ſonne of I*othan*, the kings freind. Lyra ſaith, he was one greatly encreaſed with the kings riches, and hereby gotten to great favour with the people, as he might well be by his liberality and courteſie towards them, wherefore preſuming upon their good will, he openly ſlew the king, Wolphius. no man reſiſting him. Thus Wolphius ſaith, Lyra hath it; but indeed he ſpeaketh not of his riches, onely he ſaith, that he was one of the Princes who were regents after I*eroboam*, till Zachary was made king, and ſo moſt probably was in great authority, and therefore committed this murther openly, the people for the moſt part conſenting, and being ready to receive him for their king, in his ſtead. And it appeareth, that (although in reſpect of the divine providence, his living in the ſinne of Ieroboam was the cauſe of this his untimely cutting off) Shallum did not ſlay him for this, becauſe he alſo followed I*eroboam*, but for his tyranny and ill governing of the kingdome, which made the people weary of him, being moved alſo by ambition to preferre himſelfe, as Toſtatus hath it.

The time alſo being now come, of which the Lord had ſpoken before in favour V. 11. of Iehu his zealous proceedings, as is ſaid, v. 11. that his children ſhould ſit upon the throne of Iſrael unto the fourth generation, for Iehohaz was the firſt, Ioaſh the ſecond, Ieroboam the third, and Zechary the fourth. However therefore the Lord had hitherto forborn to execute his judgements upon theſe idolatrous kings, the race of Iehu, and their idolatrous ſubjects for his words ſake, that it might be verified, and for many yeares in the reignes of the two laſt, Ieroboam and Ioaſh had made them proſperous, that they might ſubſiſt till Zachariah the fourth, yet he would not now ſuffer them in their wickedneſſe any longer, but brake out againſt them in his fierce wrath by judgement after judgement, till they Note. were utterly deſtroyed. Note hence (becauſe the firſt times of Iehu and his race were miſerable, the kingdome being then brought by Hazael and his Syrians to nothing, but the following times of Joaſh and Ieroboam proſperous, although they were as wicked as their progenitours, but now that mercy being abuſed, and their hearts not hereby moved to turn from their ſins, although they had Eliſhah, Ionah and other Prophets among them to improve it, miſery followeth miſery, as one wave of the ſea another without end) note I ſay that no way is left by God unattempted to make ſinfull man to turn unto him, for firſt he ſeeketh to engage by mercy, as hee did Iehu in raiſing him to kingly dignity, and making a promiſe unto him, then mercy not working, he ſought to terrifie them by judgements, after this out of his compaſſion he returned in much mercy again, and gave them victory over their enemies, laſtly, this not taking any effect, he caſt them quite off, leaving them for a time to imbrue their hands in the blood of one another, and then giving them over into their enemies hands, the Aſſyrians. 2. Note that the greateſt proſperity is followed with the greateſt miſery, when there is no reformation made therefore, that none may truſt to preſent or long continued proſperity ſperity, or be hereby made bold to goe on in ſin without feare of judgement.

V.13,14. Shallum having gotten the kingdome enjoyed it onely one month, and then he was ſlain by Menahem the ſon of Gadi coming from Thirza, and taking the kingdome upon him. For although Zechary for his idolatry was worthy to dye, and the time appointed by God was come, to tranſlate the kingdome from the family of Iehu to another, yet he was a wicked conſpiratour againſt his lawfull king, and a Note. murtherer, and therefore vengeance from God ſoon cut him off, as it doth likewiſe all ſuch as attain to royall dignity by bloudſhed, according to that ſaying;

Ad generum Cereris ſine cæde & ſanguine pauci Deſcendunt reges, & ſicca morte tyranni.

Menahem is ſaid to have come from Thirzah to Samaria, where he ſlew Shallum, Patriarks travels. that is ſix miles; of Thirzah, ſee Ioſh. 12. 24. where the king of Thirzah is ſaid to have been ſlain by Ioſhuah, arguing it to have been a great city, and here it ſeemeth Menahem gathered his army, and ſo came againſt Shallum, when he heard, that he had ſlain Zechariah his maſter. From Samaria, when he had thus gotten the kingdom, he went to Thipſah, being alſo ſixe miles, the vulgar Latin renders it alſo Thirzah, but in Hebrew and Chaldee it is Thipſah, another Town not farre off Joſephus. Thirza. Ioſephus ſaith, that Menahem was captain of the Army at Thirzah, which was once the Metropolis of the kingdom, for there Ieroboam began to reign and his ſucceſſours, till that Omri tranſlated the ſeat of the kingdom to Samaria. He therefore now that Z*achariah* his maſter was dead, thinking that he had as good right to ſucceed him as Shallum, who had wickedly conſpired againſt him, and ſlain him; went with his army againſt him, &c. then hearing happily that the men of Thipſah would not receive him for king, he went againſt them, and when V.16. they ſhut their gates againſt him, he fell into a rage againſt them, and breaking in, ſmote whatſoever was therein, and all the borders thereof from Thirzah, and hee ripped up the Women great With child] Why they would not open unto him ſome conjecture, the reaſon to be, becauſe they had given their faith to Shallum before, ſome becauſe they had ſeen ſome experience of his cruelty, when he lived with his army near unto them at Thirzah, but upon what occaſion ſoever, he practiſed this barbarous cruelty amongſt them, that other cities being terrified might not dare Joſephus. to withſtand him. Ioſephus ſpeaking hereof, ſaith, that he ſpared not the tender age, taking liberty to doe that which was not lawfull towards Hebrewes, being overcome. But he mentioneth not his ripping up of women with child, as abhorring to tell of ſuch unheard of cruelty, amongſt the men of his nation. Some Wolphius. ſaith VVolphius expound it by bulwarks made like mountains, as if it had been meant, that he brake them open, becauſe הקים ſignifieth mountains, but the word here uſed is הרות which is never rendred otherwiſe, but gravidæ, and ſo the Septuagint and Chaldee. This was horrible cruelty on his part, but on Gods a juſt judgement for their foule ſins, in which they went on ſo long in impenitency, that others may beware.

V.17. In the 39 of Azariah he began his reign, and reigned ten yeares, &c.] Although he were a moſt cruell tyrant, yet God ſuffered him to continue thus long to aggravate V.18. his own miſery, and the miſery of this wicked people, for he going on, as V.19. his predeceſſours had done, ever ſince the firſt beginning of this kingdome in Ieroboam, ſuffered by Phul king of Aſſyria, who came againſt his land, and although he made his peace with a great ſumme of money, that he might reign under him, which he exacted of his ſubjects, even a thouſand talents of ſilver, which was above 100000 pound, that is, 187500 pound, yet he was brought thus to live baſely and poorly all his dayes. This Phul is ſaid to be king of Aſſyria, or of Babylon, for theſe names are ſometime confounded, becauſe Babylon was the chiefe city of that kingdome. He was called Phul Belochus, who ſucceeded Sardanapalus, and gave part of his kingdome to Arbaces, viz. the Medes and Perſians, keeping to himſelfe Babylon and Nineveh, and he was the firſt Aſſyrian king, that ever came againſt Iſrael; yet ſome think that he came not againſt Menahem, but being called by him, fearing for his cruelty to be depoſed from the kingdome, which he had uſurped, and that the mony here ſpoken of was not given once only, but as a yearly tribute, grounding upon Sept. Sixti, where it is read, all his dayes came Phull, and he gave him* 1000 *talents, which reading is followed by Toſtatus, Toſtatus. and becauſe Tiglathpileſar his ſonne came again againſt Iſrael, when after the death of Menahem and his ſonne, this tribute was paid no more, v. 29. But it is ſaid expreſſely, 1 *Chron.*5.26. that God ſtirred up Phull and Tiglathpileſar to come againſt Iſrael for their ſinnes, and therefore when Tiglathpileſar came, there being no word ſpoken of tribute denied, as the cauſe; this appeares to be a meer invention, and touching theſe words [all his dayes] they are erroneouſly in that tranſlation taken from v. 18. and tranſpoſed to v. 19. farre from their place. And if Phull had come by the procurement of Menahem, it would have been ſo ſaid as well as when Tiglathpileſar came in the dayes of Ahaz, 2 Chron. 28. 16. and hee ſhould hardly have raiſed ſuch an huge ſumme from ſuch a multitude of wealthy men, as it is ſaid, 50 ſhekels of each man, for ſo to the raiſing of it about 60000 men, muſt be ſeſſed, ſeeing 50 ſhekels come but to three pound two ſhillings ſix pence; and it is incredible, that ſo much ſhould be paid yearly out of ſo little, and now ſo poore a kingdome. Therefore I conclude, that this was only once paid, Phull happily promiſing hereupon, if there were any rebellion to be aſſiſtant unto him, which might be the cauſe that he cotinued 10 years, and then died a naturall death, leaving his kingdome to his ſonne after him.

V.23. In the 50 yeare of Azariah began Pekahiah the ſonne of Menahem to reign over Iſrael, &c.] Whereas Menahem is ſaid to have begun, anno 39. and to have reigned 10 yeare, it is to be underſtood, 10 compleat, the time which he reigned above, before and after, being a few odde dayes, not being here reckoned. Of Pekahiah nothing is ſaid, but that he went on in the ſinne of Ieroboam, and reigned but two yeares, being ſlain by Pekah the ſonne of Remaliah, and Argob and Arieh, and with V.25. him 50 men of the children of Gilead, &c. This Pekah is ſaid to have been his Captain, Hebr, שלשן being called from the word ſignifying three, either becauſe he was the third man of the kingdome according to ſome, or had command over the third part of the army, called the rereward according to others; who alſo ſay that the valianteſt men were here placed to uphold the battell, when the others quiled. Lyra. Argob and Arieh are thought by Lyra to be no men, but places near unto the Palace, where this murder was done, wherefore in the vulgar Latin it is rendred [near unto Argob and Ariph] but for Ariph, ſaith he, Hebr. it is Arie, ſignifying a Lion, by which the place was named by reaſon of a golden Lion ſtanding therein for ornament, and this out of R. Solomon. And this is moſt probable, becauſe the particle את ſet before Argob and before Arie, as it ſheweth the Accuſative caſe, Wolphius. ſo it ſometime ſignifieth in or ſuper, adverſus or ad; that is, above, over againſt, or at. Although ſome think two ſpeciall men to be hereby meant, who together with the 50 Gileadites conſpired with him. But the more probable opinion is, that theſe were ſlain together with the king in taking his part, as being in ſpeciall favour with Joſephus. him, and then at a feaſt. For ſo Ioſephus telling this hiſtory ſaith, he was ſlaine at a feaſt.

V.27. The 52 year of Azariah began Pekah the ſonne of Remaliah to reign over Iſrael, 20 yeares.] Hee was ſuffered 20 yeares in the kingdome, which hee came to by blood, although a wicked idolater alſo; but then his blood was required therefore, a conſpiracy being likewiſe made againſt him by Hoſheah, and hee being by him V.28. ſlain, v. 30. Neither did he eſcape Gods puniſhing hand in the mean ſeaſon, for Tiglath Pileſar king of Aſſyria came and took from him Hijon, and Abel Beth-Maacah, &c. and carried the inhabitants thereof into Aſſyria. The cities here named were the uttermoſt bounds of the kingdom of Iſrael, as wee may ſee touching Hijon, 2 Chron. 16.4. and touching Abel, Beth-maachah, 2 Sam. 20.14. though there were other cities of the ſame name of the tribe of Iudah, Gilead was that, where the two tribes and an halfe dwelt. Galilee was both ſuperiour called Galilee of the Gentiles, and inferiour; both which are greatly praiſed by Ioſephus not ony for fertility, but for the great number of inhabitants there maintained. V.30. Then a conſpiracy being made againſt Pekah, Hoſheah ſmote him ſo that hee ſlew him, and reigned in his ſteed Anno 20 of Iotham.] Here becauſe Iotham reigned onely 16 yeares, v. 33. and began but Anno 2 of Pekah, who reigned 20 yeares; Expoſitours are troubled about reconciling this. Iunius ſaith, that it is ſaid, in the 20 year of Iotham, as meant only of the 20 year from the time that hee began to reign, 4 yeares alſo of Ahaz his ſon being now expired, wherefore he rendreth it 20 yeares from the kingdom of Iotham begun, ſo likewiſe Wolfius having firſt confuted two other opinions. 1. That to make up the number of 20, it muſt be underſtood, that 4 yeares are reckoned here to Iotham of his fathers life, becauſe after the time that he was a leper, Iotham governed all, but this makes the chronologie uncertain. 2. That Ahaz being a wicked king is thought unworthy to be named in counting the beginning of any kings reign; and therefore he that was dead is rather mentioned, then this wicked king, that was living, but forſomuch as the ſacred hiſtory hath hitherto reckoned by the wicked kings, as well as by the godly, it were ſtrange, if for this reaſon he that began to reign in the fourth or fifth of Ahaz, ſhould be ſaid to begin the 20. of Jotham, yet Lyra indifferently followeth either this, as being the ſolution of R. Solom. or the other already rejected by Wolphius touching four years expired, when he began to reign alone. But I marvail, that he conſidered not, how ch. 17. 1. the time of Hoſheah is reckoned by the years of Ahaz alſo, which ſheweth, that the year of his reign, when Hoſhea began, is not paſſed over in ſilence for his malice or wickedneſſe, but becauſe the beginning of his reign was not yet ſpoken of, but long after ch. 16. 1. the whole hiſtory of Iotham, his fathers reign coming between this and it; and it is not the manner of the ſacred hiſtory to reckon by the reign of any king ſo long before his time comes to be ſet forth, but by the neareſt, which here is Iotham, v. 32. By the twenty year of Iotham, I conclude then, is meant the 20 from the time that he began, he being now dead four years before Hoſhea his reign; who this Hoſhea was it is not ſaid, but Ioſephus ſaith it was one of his familiar friends, and moſt probably by himſelf preferred. And it was juſt with God, that Pekah, who had been falſe to his lord and maſter, under whom he had been in an honourable place, ſhould be likewiſe dealt withall by one preferred by him.

V.32. The ſecond year of Pekah the ſonne of Remaliah, began Iotham to reigne over Iudah, &c.] The hiſtory of Iotham being intermitted from v. 7. hitherto (that the kings of Iſrael, who began to reign before him, might be ſhewed together, Zechariah, Shallum, Menahem, Pekahiah, and Pekah) is now again proſecuted, his age, V.33. his mothers name, and the time of his reign being ſhewed. Whereas he is ſaid to have begun the ſecond year of Pekah, who reigned twenty years, and yet Hoſheah that ſucceeded Pekah, began twenty years after the beginning of Iothams reign, it is to be underſtood, that the ſecond year of Pekah was but new begun, and ſo Pekah being dead, nineteen years had paſſed from the beginning of Iothams reign, and in V.34. the beginning of the next, which was the twenty, Hoſheah began. Iotham is ſaid to have done that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, as Vzziah his father.

2 Chron.27. Joſephus. 2 Cron. 27. 2. it is added, that he went not into the temple, as his father had done, but the people corrupted themſelves. Ioſephus praiſeth him for a right godly and excellent prince, neither doth the Scripture ſpeak otherwiſe but very well of him, and of his deeds for the good of the church and kingdome, and of Gods bleſſing him therefore. Which maketh againſt the people, in that having ſo godly a king, and ſome famous prophets, who were of that time, as Iſaiah, Hoſeah, and Michah, yet they were corrupt. V.35. 2 King. 15. 35. No more is ſaid, but as in the time of Vzziah, Amaziah, and Ioaſh, the people ſacrificed ſtill in the high places. This therfore, how ever tolerated hitherto, is thus cenſured as a corruption in the ſervice of God, whereby he was much offended, ſeeing all ſacrifices were now to be offered in the temple only, which Solomon built, of which I have ſpoken often before, ſee upon 1 King. 15. 9, 10. And therefore the Lord to ſhew his diſlike, raiſed up adverſaries againſt Iſrael, Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah v. 37. moſt probably towards the latter end of the reign of Iotham, ſo as that he lived not to ſee their comming, but was before in mercy taken away, and in the dayes of his wicked ſonne Ahaz they came, making preparation only in Iothams time, ch. 16. 5. But becauſe Eſay propheſying in Iothams time, ſpeaketh againſt Iudah, as hearing but not underſtanding Eſa. 6. 9. it ſeemeth, as Ierom alſo thinketh, that by theſe words, they corrupted themſelves, is not onely meant by offering in high places, but alſo falling to idolatry, whereunto they ſaw Ahaz the young prince then inclining. The piety of Iotham is further ſet forth v. 35. he built the upper gate of the houſe of the Lord. Whatſoever his ſubjects did (becauſe it ſeemeth that they could not yet be reſtrained) in ſacrificing upon high places, he applyeth himſelf to beautifie yet more the houſe of the Lord. The Septuagint, for upper gate, have the high gate, portam excelſam, and ſo it is in the Chronicles. Vatablus. This, Vatablus ſaith, was the Eaſt Rabanus. gate; Rabanus, the gate called beautifull, Act. 3. which Lyra well confuteth, Lyra. becauſe the temple ſtanding then was burnt down long before. But about this we need not contend, it was moſt probably, the higheſt and moſt magnificent gate of the temple, whereby it was moſt adorned outwardly, but now, it being above 200 years ſince Solomon built it, and in decay, Iotham out of his piety rebuilt it, for the honour of God, and that the people might be the rather drawn from high 2 Chron.27.3. places, to the temple. 2 Chron. 27. 3. and in the wall of the hill he built very much, Junius. That is, ſaith Iunius, behinde the temple Weſtward, where the ground was higheſt, between the brook of Gihon and the fiſh-gate. The vulgar Latin renders it, in the wall of Ophel, the Hebrew word being retained, which ſignifieth, high, or defenced, or a tower, he built the wals of an high tower, for the defence of the city. v. 4. He built alſo cities in the mountanous places of Iudah, and in the plains, pallaces and towers. In the vulgar Latin, caſtles and towers, which were alſo for the defence of other parts of the kingdome.

V.5. He alſo fought againſt the king of the Ammonites and prevailed, ſo that they gave unto him 100 talents of ſilver, &c.] Thus likewiſe Vzziah his father did before, ch. 26. 8. and the Ammonites gave him guifts, that is, as being ſubjected by him, they paid tribute: but now refuſing ſo to do any more, Iotham by war compelleth them again unto it. And his power to do all theſe things, is aſcribed to his piety towards God, v.* 6. and this is the onely way for any king to proſper, as many examples more, both in the holy ſcriptures and other hiſtories do ſhew.

V. 5.
2 Chron. 28. 5.

Then Rezin King of Syria, and Pekah king of Iſrael came againſt Ieruſalem, and beſieged Ahaz, but could not prevaile] 2 Chron. 28. 5. it is ſaid, wherefore the Lord delivered him into the hands of the king of Syria, who ſmote him and carried away captive a great multitude to Damaſcus, and alſo into the hands of the king of Iſrael, who ſlew 120000 in one day, &c. Betwixt theſe there ſeemeth to be a manifeſt contradiction, ſo if they prevailed not, how was Ahaz delivered into the Syrians hands, &c. Ioſephus ſaith, that coming firſt together againſt Ieruſalem, they could not prevaile for the great ſtrength of that city, but then the king of Syria turning himſelfe to Ellatha, which was a city taken away from the Syrians before by Azariah, 2 Kings 14. 22. he took it, and having ſlain, he ſhould have ſaid, rooted out the Iews who dwelt there, v. 5. he placed Syrians in their ſteed, thus returning into his own country, and for Ellatha, he hath Aila by the red ſea. Then the king of Iudah underſtanding that the Syrians were departed becauſe hee thought himſelfe of ſtrength ſufficient to deal with the King of Iſrael, went out to fight with him with a great army, but doing it in contempt of God, whom he had forſaken, the king of Iſrael prevailed againſt him and ſlew of his men 120000, and carried away captive an incredible multitude, the Chronicles ſaith, 200000 women and children. And if things were done in this order, both theſe hiſtories agree very well together, the Chronicles only ſupplying that, which was wanting in the Kings. Ierom, and after him Procopius, and Theodoret ſay, that one warre made by the Syrians and Iſraelites ſeverally is ſet forth in the Chronicles, and another after this, their forces being joyned together, ſet forth in Kings, and this agreeth with the Hebrew, Chron. c. 22. and is followed by Dionyſius and others. And this is moſt conſonant with the ſacred hiſtory, which ſaith, that Rezin the king of Syria ſmote him, whereas if nothing be meant, but that he ſmote the Iewes in Ellathah, it were not ſo properly ſpoken, ſeeing he ſmote not him there, but ſome of his ſubjects; he being in the mean while in Ieruſalem with his army out of his danger. Moreover when Rezin and Pekah king of Iſrael beſieged Ieruſalem, it is ſaid that Ahaz ſent for help into Aſſyria againſt them, and that the king of Aſſyria came and took Damaſcus, the chief city of Rezin and ſlew him, wherefore he had no time then by the way as he returned from Ieruſalem to fight againſt another city, and to take it, and to remove the old inhabitants, and to bring in new, but rather hearing of the coming of the king of Aſſyria againſt his country, he haſtened thither to defend it. And ſee the taking of Ellatha and reſtoring it to his dominions could not be at that time, but at ſome other before it, although it be mentioned after the ſiege and fighting againſt Ieruſalem, v. 6. and ſaid to have been done at that time, for theſe words [at that time] may be expounded generally of the time when Rezin had power over the king of Iudah for his ſinnes, which was from the very beginning of his reigne, and ſo Chron. Hebr. ſaith, Anno 17. of Pekah, this was done.

2 Kings 16. 7.

If it ſhall ſeem ſtrange that the king of Iſrael ſhould joyn with heathens againſt Iudah, it may be conceived that Ahaz kept correſpondency with the king of Aſſyria, ſyria, who was the great enemy of Iſrael, and therefore the king of Iſrael was eaſily brought to joyn with the king of Syria againſt him, to take him away, and to ſet another king in his room, who if the king of Aſſyria ſhould come again, might be an help unto them, and not ready to joyn with him their common enemy, as Ahaz was, which is expreſſed Eſa. 7. 6. where this coming againſt Ieruſalem by theſe two kings, is more fully ſet forth, ſaying; Let us joyn Iudah to us, and ſet over it for king the ſonne of Tabeal. For the Syrians, if it ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that they who were alwayes ſo great enemies to Iſrael, agree now to make one army together with them, it is to be underſtood, that in the dayes of Ioaſh and of Jeroboam they were ſo beaten, that they were glad to live quietly by the Iſraelites, and from ceſſation of armes, it is no marvail that they grew into ſuch amity, as that they were now as one people confederate together, eſpecially being alſo idolaters alike. Whereas Iſrael being idolatrous, as Iudah, yet prevaileth againſt Iudah, this is nothing ſtrange, if we conſider Ioaſh before prevailing againſt Amaziah, and the kings of Aſſyria againſt them both. For God uſeth oftentimes ſome moſt wicked, as his rods againſt others to correct them, and then caſteth theſe rods alſo into the fire, as he did the Aſſyrian kings, when by them he had ſcourged Iſrael.

Now forſomuch as it appeareth by that which hath been ſaid, that the hiſtory touching Gods delivering of Ahaz into the hands of Rezin, and then of Pekah king of Iſrael, ſet forth 2 Chron. 28. went before that of their joyntly coming together againſt Ieruſalem, I will proceed in the explication of this firſt, and then return again to 2 King. 16. The king of Syria firſt coming againſt Ahaz, is ſaid to have ſmitten him, and to have caried away captive a great multitude, that is, to have gotten the victory, and to have taken many priſoners, which yielded to his mercy: for he is ſmitten by the enemy, and into his hands he is delivered, whoſe forces are ſubdued. And this moſt probably was done about Ellathah, for which Rezin contended at this time, and ſo theſe captives were the inhabitants of Ellathah, who are ſaid to have been carried away, and others from Syria brought to dwell in their place, 2 King. 16. 6. Then the king of Iſrael came alſo and prevailed againſt him, and ſmote him with a great ſtroke. This being ſhewed in generall, v. 6. the number of his forces ſlain by the king of Iſrael, is particularly declared, viz. 120000 in one day, and then the number by him carried away captive, v. 8. and before that what men of note were ſmitten. v. 7. Zichri, a mighty man of Ephraim ſmote Maaſeiah the Kings ſon. For whom Ierom, qu. Hebr. hath the ſonne of Molech, that is, one, as he thinketh, ſo called, becauſe he was moſt earneſtly addicted to the worſhip of Molech, the idol whom Ahaz ſerved. He ſmote alſo Hatricham governour of the kings houſe, and Elkana the ſecond to the king, and all this God did againſt him and his people, becauſe they had forſaken the Lord, as is expreſſed v. 6. Whatſoever was the quarrell that their enemies had againſt them, God in whoſe power it is only to give victory, made them victorious for this cauſe, and the Iſraelites to ſuſtain ſo great ſlaughters, of the like to which in the reign of Amaziah, ſee alſo chap. 25. Whileſt the Iſraelites were carrying away captive that great multitude of women and children, which they had taken, Oded a prophet of the Lord came before them, as they were entring into Samaria, &c. v. 9. the vulgar Latin hath it, Obed, &c. Lyra ſaith, that he dwelt not in Samaria, but came out of Iudah, ſo likewiſe Jerom according to the Hebrew traditions ſaying, that Oded came to Samaria, for he was of Iudah, as being that Oded who was father to Azariah, that propheſied to Aſa, 2 Chron. 15. 1. But how far from truth the Hebrew traditions are herein appeareth, becauſe from Aſa till this time, paſſed 200 years, and Oded was then father to a ſon that propheſied. To leave this Oded then, as unknown any more, then by his name, let us ſee what he ſaith. Behold, the Lord being angry with Iudah, hath delivered them into your hands, and ye have heinouſly ſlain them, ſo that your cruelty reacheth up to heaven. Moreover, ye mean to make them ſervants and handmaids unto you, which is not needfull to be done, for ye have ſinned in this matter againſt the Lord your God. So the vulgar Latin. But Iunius more according to the Hebrew, are there not amongſt you, amongſt you I ſay, onely ſinnes againſt the Lord your God? Hebr. verbatim, annon vobis ſolum, vobiſcum peccata, &c. that is, have not not ye ſinnes enough of your own, only againſt God, to pull down his judgements upon you, that you will by more cruelty thus againſt your brethren of Iudah, encreaſe the number of them? He would not have them to think, becauſe God had now given them the victory for the ſinnes of Iudah, that they were better accepted of before him, for even they had ſinned as grievouſly alſo, and therefore ought not thus to inſult over their diſtreſſed brethren, leſt that hereby God ſhould be provoked againſt them alſo, but reſtore again their captives.

2 Chron.28.12, 13. At this ſaying, there were certain men of Ephraim of the chief, that were ſo moved, as that they ſtood againſt the army, and forbade them to bring in the captives, which did hereupon forbear, and then they having fed and clothed the naked, &c. carried the feeble amongſt them upon their own beaſts unto Iericho, and delivered them to their brethren; ſo mightily did the word of God in the mouth of the Prophet work upon them, although he uſed not the Lords name unto them, as Ierom noteth, becauſe he thought them for their idolatries unworthy.

V.16. 2 Kings 16.5.7. At that time Ahaz ſent to the Kings of Aſſyria deſiring aid. Moreover the Edomites came, and the Philiſtims, &c. This of ſending for help to Aſſyria, is more fully ſet forth, 2 *King.*16.5.7. When Rezin king of Syria, and Pekah king of Iſrael came againſt Ieruſalem and beſieged it, Ahaz ſent to Tiglath-pileſer king of Aſſyria, to help him againſt them. Then he took the ſilver and gold in the Lords houſe, and in the Kings treaſury, and ſent a preſent unto him, who thereupon came againſt Damaſcus the chief city of Syria, and took it, and ſlew the king, who doubtleſſe hearing of his coming, haſtened from the ſiege of Ieruſalem to defend his own country. V.8,9. This is more amply ſet forth Eſa. 7. where it is ſhewed, what fear came upon Ahaz and the men of Iudah, when they heard of the coming of theſe two kings againſt them, and that the prophet was ſent unto Ahaz, to tell him, that they ſhould be able to do nothing againſt Ieruſalem, and therefore he biddeth him not to fear them. And then he giveth a ſigne of a Virgins conceiving and bearing a ſonne, extending his propheſie to a farre greater comfort to come afterwards by the birth of Chriſt. And to comfort and confirm the men of Iudah the more for the preſent, he foretelleth of the deſtruction of both theſe kings in a ſhort time, viz. before a childe now born, ſhould have knowledge to refuſe the evill and to chuſe the good, as indeed it fell out, becauſe Rezin was ſlain forthwith, and Pekah in the twenty year of his reign by Hoſheah, who uſurped the kingdome, and at this time he was upon his 18. year at the leaſt. And chap. 8.4. that as thoſe two kings had come before ſeverally, and carried away rich ſpoils out of Iudah, ſo from Damaſcus in Syria and Samaria in the land of Iſrael, ſhould the like ſpoils be carried by the king of Aſſyria, before the childe then born ſhould be able to ſay (my father.) How the judgement againſt Rezin was executed, is ſhewed here *v.*9. but againſt Iſrael how, it is not ſaid, but becauſe Eſay ſpeaketh hereof alſo, it is certain, that it was fulfilled, and Ioſephus ſaith expreſly, that Tiglath-pileſar carried away a great multitude of captives out of the land of Iſrael, having waſted firſt the country, and Chron. Hebr. that then the golden calf in Dan was carried away by the Aſſyrian. Joſephus. Chron. Hebr. c. 22.

For the beginning of this warre made by the two Kings againſt Ieruſalem, it is likely, that having ſeverally invaded the land of Iudah the yeare before, and prevailed, they thought, that if with their forces united they ſhould march thither againe, they might take the chiefe city it ſelfe, Ieruſalem. Wherefore they attempt it, but in vaine, although Ahaz for his idolatry deſerved to be given into their hands. For if they could have prevailed, as is ſhewed, Eſa. 7. they would have quite taken away Ahaz and his ſeed, and have ſet up for King the ſonne of Tabeal, that is, ſome great man of Syria, which God would not ſuffer for his promiſe ſake unto David, that he would alwaies leave unto him a light in Iſrael. Therefore to prevent this, Eſay with his ſonne Sheuriaſhub is ſent to Ahaz, as was before ſaid. But the wicked King not beleeving him, truſted rather to an arme of fleſh and ſent to the King of Aſſyria, hiring him with great treaſure to come and helpe him. Then he being allured by ſo great a gift, haſtened with his army againſt Damaſcus, as hath been already ſhewed, thus cauſing the Aſſyrian forces to leave the ſiege of Ieruſalem, and to returne to their owne; and it is moſt probable, that the King of Iſrael did alſo the like, whereby Ahaz being freed from their danger went to Tiglathpileſar to Damaſcus to congratulate his victory, and there ſeeing a great and glorious altar, upon which thoſe heathens ſacrificed to their idols, he ſent the patterne of it to Ieruſalem, commanding Uriah the prieſt to make the like againſt his returne, &c. But before we come to this, a doubt is to be reſolved: for whereas it is here ſaid, that Tiglathpileſar came againſt Damaſcus and ſlew Rezin the King, and depopulated the countrey of Pekah, and carried away many captives, as hath beene already ſhewed, this being by Hebr. Chron. the ſecond captivity of the Iſraelites, which was a great help to Ahaz King of Iudah,

2 *Chron.*28.20, 21.

2 Chron. 28. 20. it is ſaid, that Tiglathpileſar coming to Ahaz ſtreightened him, and confirmed him not, and v. 21. although he gave great treaſures to him out of the Lords houſe, &c. yet he holpe him not. Sol. When he had at his requeſt gone againſt the two kings his enemies, whereby, they were compelled to withdraw their forces from Ieruſalem, he did him more hurt after this, then he had done him good herein, by coming into and pillaging his countrey and putting him in feare of his owne life alſo, which is intimated, 2 King. 16. 18. where it is ſaid, that Ahaz removed the covering of the Sabbath, &c. from the houſe of the Lord for feare of the king of Aſſyria, ſo that this king was then in Ieruſalem, and made great havock there amongſt Ahaz his people, and he was in continuall feare of his breaking into his pallace, ſo Iunius.

Lyra.

But it is not ſaid he did theſe things Hebr. for feare, but מפנימלך אשור before the face of the king of Aſſyria, which by Lyra is expounded, to pleaſe him by ſhewing, that he had left worſhipping of the Lord, the way into whoſe houſe he had ſtopt up, as it lay from the kings pallace. But if it were ſo, his ſeeking thus to pleaſe him came from feare, and becauſe he ſaw himſelfe to be now in his power and yielded to doe any thing, that his kingdom might not be deſtroyed, but he might agree to depart: For that the Aſſyrian king at this time ſubdued him and made him his tributary appeareth, 2 King. 18. 7. where it is ſaid, that Hezekiah, his ſon rebelled againſt the king of Aſſyria and would not ſerve him, which agreeth not, but to a kingdome under tribute and to this was Iudah never brought, till that Ahaz, as he had ſpoken of himſelfe, 2 King. 16. 7. I am thy ſervant and thy ſonne, was indeed brought under by the ſame king of Aſſyria. And to expreſſe this the Vulgar Lat. for theſe words, 2 Chron. 28. 20. Tiglahpileſar comming to him ſtreightened him] hath theſe words, he brought alſo Tiglahpileſar againſt him, who afflicted him and waſted him without reſiſtance. Touching the cover of the Sabbath, and the outward enterance of the king, which he is ſaid to have removed from the houſe of the Lord before the king of Aſhur; the Vulgar lat. retaining the Hebrew word, hath Muſac Sabbati being expounded by Lyra, either the treaſury, where the kings upon the Sabbaths put their offerings for neceſſary uſes about the temple, which he ſaith, is the common expoſition: or according to R. Solomon, a place in the porch of the temple glorioully covered, where the king uſed to ſit upon the Sabbaths.

Hugo followeth that of a treaſury, but ſaith, the moneyes given by the king and put there were for charitable uſes. And whereas Iunius hath he removed from the houſe of the Lord, the Vulgar lat. hath, he turned to the houſe of the Lord, which the Ord. Gloſſe expoundeth, that when the king of Aſhur ſhould come he might ſee and deſire them to carry away, as he did many other great gifts, which he gave unto him. The word הסב here uſed ſignifieth to make to goe about, and being read together with the next words, it is neither from, nor to the houſe of the Lord, but onely he made to goe about the houſe of the Lord. And what did he make to goe about? Anſw. The covering of the Sabbath and the kings outward paſſage to the houſe. Or rather the covering having reference to the word, cut off, v. 17. (for moſt probably, as he tooke away other things of price from the houſe of God, thus defacing it and leaving it naked, ſo he tooke away this covering of braſſe alſo, which was built in the houſe for ſome uſe before ſpoken of, or for the Prieſts to reſt themſelves in, according to ſome others) nothing elſe is meant, but that he ſtopt up the way of the king to the Lords houſe, ſo that if any would goe thither they muſt needs goe round about and ſo come up by many ſteps an high hill with great difficulty to the houſe; yea having done thus, to ſhew, that he would have no more worſhip there performed, he ſhut up the doores of this houſe, as is ſaid, 2 *Chron.*28. 24. And whereas he is ſaid to have done theſe things and others againſt the houſe of the Lord, *v.*17. before the king of Aſſyria, touching the meaning whereof expoſitours are doubtfull. I conceive, that he did thus, when the Aſſyrian King was there, that he might give largely unto him to enjoy his favour, not regarding the Lord ſo much as him: for which cauſe and for that he was a groſſe idolater, he cared not, how he ſpoiled the Lords houſe of all the ornaments, to give to this heathen king. And thus haply it is to be underſtood, that the king of Aſhur coming to him ſtreightned him and did not helpe him, becauſe by his meanes he was greatly impoveriſhed, that all he could wrap and rend, as we ſay, being taken to give to him, whether out of the Lords houſe or his owne, as 2 Chro. 28.21. And ſo he became the leſſe able to make warre againſt other enemies, that invaded his land, as 2 *Chron.*28.17,18. the Idumeans and Philiſtims.

Having thus reſolved the doubt, how the King of Aſſyria is ſaid not to have helped, but ſtreightened Ahaz, he alſo covenanting, as we may gather by that, which hath beene already ſaid, to pay him a yearly tribute hereafter, I returne now to his idolatry with the gods of Damaſcus: of which ſee 2 *Chron.*28.23. although here his cauſing of an Altar to be made like unto that at Damaſcus only be ſpoken of, and ſetting it up in the place of that, which he cauſed therefore to be removed. It is moſt probable, as Pellican hath it, that he firſt ſacrificed to the gods of Damaſcus being there, that he might the more confirme his league with the king of Aſſyria. But whereas he profeſſeth, 2 *Chron.*28.23. that now he would ſerve the Syrians gods, becauſe they had holpen them, and he hoped, that they would helpe him likewiſe; but it is ſaid, This turned to his ruine, he had reference to the Syrians victories obteined againſt him in times paſt and not to their preſent ſtate, ſince the king of Aſſyria ſubdued Damaſcus, ſeeing now they were not helpfull to them. A man would thinke, that Ahaz ſeeing, how they failed the Syrians at this time; ſhould not have beene induced to ſacrifice to ſuch impotent gods: but idolaters fare like men bewitched, for ſo did one of his progenitours; alſo Amaziah, when he had ſubdued the Edomites, worſhipping their gods, 2 Chron. 25.14. yet becauſe he did not onely thus, but cauſed alſo ſuch an altar, as was at Damaſcus to be made at Ieruſalem, upon which all ſacrifices ſhould be offered againſt his returne thither with Evilmerodach, it ſeemeth, that the good liking of that king was of no ſmall force to move him hereunto. And it is noted that he had an high prieſt according to his minde, called Vrijah, to whom he had no ſooner ſent the patterne of the Altar, that he would have made, but it was done according to his command againſt his returne to Ieruſalem. Yea, he did ſo comply with him, that he ſuffered the king at his return to offer ſacrifice upon this new great Altar, and his meat-offering and drinke offering, as the zealous Prieſt Azariah would by no meanes ſuffer his grandfather Vzziah to doe, and when he perſiſted notwithſtanding his oppoſition, God executed his judgement of leproſie upon him. If any man ſhall marvell, that he did not the like againſt Ahaz, who much more deſerved it; I anſwer, God is not wont alwayes to proceed one way in puniſhing, but divers, wherefore he puniſhed Ahaz otherwiſe: for 2 Chron. 28. 17, 18, 19. it is ſaid, that the Edomites and the Philiſtims ſpoiled his countrey, and that his kingdome was brought low becauſe of him. And if he eſcaped in perſon, it was but for a time in this world, he being reſerved to the future judgement in another world, as moſt wicked men are, whereas Vzziah moſt probably was judged here, that he might not be condemned hereafter.

2 *Kings.*16. 10,11,&c.
Pellican.

But it may be demanded, to whom did Ahaz here offer, to God or to idols? Anſ. it is not expreſſed, but only that he offered and commanded the Prieſt hereafter to offer all ſacrifices upon this new altar, whereupon ſome think that the ſacrifices were ſtill here offered to God, becauſe the holy Scripture ſaith nothing of this abomination done in the Temple or Court thereof, as it doth in relating the idolatry of Manaſſeh, 2 Chron,34. 5, 6. yea it is expreſſely ſaid, 2 Chron. 28. 24, 25. that the doores of the Lords houſe being by him ſhut up, he ſet up altars and idols in every city of Iudah, and ſacrificed there unto them. Yet Toſtatus ſaith, he took away the altar of the Lord, that no more ſacrifice might be offered to him, but upon the new altar to the honour of the gods of Edom. And Theodoret ſaith, that this altar was ſet up to ſome one of the gods of Damaſcus, and Adrichomius, and Genebrard, that upon it ſacrifice was offered to them. And truly I can hardly be induced to think, that hee would ſet up an altar of Damaſcus to ſacrifice to any other, but to the gods of Damaſcus, eſpecially ſeeing hee ſhut up the temple of the Lord, and rifled it of all the veſſels and ornaments. It is expreſſely ſaid, 2 Chron. 29.7. that no ſacrifice was then offered to the Lord, and if not to the Lord, then it muſt needs be to idols.

V. 14.

Then Ahaz removed the Altar of the Lord that it might not ſtand between his new altar, and the houſe, to the North ſide, commanding Urijah the Prieſt to offer all ſacrifices upon the new great altar, wherein he readily obeyed him alſo. And touching the altar of the Lord, he ſaid, that it ſhould ſtand by for him to enquire, that is as Iunius hath it, if he ſhould think good at any time ſo to doe. And in the Hebrew it is alſo to enquire, but the vulgar Latin hath it, ad voluntatem meam, expounded by Pellican, to be offered upon, if at any time I ſhall pleaſe, but for the preſent it ſhall ſtand by as antiquated, and out of uſe. But Lyra will have the meaning, ſhall be at my will to make what I think good thereof, wherefore he ſaith, that he made afterwards a famous diall of it, of which mention is made, chap. 20. 11. and this is followed by Adrichomius alſo, the contrary to which yet appeareth, 2 Chron. 29. 18. where it is ſaid that the altar and the utenſils thereof, which had been by Ahaz rejected, were ſanctified, and if ſo, then that brazen altar was not broken to make a diall called Ahaz his diall, ſeeing that ſtood ſtill after that Hezekiah his ſonne had cauſed this to be ſanctified, even to the time of his great ſickneſſe.

The Allegory.

Pellican of Urijah his ſetting up of a ſtrange altar, makes this Allegory. Such Miniſters, as to pleaſe wicked Princes, bring into the Church of God ſtrange doctrine, and rites in the worſhip of God, doe act over againe, as it were, the part of this wicked temporizer Vrijah, they ſet to the North ſide the altar of the Lord, and make and place an altar to the devill in the room thereof, the word of God and his ordinances are thus debaſed and turned, as it were to the left hand, which was the North, and mens inventions drawne from the Gentiles, honoured above them. To revenge this wickednes in Ahaz, the Edomites were brought againſt him, and carried away many captives from Iudah, when they had ſmitten it. And the Philiſtines brake into the Southern parts, and took Bethſhemeth and Ajalon, &c. 2 Chron. 28 17, 18. But all this would not move him to repentance, nor yet his ſuffering by the help which he had ſent for out of Aſſyria, for even after this, he waxed worſe and worſe, v. 22. In the time of his ſtreights he encreaſed his contempt againſt the Lord, this is Ahaz. The vulgar Latin joyning theſe words with the next following hath it, thinking Ahaz by himſelf offered to the Gods of Damaſcus. But it is plainly diſtinguiſht both by a ful point & a conjunction copulative, beginning the next verſe thus, And he offered. Theſe words are added then after his deſpiſing of all corrections ſpoken of, partly to ſhew that he was the ſame wicked one ſtill, and partly to move all kings and men to look at him and his impious doings to abhorre, from the like. Not one but divers wayes he ſinned fowly. 1. By idolatry after the manner of the Iſraelitiſh kings, yea he made his ſonne to goe through the fire to Molech, which was not as Theodoret thinketh, by burning him, which he calleth a common errour, but by ſanctifying him, as the heathen counted, by making him to goe through the fire. And the manner of this he ſaith, that he had ſeen it, viz. once in the year fires being made in ſome cities, there were thoſe that went dauncing through them, both men and boyes and infants were by their mothers carried through the fiery flames. 2. By infidelity, rejecting all confidence in God, and putting his truſt rather in the King of Aſhur. 3. By ſetting up a ſtrange altar in the courts of the Lords houſe, making the altar built by Solomon to give way unto it. 4. By robbing the Lords houſe of the ornaments, and by ſhutting it up keeping men from worſhipping him. 5. By ſacrificing to the gods of Damaſcus, that ſmote him, and ſeeking to draw the people to the ſame idolatry, in that he ſet up altars unto them in many places. 6. By incorrigibility, in that being ſeverely puniſhed by Syrians, Iſraelites, Aſſyrians, Edomites, and Philiſtines, he was ſo farre from being touched with repentance, as that he did like one ſet to vexe and anger the Lord all the wayes that he could poſſibly deviſe. And it was now like Prince, like Prieſt, ſo that the ſtate was intollerably corrupted.

V.19.20. Here nothing more, but of his death and buriall in the city of David, but not in the ſepulchers of the Kings ſaith, 2 *Chron.*28. 27. as was ſaid before of Amaziah.

CHAP. XVII.

V. 1. THe 12 year of Ahaz king of Iudah, reigned Hoſheah in Samaria. The hiſtory of Hoſheah begun, chap. 15. 30. is here continued. But how is it ſaid, that he reigned the 12 year, when as he began in the fourth, which was the 20 of Iotham, as was before ſhewed, reckoning from his firſt beginning, till that time? Pellican to this anſwereth well, that by reaſon of the king of Aſhhur, although he had ſlain Pekah, he could not attain to the regall dignity, but ruled as a Lievtenant under him, till the 12 of Ahaz, that is, 8 yeares after, at what time he took upon him to reigne ſhaking off the the Aſſyrian yoak and might beſt be ſaid to begin to reigne as a king of himſelfe, and not under another. This is alſo recited by Wolphius and a ſecond expoſition of ſome, who ſay, that the firſt 8 yeares of his reign were full of tumult and trouble, but in the laſt of theſe, which was the the twelfth of Ahaz he began to reign in quiet, for which cauſe he is ſaid here to have reigned, Anno 12 of Ahaz. And a third, in which he reſteth, viz. that he ſlew Pekah Anno 4° of Ahaz, and took the kingdom upon him, Anno 12° being within 2 yeares after accepted for king by the ſtates of the land, from which time to the 6 of Hezekiah are 9 yeares, according to which it is ſaid that he reigned 9 yeares. But here are not 3 times, but two only put of the beginning of Hoſheah his reign, or rather one of his beginning ſervily, and another of his reigning, after this ſhaken off, becauſe it is not here ſaid, he began to reign, but he reigned Anno 12 of Ahaz 9 yeares, according to Iunius, [the ninth yeare] whereby I ſuppoſe he meaneth, that this was the ninth from his beginning to reign; for ſo it was, if reſpect be had to that, ch. 15. 30. where hee is ſaid to have reigned 20 of Iotham, that is, 4 of Ahaz, as hath been already ſhewed; ſeeing the 12 is the ninth from the fourth ſpoken of in that place. But if we read it he reigned or had reigned then nine yeares, it will agree better with the Hebrew text. For another beginning of his time made by Wolphius 2 yeares after, viz. Anno 14 of Ahaz; I know no ground that he hath thereof. And therefore leaving it I ſhould reſt in the firſt brought by Pellican, but only that ch. 18. 1. the beginning of Hezekiah his reign Anno 3 of Hoſheah ſeemeth to croſſe this, for if he reigned Anno 12 of Ahaz, and Ahaz reigned 16 years, from the twelfth, to which are foure yeares at the leaſt, how can it be ſaid that he began the third yeare. To this it may be ſaid, that the 12 was now at an end within a few dayes, ſo as that it was not counted, and the 4th year was ſo newly begun, that it was not reckoned neither; but it is ſaid the third, meaning the third being even now expired. Vnleſſe we ſhall ſay, that Hezekiah was made king ſome time before his fathers death., for the better ſetling him in the kingdome in thoſe tumultuous times, and for the oppoſing of the enemies that invaded it. Again, it is ſaid here v. 3. that Salmanaſar king of Aſſyria came up againſt Hoſheah, becauſe he denied to pay him tribute, which he had paid in former years; then he took Samaria his chief city, when he had beſieged it three years, in the ninth of Hoſheah. So that if it be true which goeth before, about Hoſheah his beginning to reign in liberty, the twelfth of Ahaz, he was ſuffered by the Aſſyrian king ſixe years before he came againſt him, which ſeemeth to be improbable.

Pellican.

Wolphius.

Junius.

Sol. It is probable enough, if we conſider, that there be two kings of Aſſyria ſpoken of, Evilmerodach and Salmanaſar, the father and the ſon, ſince Hoſheah attained to the crown. Wherefore Evilmerodach haply growing old, and towards his end, when Hoſheah denied to pay any more tribute, this was permitted till Salmanaſar manaſar was king, his father being dead. But it is ſaid here v. 3. that Salmanaſar came firſt and brought him under tribute, and when he denied to pay it any longer, truſting to the help of the king of Egypt, he came again, and waſted his countrey, and took him; and all this was done from the twelfth of Ahaz, whereby his reign is here reckoned, to the end of his term of nine years. And if ſo, then the beginning of his reign in liberty is not here meant, becauſe after this he paid tribute certain years. Rather before this he reigned free, for the kingdome was reckoned to him, becauſe when Pekah was ſlain, there was none elſe reigned: but becauſe he coming to it by the murther of the old king, civill warres followed hereupon, and ſometimes he ruled, but ſometimes again his enemies prevailed againſt him; ſo that all this time he ſtood very uncertain, as if this had been no reigning, it is paſſed over, and the time here ſet down, when he began to reign; after that the king of Aſſyria taking advantage of the civill diſſentions had come and ſubdued the land, and ſetled him for king, under a tribute yearly to be paid to the king of Aſſyria. And in this I reſt, as the cleareſt and moſt free from all exception. And ſo it appears, that there was a double time of this king Hoſheah, one before that he was made tributary of nine years, and the other after of nine years more, the whole time of his reign, when he was carried away captive, and his people, being eighteen years.

V. 2. Hebr. Chron. c. 22. Wolphius. He did that which was evill in the ſight of the Lord, but not like the kings before him.] The Hebrew Chronology expoundeth this, of his not hindering men of his kingdome to go to Ieruſalem to worſhip, as they were by the law of God bound to do three times in the year. For Ieroboam ſet garriſons, as ſome think, to keep them from going. But now, the golden calves, which he had ſet up for gods, being carried away by the Aſſyrians, Hoſheah was leſſe carefull to uphold that idolatry, and ſo let his ſubjects for that matter do what they would, not ſetting any to keep them from going to the temple. But this is onely an imagination, and the leſſe probable, becauſe the temple was now ſhut up by wicked Ahaz, ſo that it booted not any to repair thither, although it be moſt commonly followed. I rather think with Wolphius, that he urged none to idolatry, as they had done, although he were an idolater himſelf, but was more remiſſe, either naturally, or for the reconciling of all mens mindes the more unto him, whileſt he left every one to his own will for devotion, compelling none.

V. 3. Note. Againſt him came Salmanaſar, &c.] God had been ſo greatly provoked in that kingdome, that although Hoſheah was not ſo bad, as his predeceſſours, yet becauſe his kingdome was all over greatly tainted with idolatry, and he was a party herein amongſt the reſt, and ſought not to reform it, as he ought to have done; that he would now ſpare them no longer, but bring them into ſeruitude, and ſoon after into miſerable captivity. It is not a mans not being ſo wicked as others, that will avail with God for mercy, and ſparing from his moſt ſevere judgements; who ſo doth evill, although not in that high degree, is in danger of Gods wrath, as well as they that ſin more fouly: that we may abhor not onely from ſo much evill, as others, but any evill at all.

V.4,5,6. Toſtatus. Lyra. This coming of Salmanaſar againſt him, was after he had reigned, in ſome ſort, nine years, yea at the beginning of his next ninth. And then being made tributary, he paid it five years or thereabouts, in the ſixth he denied it, conſpiring with So king of Egypt; in the beginning of the ſeventh, Salmanaſar came, and in three years altogether vanquiſht him and his people. Becauſe he is ſaid to have conſpired with So, Toſtatus thinketh, that he likewiſe was a tributary to the king of Aſſyria, and whereas it is ſaid, Wherefore Salmanaſar ſtreitened him, and bound him in priſon. He takes it as ſpoken of him, ſeeing he could not get Hoſheah into his hands, till the third year after. But, however So might be a tributary as well as he, and ſo they might joyn together in denying more tribute, it is plainly ſpoken not of So, but of Hoſheah, that he beſieged him and bound him in priſon, it being left to be underſtood, when he had gotten him into his hands at the taking of Samaria next ſpoken of. Wherefore Lyra ſaith well, that his impriſoning is here ſpoken of by anticipation. For the long time, that he was in beſieging Samaria, it is probable, that by the help of the king of Egypt, Hoſheah had extraordinarily fortified it againſt this time. And now the kingdome of Iſrael utterly ceaſed, the time being come, of which the prophet Eſay had ſpoken, ſaying, Within 65. years Ephraim ſhall be waſted ſo, that he ſhall not be a people. Which according to the Hebrew Chronology, is to be underſtood of thoſe 65 which began, when their carrying away captive was firſt threatned by Amos, which was anno 25 of Vzziah, as is commonly held, for from thence to the end of his reign were 27 years, Iotham 16, Ahaz 16, and Hezekiah 6, for theſe together make 65, and the ninth of Hoſheah is ſaid to have been the ſixth of Hezekiah, chap. 18.10. thus many. But Iunius rather thinketh, that the reckoning ought to begin from the time of Eſaiah his propheſying, viz. anno 40 of Ahaz, from which to the carrying away of Iſrael captive, although there were but ſeventeen years, yet to the time of their ceaſing to be a people were many more, viz. 48; for Hezekiah reigned after this 23, and after his time Eſarhaddon the ſonne of Sanneherib, in whoſe time the Iſraelites ſay, that they were carried away captive, Ezra 4.2. For although this may ſeem to be ſpoken of the Iews of the kingdome of Iudah, yet they are there ſaid to be Iſraelites; and 2 King. 17. 24. when the Iſraelites were carried away, it is onely ſaid, that they were caried by the king of Babylon or Aſſyria, without naming him, and this is even by the Samaritans themſelves expounded of Eſarhaddons carrying away all the reſt, at what time he brought in new inhabitants, and this moſt probably happened anno 25 of Manaſſeh his ſonne, which together make 65. thus Iunius. But becauſe, however the Iſraelites indeed remained haply in other parts ſtill, for a time, yet they were no kingdome over any more; and it is improbable, that the Aſſyrian king, having ſubdued Iſrael, whom he is alſo ſaid to carry away captive, would deferre the utter depopulation of the countrey, till 48 years after, and the bringing in of new inhabitants, and they of Iudah are often called Iſraelites, as well as the reſt, I rather ſubſcribe to the firſt, eſpecially ſeeing v. 18. it is ſaid, that none remained but the tribe of Iudah onely.

*Eſa.*7.8. expounded. Chron. Hebr.

Iunius.

V.6. The people carried away into Aſſyria, are ſaid to have been placed in Chalac and Chabor, and in the cities of the Medes. Of thoſe places mention was made before, 1 Chron. 5. 26. when Tiglath pileſar carried away part of the people. They are held to be cities on the further ſide of Aſſyria next unto Media, ſo that they were not places farre aſunder, and within a while, as it is in 4 Ezra 13.40,41. they left thoſe parts and went further to inhabit, where never mortall men dwelt before, and as Genebrard thinketh, the north parts of the eaſt, where the Tartars now inhabit, which may be the more probable, and that they are deſcended of them, becauſe ſome places amongſt them are called by the names of Dan, Nephtali and Zebulon, and ſome Hebrew monuments ſtill remain there. Some take theſe for the names of rivers, but Ptolomee ſaith, they were cities. Whereas the binding of Hoſheah onely is ſpoken of, and putting him in priſon, he is alſo ſaid to have been carried away captive, 4 Ezra. 13. 40. of which, I think, no doubt is to be made, and he may well be comprehended under the name of Iſrael here. He carried Iſrael into Aſſyria. He being now but as one of the reſt.

Genebrard.

V.7. The judgement, which ſwept all Iſrael thus away, being ſhewed, now follow the cauſes, why God was ſo ſevere againſt them. Although he had brought them in ſingular mercy out of the land of Egypt, yet they ſerved other gods and forſook him, becoming even as the Gentiles, who dwelt round about them. And when V.13. he ſent his Prophets to admoniſh them, yet they perſiſted, thus ſhewing themſelves contemptuous of his ſtatutes. And from this they proceeded to the caſting of all his Commandements behinde their backs.

V.16. Then more particularly their horrible ſinnes are laid open, they made them golden calves and worſhipped them and the whole hoſt of heaven, and Baal, and made their children to goe thorow the fire, and gave themſelves to witchcrafts. V.17.

into the hands of robbers, as was before ſhewed in the hiſtory of Ahaz, becauſe they ſinned alſo like Iſrael, they were ſpoiled alſo in the dayes of Ioaſh and

Amaziah,

V. 20. Amaziah,&c. till they as Iſrael, were alſo removed from his face. V.21,12. Laſtly the time how long Iſrael had thus ſinned, is ſet forth, even from Ieroboam, vntill this their carrying away captive, which was 262. yeares, as will appeare to him that ſhall count it by the yeares of the kings of Iudah in this time. For Rehoboam reigned 18. Abijam 3. Aſa 41. Iehoſhaphat 25. Ioram 8. Ahaziah 1. Ioaſh 40. Athaliah 6. Amaziah 29. Azariah 52. Iotham 16. Ahaz 16. Hezekiah 6. together 26. only becauſe Ioram reigned 5. yeares, together with his father Iehoſhaphat, 2 King. 8. 16. Note. deduct them and there will remaine 256. a very long time of provocation, before the Lord brake out into this ſeverity, whereby appeareth his patience, and their continued obſtinacy, making them well worthy of ſo ſore a judgement, and although the Lord be ſlow to wrath, yet his patience being long abuſed by any nation V. 9. will at length breake out into the greater fury. Whereas, v. 9. it is ſaid, They did Wolphius. things ſecretly which were not right. Wolphius noteth, that the word rendered covertly, ſignifieth alſo to put a gloſſe or colour upon a thing: hereby then is intimated, that they juſtified their doings as acts of piety, as the Papiſts doe at this day. And whereas it is ſaid, from the Watch tower to the defenced city, they ſet up images, &c. he underſtands it from one limit of the kingdome to another, ſeeing watch towers uſed to be ſet upon the borders to eſpy the coming of the enemy.

V. 24. Then the king of Aſhur brought men from Babel and Chuthah, and Abah, Hamath and Sephenaim, &c. Babel was the metropolitan city of his kingdome of Beroſus. wonderfull vaſtneſſe, and ſtrength: for according to Beroſus it was ſixty thouſand paces in compaſſe, the walls were two hundred foot high and fifty broad, and he ſaith, that it was built by Saturne and was the firſt city, that was built in all Joſephus. the world, ſee alſo Pliny. Chuthah is by Ioſephus thought to be a countrey of Perſia, having the name from a river ſo called. Avah was an Arabian Colony according Uran. in Arabicis. to Uranius. Hamath is by Jerom called Epiphania, by Munſter Epidaphne and Theopolis. Of Sephanaim we have no certainty; but Iunius ſaith, that Sephara is a city in Meſopotamia by Euphrates. Of the ſame places ſee ſomething ſpoken again, chap. 18,34. as of places ſubdued by the king of Aſſyria, viz. of Avah called there Ivah, Hamath and Sepharuaim. So that, it ſeemeth, the people brought by him to inhabite Samaria and her cities were none of his naturll ſubjects, except thoſe of Babel and Cuthath, being onely thus tranſlated thither out of their owne countrey, that coming into ſo good a land, whereunto they had no right but by the donation of the Conquerour they might the more willingly live in ſubjection to him and V. 25. pay him tribute without rebelling. But whatſoever they were, ſo ſoone as they were come, becauſe they feared not the Lord, he ſent Lions amongſt them, which ſlew them. Whereupon the king of Aſhur hearing it ſent back a prieſt, whom he had carried away captive to teach them the ſervice of the god of that land, which he did, and ſo they ſerved him; but they ſerved their owne gods alſo, every one the gods of his nation; and thus they perſiſted to do both fathers & childrens children. If it be demanded here, why God ſent ſuch deſtruction upon theſe heathens now more then in times paſt in their owne countreys, where they feared not God any more then at this time? Anſw. becauſe they were now it that land, which Levit. 25. the Lord was pleaſed particularly to owne; for which cauſe he forbade any of it to be ſold; and in his owne land he would be knowne and ſerved; whoſoever dwelt therein, and in caſe that he were not, ſend deſtruction amongſt them therefore. But then another queſtion ariſeth, If for not fearing him he ſent Lions amongſt them to ſlay them, why did he forbeare to doe ſo ſtill, when as they worſhipped heathen gods together with him, which is ſo contrary to him, that rather then be ſo ſerved, he will not be ſerved at all, as Elijah ſaid to the people. If the 1 King. 18. Lord be God, follow him, if Baal, follow him: and how long halt ye betweene two opinions? Anſw. It ſeemeth, that he ſent not Lions amongſt them for their idolatry, in which they were bred and borne: but for that being in the land, which the Lord had peculiarly choſen, they feared not him, as if he had no power or were but a weake God, that could not keep his people from being carried away captive Chap. 18. by the Aſſyrians, as afterwards Rabſhakeh ſaid, What is God, that he ſhould be able to deliver you out of my hands? To ſhew therefore, that he was the God of all power and to make them to feare him, and ſpeake, and thinke reverently of him, he thus judged them, but forbare to doe likewiſe afterwards, when they bare a reverent regard unto him, as the prieſt taught them, leaving their idolatries to be reckoned for and judged at the laſt day. Yet I doubt not, but the prieſt ſent to inſtruct them, taught him to be the onely true God, and that their idols were no gods, but vanities, and told them of his creating heaven and earth, and all things, and of his ſtupendious judgements ſhewed upon Egypt, and the Canaanites, and upon the Iſraelites themſelves, when they turned idolaters. Yet they applyed no more of his teaching, but onely ſo much as concerned the reverencing of him. For ſacrifice they could not be taught to offer there unto him, ſeeing it was not acceptable in any other place, but onely at Ieruſalem.

This ſheweth, that if any of the people of God do abhominably, as the heathen, Note.
God will not endure it at their hands, although they worſhip the Lord alſo: for it is in them ſpirituall adultery, ſeeing they are his ſpouſe; but Ethnicks, that never were contracted unto him by covenant, are otherwiſe looked upon, as doing wickedly indeed, but forſomuch as they are not the Lords, but another mans wife, as it were, his jealouſie is not hereby ſtirred up againſt them, to make preſently therefore ſenſible demonſtration of his wrath, as againſt his Iſrael. According to which it is ſaid, the time of this ignorance God regarded not, &c. And the people now placed Act. 16. 30. in Samaria, being therefore called Samaritans, continued in this their ſuperſtition even till the time of the Macchabees, but afterwards it ſeemeth, that leaving their idolatry they worſhipped God onely, as the Iews then did, becauſe that woman of Samaria Ioh. 4. enquired ſo ſeriouſly of the place, wherein they ought to worſhip God, and called her ſelf, together with her citizens, the children of Iacob, and ſhewed a faith in the Meſſiah to come. To make all men to abhor from ſuch kinde of fearing and worſhipping God, as is joyned with idolatry, the manner of theſe peoples doings being recounted, they are greatly taxed, as not fearing the Lord, v. 34. although they had been ſaid twice, v. 32, 33. to have feared the Lord, V. 34. that is, to have trembled before him, and not to dare ſpeak contumeliouſly, but reverently of him, and haply they prayed unto him, as well as they did to their idols; yet they could not be ſaid to fear him truly, if by the fear of God we underſtand, as we muſt, ſuch fear of him, as moveth a man to have reſpect to all his commandements, and ſpecially to that which forbiddeth the worſhipping of other gods, as being moſt of all other things repugnant to his will, as is in the ſame v. 34, 35, 36, expreſſed. The gods whom they made to themſelves and worſhipped, were Suc- V. 30. coth-Benoth made by the men of Babel, they of Chuth made Nergal, Hamath, Aſi- ma, &c. Succoth-Benoth, ſignifieth covering her children, that is, an hen, as the Hebrews expound it. Nergal is a woodcock, Aſima a goat, Nibkaz and Tartal were the gods of the Havites, that is, a dog and an aſſe, though ſome by Tartar think, that Tartan is meant, who was one of thoſe, whom Sanneherib ſent againſt Ieruſalem, as Wolphius ſaith, Adramelech was an horſe, and Anamelech a mule, ſome Wolphius. think, they were the ſonnes of Sanneherib. But forſomuch as other nations in the world have worſhipped ſuch baſe creatures alſo, as the Perſians a cock, the Ptoembari a people of Africa a dog, according to Ariſtophanes; the Mendeſians a goat, and ſome an aſſes head. According to Athanaſius, it is moſt probable, that theſe heathens ſet up to themſelves the images of ſuch creatures alſo, according to their countrey manner. For of the heathen in generall, it is complained Rom. 1. that they changed the glory of God into the ſimilitude of beaſts, fowls, and creeping things.
And hereby we may ſee, how greatly we are bleſſed of God, in that we are better Note.
taught, and not left to follow ſuch ridiculous vanities, as for our ſinnes we might have been, that we may endeavour to live more to his glory, and not as the ſer-vants of dogs, goats, and aſſes, &c.

CHAP. XVIII.

V. 1. I*N the third year of Hoſheah, Hezekiah began*, &c.] If this ſhall ſeem to be repugnant to chap. 10. 1. where it is ſaid, Ahaz his father began anno 17 of Pekah, who reigned 20 years, and ſo he reigned but three years in his time, then he continued 13 more, for his whole reign was of ſixteen years, and Hoſheah got the crown immediately after Pekah, wherefore he reigned in Hoſheah his time alſo thirteen years, and ſo Hezekiah could not begin till his fourteenth year. How this may be reconciled ſee before, upon ch. 17.1. The age of Hezekiah when he began V. 2. to reign was 25, the time of his reign 29, his mothers name was Abi, the daughter V. 3. of Zechariah. His praiſe is, that he did altogether like David, he brake down the high places, where other kings had permitted ſacrificing, and brake in pieces the V. 4. brazen image which Moſes had made becauſe they burnt incenſe unto it; and it is V. 5. ſaid, that he did ſo excellently, that there was never any king of Iudah like unto him, before or after him. Touching his mother, ſome think, that ſhe was daughter to Zechariah, the ſon of Iehoiadah, ſlain in the time of Ioas king of Iudah, for reproving his wickedneſſe. But that was ſo long before, the reign of Amaziah of 29, and of Azariah 52, and of Iotham 16 coming between, together 97 years, that Jerom. there is no probability of it. Ierom therefore conjectureth, that ſhe was his grandchilde, coming of a ſonne of his own name, which is not unlikely, and if ſo, he had moſt probably a good mother, although a bad father. Others hold this Zechariah her father, to have been the laſt king of Iſrael of the race of Iehu, but then Joſephus. moſt probably he ſhould have been ſo ſet forth; and to put this out of doubt, Ioſephus
V. 4. ſaith, that he was a Zechary of Ieruſalem. Whereas it is ſaid, that Hezekiah brake downe images, and cut down the grove, for ſo it is in the Hebrew and not groves, Wolphius. as in Vulg. Lat. (although a figure called Enallage numeri is there thought by Wolphius to be uſed, grove being put for groves) it is to be underſtood, that ſome eſcaped his hands, remaining ſtill for Ioſiah to have the honour of cutting and breaking them downe, as appeareth, 2 King.23.13. where he is ſaid to have polluted the high places ſet up by Solomon to Aſhteroſh and Chemoſh and Milcom, and to have broken their images, &c. and theſe are ſaid to have beene before Ieruſalem, and therefore not ſuffered to ſtand now, becauſe in ſome obſcure corner out of ſight, but becauſe haply they were unfrequented, untill the dayes of Manaſſeh, the father of Ioſiah, who exceeded in idolatries of all ſorts, as is ſhewed, 2 King.
Toſtatus. 21. Thus alſo Toſtatus, theſe images either were not now worſhipped, or the people, being taken with the pleaſantneſſe of the place would not ſuffer them to be beaten downe, ſo that the king could not doe it without danger of ſedition, but I reſt in the former of theſe, becauſe to a godly king the people were never ſo undutifull to croſſe him in any of his godly deſignes, but rather have moſt readily joyned with him.

And if idolatry had beene there after Solomons time committed, it is to bee thought, that neither Aſa, nor Iehoſhaphat would have ſuffered them to ſtand in their times. For I cannot encline to that conjecture of one, who thinketh, that Solomon upon his repentance beat them downe; and whereas it is ſaid, which Solomon made, it is to be underſtood, the like unto which he made and upon the ſame foundations, becauſe theſe words, [which Solomon made] cannot with reaſon be expounded, the like to which others made. And that he did not demoliſh them hath been already ſhewed and brought by Eucherius as an argument of his V. 5. finall impenitency, 1 King.11.7. But touching the ſuperexcellency aſcribed unto him above all other kings of Iudah before or after him: If it be demanded how this can be truly ſaid, ſeeing Ioſiah did rather exceed both in polluting thoſe high places, which he ſuffered to remaine, in keeping a paſſeover in ſuch manner as no king ever did before him, 2 King.23.22. in rooting out Wizzards, and removing all abominations v.24. Whereupon it is ſaid, that he was ſuch a king, as that there Wolphius. was never king like unto him, v.25. To this Wolphius anſwereth by ſaying, that we muſt take it according to the meaning and not ſtand ſtrictly upon the words, it being not intended here to deprive other godly kings of their due commendations, but moſt highly to commend theſe two, as the moſt excellent of all others. Hezekiah for his beginning ſo ſoone, viz. anno 1. the firſt moneth of his reigne, 2 Chron. 29. 3. and that not being deterred by the ſtate wherein he found the kingdome, viz. altogether corrupted by idolatries, and that by his father. 2. For his moſt eminent confidence in God ſhewed herein, and in his breaking in pieces the brazen Serpent, which was in ſo high eſtimation then amongſt the people, that they worſhipped it. 3. For Gods favour conſtantly gracing him unto his end by miraculouſly delivering Ieruſalem upon his praying from the proud king of Aſhur, ſmiting his hoaſt by his Angel, and hearing him in his moſt dangerous ſickneſſe to reſtore him to health againe, and to adde fiftdene yeares more to his dayes, and for a ſigne to ſhew a miracle almoſt, as at the requeſt of Ioſhuah upon the Sunne going back, as then it ſtood ſtill. For in theſe three even Ioſiah himſelfe came ſhort of Hezekiah, in that he began not his reformation, till anno 18 of his reigne, neither did he finde his ſtate ſo corrupted, ſeeing Manaſſeh his father was converted and reformed all things moſt materiall before his end. 2. He had no image to breake downe ſo dangerous for the cauſing of tumult amongſt the people, as the brazen image, which Moſes himſelfe had ſet up, and therefore Hezekiah in doing this did much endanger himſelfe, as one that might be thought for this fact to be againſt God. 3. He was cut off by a violent death, in going out againſt Pharaoh Necho, non conſulting with the Lord firſt about it.

Yet Ioſiah excelled even Hezekiah, firſt in ridding the land of all abhominations both the high places built by Solomon, and the altar at Bethel. Secondly, in the ſingular paſſeover, which he kept. Thirdly, in his hearts melting within him for the ſinnes of the people, when he heard the law read, and bringing them into a covenant with the Lord; in which reſpects it is truly ſaid of him, that there was no king like unto him before or after, and for that he lived without all ſcandall, ſo as David himſelf did not, nor Hezekiah, who was viſited for his unthankfulneſſe after his great deliverance, and heard an harſh propheſie for his correſpondency with the king of Aſſyria, and his vain-glory in ſhewing his Legats his treaſures. And as truly it is ſaid likewiſe of Hezekiah, for the three things before ſpoken of, which were moſt notable in him. For the brazen ſerpent, ſee Numb. 21. 9. by Gods own command it was ſet up, and had been hitherto preſerved, as a monument of the cures wrought hereby. But in the days of Ahaz, by the ſuperſtitious incenſe was offered unto it, as thinking vertue to be therein. But Hezekiah brake it, and called it Nehuſhtan, that is, their braſſe, and therefore without all vertue, and unworthy of adoration, ſeeing not thereby, but by Gods power cures were through it done. And hereby we are taught, that whatſoever is an occaſion of offence ought to be aboliſhed; ſuch as is the croſſe it ſelf, although ſometime Conſtantine thereby prevailed.

Touching Gods being with Hezekiah in all his enterpriſes, and his ſmiting of the Philiſtims ſet forth here v. 7, 8. becauſe his pious acts were the firſt, that he began with, as is noted 2 Chron. 29. 3. and theſe followed as bleſſings hereupon, we muſt here leave the hiſtory of the Kings, and bring in 2 Chron. 29. 3, 4, &c. where is ſhewed, what he firſt did after that he was king. In the firſt year, the firſt month he opened the houſe of the Lord, and called the Prieſts and Levites together, willing them to ſanctifie themſelves and the Lords houſe, recounting unto them, how their fathers had carried themſelves indignly, ſhutting up the Lords houſe, and not offering to him, &c. This godly king, to give example to all others, began firſt with the worſhip of God, which is the principall thing in a kingdome, and if it be rightly intended, that which bringeth with it all other bleſſings, as a very fountain and well-ſpring thereof. Ierom ſaith, that by tradition he did this not only the firſt moneth, but the firſt day thereof. He opened the doors of the Lords houſe, which Ahaz his father had ſhut up, ch. 28. 24. and this is moſt conſonant with v. 17. He cauſed the Prieſts and Levites to aſſemble in the Eaſt ſtreet, that is, ſaith Lyra, in the Prieſts court, where ſtood the altar of burnt offerings, and was on the Eaſt ſide of the courts of the Lords houſe, which is ſaid to be 100 cubits ſquare, as the other courts alſo were. And here he exhorted them to ſanctifie themſelves, that is, by waſhing their bodies and clothes, and then to ſanctifie the temple, by cleanſing it Hieronym. de tradit. Hebr. from all the foulneſſe growing therein ſo long a time; Ierom ſaith, by carrying out the images ſet up there, and all their appurtenances. But ſeeing the doors were kept ſhut, I ſee not how images could come to be ſet up there. And to ſtir them V. 8, 9. up the more, he commemorateth the wrath of God executed againſt Iudah, in ſlaughtering many of them, and giving others to be carried away captive, both V. 10. men and women, of which ſee ch. 28. 5, 6, 7, 8. Then he telleth them, that he meant to enter into a covenant with God, which how it was performed I finde not expreſſed, but onely that ſacrifices were offered for them all, and praiſes ſung, V. 27, 28, 29. and then both king and people bowed themſelves and worſhipped, which was implicitly a covenanting, according to that ſaying Pſal. 50. 5. which hath made a covenant with me by ſacrifice, and this he propoundeth to do, that the Lord might turn from the fierceneſſe of his wrath, as being a ſpeciall means to move him ſo to do. Then the Prieſts and Levites gathered themſelves together, and it is ſhewed, of what families the Levites were, viz. of Chaath, Gerſhom, and Merari, Eliſa- V. 12, 13, 14. phan, Aſaph, Heman, and Ieduthun. Of which, the three former are well known to have been the ſonnes of Levi. Eliſaphan was the ſonne of Huzziel, the ſonne of Amram, the ſonne of Kaath, Exod. 6. 20. and Numb. 3. 30. he is called prince of the Chaathites. Of the other three mention is made in the Pſalms, as of chief Pſa. 73. 77. 78. of Aſaph, Pſal. 88. to Heman. ſingers, to whom therefore many Pſalms were committed, and by ſome of them endited. Heman was a prince of the family of Gerſhom, 1 Chron. 3. 43. Aſaph of the family of Merari, v. 39. And Ieduthun, was a skilfull Muſitian next unto them, 2 Chron. 5. 12. where theſe three are named together in Solomons time, as being of the ſame faculty. Now the order of proceeding in cleanſing and ſanctifying was this, the Prieſts cleanſed the houſe of the Lord, bringing all the filth to the door, and there the Levites took and carried all into the brook Kedron, and this work being begun the firſt day of the firſt moneth, was finiſhed in eight dayes, and V. 16, 17. in eight more the courts, with all their appurtenances were cleanſed and ſanctified alſo. From whence we may gather, that Hezekiah began his reign in the very beginning of the year, and the ſame day that he began to reign, ſpake unto the Levites to ſet upon this work; and that they without any deferring began the ſame Note. day, that they were ſpoken unto. A moſt excellent harmony and conſent in the greateſt diligence about things pertaining to religion, worthy the imitation both of prince and people in all ages. This work being finiſhed, they certifie the king thereof, and of their cleanſing of the altar for burnt offerings, and all the utenſils V. 18, 19. thereof, which Ahaz had removed and caſt aſide, ſetting up an altar like that at Damaſcus in the room of it, as was before ſhewed. Wherefore, without doubt that altar was broken down by them, and carried away with the other filth, the altar of the Lord being ſet again in the proper place.

V. 20, 21. The good king hearing what they had done, delayed no time, but riſing early in the morning, called together the princes, and cauſing ſeven bullocks, ſeven lambs, ſeven rams, and ſeven kids, to be brought to the Lords houſe, he commanded the Prieſts to offer them upon the altar, for ſinne, for the kingdome, for the ſanctuary, Lyra. and for Iudah, which they did accordingly. For the kingdome ſaith Lyra, was for the king and the princes, for Iudah was for all the people of the land, and for the ſanctuary, was for the Prieſts and Levites who miniſtred therein. But becauſe Levit. 4. one bullock is appointed for the Prieſt ſinning, and one for the whole congregation, and a kid for a prince, ſo that this may ſeem to be an exceeding of the preſcript rule of the law, he anſwereth, that Numb. 15. 24. unto the bullock, in caſe the whole congregation ſinneth, a kid is added, whereby it may be gathered, that the meaning of Levit. 4. is, that ſo much muſt be offered at the leaſt, but when the ſinne is greater, more muſt be added. And at this time, becauſe ſinne had exceeded in the dayes of wicked Ahaz, the beaſts brought and offered are many more, viz. a full number (for ſuch is the number of ſeven) of all ſorts that were fit Junius. for ſacrifice, and not of the two preſcribed in that law onely. Iunius by the ſanctu-ary underſtandeth it properly, becauſe being polluted it had need again to be ſancti-fied, as at the firſt conſecration, which was with bloud, Levit. 8.15. ſo likewiſe Pel- Pellican.

lican, and this ſeemeth to be the beſt, becauſe the altar was ſprinkled with bloud, before the ſacrifices for ſinne were offered. And by the kingdome and Iudah, may be underſtood all the whole body of that ſtate, conſiſting of King, Clergy, and Laity.

laid their hands upon them.] That is, the king, and ſome of them repreſenting the reſt, laid on their hands as was appointed, when ſacrifices were offered for ſinne, were worthy to dye, but beſought the Lord to accept of the bloud of this beaſt, whereby Chriſt his bloud was figured out, and to ſave them.

piation for all Iſrael, &c.] Such was the piety and charity of this king, as that he would have ſacrifices offered not onely for his owne kingdome of Iudah, but alſo for all Iſrael, although under another king. And that the ſacrifices now offered might be made with the greateſt grace and praiſe to God, he addeth alſo muſicke V.25. by inſtruments and voice of the Levites as was uſed in Davids time, as God commanded by his prophets, Gad and Nathan.

The ſacrifices at this time offered were 70. buls, 100. rams, 200. lambs, 600. oxen, and 3000. ſheepe, which was a great matter conſidering the poverty, to V. 32. which the kingdome was brought by Ahaz; and that theſe offerings were given by the men of Iudah onely. And theſe were ſacrifices of praiſe, as thoſe before going for ſinne. And being ſo many it is ſaid, that the prieſts being fewer could not flea them all, wherefore the Levites did helpe them: and the reaſon, why there V.34. were fewer prieſts ſanctified, was becauſe the Levites were more upright in heart to ſanctifie themſelves, then the prieſts, for this is the true reading according to the Hebrew, and not as the Vulg. Lat. hath it, more belonged to the ſanctifying of the V.35.
Prieſts then of the Levites. Another reaſon why theſe fewer prieſts could not doe all, was becauſe the fat alſo of every beaſt was to be taken off to be burnt upon the altar, which required the helpe of many hands.

ing the Paſſeover, and although the firſt moneth of the yeare was paſt wherein it ought to have beene kept, yet he would not deferre it, till another yeare, but rather keepe it the ſecond moneth, beleeving that God would accept of his piety herein, although the circumſtance of time were not preciſely obſerved, ſeeing this could not at this time be for the caſe, wherein the altar and temple were in the firſt moneth, the ſanctifying of which muſt take up many dayes. And yet he did not this without warrant, but as was allowed, Numb. 9. 10, 11. Here are alſo two other reaſons of this, viz. becauſe there were not a ſufficient number of the prieſts ſanctified to miniſter at this ſolemnity, and becauſe the people of Iſrael could not ſuddenly be gathered together unto it from all parts, as all the males ought to be. Deu. 16.
And he endevoured to have them all at Ieruſalem, not onely of his owne kingdom of Iudah, but alſo of Iſrael under Hoſhea, and therefore he ſent letters to them of ing to Ieruſalem to worſhip, as they had done, ſo that if they would, they might freely come to this Paſſeover. And ſuch was his charity, that he deſired to doe, what he could for the reconciling of Gods favour unto them as well as to his owne kingdome, that no more of them might be caryed away captive into Aſſyria, as ſome had beene before, 2 King, 15.29. which is expreſſed, v. 6, 7, 8. And in this ex-

V.11. Manaſſeh and Zabulon humbled themſelves and went to this Paſſeover. The time was now almoſt come of giving Iſrael over into the hands of their enemies for their ſinnes, and of their utter extirpation: therefore to prepare unto this, they are firſt given over, as their wicked hearts lead them, to the contempt of all goodneſſe, and then the judgement ſoone followed. They that humbled themſelves Pellican. and came, were, as Pellican conceiveth, of thoſe ſeven thouſand that never bowed their knees to Baal, that is, of their poſterity; for their time was expired long before this. And it is not to be doubted, but that theſe eſcaped the better, when the Aſſyrians came, coming again haply into Iudah, where ſo godly a king was, to be out of that danger, when they had firſt returned to their poſſeſſions and in their V.12. owne countrey deſtroyed idols, as *chap.*31.1. Touching Iudah it is ſaid, that God gave them one heart to doe all of them, as they were commanded touching the paſſeover and in ſhewing their zeale againſt idolatry by breaking downe the idols altars, &c. as the Prieſts and Levites had cleanſed the temple, ſo they cleanſed V. 14. both the city and countrey from all idolatrous pollution. Then the Paſſeover was kept and the Prieſts and Levites, who were not yet ſanctified, were aſhamed and
V. 15. ſanctified themſelves, that they might be fit to doe their duty at this great ſolemnity, and ſo they offered the burnt offerings. That, which made them aſhamed was to ſee the readineſſe and zeale of the people, to whom they ought to have been leaders. Yet it is ſaid, that a multitude of the people were uncleane, for V.17. which cauſe the Levites were enforced to kil the paſchal lambs for them, that they might thus be ſanctified. They were for neceſſities ſake now allowed to eat the Paſſeover, although they were uncleane, as is ſhewed, v. 18. that is, by touching ſome unclean thing, or by a dead body, the order of ſanctifying, after which, had now been neglected a long time, and haply, for want of teaching, unknown unto them: but to kill the Paſſeover in this caſe none were permitted, but the Levites, Lyra. who were ſanctified, did it for them. Becauſe, as Lyra ſaith, It is a greater work and unto it more holineſſe is required, to kill the Paſſeover, then to eat of it, as in a prieſt that conſecrateth the Sacrament, then in ſuch, as receive it. All ſuch indeed as eate the Paſſeover, muſt be ſanctified from their uncleanneſſe, *Levit.*7.20. there being one common law againſt eating any of the holy things by ſuch as were uncleane, and the penalty ſet therefore, death and cutting off from his people:
V. 18. for which it is ſaid, *v.*18. that there were many uncleane of Manaſſeh, Iſſachar, &c. which did eat, not according to the law, for whom Hezekiah prayed, that God would forgive this and accept of them notwithſtanding, who ate the Paſſeover with a perfect heart, and it is ſaid, that God heard him and healed the people, Iunius. that is, according to Iunius, ſanctified them by the vertue of his Spirit: the Vulg.
Lat. (placatus eſt erga eos) was pacified towards them, reſpecting more the ſenſe, then the words. But the word (healed) is uſed becauſe uncleanneſſe is as a ſickneſſe in thoſe that participate of holy things, endangering their lives by reaſon of the penalty before ſpoken of; ſo that God being pacified and his wrath ſtayed by the prayer of Hezekiah, this malady might well be ſaid metaphorically to have been healed.

Lib.de qu.hebr. But how was it known, that God was pacified? The Rabins, ſaith Lyra, an-Lyra. ſwer, that commonly when any preſumed to eate of the holy things of the Lord in his uncleanneſſe, they were ſtricken with death, and therefore becauſe theſe were not thus ſmitten, it appears, that Gods wrath againſt this ſinne was pacified.
But this he approveth not, becauſe, if there had been ſuch danger it had been a tempting of God to adventure in this caſe to eate the paſſeover, and delivering his owne opinion, he ſaith, They were diſpenſed withall for neceſſities ſake and for the good and hearty devotion, with which they came. For touching the firſt of theſe, David in caſe of neceſſity did eat the ſhewbread which otherwiſe it was unlawfull for him to doe; and for the ſecond, it is faith and uprightneſſe of heart, that maketh the doing of holy duties acceptable to God, although they be not at ſometimes performed ſtrictly according to the rule of his law.

Which reaſons indeed are good for the Lords accepting of them, and pardoning their errour, but they do nothing ſatisfie the queſtion propounded, viz. how it was known, that God was pacified, and therefore I reſt in that, which Lyra excepteth againſt, becauſe however at other times, when there was no neceſſity, Gods wrath might break out againſt ſuch, as ate in their uncleanneſſe, yet in this caſe of neceſſity, the king might well hope of his fatherly indulgence, to ſpare a poor ignorant people, that now began again to return with all their hearts unto him, although in outward things, which never really defiled, they did not altogether according to the law, ſeeing they were as a people newly converted, and therefore ſuch as it could not be expected at their hands, that they ſhould exactly keep this ſolemnity at the firſt. For both David before ſpoken of, did that which was dangerous in eating the ſhew-bread in his neceſſitie, and all the Hebrews in omitting circumciſion all the time of their being in the wilderneſſe, yet ſinne was not imputed unto them.

To make it then the more probable, that ſuch as at other times ate of the holy 1 Cor.11.30. things in their uncleanneſſe were puniſhed with death, S^{t}. Paul ſaith of the unworthy receivers amongſt the Corinthians. For this cauſe there are many amongſt you ſick and weak, and many a ſleep, that is, dead. For God hath at all times been moſt ſevere out of the caſe of neceſſitie, againſt thoſe, that have tranſgreſſed the ex- 2 Sam.6. ternall rites of the law, as we may ſee in Vzzah, and in the men of Bethſhemeſh. 1 Sam.6. Note. Whence we may learn, that the heart indeed is the principall thing that God looketh after: but however the heart be affected, there is danger to any, that preſumeth to eat of the holy things of the Lord in the uncleanneſſe of ſin, which he will never diſpenſe withall, although he did ſometime with legall uncleanneſſe. Yet ſeeing there is place for repentance for this and for all other ſins, except that againſt the holy Ghoſt, upon prayer, pardon and reconciliation may be attained, as it was at this time by Hezekiah. Touching the caſe of neceſſity here often ſpoken of, it is to be known, that this was now the Iſraelites caſe. They came farre to the paſſeover, had kept none a long time, and had not now the liberty of another moneth, as the unclean, Num. 9. therefore muſt either eat it as they were, or elſe miſſe the taking of it haply for ever, to their greater danger.

V. 21. Then they kept the paſſeover with joy ſeven dayes, the Levites playing with muſick, and theſe being ended, they agreed at the kings motion to keep it ſeven dayes more: for he offered a thouſand bullocks, and ſeven thouſand ſmaller cattle, V. 23. and the Princes a thouſand bullocks, and ten thouſand ſmaller cattle, which could V. 24. not all be ſpent in the former ſeven dayes. And theſe, it is to be underſtood, were euchariſticall ſacrifices, wherewith all the people were feaſted, whom Hezekiah deſired to hold longer, that by hearing more of the law, they might be the more confirmed therein: for which cauſe, neither he nor the Princes ſpared for any charges, whereby they might draw them to ſtay with delight. This indeed, ſaith Pellican, Pellican. was more, then the law required, but not againſt it, ſeeing as free-will offerings, beſides thoſe enjoyned were greatly accepted of, ſo to take time for the offering of them to the praiſe of God, could not but be highly accepted of alſo. And it muſt be taken, as coming from their ſuperabundant joy for that feaſt, now kept V. 26. again by all Iſrael together, ſo as it had not been ſince the dayes of Solomon, becauſe they of the ten tribes were never hitherto permitted to come to Ieruſalem, from the beginning of Ieroboams reign, and for a long time in the reign of Ahaz, the kingdome of Iudah had been debarred by his ſhutting up of the doors of the V. 27. houſe of the Lord. How it was accepted of before God, is ſhewed v. 27. where it is ſaid, that the Prieſts and Levites bleſſed the people, and their prayer came into the holy habitation of heaven.

Then all the children of Iſrael, that were in Ieruſalem, went out and brake down the images, &c.] That is, when they had heard the law againſt them, they returned not home, till they had firſt done theſe zealous acts. And becauſe Hezekiah doubtleſſe exhorted them ſo to do, and by his authority ſet them to this work within his dominions, it is ſaid of him 2 King. 18. 4. that he did all this, and brake in pieces alſo the brazen ſerpent. For the hiſtory of the Kings omitting altogether the narration of his paſſeover, cometh immediately to this of his demoliſhing idolatry, but here it is ſet forth in the due order, together with thoſe that were employed about it. He began then ſo ſoon as he came to the crown, to purge the houſe of the Lord, and this being done, proceeded, as the time required, to the celebration of the paſſeover, from which the people by him called unto it, being ſet on fire with a holy zeal, went out and purged all other parts from the filth of idolatry, even as farre as Ephraim and Manaſſeh in the kingdome of Iſrael, of which tribes ſome of them were. For although ch. 30. 10, 11. no mention is made but of ſome of Aſher, Manaſſeh and Zabulon, that came at Hezekiahs invitement to the paſſeover, others of Ephraim, Manaſſeh and Zabulon, being ſet forth as mocking, yet v. 18. Ephraim and Iſſachar are mentioned, as being there alſo. If it ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that the ſubjects of another king ſhould preſume to do theſe things without his licence, within his kingdome, It is to be conſidered, that Hoſheah then king, was but an uſurper, that by murthering of his maſter attained the kingdome, and therefore the ſubjects thereof did as if they had no lawfull king, being alſo haply permitted by him to do in theſe things, what they would, ſo that he might be ſuffered to ſit in the throne; for which cauſe, as was ſaid before 2 King. 17. 2. he is reported not to be ſo bad as other kings of Iſrael before him for idolatry, being rather Athioſt then idolater. Here is then no warrant for ſubjects and private perſons, to run of their own heads, to the pulling down of images ſet up by publike authority, Rom. 13. eſpecially living under a lawfull king, to whom every ſoul muſt be ſubject, and to his councell, but when the king that reigneth is indifferent, ſuch zeal is hereby warrantable, as ſtirreth up the people to the pulling of them down. Otherwiſe it is to be expected, till God ſhall move his or their hearts to appoint it to be done, as he did the heart of Iehu before, and of Ioſiah after.

V. 2. Having thus purged both the Lords houſe and the whole land, as remained to be done in the next place, Hezekiah appointeth the Prieſts and Levites thenceforth to attend upon offering ſacrifices, and ſinging praiſes unto God. And becauſe this could not be done without many helps, who muſt all have due maintenance, he 1 Chron. 24. both renewed all the diviſions of them in their courſes, as they had been ſet by David, and alſo ſtirred up the people to bring in the firſt fruits and tithes, whereupon they were to live, which they did aboundantly. And the king for his part, to free the people from that great charge, undertook at his own coſts, to maintain the continuall V. 3. morning and evening ſacrifices, thoſe of the Sabbath and new Moons, and of other feaſts which the Lord had appointed, of the laws touching which, ſee Levit.

land, but theſe were by law appointed unto them, that they might attend upon the office, by the ſame law commanded them, and not be diſtracted by ſeeking out for Lyra. maintenance; that is, ſaith Lyra, upon reading, ſtudying, and teaching, and officiating Note. in the temple. And good reaſon there is, that Gods miniſters in all times ſhould have maintenance ſufficient without trouble, ſeeing that even amongſt the heathen, they who attended upon divine worſhip, were alwayes provided for by the care of others, as in Egypt, when that great famine was, which compelled all others to ſell their lands to buy food, the Prieſts yet even then had no want, whereby V. 5. they might be compelled to do likewiſe. The firſt fruits and tithes, that hereupon were brought in, were of corn, wine, oyl, honey, and all things which the Pellican. earth bringeth forth, theſe came in now aboundantly. But as Pellican noteth, no tithe of money, yet tithes might be converted into money, and thus Gods miniſters were ſupplied with all things neceſſary for their ſuſtenance, as they ought to Note. be. And this people ſhall riſe up in judgement againſt, and condemn many of theſe times, who will not pay tithe of all things, but keep back ſundry of the ſmaller, ſaying, that the miniſter hath enough of the other. Such are worſe, not onely then *Luk.*18.

tithes, or tithes of holy things. That is, moſt probably, of calves, whitemeat, wool and lamb, the tithes of holy things, ſaith Lyra, according to the Hebrews, were the Lyra. tithe of the tithes, which the Levites paid unto the Prieſts, Numb. 18. 26. but becauſe they were not paid by the people, but by the Levites, after they had received them of the people, they cannot, I take it, be meant here, but rather ſuch tithes, as over and above the tithes ordinarily appointed to be paid, any did voluntarily vow to give; becauſe there it is ſaid, v. 8. theſe oblations of the holy things of the children of Iſrael ſhall be the Prieſts. And here it is ſaid, the tithes of the holy things. Whereunto the vulgar Latin, for more expreſſion, addeth, which they vowed to the Lord their God. Becauſe amongſt the oblations of this kinde aſſigned to the prieſts, things vowed are alſo mentioned, v. 14.

In the third moneth they began the heapes, and in the ſeventh they finiſhed them.] V. 7.
So that immediately after the paſſeover in the ſecond moneth, they began to gather and bring in their tithes from all parts, that is, about our mid May, at what time their harveſt began, the time of the year concurring with the exhortation made to move them unto it. And becauſe after their corn harveſt their other fruits coming of the vine, olive and pomegtanate followed, which were not all ended, till the ſeventh moneth, at the beginning thereof, viz. the midſt of our September, they were thus long in making their heaps.

Then Hezekiah came and ſaw the heapes, &c.] For which he and his princes V. 8. bleſſed God, and underſtanding by Azarias the high prieſt, that theſe heaps remained over and above their neceſſary ſuſtenance, that attended upon the ſervice of the V. 11, 12.
Lords houſe, he commanded to provide barns to lay them into, and this being done, all that proviſion was laid up in them, and committed to the cuſtody of certain Levites, who ſhould diſtribute them duly amongſt their brethren, both in their ſervice about the temple, and to them in the countrey, and all their families, that none might have any want, either men, women or children belonging unto them.
Whether theſe barnes or places of receipt were now new built or no, it is not ſaid, but it is moſt probable, that they onely prepared, and repaired and made clean, having been made before by Solomon, when the temple was built, ſeeing rooms were then made all along by the ſides of the temple, 1 King. 6. 5.

But what is meant v. 6. by ſaying, beſides the males of their kinne from three V. 16. yeares old and ſo forth] Anſw. Theſe are ſpoken of incluſively, as being ſome of thoſe, that were with the holy things to be maintained, becauſe they that enter into the houſe of the Lord are immediately ſpoken of in particular, and their age is V. 17. ſet from twenty yeares old and upward. Leſt therefore it ſhould be thought, that others, who under that age, ſhould not have allowance made for them, this parentheſis comes in, beſides thoſe of three yeares, &c. that is, who ſhall be provided for as well from that age to twenty, as from twenty and upward. If it be demanded further, what ſhould the females then live upon, and male children under three?
Anſw. This diſtinction is made, becauſe by the law of God ſome of the holy things might be eaten onely by the males, Levit. 6. 11. and Numb. 18. 10, 11. it is ſhewed what the males might eat of, and what both ſonnes and daughters.
None but the males then ſhould have portions out of thoſe allowed unto them, and with the other both males and females, and ſuch as were under three yeres of both ſexes ſhould be ſuſteined. Thus Hugo; but Lyra ſaying, according to the Hugo Card.
Vulg. Lat. that theſe are to be excepted, makes it doubtfull, wherewith ſuch Lyra. little ones ſhould be ſuſteined. But becauſe v. 18. it is expreſly ſaid, their little ones, their wives, ſonnes and daughters, it is plaine, that the meaning here is according to that, which hath been ſaid. If it be further demanded, why the age of three yeares of the males is ſpoken of, and then from twenty and upward, ſeeing that in numberiug the Levites it is begun at a moneth, and twenty five years is the ſooneſt, that they began to ſerve, and thirty. It is anſwered, indeed the numbering of them from a moneth old is appointed, Numb. 3.15. but that was becauſe, as is there ſaid, v. 13. they were taken for all the firſt born of the children of Iſrael; and a numbering from thirty to fifty, chap. 4.3.23.33. of ſuch as were able to carry burthens, when they travelled with the tabernacle: and chap. 8.24. from twenty five to fifty, of ſuch as were able to keepe the watch of the tabernacle and to attend there, that they might in five yeares more be better prepared to doe the full office of Prieſts and Levites at thirty. But there is likewiſe a numbering of them from twenty yeares old and upward, 2 Chron. 13.23. a reaſon whereof being yielded, v. 24,25. viz. becauſe God had given the children of Iſrael reſt, ſo that the Levites ſhould not need to carry the tabernacle any more from place to place, it is concluded, v. 26. that according to the laſt appointment of David they were numbered from twenty, although v. 2. of the ſame Chapter it had beene ſaid, that the Levites were even in Davids time at the firſt numbered from thirty and upward. Hezekiah therefore in ordering the diſtributions here to be made to them of twenty years old and upward followeth his father David, who was aſſiſted by the Prophets, Gad and Nathan, as is expreſſed, 2 Chron. 29.25. and not the way of accounting firſt appointed in Numbers. Yet it is to be held with Iunius, that they were not admitted to exerciſe their full miniſtery, till thirty years of age, at what time both Chriſt and Iohn Baptiſt firſt began their preaching. But at twenty they began happly to be inſtructed in things pertaining to their office, at twenty five to execute it in part, and at thirty fully. Touching thoſe of three yeares old and upward to twenty, they are moſt probably diſtinguiſhed from ſuch as were under, becauſe although ordinarily they entered not into the tabernacle till twenty, yet ſometimes extraordinarily they did, when they were very young and tender, as Samuel, whom his mother brought thither ſo ſoone as ſhe had weaned him, 1 Sam. 1. and it is not improbable, but that ſome others gave their children to God likewiſe upon extraordinary occaſion, as Hannah did.

2 King. 18.7.

Wolphius.

Origen. lib. 9. in Rom.

The higher powers to be obeyed how far forth.

Having thus taken in the memorable acts of Hezekiah omitted, 2 King. 18. but ſupplied, 2 Chron. 29.30,31. as hath been ſhewed: I will now returne againe to 2 King. 18.7. The Lord was with him, and whitherſoever he went he was proſpered, as more briefly it is concluded, 2 Chron. 31.21. And he rebelled againſt the King of Aſſyria and ſerved him not: that is, he refuſed to pay tribute unto him, as his father Ahaz had bound himſelfe to doe, chap. 16.7. neither would he and his kingdome be ſubject to him any more. But how may this be juſtified, ſeeing he could have his kingdome no otherwiſe then his father left it unto him, therefore if he held it as tributary to this king, his ſonne ought to have held it ſo likewiſe, ſeeing the fathers covenant made in this caſe bindeth the ſonne alſo, and that which he did being called rebelling againſt him intimateth it to have beene unlawfull. To this Wolphius anſwereth, that Ahaz his father did either covenant to be his ſervant, that he might be under his protection for ever, or elſe for certaine yeares, or as long as he lived. If for ever, he ſaith, it bound both him and his, and this fact of Hezechiah cannot be juſtified: but if for certaine yeares onely, or for his time alone, Hezechiah was now free. but he rather thinketh, that by his rebelling is meant nothing elſe, but his ordering of matters concerning Religion contrary to his liking, which he might lawfully do, ſeeing the higher power is to be obeyed in God and for God and not againſt him, as Origen ſaith, upon theſe words, He that reſiſteth the power, reſiſteth the Ordinance of God; this is not to be underſtood of ſuch higher powers as perſecute the faith, for in ſuch caſe that ſaying muſt rather be taken up, We ought rather to obey God then men. And Tertullian upon theſe words, [Give to Cæſar the things of Cæſar, and to God the things of God,] ſaith, this is well oppoſed, otherwiſe what ſhall be left for God, if all be Cæſars? Paulinus Treverenſis, Lucifer Sardinia, and Dionyſius Mediolanenſ. being required to write againſt Athanaſius an Orthodox Biſhop by Conſtantius an Arrian Emperour, anſwered, that the kingdome was not his, but Gods, of whom he received it, and that he is to be feared, leſt he ſuddenly take away that, which he even now gave him. Trajan alſo is reported to have ſaid to a certain Præfectus Prætorii, when he gave him a ſword and belt, If I ſhall rule juſtly, uſe it for me, if unjuſtly, againſt me. And another Emperour ſaid, He did not deſire, that his wills ſhould have any power againſt right; but if they ſeeme to fight againſt right, to have them abrogated, would be moſt pleaſing unto him. Thus he bringing many arguments to the ſame purpoſe, and concluding, that it is Catachreſticos called a rebelling. But becauſe theſe words are added, [and ſerved him not] it is plaine, that not any act of reformation in the worſhip of God is meant, but his caſting off the Aſſyrian yoake, which I doubt not, but he might juſtly doe, what contract ſoever his father had made with that King. For although he being an idolatour fled to his patronage and truſted in an arme of fleſh, covenanting therefore to pay him tribute, it was not neceſſary, that Hezechiah, who truſted not in man, but in God ſhould alſo doe likewiſe. Wherefore by the word [rebelled] here is not meant any unlawfull act, but onely, as the next words explaine, he would not ſerve him, as his father had done; and ſo did God defend him againſt that mighty king, that he could never by all his power be brought to the like ſervile condition, but lived a free and glorious king, bringing his enemies under his feet.

V. 8.

Theodoret.
Vatabulus.

Sallianus.

Therefore, that his proſperity might the more appear, it is ſaid, v. 8. He ſmote the Philiſtims even to Azzah and the coaſts thereof, from the tower of the keepers to the fenced city.] The like phraſe unto which ſee before ch. 17. 9. Theſe towers ſome expound by cottages, where vine-dreſſers and ſhepheards ſhelter themſelves. Theodoret by towers, on which fires were made, Vatablus by ſtrong towers, the meaning is, that he ſmote them in all places, whether ſolitary or frequented by people howſoever they were fortified. Azzah, otherwiſe called Gaza, was one of the five Lordſhips of the Philiſtims. Into this warre againſt the Philiſtims, Hezekiah entred to revenge the wrongs by the Philiſtims done in the time of his father unto his kingdome, 2 Chron. 28. 18. And becauſe the Aſſyrim king came not till anno 14 of his reign, and this appears to have been done before anno 4. at what time Iſrael was carried away captive into Aſhur, ſome think, that this his expedition againſt the Philiſtims, was before his revolt from the obedience of the Aſſyrian kings, and that his rebelling againſt them was after the Iſraelitiſh captivity, ſeeing it is moſt probable, that if he had rebelled ſooner, the Aſſyrian king would not have returned, when he had ſubdued Iſrael, without fighting againſt him. Wherefore they hold, that he being lifted up with the victory againſt the Philiſtims, began to refuſe the paying of tribute to Aſſyria, hoping that he ſhould be able now to withſtand any power through Gods help, that ſhould come againſt him. But before this victory they think, that for ſome time he paid it. But to me it ſeemeth by theſe arguments not ſo probable, as therefore to yield a neglect of order in the ſacred hiſtorian, who placeth his rebelling againſt the king of Aſhur firſt, and then his ſmiting of the Philiſtims. Becauſe if upon this reaſon it be held, that his rebelling was not till after his victory over the Philiſtims, animating him thus to do, for the like reaſon it muſt be held, that there is a diſorder alſo in relating this victory before the carrying of Iſrael a way captive, ſeeing if it were before, then he was before lifted up thereby to rebell, which according to this reaſon could not be, ſith it was ſo long before the Aſſyrian king came to chaſtiſe him for it. And if he had at any time paid him tribute, it would not have been ſaid, that he ſerved him not without ſome addition touching the time, when, for otherwiſe it is as much as if it had been ſaid, he never ſerved him. Againe, if he at any time ſerved him, there was a time after he was king, that he had not ſuch confidence in God, whereupon he neglected man, the contrary to which ſeemeth to be moſt true, in that he was very godly from the firſt moneth of the firſt year, as appeareth before at large. But why then did the king of Aſhur forbear ſo long to come againſt him, and to take his opportunity to be revenged? Anſw. It was Gods ſingular providence over him, whileſt he was buſied in ſetling things touching religion, that he ſhould not be diſturbed, and when the Aſſyrian hoſte came againſt Iſrael, his men being made courageous by their victory over the Philiſtims, it might haply not be thought a fit time, without firſt returning and encreaſing his forces, for the Aſſyrian king to ſet upon him. Being returned and carrying away the people of Iſrael, and putting others in their places, thus ſtrengthening himſelf in thoſe parts, he thought haply to come again with a greater puiſſance, but he was prevented by death: for we read no more of Salmanaſars coming to warre, but of Sennacherib, which implyeth, that he died. And who knoweth, what troubles his ſucceſſour might have at home, before he could enjoy the kingdome quietly, or whether he were of that warlike diſpoſition at the firſt to prepare for this warre? Thus then time might paſſe away, and nothing be done till anno 14 of Hezekiah, although the provocation were made anno 1°. Touching the Philiſtims now ſubdued, they were a warlike people, and therefore the greater was Hezekiahs glory to ſmite and bring them under, as Plutarch doth hence praiſe the Romans above Alexander, becauſe he ſubdued Aſiaticks, that were weaker and more effeminate, but theſe the Germans, Spaniards, Brittans. &c. moſt valiant nations.

V. 9. In the fourth year of Hezekiah, which was the ſeventh year of Hoſheah, came Salmanaſar, &c.] How this is to be reconciled to chap. 17. 1. where the beginning of Hoſheah his reign is in the twelfth of Ahaz, and therefore it was his eight or ninth year, and not his ſeventh, when it was the fourth of Hezekiah, ſeeing Ahaz reigned ſixteen, how the time of Hoſheah two wayes counted, maketh a ſeeming difference, in comparing the time of his predeceſſour and his together, ſee before upon chap. 17. 1. Here the ſame thing is againe declared, which was ſaid before, chap. 17. 6. Pellican. The reaſon whereof, as Pellican thinketh may be, that the great favour of God, whereby he now protected godly Hezekiah and his kingdome Note. when danger was ſo neare might be manifeſted, and ſo in what a ſafe condition a godly king and ſtate are, when the wicked goe to ruine, as Hoſhea now did together with his people.

V. 13. In the fourteenth of Hezechiah came Sennacherib king of Aſſyria againſt all the defenced cities of Iudah and took them, &c.] After the proſperity of Hezechiah ſet forth, now followeth his adverſity by the invaſion of the Aſſyrians. He had revolted from their obedience, in which his father lived, and therefore they come now to be revenged upon him and prevaile very much. V. 14. Then he ſent to Sennacherib at Lachiſh, one of the ſtrong cities of Iudah, ſaying, I have ſinned, but go from me, and whatſoever thou ſhalt lay upon me I will beare; and three hundred talents of ſilver, and thirty talents of gold being impoſed upon him, he payd it out of the treaſures of the Lords houſe, and with the ornaments thereof pulling off the plates of gold upon the doores, which he had formerly faſtened there. Lyra. Lyra thinketh, that the ſinnes of his father Ahaz and of the people in his time were the cauſe of his adverſity, and that when Hezechiah confeſſed to the king of Aſhur, that he had ſinned, he meant that ſinning of others againſt the Lord, which yet he taketh to himſelfe, as being now king. Pellican. Pellican, that the hearts of the people were to idolatry even in the time of this godly king, which ſoone appeared in that immediately after his death in the time of Manaſſeh they fell away moſt fouly againe; and for this cauſe God now brought the Aſſyrians againſt them, ſparing the king. And by his ſinning, which he accknowledgeth, he underſtandeth that againſt the Aſſyrian king in refuſing to ſerve him. Wolphius. And Wolphius will have it a ſinne indeed in Hezechiah to refuſe to ſerve the king of Aſhur, becauſe that he was by his father bound unto it, of which enough already, and becauſe he made a league with Tirhakah the king of Egypt and Ethiopia, truſting to which he withdrew his obedience from the Aſſyrian, and that contrary to the warning given him, and the invectives made by the Prophet Eſay againſt it. Thus he; but looking into Eſay I finde nothing ſpoken againſt Hezechiah for truſting to the Egyptians and Ethiopians helpe, but againſt the Philiſtines: one of thoſe chiefe cities the king of Aſſyria fought againſt, viz. Aſhdod, but they comforting themſelves in expectation of helpe from this king, are by the prophets threatened, aud by the ſigne of his going naked ſhewed that the Egyptians and Ethiopians being ſubdued by the Aſſyrians ſhould be ſo carryed away out of their owne countrey to their ſhame. And concluding, v. 6. he ſaith, Then ſhall the inhabitants of that countrey ſay, Behold, thus is it with our hope, to which we fled for helpe, &c. that is, not as ſome would have it, whom Wolphius followeth, the inhabitant of the countrey of Iudea, but of

*Hieronym. in Eſa.*20.

Paleſtine, as Iunius rightly expoundeth it, and the whole courſe of the hiſtory directeth ſeeing here is nothing ſaid of Iudea, but of Paleſtine onely, whereas this may ſeeme to belong to another kings time, and not to Sennacheribs, ſeeing he is called Sargon, king of Aſſyria, v 1. It is to be underſtood, as Ierome hath it and others after him, that the ſame king had both theſe names Sennacherib and Sargon, as is alſo intimated in that Tharian ſaid to be a captain of Sennacheribs, 2 King.18. 17. is ſaid to be a captaine of Sargon, Eſa.20. But let us proceed to Eſa.22. there Iudah is threatened with a diſmall time, and upbraided by keeping in the waters and ſtrengthening the wall, v.9,10, 11. and not looking to the Lord by faſting and prayer to ſeeke unto him: of which practices for fortification againſt the coming of the enemy, ſee 2 Chron.32.3,4,5,&c. But what is all this to prove a confedecy with the king of Egypt and Ethiopia? verily nothing; or to the taxing of Hezechiah, as if the Lord were offended with him for revolting from the king of Aſſyria? For he is not once named, but Shebnah who is threatened and the people of the city, who when they were thus ſtrengthened, were ſecure.

2 Chron.22.

V. 1.

And whereas Eſa.30. a threatening is denounced for their truſting in Egypt, it is not to be underſtood of the time of Hezechiah as Iunius well obſerveth, but of Zedekiah, who was long after, although this were propheſied, as alſo the ſtreight beſieging of the city of Ieruſalem, ch.29.1,2,3. in the dayes of Hezechiah, but happened not, till afterwards, as in ſome paſſages here following appeareth. Wherefore Hezechiah brought not this judgement upon his kingdome by any ſin, which he had committed, as Wolphius would have it: but rather according to others, it came for the hollow heartedneſſe and wickedneſſe of the people having ſo godly a king and ſo holy a prophet as Iſaiah: for that they did moſt of them conforme to the Ordinances of God onely externally, their hearts being bent a cleane contrary way. Hezechiah then ſent to Sennacherib, ſaying, [I have ſinned] onely by way of humbling himſelfe before ſo mighty a King, who taxed him of ſinne and rebellion againſt him, if haply by this meanes he might ſtop his further proceedings in deſtroying his countrey, and ſpecially Ieruſalem. And this he did not out of any diſtruſt in God, ſeing, he was before for his truſting in him commended above all others, 2 King.18.5. but becauſe the people were wicked, and had committed in his father Ahaz his time ſo great abominations, he feared, as he might juſtly do, ſome great judgement to be now in coming againſt them. Moreover, how he comforted himſelfe and others in God, and what a confidence he had in him, ſee 2 Chron.32.7,8. where his exhortation to the citizens of Ieruſalem is ſet forth: Be ye valiant and feare not, neither be diſmayed with the feare of the king of Aſhur, and the multitude with him, for he is more that is with us, then with him, &c. which ſpeech is ſaid to have beene cordiall to the people, v.6. And it is ſaid, v.1. that after the godly orders before ſpoken of firmely ſettled by Hezekiah, came Sennacherib, intimating, that his coming was onely or chiefly to exerciſe his faith and to make it the more glorious, when as by ſo great a power coming againſt him he being tryed quailed not, but encouraged others, and finally ſo miraculouſly prevailed againſt him, by his fervent prayers bringing downe deſtruction upon his army and him alſo.

Joſh.15.39.

Joſh.15.

But whereas, 2 King.18.13. it is ſaid, that he came, againſt all the defenced cities of Iudah and took them, here it is ſaid onely that he invaded Iudah and pitched his tents againſt the defenced cities thereof, thinking to ſubdue them to himſelfe. The meaning of that 2 King. 18. 16. that he preſumed ſoon that he ſhould take them, neither did the Iews themſelves make any other account, by reaſon of his unreſiſtable forces, wherefore the writer of the Chronicles, to make it more plain ſaith, that he thought, or as it is in the Hebrew, he ſaid, meaning in his heart, that he would, &c. For 2 Chron. 32. 9. it is plainly ſaid, that he was beſieging Lachiſh, when he ſent meſſengers to Hezekiah, and therefore all the cities of Iudah were not taken, neither when it is ſaid, that he came againſt them all, is it to be underſtood, that he did ſo any otherwiſe, but in purpoſe and reſolution, becauſe he could not ſo do, they being very many, but he muſt neceſſarily begin with ſome firſt, and moſt probably, he having taken ſome of leſſe ſtrength, proceeded to beſiege Lachiſh, a city that might not be ſo eaſily ſubdued. And if he had taken any, then thoſe words 2 King. 18. 13. muſt be underſtood, he took ſome of them, when it is ſaid, he took them; but others which he had not wonne, he laid ſiege unto, as he came at any of them.

Joſephus.

Ioſephus relating this hiſtory ſaith, that Sanneherib bringing with him the whole ſtrength of Aſia, divided his army into two parts, one of which he ſent with his captain Tartan, againſt Azotus or Aſhdod of the Philiſtims, of which ſee Eſa. 20. and with the other he came againſt Iudah, ſo likewiſe Chron. Hebr. c. 13. In the ſame hour that he came againſt Iudah he ſent Tartan againſt Azotus. Thinking, becauſe he had forces ſufficient, with one part of them to keep the Philiſtims, who were at this time ſubject to Hezekiah from coming to help him, and withall to ſtop the paſſage of the Egyptians and Ethiopians, whom he moſt feared, whileſt he was buſied in the Iewiſh warres. Whether this were ſo or not, certain it is, that about this time the Philiſtims were overcome by him, and not long after the Egyptians under Tirhakah, according to Eſa 20. Hezekiah his ſending to pacifie the Aſſyrian king, which was the firſt thing done on his part after his coming into this countrey, being ſufficiently ſet forth 2 King. 18. is in the Chronicles omitted. And what he did after that, he ſought by ſo great a price to buy his peace, but was by the perfidious king notwithſtanding come againſt, is onely ſet down, as being omitted in the Kings. But how it happened that when he ſubmitted himſelf for the ſafeguard of his countrey, as a provident king, to pay ſuch a maſſe of ſilver and gold, he had the Aſſyrian forces yet bent againſt him, is left untouched in both.

Joſephus.

Ioſephus ſaith, and we may eaſily conjecture the ſame, that Sanneherib promiſed by oath, that if Hezekiah did pay unto him ſo much ſilver and gold, he would depart with all his power, and not invade his land any further, but he ſware this deceitfully, intending firſt to draw from him what treaſure he could, and then to go againſt him and ſubdue his whole kingdome. This being perceived by Hezekiah, he conſulted with his people about uſing the beſt means that he could, to keep off ſo great an army from lying near to Ieruſalem, and for this end, with the help of his people, he dammed up all the fountains of water thereabouts, and ſtopped the courſe of that, which ran from the city through the midſt of the countrey, that is, into other parts;

2 Chron. 32. 2, 3, 4.

Lyra.

and this Lyra conjectureth, that he did by digging a great head or pond to receive that water, and when that was full and ran over, making it a paſſage under the ground, that the Aſſyrians might have no benefit by it, and for want of water be forced eftſoons to depart from thence, ſee 2 Chron. 32. 30.

Junius.

And then having alſo repaired the wall, which had been broken by Ioas king of Iſrael in the dayes of Amaziah, 2 King. 14. 13, 14. and built an outer wall for more ſtrength, he called the people together and made that oration unto them ſo cordiall and comfortable, v. 6, 7. And if the wall remained broken from the dayes of Amaziah till this time, it lay in ruine above 98. years, that is, 52 in the reign of Vzziah, 16 under Iotham, 16 Ahaz, and 14 to this year of Hezekiah, which is a marvell, conſidering that Vzziah is ſaid to have had a proſperous time, and to have built towers in Ieruſalem, 2 Chron. 26. 9. yet indeed nothing is ſpoken of his repairing the broken wall, ſo that it might probably remain in the ſame ſtate, in which Amaziah his father left it; Vzziah haply intending after his towers building to do it, but being prevented by the judgement of leproſie, which befell him, left it, and ſo it continued, till this time, yet not in that length broken, but being almoſt all rebuilt before, now in the time of this danger it was with ſpeed finiſhed, and another ſuch wall added, as they were able in that ſhortneſſe of time to make. Thus Hezekiah did now, and thus he expreſſed his ſure truſt and confidence in God, which ſheweth, that he ſent not to compound before, out of any baſe fear, but that he might uſe the moſt effectuall ordinary means, if haply ſo, this tyrant would have been moved to depart, to ſave the ſhedding of much bloud of his people. If he ſhall ſeem to have committed ſacriledge (which he ought not to have done) in that he took away the treaſures and ornaments of the temple; I anſwer, that the preſent neceſſity was a diſpenſation unto him, neither is it ſacrilege in any king, but warantable by this example to do the like in the like caſe, having a minde to give again as much to the houſe of God, when he ſhall be able, as he taketh away, for neceſſity hath no law, and ſo precious are mens lives in Gods ſight, that to ſave them he is not unwilling, that his rights ſhould be taken, ſeeing the faithfull are his living temples, in which he dwelleth by his Spirit.

V. 9.
2 King. 18.17.

After this preparation made for defence and an oration full of faith unto the people to ſtirre them up to beleeve, Sennacherib being ſtill at the ſiege of Lachiſh ſent meſſengers to Hezekiah, 2 King. 18.17. He ſent Tarthan, Rabſaris and Rabſhakeh with a great army. But how could this be, ſeeing he with all his domination laid ſiege to Lachiſh? the Vulg. Lat. [he with all his army] It is to be underſtood of that part, the leading whereof he tooke upon himſelfe: as may be gathered from that, which hath been already ſaid about this dividing of his forces into two parts, whereof he committing one to Tarthan according to Eſa. 20. And he ſent theſe men with this great company to terrifie the Iewes, that they might deliver the city of Ieruſalem unto him, and not yet to lay ſiege unto it; neither indeed ever did he, according to the Propheſie of Eſay, 2 King. 19.32. but loſt his army, and was himſelf deſtroyed for attempting it in ſo inſolent a manner. Touching the reaſon why Sennacherib ſent againſt Hezekiah after the compoſition before ſpoken of made with him; Pellican himſelfe thinketh, that Hezekiah made account, that when he paid ſo great a ſumme of ſilver and gold, the Aſſyrian would not have expected alſo a yearly tribute from him, but he requiring this, Hezekiah by the perſwaſion of Gods Prophets refuſed & ſo rebelled the ſecond time againſt him, whereupon he ſent, as here followeth; but for as much as no ſuch thing is ſaid in the text, this is uncertaine, and it is rather to be held, as was before ſaid, that when he had received the money, he would not depart, but moſt injuriouſly would have the city delivered unto him alſo, and this being denyed, he ſent thus to threaten and expoſtulate with the people. Amongſt the perſons of note ſent, Rabſhakeh in particular is the mouth, v. 19. and it ſeemeth, v. 26. that he ſpake in the Hebrew tongue. The Rabbins, as Ierome hath it, upon this, ſay, that he was the ſon of the Prophet Eſay, who fell from the true religion and ranne away to the Aſſyrians, and therefore was now employed by them; but the ground hereof is ſo weake, that it is not worth the confuting, viz. becauſe Eſay had another ſonne called Iaſub, ſignifying Left: but it followeth not from hence, that he had his name for this reaſon. And they adde, that by the menaces of Rabſhakeh, Shebnah, one of them, who was ſent by Hezekiah to ſpeake to the Aſſyrian Embaſſadours, was ſo terrified, that he betrayed part of the city Ieruſalem into their hands, and for this the Prophet Eſay ſpeaketh ſo bitterly againſt him, Eſa. 22.15,16, &c. and threateneth his putting out and placing Eliakim in his roome by a decree not to be altered.

Pellican.

Hieron. de tradit. hebr.

But although he were thus threatened, yet it no where appeareth, that this was the ground or cauſe, but rather his relying upon outward meanes, and not truſting in God; and for his betraying of any part of the city, there is nothing to intimate it, but rather the contrary; both becauſe he went with Hilkiah after this to the Prophet Eſay, and it was by him promiſed that he ſhould not enter this city or doe any hoſtile act againſt it, 2 King. 19.32. Iunius upon Eſay 22.15. ſaith, that Shebnah, who was now over the houſe, held that Office in the dayes of wicked Ahaz, father to Hezekiah, being, as his old maſter, wicked in heart, and ſecretly a favourer of wicked idolaters, and an hinderer of reformation, yet he could not at the firſt be outed by reaſon of his greatneſſe, onely ſince the time of Eſay his propheſying againſt him, he was put from that Office and made the Kings Scribe, that ſo he might have leſſe power and Eliakim placed in his roome. For which both here and Eſa. 36.3. Eliakim is ſaid to be over the houſe, and Shebnah the Scribe, or principall Secretary to the King, haply his age being pretended, which made him unfit to hold that place any longer; and this being an honourable place, and becauſe it was of little paines, fit for a man now grown old, Eſay 36.2. Becauſe Rabſhakeh was the onely ſpeaker, he onely is mentioned, as ſent by Sennacherib.

Junius.

V. 19.

Now for the ſpeech of Rabſhakeh, ſome parts of it onely are ſet forth, 2 Chron. 32.9,10, &c. becauſe it is conteined at large in this place, v. 19, 20, 21. and Eſa. 36. we have the ſame ſet forth verbatim, from whence moſt probably both this and the whole 19. chapter, and 20. to v. 19. was taken and inſerted here, which maketh this hiſtory of Hezekiah king of Iudah ſo compleat as that the writer of the Chronicles had nothing left him to adde hereunto, as his manner hath hitherto beene touching all other kings of Iudah, but onely before this conflict with Sennacherib as hath been already ſhewed, and after his recovery from his dangerous ſickneſſe, from v. 25. of 2 Chron. 32. to v. 31. where ſome remarkable paſſages more are ſet forth then in Kings.

The place, where Rabſhakeh ſtood, was at the conduit of the upper fiſhpoole, as the way lay to the fullers field, a place neare Ieruſalem, where Fullers uſed to Pellican. waſh and dry their clothes, being a plaine place neare to the wals of the city. Here Sennacheribs meſſengers call to the king, but he not thinking it ſafe to come out unto them in perſon, who were ſo falſe hearted, (for the perſon of the King is not to be hazarded) nor yet to ſtand with his honour to deale any otherwiſe with the king of Aſſyria, then he dealt with him, viz. by meſſengers, ſent his ſervants to ſpeak with the ſervants of that king, Eliakim governour of the houſe, Shebnah the Scribe, and Ioas Recorder. Concerning which offices enough hath been ſaid before upon 2 Sam. 20. 24, 25, 26.

V. 19. For the ſpeech of Rabſhakeh, v. 19. Say to Hezekiah, thus ſaith the great king, the King of Aſſyria, What is that truſt in which thou truſteſt, &c,] Which was ſpoken out of intollerable pride in reſpect of the king of Aſhurs unreſiſtable ſtrength, as thinking it vaine for Hezekiah to truſt either in God or man to be ſaved V. 21. out of his hands. For ſo he goeth on, to beat him from all confidence, in the king of Egypt, calling him a broken ſtaffe of reed; not that Hezekiah ſought help from Pellican. Egypt, as Pellican noteth, but becauſe he was his next neighbour; and it is the manner of kings in time of danger to ſeek to ſome neighbour king for aid: wherefore Rabſhakeh preſuming alſo, that he did ſo, as Hoſheah the laſt king of Iſrael had done before, propounds this as true, when it was falſe, and Hezekiah was not ſo prophane as to doe thus, ſeeing if he had done it, ſome record in the Sacred Hiſtory Wolphius. would have beene made thereof. Yet Wolphius holdeth, that he did, but without ground, as I have made it appeare before by examining the propheſie of Eſay: the allegory of a broken ſtaffe of reed was very apt both for the ſituation of Egypt in a low reedy ground, and becauſe a reed leaned upon giveth a man a fall, and hurteth his hand by piercing it. 2. He proceedeth to ſhew, that if he truſted in God, this was vaine, ſeeing he had broken down his high places and altars in other V. 22. places, reſtreining all his worſhip to one place at Ieruſalem onely. And this he ſpake after the manner of an heathen. (which ſheweth, that he was no Iew) for they thought that it tended greatly to the honour and glory of their gods to ſet up altars and temples to them in many places, and that to breake downe any formerly ſet up was a diſhonour which could not, but greatly incenſe them. But he was herein deceived, for when one ſtately temple was by Solomon built to the honour of the true God, to ſhew, that he was one onely and his religion one, he forbade Levit. 17. 3. 4. Deut. 16. 5. ſacrificing in any other place. 3. He propounds to his conſideration, how much he V. 23, 24. was overmatched, ſeeing he had not men enough to manage two thouſand warre horſes, and he had ſo many to ſpare, if he would, for him, and yet too great a power V. 26. for him to encounter, although he had Egypt on his ſide. 4. Which might move him moſt, he ſaith, that God bade him come againſt that countrey and deſtroy it.
Wolphius. This, ſaith Wolphius, he ſpake from their owne principles, viz. that nothing comes to paſſe without Gods providence, and according to Eſa. 10. 5. where Aſhur is called the rod of Gods anger againſt Ieruſalem: but that it ſhould not remaine long upon it. And accordingly the king thereof at this time diſtreſſed it, and probably took ſome other parts belonging to the king Hezekiah, that reigned in Ieruſalem, but that he ſhould deſtroy the countrey can not from thence be truly gathered.

V. 26. Eliakim hearing his oration, together with his fellowes, beſought him to ſpeak unto them in the Syriack tongue, and not in the Iewes tongue in their hearing, who Lyra. were upō the wal, leſt they ſhould be terrified by his words. Lyra ſaith, not only the Rabbins, but alſo our doctours commonly gather, that Rabſhakeh was a Iew; because he ſpake Hebrew; but this is no argument, ſeeing it ſeemeth, he could have

ſpoken Syriack alſo; and Lyra himſelf noteth, that men near the king learned more languages commonly, that they might be the fitter to entertain forraign embaſſadours. But why would they have him to ſpeak in the Syriack tongue? and not rather in the Aſſyrian or Chaldee? ſeeing he came from the king of Aſſyria. Sol. The Syrians, Chaldeans, and Aſſyrians, uſed all one and the ſame tongue, as Wolphius noteth, and the Iews language not differing much from it, but as one dialect in the Greek tongue from another, came afterwards in their captivity eaſily to be turned into it, their own being forgotten. Wolphius. But whereas they ſought from hence to move this Rabſhakeh to ſpeak unto them in this tongue, that it might not be underſtood of the people, which he ſaid, he condemneth as moſt fooliſh, abſurd, and pernicious, becauſe it could not but be conceived, as it fell out indeed, that he would by this motion be more provoked then ſtayed, from ſpeaking whatſoever he could deviſe, to ſtir up the people to revolt from the obedience of Hezekiah, and their ſaying ſo, ſhewed a fear in them of the peoples fidelity towards their king, and was enough to ſtir them up to a jealouſie againſt him, that he would have them kept hood-winked, that they might not know their danger, till it came upon them, which could not but greatly exaſperate them. Yet that ſuch an aſperſion might not be caſt upon Eliakim, or Ioas, who were good men, he conceiveth that this was the deviſe of wicked Shebnah, purpoſely to provoke Rabſhakeh to rail the more, and to lay open that, whereby the people might be moved to yield up the city, and yet he thought, that by making this motion he ſhould be conceived to be very godly, and a great lover of his countrey, when he ſecretly meditated the betraying of it into the Aſſyrians hands. And if otherwiſe it came from Eliakim, he imputeth it to his fear, which made him ſpeak unadviſedly; thus he. Pellican. Lyra. But others blame them not for thus ſaying, becauſe either that the people might by this means be provoked to ſhoot at him from the wall, or would be overmuch terrified, was to be feared. I hold with thoſe that lay no blame upon theſe meſſengers of Hezekiah, for making this motion, becauſe they thought haply, that he ſpake in the Iews language, as ſuppoſing that they underſtood none other, and it irked them, that all the people ſhould hear their good king thus traduced, making no doubt, but that his errand being to the king, he would hereupon be moved to alter his language, as having in commiſſion not to ſpeak to any other, but to commiſſioners ſent from the king, however it fell out to the contrary.

V.27. Rabſhakeh utterly refuſing to hearken to this motion, takes occaſion hereupon to traduce it, as if he that made it, cared not to what miſeries the poor people were expoſed, ſaying, hath my lord ſent me to ſpeak to thy lord and to thee theſe words, and not to the people, that they might eat their own dung? &c. Hereby intimating a long ſiege, which they muſt neceſſarily endure, and at the laſt be forced to yield, and therefore that they ſhould provide beſt for their own good, to do it now at the firſt.

V.28. Then he ſpake with a loud voice to the people, Let not Hezekiah deceive you, for he ſhall not be able to deliver you, &c.] That is, to make you abide quietly in the city, and to hold it againſt Sanneberib. For neither is his power ſufficient to ſecure you in thus doing, neither can his God in whom he would have you to truſt, defend you from him. Becauſe other gods, as experience had already ſhewed, could not ſave their people; viz. the gods of Hamath and Arphad, Sephervaim, Hevah, and Ivah, nor the gods of Samaria. Of Hamath and Sephervaim and Henah, ſee before ch. 17. 24. Arphad, ſaith Iunius, was a countrey in the upper part of Aſſyria. Iunius. Ivah, called Ingilines in Epiphanius, in Meſopotamia. Of Samaria, it hath been ſhewed, how that was taken by the Aſſyrians, ch. 17. and 18. 10. He therefore moveth them in time to provide for their own good, by coming forth with a preſent to Sanneberib, as Iunius rendreth it, by doing that which might be profitable for them, ſaith the vulgar Latin, but in the Hebrew it is, make a covenant with him, that is, by voluntary ſubmitting and making oath unto him to be his ſubjects. V.31. V.32. Then he promiſeth on Sanneberibs behalf, if they would do ſo, that they ſhould remain in ſafety in their own land, living as they had done in times paſt, every one in his poſſeſſion, till that he ſhould remove them to one like their own moſt fruitfull, that is, at his return out of Egypt, Gloſſ. Ordin. For ſo he had already dealt with the Iſraelites their brethren, and with the Syrians, who were removed into other countries, in policy to keep them the better under. And thus he concludeth, that they might live, but otherwiſe dye, becauſe neither Hezekiah nor his God could ſave them. But herein he blaſphemed the living God, as alſo his Lord Sanneherib doth ch. 19. 12. in comparing dumb idols, the work of mens hands with him, for ſuch were the gods of the gentiles, and therefore his judgement was not long delayed. V. 36. To this railing and blaſphemous oration, no man made any anſwer, for ſo the king had commanded, leſt Rabſhakeh ſhould be provoked to blaſpheme the more, according to Lyra. Lyra. They had a moſt wiſe and godly king, who would have the anſwering of this reſerved to himſelf, and therefore they did better to obey him in ſilence, then to be moved by Rabſhakeh to anſwer, ſo Pellican. Pellican. Wolphius. But not onely for this cauſe, ſaith Wolphius, and that reaſon rendred by Lyra, was this ſilence enjoyned, but alſo leſt liberty of anſwering being left unto the people, ſomething might raſhly have been uttered, whereby the enemy might have had advantage given him, to gather the diſpoſition of the people, or the ſtate of the city; And laſtly, to ſhew his contempt of the Aſſyrian King, and how much he ſlighted him for the vile ſpeeches of his meſſenger, as a dog or ſwine, before whom pearls and holy things are not to be caſt. Note. And to teach us to anſwer ſuch in their calumnies with ſilence, whom we have no hope to amend by ſpeaking; And the ſtrict obedience of the people to their king in this caſe is worthy the imitation of all ſubjects, as being the ſafeſt way in times of greateſt danger, the king being wiſe and godly, and carefull to preſerve the kingdome. V. 37. Then they that were ſent, returned with their garments rent unto the king, relating all unto him. For thus in ſorrow the Iews commonly uſed to do for blaſphemy, or ſome great miſery, as hath been ſometimes noted before, and in the high Prieſt, ſuppoſing that Chriſt had blaſphemed.

CHAP. XIX.

V. 1. HEzekiah hearing this, rent his clothes, and putting on ſackcloth went to the houſe of the Lord, &c.] 2 Chron. 32. 18. it is ſaid, that the ſervants of Sanneherib ſpake more againſt God and the king, wherefore he preſently humbled himſelf in prayer, and whileſt he was thus doing, ſent to the prophet Eſay. He conſidered, ſaith Gloſſ. ordin. Gloſſ. ordin. that the ſinnes of the land might be the cauſe of this miſery, and therefore he mourned. And although it be not expreſſed, what he now prayed, Lyra. Lyra conjectureth, that it was for pardon, and help, and mercy towards the people, and juſtice towards blaſphemers, and becauſe he thought there was more merit in the prayers of Eſay then in his own, he ſent to him to pray alſo; he ſhould have ſaid, becauſe he thought, that his prayers could more prevail, ſeeing he was a prophet of the Lord, and ſo moſt gracious with him, as ſometime Elijah and Samuel, and Moſes, &c. had been. For what can the poor merit at the hands of the rich by begging? Sallianus. And therefore another of the ſame religion ſaith better, he ſent to Eſay, as to one, that had moſt inward familiarity with the Lord, and he ſent the ſame meſſengers that came unto him with their clothes rent, together with certain prieſts clad alſo in ſackcloth. V. 3. Whereas coming to Eſay they complain of their common calamity, and ſay, the children are come to the birth, and there is no power to bring forth; that is, the ſtate is now like unto a woman in travell full of pangs, which are ſo much the greater, becauſe ſhe cannot bring forth: for even ſo was Hezekiah and his people in Ieruſalem; they conceived great indignation and horrour at the blaſphemies of the Aſſyrian king, being deſirous to revenge this wrong done to their God, but his forces were ſo great, and theirs ſo ſmall, that they were no way able to do it, which made their ſorrowes to continue, and them to flee to the divine Majeſty, who only is able to judg him according to his demerits, thus, but more briefly Lyra and ſome others. Lyra. Wolphius. But Wolphius more fully. We are full of ſorrow, as a woman in travell, that cannot be delivered, both for the great power which is come againſt us, and becauſe our God is ſo vilified, as unable to help, and his ſervant Hezekiah, as a deceiver and oppugner of his worſhip, to promote which his chief care hath been, inſomuch, as if a woman at the point of bringing forth be not preſently holpen, there is danger of periſhing both to her and her children, ſo if God make not haſte to help his people in theſe extremities, there will be preſent danger of ruining all, both the city and religion. By the children come to the birth, he meaneth the people in diſtreſſe, unto whom he being as a mother, laboured to bring them forth of it, by doing what in him lay by great guifts ſent to Sanneherib, but he was not able, for ſtill the danger continued. Pellican likeneth the conſcience of their own ſinnes, thought to be the cauſe of Rabſhakeh his blaſphemies to the pangs of a woman in travell, that cannot be delivered, becauſe they are as bitter to a godly ſoul. I reſt in the firſt, Hezekiah and his people were as much pained at theſe blaſphemies, as a woman that wanteth ſtrength, when the childe is even now come to the birth; becauſe they went to their hearts, making their ſpirits ready to fail, and power they had not to overcome them, wherefore he did flee to God for help, being otherwiſe ready by and by, together with his people to periſh, and deſired Eſay to pray for the remnant of the people, that is, them being but a remnant, in compariſon of the great number that were of them, before they were waſted in the time of Ahaz, ſo Lyra; or a remnant he calleth them, with reference to their brethren of Iſrael, who were carried away captive before.

But I prefer that of Wolphius, becauſe he was not ſo much afraid of the Ethiopians, that we read of, nor at the hearing of that meſſage, nor cauſed hereby to return home, but ſtill continued as full of courage, and inſulted as much over the God of Iſrael, and Hezekiah his ſervant, as appeareth by his letters unto him, as he did before. But ſo ſoon as, his army being deſtroyed, the noiſe thereof came to his ears, he preſently fled away. Neither doth the word rendred Meſſage in the vulgar Latin, ſignifie any thing elſe, but an hearing, he ſhall hear an hearing, or ſound, Iunius hath it, a rumour. It is therefore to be conceived, that the prophet overpaſſing the impediment, which he met withall by reaſon of the Ethiopian king, comforteth Hezekiah and his people by this, wherein the greateſt comfort lay, viz. the enforcing of Sanneherib to flee to his own countrey, never to come againſt Ieruſalem, or any other city of Iudah again, which yet was not immediately fulfilled, as we may gather from v. 9. but a year after, when he had ended his warre againſt the Ethiopian, and returned, thinking to take Ieruſalem. hold Ieruſalem againſt his Maſter, returned unto him at Libnah, for he heard that he was gone from Lachiſh, being, as is generally thought by expoſitours, taken, becauſe it is improbable, that he would otherwiſe have gone from the ſiege thereof to another. Rabſhakeh coming to him at Libnah relateth unto him the ſtoutneſſe of the Iewes at Ieruſalem: Whereupon he wrote as followeth, v. 9. Becauſe he being enforced to go againſt Tirachah king of Ethiopia, and Egypt, as is commonly held, could not goe immediately againſt Ieruſalem as he deſired. But this coming of the Ethiopian king againſt Sennacherib is not thought to have been againſt his countrey in this his abſence, but in the place, where he then was, whereas indeed it ſeemeth rather to have beene againſt his countrey, both becauſe it is here ſaid, he returned, although Iunius for this word hath nothing elſe but againe, he wrote letters, &c. but in Hebrew it is, he returned, and wrote. And ſo Ioſephus ſaith, he heard, that the king of Ethiopia led an army through the deſert againſt the Aſſyrians, whereupon he returned: ſo likewiſe Genebrard and Severus Sulpitius, but as Ioſephus ſaith, he left Rabſhakeh with two others to continue the warres againſt the Iewes in the meane ſeaſon, ſo that they could not in his abſence intend their husbandry, but lived upon that, which grew of it ſelfe, according to the forementioned Propheſie. And the long time, that he was in this expedition againſt Tirhakah, viz. an whole yeare at the leaſt makes it the more probable, that he tooke a long journey to repreſſe the Ethiopians, even to Aſſyria, which was ſeven hundred miles, and not that the Ethiopians came neare Iudea to fight againſt his army there, for then he ſhould doubtleſſe have ſooner ended that warre. Of what great power the Ethiopian King was, ſo that he had need with all his might to oppoſe him, ſee in the example of Zerah king of Ethiopia, 2 Chron. 14.9. who came againſt Aſa with 100000. men.

For his writing to Hezekiah, it is ſaid, that he ſent meſſengers to him, that ſhould ſay, Let not thy God deceive thee, in whom thou truſteſt, ſaying, Ieruſalem ſhall not be delivered into the hands of the king of Aſſyria, &c. and yet v. 14. When Hezekiah had received the letters, &c. So that it ſeemeth he both wrote and committed the ſame to be delivered by word of mouth to theſe his meſſengers alſo. To this effect Lyra ſaith, He threatned him both by word and writing to ſtrike the greater terrour into him. See alſo 2 Chron. 32.17,18.

Wolphius.

And in this ſpeech and letter is nothing, but the ſame, which Rabſhakeh had ſaid before, nor all that, yet coming to reckon up the countreys, which the Kings of Aſſyria had ſubdued, v. 12. he is more full, then Rabſhakeh had been, ſaying, Have the gods of the nations, which my anceſtors deſtroyed, delivered them? For whereas Rabſhakeh addeth next to theſe words, Where be the gods of Hamath and Arphad, &c. He before his coming to Hamath inſerteth others thus, Gozan, Charan, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden, which are in Thelaſſar. Junius thinketh Gozan to be the ſame, that is called Nehar Gozan, chap. 17.6. Charan, that city in Meſopotamia, Gen. 11.31. Rezeph alſo, according to Ptolomee, he placeth in Meſopotamia. The children of Eden in Thelaſſar, about the midſt of Euphrates, being a garriſon appointed to that place by the king of Babylon, where they pitcht their tents, as the word Thelaſſar ſignifieth. Wolphius ſaith, that Ptolomy in his Geographicks ſometime placeth Rezeph in Syria, as may be ſeen in his deſcription of Syria, and ſomtime in Meſopotamia, & that ſome hold it to be the ſame with the city Petra in Arabia; but moſt probably it lay in Syria, becauſe that countrey was now certainly ſubdued by the king of Aſſyria. By the children of Eden he underſtandeth a people of Eden Eaſtward now inhabiting the city Talathah ſtanding according to Ptolomy betweene Apamia and the Perſian boſome. It being of no great conſequence to know theſe things more certainly, and haply the certaine knowledge hereof not to be atteined, we may be content to know onely thus much, that for their chaſtiſement for ſinne God gave many kingdomes into his hands, whom he to have them more certainly at his obey, removed from their native countreys to others, as the children of Eden in particular, of whom alſo mention is made, as of fellows to Tyre Ezek. 27. But he not knowing by whoſe gift he obteined theſe countreys tooke occaſion from hence proudly to magnifie his owne power and to extenuate the Lords, and if he made any promiſe, as having power againſt him, he blaſphemouſly called it a deceiving and not to be truſted to, threatening Hezekiah, that he ſhould not be delivered by all that he could doe, and therefore the beſt way for him were to yield the city quietly into his hands.

Hezekiah having heard this meſſage, and received letters to this effect ſpreadeth V. 14.

mentioneth his ſitting there, ſaith Pellican, as intimating his readineſſe, according Pellican. to his promiſe to Moſes, to meet ſuch as ſeek him in his houſe. And to ſhew the confidence, that he had in his power over all things in heaven and earth, he calleth him Lord of all kingdomes, and maker of heaven and earth. He had before a promiſe againſt Sanneherib, ſo as that he might have contemned his threats: but becauſe he iterated the ſame meſſage againe, he ſought the ſecond time unto the Lord, that he might be further confirmed, and by hearing anſwer from the Lord againe comforted againſt the ſorrow, which he could not but conceive at theſe iterated blaſphemies, teaching us in his example ſtill to ſeeke by prayer even that, Note.
which God hath promiſed.

When Hezekiah had made an end of praying, the Lord ſuffered him not to ſtay V. 20. for an anſwer, but prevented his ſending againe to Eſay by cauſing the Prophet to ſend to him, ſaying, Thus ſaith the Lord, I have heard thy prayer againſt Sanneherib.

he ſaith, the virgin daughter of Sion, becauſe there were ſome alwayes there, that Cedars thereof. That is, deſtroyed the temple made of Cedars of Libanus, which he is brought in ſpeaking, not becauſe he had already done it, but did as certainly promiſe himſelfe in his owne heart, that he ſhould doe, as if by this time it had beene done. He alſo by Cedars underſtandeth the Nobles of the land, and by the forreſt of Carmel the common ſort: and whereas he ſaith, I have drunke the waters of others and dryed them up by the ſteps of my feete: It is meant, that he had gotten all the ciſterns and wells with water made at other mens coſt, and had ſo many men and beaſts in his army, that all the waters of Iudea would not ſuffice them to drinke by a vainglorious hyperbole. But we may better with Wolphius Wolphius. underſtand Libanus properly, the height whereof was ſuch, as that it was impregnable.

Yet this tyrant bragged of coming over this huge mountaine, and cutting downe the Cedars thereof, which were preſerved for ſpeciall uſes by the kings of Iudah for the building of houſes of greateſt note, as the houſe of the Lord, and the kings, but he in ſpight of Hezekiah would cut them down; and adding to this the forreſt of Carmel alſo, another high mountaine towards the ſea, it is meant, that he would bring under his power all places of greateſt note both farre and wide. Laſtly, V. 24. in ſaying, I have digged and drunke others waters,] He meaneth, that the work, which Hezekiah and his people had done in ſtopping the waters about Ieruſalem before ſpoken of, that Sanneherib coming with his hoſt might finde none, ſhould little availe them; becauſe he with his great multitudes were ſoone able to digge new wells of water ſufficient for them to drinke, and to make their waters within the city ſoone to faile. Of which words, although we read nothing before, yet probably they were ſpoken by his ſervants at his firſt ſending, ſeeing it is ſaid, that they ſpake much more, then was expreſſed, 2 Chron. 32. 16.

V. 25. But what doth the Lord now anſwer to this? v. 25. Haſt thou not heard long ago, that I have done it, and of ancient times, that I have formed it? and now that I bring it to paſſe, that thou ſhouldſt be to the troubling of defenced places, &c.] That Lyra. is, ſaith Lyra, at the beginning of the world, that I made it and all things contained therein: for this the very heathen Philoſophers taught, when they ſaid, there was one cauſe of all other things, viz. the God of gods, and now for the ſinnes of divers nations, I appoint thy anceſtours and thee as my ſcourge to bring to ruine many ſtrong cities, not by any might or power of your own, but by me given unto you, and to be taken away again when I pleaſe. For which cauſe the Lord calleth Aſſur his rod and ſtaffe, Eſa. 10. 5. 6. to ſcourge and beat many nations withall, but becauſe he did it, as by his own might proudly being puft up hereby, a wo is denounced against him. Wolphius. Wolphius analyſing this ſpeech of the Lord, makes it to anſwer to Sanneheribs letters in the three parts thereof. Firſt, whereas he bragged of his many conqueſts, this is anſwered v. 25, 26. Secondly, whereas he magnifieth himſelf, this is anſwered, v. 27. Thirdly, whereas he threatned what he would do further, this is anſwered v. 28. 32, 33. To the firſt, he did nothing by his own, but the power of God; to the ſecond, he was well known to the Lord, and how weak and unable to ſubſiſt any longer then he pleaſed; to the third, he ſhould do nothing againſt Ieruſalem, but be carried back into his own countrey and be ſlain there. Chald. paraph. Touching theſe words, haſt thou not heard of old that I made it, &c. he ſaith, that ſome underſtand them as ſpoken of Pharaoh, and what he did many ages before, but this cannot be, becauſe it is added, and now I bring it to paſſe. Some by it underſtand Ieruſalem, which the Lord made and formed in that beauty, long before the Aſſyrian Monarks were: but neither can this ſtand, becauſe the thing pointed at here, is the laying deſolate of defenced cities, as Ieruſalem ſhould never be by him. Wherefore he ſetteth this down rather, as the true meaning. Haſt thou not heard of old, that I have done that which thou ſpeakeſt of, viz. ſet up thy anceſtours and thee in this height of worldly glory, and made other nations of no ſtrength before them and thee; and he addeth, that in ancient times he formed it, that is, laid down from the beginning of the world in his minde, a platform of all this, which is now come to paſſe. And he asketh him, if he had not heard it, becauſe he was not ſo barbarous, but he muſt needs aſcribe to the divine power the elevation of his own houſe and kingdome, and the pulling down of others, yea he ſaid before by his meſſenger Rabſhakeh, that God bade him come up againſt Ieruſalem, and de-Hierom. in Eſa. ſtroy it. From this diſſenteth not Ierom, who alſo underſtandeth the word [it] of that which by Gods providence and predetermination the Aſſyrian kings had done againſt other nations, taking away all heart and courage to reſiſt from them, and making them as weak as graſſe, as there followeth v. 26. So likewiſe Iunius, Pellican and others, neither can it be underſtood otherwiſe by any that duly conſider theſe two verſes together.

V. 27. I know thy ſitting down, or dwelling, and thy going out and rage againſt me, &c.] That is, although thou hadſt not in words boaſted of thy greatneſſe, and uttered thy fury againſt thy city and ſervants, I know well enough what counſels thou tookeſt in thy minde; yea all thy very thoughts and intentions, for by Gods knowing of Pſal. 39. his ſitting down and riſing up, David ſheweth, that all the moſt ſecret cogitations V. 28. and counſels of his minde were known unto God, but theſe of Sanneherib were Wolphius. both known and derided, as meer vanities. And becauſe the Lord knew him to be raging like a beaſt, he threatneth to uſe him accordingly, viz. to put an hook in his noſthrils, &c. alluding to the manner of men towards a buffe or wilde oxe, into whoſe noſthrils an hook being put, he is led to the houſe of ſlaughter. For even ſo the Lord ſhewed by this ſaying, that he would with ſhame and diſgrace thus bring him back to Aſſyria, as to his ſlaughter-houſe.

And

V. 29. And to thee (O Hezekiah) this ſhall be a ſigne, eate this yeare what thou findeſt, the ſecond yeare that which groweth of it ſelfe, &c.] Thus the Vulg. Lat. but Pagnin, whom Junius, Wolphius and other Tranſlatours follow: eat this yeare what groweth of it ſelfe, and likewiſe the ſecond. But for ſo much as two divers words for theſe two years are uſed, for the firſt ספיח Saphiach, coming of [Saphac] to gather, for the ſecond סחיש Sachiſh, ſignifying that which groweth of it ſelfe, Wolphius well acknowledgeth, that the ſtore then by them, which they had before gathered and laid up, might well be meant hereby; ſo alſo Lyra. Lyra. And it agreeth alſo with reaſon, that they ſhould one yeare live of their old ſtore, and when this failed, God hereby promiſed a ſupply extraordinary of fruits and ſelfe-ſowne corne haply encreaſing the more by meanes of the corn the year before beaten down and ſpoiled by the Aſſyrian armies. So that Hezekiah and his people are hereby comforted and confirmed againſt the feare of want during the time, that their enemies placed in that countrey by Sannaherib annoyed them. For although they could not goe forth to plow and ſowe, yet God promiſeth by his bleſſing to cauſe the earth to bring forth ſo much fruit even in this troubleſome time, (ſuffered happily by the Aſſyrians to grow to maturity in hope to enjoy it themſelves) as ſhould ſatisfie them and keepe them from famiſhing. And if it be doubted how they ſhould come to reape it, ſeeing their enemies were in the land? It is to be conceived, that at the very time, when it was to be gathered in, the Aſſyrians were ſmitten, as is here by and by related, and then they had their full liberty. For although the ſigne given is extended to the third yeare, when he ſaith, The third year ſowe and reape: yet it is not to be underſtood ſo, as if they ſhould doe this before their deliverance, but that when they had beene preſerved one whole yeare by their old ſtore, the enemy all that while ranging about the countrey, ſo that they could not provide for the next, in it they ſhould be extraordinarily provided for by corne growing of it ſelfe, as well as if they had followed their wonted courſe of husbandry; and by this meanes they ſhould alſo have ſeed to ſowe the ground to be reaped the third year, being at the time of reaping the ſecond yeares crop miraculouſly ſet free from the feare of their enemies. It was not then the tearm of three years, that paſſed before the putting of the hook into Sannaheribs noſtrils, and that prodigious ſlaughter of his men, nor much leſſe then a year after his ſo foule blaſpheming of the God of Iſrael, and yet a ſigne is given of three years continuance, whereof part muſt needs follow after the thing ſignified hereby, but ſo plain a ſhew was in the ſecond year made hereof, that they might well beleeve it, ſeeing the earth ſo to fructifie without labour, that they ſhould not in the third want either proviſion for ſuſtenance, or ſeed. For why ſhould it be doubted, when they had and uſed means, whether God who had promiſed, would make the earth to bring forth abundantly, when as without meanes he had ſufficiently furniſht them with proviſion the year before? If it be demanded, how this could be a ſigne to confirm their faith, conſidering that they ſaw it not performed, till their deliverance? I anſwer, they did ſee the earth fructifying the ſecond year, although unſowne; and in the year wherein this was propheſied, their ſtore haply was almoſt ſpent; but miraculouſly multiplied, as the meal and oyl of the widow of Sareptah, ſo that they wanted not, but ſtill had enough, and forſomuch as this could not be without a ſingular providence, and divine favour towards them, how could it but confirm them touching his promiſed mercy againſt Sannaherib?

V. 30. For the reſidue of the houſe of Iudah, ſhall take rooting downward, and bring forth fruit &c.] Here he proceedeth from the encreaſe of the fruits, which ſhould come of their ſowing, when their enemies ſhould be deſtroyed, unto their firm and ſtable habitation in the land, which remained, and eſcaped in Iudah, whereof many doubtleſſe had been ſlain by the Aſſyrians, by continuing his ſpeech, as he had begun metaphorically. For what is a peoples taking rooting downward, but the firm eſtabliſhing them in their place? as trees, the more deeply they are rooted ſtand the ſurer, and what is their bringing forth of fruit upward, but their encreaſing in poſterity, although Lyra expoundeth it of good works, but without reaſon. Lyra.

ſhut up themſelves within their wals for fear of the enemy; yet being delivered, they ſhall come forth again, as men at liberty, to plow, and ſowe, and reap, as in former times: The zeal of the Lord will do this, and not their own merits, as Lyra well noteth. Whereas one expoundeth all this of the reſidue of their corn, which ſhould greatly encreaſe, inſomuch as that they ſhould go out with it to ſell to men of other countries, and have no need to lay it up at home for fear of another ſiege to come, I think it to be altogether from the purpoſe, becauſe it is not ſaid, the reſidue of the corn in Iudah, but the reſidue of the houſe of Iudah, and not the reſidue ſhall be brought forth as ſpeaking of corn, but ſhall come out, as ſpeaking of men, that have life and motion. Pellican extendeth that which is ſaid of their going out, yet further, thus, they ſhall go out and take the rich ſpoils of three nations, Aſſyria, Ethiopia, and Egypt, by a ſingular providence brought thither, to become a prey unto them, conceiving, that Sanneberib having gone out to fight againſt the Ethiopians and Egyptians, and overcoming them, brought their ſpoils to his camp, which now came into the hands of the men of Iudah; but forſomuch as nothing is ſpoken of the ſpoils taken by them, but onely of the deſtruction of their enemies, I paſſe this over, as depending meerly upon conjecture. Comeſtor ſaith, that theſe words [ſhall go out] have reference to the men of other parts of the land, who in this time of danger, came for ſhelter to Ieruſalem, but now returned to their own places and multiplied there, as they had formerly done, Eccleſ. hiſtor.

V.32. Lyra. *Hieron. in Eſa. lib.*11. Wolphius.

He ſhall not enter into this city, nor ſhoot an arrow againſt it, &c.] The Lord hereby promiſeth, that he ſhould not onely not overcome it, but not be ſuffered to come and beſiege it, but before that he with his hoſte ſhould approach ſo near as to ſhoot an arrow unto it, he ſhould by the utter loſſe and overthrow of his army, be forced to flee away moſt ſhamefully. And this he promiſed to do for himſelf, that is, his glory, when all men hearing of it ſhould extoll his power, and for Davids ſake, becauſe of the covenant made with him. Lyra ſaith erroneouſly, for his merits. And therefore Ierome is rather to be heard, who is farre more ancient, who ſaith, for Davids ſake, that is, for, or in the remembrance of him, adding moreover, that ſo highly accepted of are ſome of the holy ſervants of God, that he is delighted to remember their pietie long after, and maketh it to go the better with their poſterity therefore many generations after, as he alſo promiſeth in the ſecond Commandement. And as Wolphius hath it, his ſaying that he would do this for Davids ſake, is to be underſtood, for the promiſe ſake made unto David, 2 *Sam.*7. that the kingdome ſhould be eſtabliſhed to his poſterity for ever.

V. 35.

Wherefore it came to paſſe the ſame night that the Angel of the Lord went out and ſmote in the tents of the Aſſyrians 185000.] That God, whom the proud King of Aſſyria had vilified and contemned, would not have execution done upon his army by any other, but his Angel, that he might againſt his blaſphemies vindicate his power from contempt and prove it to be above all men and gods. But where this army now was, by what kinde of death it was ſmitten, and what night is meant by the ſame night, is uncertaine. But moſt probably his army was brought againe back from his Ethiopian expedition into the coaſts of Iudah, becauſe the Lord ſweareth, *Eſa.*14.25. in that land to tread him under his feete, and *chap.*10. 12. having threatened to deſtroy his power, and v. 16. ſhewed the manner, how, viz. as it were by the burning of fire, and *v.*26. as the Midianites and the Egyptians were deſtroyed, whom his Angel ſmote, he ſheweth, v. 28. by what places he ſhould paſſe, when this ſhould be done, viz. Haiana, Migron and Michmaſh Gibeah Ramah and Madmenah, naming Nob as the uttermoſt to which he ſhould come towards Ieruſalem, intimating the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians there, v. 32. Whereby we may gather, that at his returne from Ethiopia, he being come to Nob ſome ſixteene miles off towards the North, where he appointed all his army to come together to him; for it is ſaid, That he ſhould appoint a day at Nob, his hoaſt was thus ſmitten. For the manner, it is thought by ſome, becauſe of that, which is ſaid, Eſa 10. 16. to have beene by fire, being further confirmed, *Eſa.*33.11,12. Some think, that an earthquake and horrible tempeſt and fire together deſtroyed them grounding upon, ch. 29. 6. and ſome, that they were ſmitten with the plague. But that of fire burning in their breaſts and ſtifling them is moſt probable, in which the Hebrews conſent, ſaying, that their bodies were burnt, but their garments untouched, ſo that the Iews might take the ſpoile of them. Laſtly, although Wolphius by the ſame night underſtandeth the night following the delivery of the foregoing meſſage of comfort from the Prophet, yet Lyra better determines, that it was the night after Sanneheribs returne to fight againſt Ieruſalem when he had been gone near two years; or rather, as I ſhewed before, about a year to fight firſt againſt the Ethiopians, when he was come with his army to Nob, as alſo R. Solomon ſaith, nearer then which place he came not towards Ieruſalem. For it is againſt the tenour of the propheſie beforegoing, This year eate of your ſtore, the ſecond that which groweth of it ſelfe,&c. Implying, that a long time was to come betweene the propheſie and their full deliverance from the Aſſyrians, and not that it ſhould be wrought by and by.

Whereas it is here ſaid, The Angel of the Lord ſmote 185000. and when they roſe in the morning, behold, all were dead corpſes, 2 Chron. 32.22. it is ſaid, The Lord ſent his Angel, who ſmote every ſtrong man and warriour, and the prince of the hoſt of the king of Aſſyria. Whereby we may gather, that ſome of the weaker ſort were ſpared, the prime men onely being ſmitten, without whom he and his hoſt remaining became contemptible, wherefore it is ſaid, that he returned with ſhame into his owne land. He had then many more doubleſſe in his army according to the manner of ſuch mighty Monarchs, who uſed not to goe forth to warre, but with 500000. or 1000000. men, but all his captains and officers of bands being deſtroyed and the Generall, ſo that none were left to order the battell, he was ſo confounded, that he ſpeedily provided for his owne ſafety by fleeing home with thoſe weake and inferiour perſons, that remained in his campe, not daring to abide in the field any longer. Wherefore Ioſephus ſaith, that he fled with his army, and Heb. ſaith his head and his beard being as it were ſhaved by ſingeing, according to Iſay. They that roſe then in the morning and ſaw them dead, were the refuſe of the army, who brought word hereof to the king: but the Vulg. lat. rendereth it, When he aroſe in the morning he ſaw, as if it were meant of the king, contrary to the Hebrew verity.

Sanneherib then returning to Nineveh, the chiefe city of Aſſyria was ſlaine by his owne ſons Adrammelech and Sharezer, as he was worſhipping in the temple of his god Niſroch. For the cauſe, why his owne ſonnes ſlew him, R. Solomon, whom Lyra citeth, hath a pretty invention. The great men of the countrey having loſt each one his ſonne, brother or friend in that expedition againſt Ieruſalem by means of his blaſphemies, were provoked ſo, that they meant to deſtroy him, which he hearing, fled to the idols temple and prayed and vowed, that if his god would deliver him from this danger, he would give theſe two ſonnes for ſacrifice unto him; then they hearing this, came and ſlew him there.

Lyra.

But this ſavoureth as a Rabinicall invention, for by what means came he to know this, and how ſhould his ſonnes know ſo ſoon what he ſaid in praying? It is therefore more probable, which Lyra rejecteth, that they ſlew him, becauſe he neglecting them, that were haply elder, appointed Eſarhaddon another ſonne of his, to reign after him, but they not being able after this appointment to alter it, contented themſelves onely to take this revenge, and then fled away. Thus the people of God were by degrees made more and more ſafe from the enemies ſword. Firſt, by the ſudden deſtruction of his hoſte. Secondly, in that he returning, is ſaid to dwell in Niniveh, that is, giving himſelf to ſloth and pleaſure, not applying his minde to make warre any more, or haply, as ſome other tyrants have done, in their elder years, when they became weary of the warres, they have betaken themſelves to a monaſtery, that they might ſpend the reſt of their time in blinde devotion, ſo he, and then it may well be conceived, how he came at this time to be taken in his idols temple. Thirdly, by his cutting off, as was threatned, Wolphius rejecting the reaſon of his coming to this temple at his return, rendred by Ierom, viz. to give him thanks for his victories, ſaith that he fled hither to complain before his god of his ill ſucceſſe, but becauſe it is ſaid he dwelt in Niniveh, I rather think, think, as was before ſaid, that he ſpent moſt of his time in blinde devotion to an impotent idol, thinking thus to live the more ſecurely the reſt of his days, becauſe the terrour of the Angels ſtroke which he had received in his hoſte, would not yet go out of his minde. So farre was he from learning by that ſcourge of God, that there was but one onely true God of power, viz. the God of Iſrael, and acknowledging the impotency of dum idols. Wherefore his blaſpheming of God was now fully puniſhed, when he praying in the temple of his god, that it might appeare, that the idol had no power either to ſave his hoaſt or him afarre off, or being neareſt to him, ſeeing it may be, that he aſcribed the preſervation of his owne perſon in that great maſſacre to this tutelar god and therefore worſhipped him ſtill, notwithſtanding his armies overthrow in the land of Iudea. But if Tobit. 2.24. may be credited he lived not 55. dayes after his returne to Nineveh. Touching this idol Niſroch nothing is recorded amongſt Writers, ſaith Wolphius, but by Ierom. in tradit. Hebr. that he was of old worſhipped amongſt the reliques of Noahs Ark, and calleth him Dagon. The Aſſyrians worſhipped Iupiter Belus for their god, as ſaith Dion, Cyril, Euſebius and others; and haply the ſame was called alſo Niſroch, becauſe he was a refuge to ſuch, as fled and eſcaped out of battell, this being ſuppoſed by the ignorant heathens to have been under his protection, and through his tender care, according to the ſignification of the word, נס Neſ, fleeing, and ך Rech, tender. But the Lord to ſhew the vanity of ſuch as truſted to this, would not have him ſlaine by the Angel coming upon his army, but after his returne, before his idol, in which he truſted, and that by his owne ſonnes, that came out of his own bowels, as is added, 2 Chron. 32. 22. both that his ſufferings might be the greater, who had ſinned ſo greatly, in ſeeing firſt the principall of all his army ſlaine, and in fleeing ſo many hundred miles with great ſhame and feare: and alſo that he might be puniſhed in his kinde for the ſtriking of terrour into all others, by being led as an oxe to the houſe of ſlaughter, who thought none either man or God comparable to him in power and puiſſance, and by their lifting up of their hands againſt him moſt unnaturally, to whom he had given their being, as he had ungraciouſly lifted up his blaſphemous tongue againſt him, that had ſo greatly magnified him and ſet up his throne above the nations about both far and neare.

2 Chron. 32.23

After this, 2 Chron, 32.23. it is added, that God ſaved Hezekiah and the inhabitants of Ieruſalem out of the hands of Sanneherib and gave him peace round about, and many brought ſacrifices to Ieruſalem, and gifts to Hezekiah, &c. That is, this miracle of the Aſſyrians deſtruction being divulged amongſt the nations, they both ſent great gifts to Hezekiah for honours ſake to one ſo highly in the favour of the Lord, all their hatred againſt him and his people being turned into love and admiration, and a deſire, (all hoſtility being laid aſide) of their amity, and ſo they had quiet on every ſide, and in acknowledgement, that the God of Iſrael was the onely true God and the Almighty, they ſent ſacrifices to be offered in his temple in Ieruſalem, being, as Pellican thinketh, converted to the true faith by this great miracle, that being in part now fulfilled, which is propheſied, Eſa. 2. of the flocking of all nations to the mountaine of the Lord. So that however the ten tribes were carried away captive for their ſinnes and no more ſacrifices came from them, which before had beene propheſied againſt, as abominations, and forbidden, Eſa. 11. Yet there was now no defect, but rather a ſuperabundance of them, by reaſon of the nations about, who brought them in from every place haply being moved alſo in part, becauſe they having been under the oppreſſion of the Aſſyrian tyrants, ſhared with the Iews now in the comfort and freedome coming by this their miraculous deſtruction.

Pellican.

IN thoſe dayes Hezekiah was ſick unto the death, and Eſay the ſonne of Amos came to him, ſaying, Set thy houſe in order, for thou ſhalt die and not live.] The Hebrewes, ſaith Pellican, think that this ſickneſſe was three yeares before the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians before going, ch. 19. although it be related after, becauſe it is ſaid, *v.*6. And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the Aſſyrians, and will defend this city for my ſelfe, and for David my ſervant: and they ſay three yeares, becauſe after the Aſſyrians coming againſt Ieruſalem, three yeares are ſpoken of, that ſhould be to Hezekiah a ſigne of deliverance. But if it be taken as it lyeth in order, a good reaſon may be rendered of the promiſe of deliverance from the Aſſyrians after Sanneheribs death, becauſe there might be danger again by Eſarhaddon his ſonne, who reigned in his ſteed, and might threaten to come and be revenged upon the Iews for the overthrow of his people paſt, and thus to vindicate the credit of the Aſſyrians, who were then put to great ſhame.

Lyra.

Wolphius.

Ioſephus.

Non.

Lyra is for that of the Hebrews, alledging R. Solomon, in confutation of the opinion of ſome, that Hezekiah was ſmitten with this ſickneſſe, becauſe he was not worthily thankfull for his great deliverance. For this, ſaith R. Solomon, cannot be ſo, becauſe that deliverance was after his ſickneſſe, and the cauſe of his ſickneſſe, was for that he would not take a wife to continue the line of David, but lived a ſingle life, till after his recovery of health, as is probable, if the time be conſidered of which his ſonne Manaſſeh was, when he died, viz. twelve years old, whereas from this ſickneſſe were 15. But Wolphius well confuteth this of the Rabbin, becauſe there was no law, whereby he was bound to marry, but when he himſelf thought fitteſt, and if his life be conſidered from the beginning of his reign to this preſent, a fit time for his marrying could not hitherto be found; for firſt the ſervice of God was ſo diſordered, at his coming to the crown, that much time was requiſite for the re-ordering thereof, and then his wars with the Philiſtims followed; after which anno 4°. of his reign, his neighbour kingdome of Iſrael came into great calamity by the Aſſyrians, and therefore, he having refuſed to pay him tribute, could not but expect the like, and labour to fortifie all his cities againſt the time of their coming. But letting all this paſſe, who knoweth, but that he was married, and went ſo long childleſſe, or without a ſonne, as others had done at ſundry times, or having children, no ſon lived with him, till Manaſſeh. Touching the cauſe yielded by others of his ſickneſſe, viz. his unthankfulneſſe and pride, wherewith his heart was lifted up from his great victory, it is both contrary to Ioſephus, who ſaith, that he offered many euchariſticall ſacrifices, and to the piety, which was alwayes known to be in him, although Ierome ſomewhat taxeth him for this, and he is thus charged in part, 2 Chron. 32. 26. but it was after his deliverance from his ſickneſſe. But that which maketh moſt for the confutation of this opinion, is the allegation of R. Solomon brought before, viz. that his ſickneſſe did precede, and not follow after his deliverance from Sanneherib, as appeareth from the conſideration of the time, when the Aſſyrian came, viz. anno 14. and the time of his life after this ſickneſſe, viz. 15 years, and the whole time of his reign 29 years. Therefore this ſickneſſe muſt needs have befaln him, about the time of the Aſſyrians firſt coming into his land, and not after Sanneheribs departure, from which to the death of Hezekiah could not be 15, but onely 13 or 14 years at the moſt. It muſt needs be yielded then, that his ſickneſſe and danger by Sanneheribs coming againſt him, were about the ſame time, the army of that blaſphemer not being yet deſtroyed, and unto this agreeth the promiſe made here v.6. But what then was the cauſe? Verily none that we can know, but as in the caſe of the man that was born blinde, Ioh. 9. that God might be glorified, and his ſervant Hezekiah tried, and his faith made the more illuſtrious by this miracle, wrought upon his faithfull praying, to the encouragement of all others, to fervent and faithfull praying in their ſickneſſes and dangers. Wherefore although it be ſet down after his deliverance from Wolphius.

Lyra.

Aſhur, it is onely ſaid, In thoſe dayes Hezekiah was ſick, nothing being ſpoken denoting the time either before or after, but that being left to be gathered by the diligent reader. He was ſick unto the death; that is, according to the nature of his ſickneſſe, and in humane reaſon. For it is hereby intimated, that his ſickneſſe was ſuch, as that he could not by all the help of phiſick or chirurgerie eſcape death, had not the divine power miraculouſly healed him. But to finde what ſickneſſe it was, we muſt look to v. 7. a bile, the ſame word being uſed, that is Exod. 9. 9. a bile ſo painfull through inflamation, as that a man cannot long endure it, and by the ſame word, the biles of Iob are ſet forth. But this certainly was the moſt dangerous of all others, a very ſwelling full of peſtilentiall matter, as Wolphius and other think, which neither by lanceing, or outward application could be made to break, but muſt needs kill without ſupernaturall remedy. And accordingly the prophet denounceth death unto him, which Lyra noteth to have been done with reſpect unto ſecondary cauſes, and not by divine revelation. For then it could not have been otherwiſe, neither would Hezekiah have prayed againſt it as he did. It is to be conceived then, that Eſay, as the duty of a good paſtour is, hearing of the kings ſickneſſe, went to viſite him, and finding him to labour with ſuch a ſickneſſe, as alwayes killeth, he dealt faithfully with him, and told him, there was no way for him now to go but one, viz. down the grave, exhorting him therefore to make his laſt will and teſtament, for the ſetling of his worldly eſtate, that he might wholly diſpoſe himſelf towards God, and to a better life. And as Hezekiah, ſo every man that hath poſſeſſions or riches to be diſpoſed of, is to be exhorted to make his will before his death, and becauſe the time of that is uncertain, eſpecially in theſe times, wherein men do often dye ſuddenly, without delaying, till warning be given by ſickneſſe. Of making wills ſee Wolphius at large, upon this place, and touching Hezekiah in particular, he having no heir to his kingdome, and the danger being great, if this were left undetermined, whom ſhould ſucceed him by reaſon of the contention likely to ariſe, the enemy alſo now being at hand to deſtroy it, the wiſe prophet thought it of great importance for him to make his will, and therefore moveth him in it. Whereas he ſaith, for thou ſhalt dye and not live, ſome Rabbins make a ſtrange conſtruction of the words, viz. that he ſhould dye ſoon of this ſickneſſe and not live in the world to come: but conſidering the piety of the king, and that Gods miniſters are not inſtruments to drive into deſperation, but of comfort in times of danger, this is to be exploded, and it is rather to be held, that having ſaid he ſhould dye, he added, and not live, leſt he ſtill being in hope to live, ſhould defer the making of his will, about which the Prophet was very ſolicitous.

V. 2.

Phil. 1, 23.

Hieron. in Eſa.

Cypr. lu Eſa.

Hezekiah hearing this, turned his face to the wall and prayed, Remember I beſeech thee O Lord, how I have walked before thee in truth, and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is pleaſing in thy ſight, and he wept ſore.] The news of death approaching, is naturally terrible to any, the moſt courageous man, although St Paul, ſince the breaking of the power of death, by the death and reſurrection of Chriſt Ieſus, deſired rather to be diſſolved, then to live. And to hear of dying now, did pierce the heart of this good king the more, becauſe the worſhip of God had by him been but newly reformed, and there would by his death ſo ſoon, be great danger of corrupting it again, and he was alſo yet without a ſonne, to continue the line of David, touching which God had promiſed, that a light ſhould not fail unto him in Iſrael for ever. That of Ierom is not to be heard, that he was thus troubled, becauſe he was uncertain, whither he ſhould go: for he was of greater faith, and whereas he inferreth upon this, that no man is certain of ſalvation, till he be in poſſeſſion of it, Cyprian is rather to be heard, who ſaith, that death is not to be feared of the godly, becauſe they were not ignorant, whither they go when they dye.

Wolphius.

Touching the words of Hezekiah his prayer, they may ſeem, ſaith Wolphius, both to ſavour of arrogancy and diſcontent, in that he aſſumeth to himſelf perfectneſſe of heart, and expoſtulateth with the Lord, as if he were injuriouſly dealt withall, to be made to ſuffer, by ſuch a ſickneſſe as was incurable, when as he had not diſpleaſed, but pleaſed the Lord: but he ſaith, that Hezekiah ſpake not thus to juſtifie himſelf to God, but in way of appeal againſt the blaſphemy of Sanneherib, not by way of complaining againſt Gods juſt dealing, but of imploring his help to heal him again by his almighty power, that all mouthes might be ſtopped, from taking occaſion upon this his ſtroke to calumniate him as an hypocrite. For Rabſhakeh in declaiming againſt him, had ſought to infringe his piety, in ſaying, that he had put down the high places of the Lord, and that he deceived the people, in making them believe that he was in ſo much favour with him, when he had greatly incurred his diſpleaſure by thus doing, and if he did any acts of godlineſſe, it was not for any other but his own ends, as hypocrites do. Now this deadly ſickneſſe occurring with that exprobration, if he ſhould die thereof, would make the world beleeve that he was ſuch an one indeed, to his infinite diſcredit, wherefore he maketh here God the judge of his ſincerity, and the rather uttereth his grief by weeping, to think of dying at this time in ſuch infamy, thus ſtriving with the Lord of pity for reſtitution to health, believing, that he was eaſily able to raiſe him up, how deadly ſoever his ſickneſſe was. Yet he prayed not to have his life prolonged, ſaith Jerom, remembring how acceptable Solomon was to God, for his not deſiring long life, therefore he left that unto God. When he had prayed, he turned himſelf to the wall, partly becauſe it was next to the temple, and partly that he might be more private, and not interrupted by any object occurring, whileſt he was praying, and that he might not make oſtentation of his tears, ſo Rabanus; who alſo ſaith, that Hezekiah ſpake here as the Phariſee, Luk. 18. but not from the like heart, for Hezekiah ſpake out of humilitie being neceſſitated, he out of pride, therefore the one is juſtified, the other condemned by him, that looks not at the words, but at the heart.

V. 4, 5. When Eſay was ſcarce gone out of the kings court, the Word of the Lord came unto him, ſaying, return to Hezekiah, &c.] Here for the word [court] Hebr. is עיר ſignifying the city, and ſo Iunius, who confeſſeth, that having ſometime rendred it ſo, now he rather thinks it fit to be rendred city; but in the margin it is חצר, court, and the Chald. and Sept. follow that, and the Hebrews generally, and of the court made by king Solomon we read, 1 King. 7. 8. and it may be conceived, that the kings court was like a city; wherefore in the text it is put down city, and that it might be underſtood what city was meant, in the margin it is court: for it is not to be thought, that the prophet was gone ſo far as the midſt of the city, becauſe this countermand is ſpoken of, as coming to Eſay immediately after the kings praying, in the time whereof being ſo ſhort, he could not be gone farre. Whereas Pellican thinketh, that Eſay was bidden before to denounce death to the king, but now he had a new revelation to the contrary: I rather hold me ſtill to that of Lyra and others, that he ſpake not before by revelation, but by conjecture, ſeeing what his diſeaſe was, and now firſt was the will of the Lord made known unto him, touching his recovery. And what doth the Lord now ſay? Truly, that he had heard his prayer and healed him, and he ſhould go up the third day to the houſe of the Lord, that is, to praiſe him for this great deliverance. And R. Solomon ſaith, for the deſtruction of the Aſſyrians the ſame day, but I leave that as uncertain. And it is thought moſt probably, that by the third day, is meant the third from that wherein the prophet ſpake unto him including it, ſo there was but one day for the medicine to work between.

Junius.

Pellican.

V. 6. And I will adde 15. years unto thy dayes more, &c.] This is not ſo to be underſtood, as if he ſhould live longer then the time firſt ſet in Gods decree, but whereas he was now according to the nature of this ſickneſſe a dead man, that he ſhould be raiſed up again, and live from henceforth one 15 years more. For as S^t^. [a] Auguſtine ſaith, it was from the beginning by God determined, that Hezekiah ſhould be ſmitten with this mortall ſickneſſe, and recover again and live after it 15 years, and therefore he did not that now, which ſhould not have been, but what muſt be, becauſe he fore-knew that it ſhould be. And if Eſay ſpake at the firſt by revelation from God, that he ſhould now dye, there was no contradiction in the Lord in his returning and ſaying ſoon after, that he ſhould not dye, but having proved Hezekiah by the firſt meſſage, and found him ſo ſubmiſſe and unmoved from his faith, as appeareth by his faithfull and fervent prayer, he as his purpoſe was hereupon, takes away the fear of death at this time by the ſecond, and not only prolongeth his life, but granted this upon his praying, which he never did to any mortall man ſo long before, to know, how many years he ſhould yet live. Touching the time ſet by God long before of Hezekiahs life, it is true not onely touching him, but alſo touching every other man, that his time is determined, neither doth any live fewer or more years. So Iob 14. 15. the dayes of man are predetermined, the number of his moneths are with thee, neither can any one paſſe the time ſet him. Likewiſe Gregory hereupon; God fore-knowing all things to come, decreed before the world, how all things ſhould be diſpoſed throughout the world, and it is alſo ſet, how long every one ſhould live temporally in this life. If it be objected, Pſal. 54. The wicked and bloud thirſty ſhall not live out half their dayes, therefore ſome die before the time ſet by God. It is anſwered, the meaning is not half the time ſet him by God, but reckoning according to the common account of the time of mans life, he ſhall not live out half the time that men commonly live, but either be cut off by the ſword of juſtice, or by his riotous courſes bring himſelf ſoon to his end. And the Lord doth not onely promiſe a longer life by 15 years, which were one more then he had reigned hitherto, but alſo to exempt him and his citie from the danger of the Aſſyrians, and that upon a ſure ground, for himſelf, and for David.

Then Eſay ſaid, Take a lump of figs &c.] This, ſaith Lyra, was by the nature thereof rather a meanes to encreaſe his paine, then to eaſe him of it, becauſe ſweet things doe ſo, as the Hebrews alſo hold, thus making the miracle the greater. But Wolphius averreth it to be a meanes to ripen and to bring out the corruption of the bile according to *Cornel. Celſus. l.5. c.*12. and Gallen l 8. de ſimplic. medici, and *Dioſcorides l.*1. whoſe ſayings he citeth to this effect. Baſil alſo ſpeaketh, as holding the ſame. Phyſick is not to be neglected nor the benefit coming thereby, yet health thus recovered is not to be imputed to it, but to God, as was done by Hezekiah, who did not think that maſſe of figges the chiefe cauſe of his recovery, neither imputed his health hereby recovered to it, but to Gods glory, adding thankes to him, that created the figge. And Ierom likewiſe, ſaying, ſome thinke it not a bile, but an apoſtemated place ſwolne and filled with corrupt matter, all which according to the art of the Phyſician is drawne to the ſuperficies of the skin by dry figges punned or bruiſed and applied outwardly. And agreeable to this is that of Fr: Valleſius. Hezekiah could by no meanes be more aptly cured then by a Cataplaſme of dried figges with barley meale, if the inflammation might be diſſolved, if not, with wheat meale to mitigate the heat of the fever and other accidents. Ob. But if this were ſo, what miracle was there in this cure? Sol. There was not ſo great force in this medicine as that by vertue thereof he might in ſo ſhort a time have beene healed, wherefore God miraculouſly made the force of it at this time greater then ordinary, thus he; or rather the ſickneſſe of Hezekiah was ſuch, as that it was hereby, incurable, as the Phyſicians preſent probably knew well, yet it being applied at Gods command, he was healed; and thus it was miraculous.

For Hezekiah had ſaid to Iſaiah, What ſhall be the ſigne, &c.] Here it may be doubted, whether Hezekiah ſinned not by doubting of the truth of Gods promiſe? Ierome ſaith, Parvæ fidelitatis indicium fuit. But Author Mirab. Sacræ Script. better, he had heard from the ſame Prophet two contrary meſſages, and therefore to confirme the laſt he thought it requiſite, that he ſhould give a ſigne; and Lyra, Dionyſius, and Toſtatus, His father Ahaz had ſinned in denying to aske a ſigne, therefore he asked one for this further confirmation to Gods greater glory, when not one onely but two miracles ſhould be wrought together. Or rather becauſe he did not plainly ask a ſign, but only what ſhould be the ſign, it is to be ſuppoſed, that he preſumed that Eſay would give him a ſigne, as his manner was before to Ahaz, Iſa. 7. and ſo he onely demanded, what this ſigne ſhould be, whereupon he gave him liberty to ask one of two, which he propounded, as he had before done to Ahaz and a farre greater.

V. 9, 10, 11.

The liberty given to him was, whether the ſhaddow ſhould goe forward ten degrees or ten degrees backward upon the diall, but he asked, that it might goe backward and ſo it did upon the diall of Ahaz. But here a queſtion ariſeth, Whether the Sunne went backward ſo many degrees in ſo many houres, as it had gone forward, and ſo the day was made longer in all places by twice ten degrees, or whether the Sunne keeping the courſe, the ſhadow upon that Dial onely notwithſtanding, went ten degrees backward. Comeſtar for going backward hath ſtanding ſtill ten houres, averring, that in Hebrew it is ſo, and that the day either way ſhould have been encreaſed but ten houres, yielding this as a reaſon, why Hezekiah would not have it ſtand ſtill, becauſe that had been done before for Joſhuah. But he is deceived, Hebr. is הלך ſignifying to go, not to ſtand. R. Levi as Pellican hath it, anſwereth, that the prophets propoſition is to be underſtood, as if he had ſaid, Thou ſeeſt, that the ſhadow is gone forward upon the Dial ten degrees, wilt thou therfore that in a moment it go forward ten degrees more, or be immediately, brought back ten degrees, referring all to the ſhadow and not to the body of the Sunne. And this ſeemeth to be the truth, if we conſider the anſwer of the king, It is eaſie for the ſhadow to go forward, becauſe it will do ſo naturally; but to cauſe the body of the Sun with ſo great celerity to move forward is a greater miracle, ſaith Pellican, then ever was wrought by Moſes, neither could it be done without the concuſſion of the whole heavenly frame; yet God was able as well to do it without this concuſſion as to do ſo great a miracle. Lyra contrariwiſe ſaith, that the Sunne went backward ten degrees, which made the ſhadow upon the Dial to go back alſo, and that in the ordinary time, viz. ten houres, ſo that the Sun being now within two houres of ſetting was kept ſtill above the horizon ten houres, in which it went back again from Weſt to Eaſt, from whence again it returned in ten houres more to the ſame point, the day being thus made twenty houres longer then ordinary. And for this he citeth Dionyſius his Epiſtle to Polycarp. Wolphius making no doubt, but that the body of the Sun went backward to the Eaſt, ſaith, that all the queſtion is about the degrees, whether they were, as Dionyſius and Lyra hold, ſo many houres, or as others, ſo many half houres, or as ſome, ſo many quarters, and either twenty, ten or five in going backward and forward again, for in ſome dials be two degrees in an hour, in ſome four, and in ſome each degree is an hour; or whether it were ſuddenly brought back, and immediatly forward again, and he concludeth without reſolving it, becauſe none before him hath cleared this queſtion. Rab. Kimhi holdeth, that the day was but ten houres longer, and Procopius ſaith the ſame in effect, the day was almoſt doubled, and Jerom likewiſe, and Toſtatus, and Author Mirabil. Sacræ Script. The Sunne, ſaith the Rabbin, being brought back in a moment, and then going forward again in ſuch time. And ſome Hebrewes are ſo bold in this point, that they tell the reaſon of this ſigne given in particular, viz. becauſe in the day of wicked Ahaz his funeral the Sunne haſtened faſter then ordinary to his ſetting, that there might be no time for funeral rites; now to recompence the loſſe of time, which had been then, the day was prolonged. But if this were ſo, what ſhall be ſaid for getting up the time again, which was loſt in the dayes of Joſhuah by the ſtanding ſtill of the Sun an whole day together? Lyra is large in reciting the tenet of Burgenſis, that the body of the Sunne did not go back, but the ſhadow upon the dial of Ahaz onely, and not upon other dials, which he founds upon the words of the text, which ſpeaketh three times of the ſhadow going back, but not of the Suns. 2. Becauſe no Aſtronomers ever obſerved this in any other countrey to write of it, which they would doubtleſſe have done, if ſo ſtrange a thing had happened contrary to the courſe of nature. 3. Becauſe this had been the greateſt of all miracles, that ever had been wrought by Moſes or any other, for ſo much as it was in the chief of all the heavenly bodies, and yet there was no ſuch great cauſe, as at ſome other times, there being now none other cauſe, but to aſſure Hezekiah of the reſtitution of his health, yet he ſaith it was greater, then that ſtanding ſtill of the Sunne cauſed by Joſhua, ſeeing it is a gaeater work to bring the Sunne back then to make it ſtand ſtill; wherefore he concludeth, that the day was neither longer nor ſhorter then other dayes, but onely the ſhadow was made upon Ahaz his dial to go backward miraculouſly, when as by the courſe of nature it ſhould have gone forward. All this and more being recited by Lyra he confuteth, oppoſing firſt here againſt Dionyſius and Auguſt. de mirab. Sacra. Script. Jerom, and others; then he confuteth his reaſons, to the firſt anſwering, that the ſhadow upon the Dial, cauſed by the Sun, could not go backward unleſs the Sun went backward alſo, and therefore the one inferreth the other. To the other, that the Perſians have left it written in their memorials, viz. their prieſt, that there was one day almoſt as long as three; and to the third, that this ſigne was given not onely for Hezekiahs healths ſake, which ſhould be recovered, but alſo to aſſure him of the deliverance of Jeruſalem from Sanneherib, which was of greater conſequence, then that which was done in the time of Joſhuah, becauſe if then the enemies were deſtroyed, that room might be made for the Iſraelites to inhabite that land; now he and his army was to be deſtroyed, by whoſe blaſphemies they might be made to ſtagger in their faith, touching the true religion newly reſtored by Hezekiah, and purged from the idolatries practiſed in the time of his father Ahaz, which was of far greater moment. Moreover, the will of God is the cauſe of miracles greater or leſs, and therefore no reaſon is to be demanded why a greater ſhould be wrought now, then at any other time, thus Lyra: wherein I muſt needs ſay, he hath not ſpoken ſo ſatisfactory, as to overthrow that opinion. For firſt, however in the courſe of nature the ſhadow cauſed upon a Dial by the Sun cannot go backward, when it goeth forward, yet ſupernaturally and miraculouſly it may, for what is not God able to do? 2. It is doubtful whether any ſuch memorial be made by the Perſian prieſts or no, ſeeing Lyra himſelf is not able to affirm it, but onely that Dionyſius read ſuch books, as Burgenſis never ſaw. And if ſuch a wonderful day almoſt treble to another now were: the Caldeans who were uuder the dominion of the king of Aſhur ſhould rather have written of it, then the Perſians, eſpecially ſeeing their king ſent to Hezekiah, as being much affected with the wonder, which he heard was wrought for the recovery of his health, to congratulate the ſame, 2 Chron. 32.31. and to enquire after the ſaid wonder, 2 King. 20.12. 3. Lyra over-reacheth much, when he aſſigneth other weighty cauſes of this ſigne beſides Hezekiah his recovery of health, ſeeing this onely is named, What is the ſigne, that the Lord will heal me, and that I ſhall go up the third day to the houſe of the Lord? For although his and the cities preſervation from the Aſſyrian be promiſed, yet a ſigne to confirm his faith touching that is not deſired, but onely of the reſtitution of his health, neither was it needful, as being done before, chap. 19.29. Wherefore I conclude rather, the wonder wrought at this time was in the ſhadow going backward upon the Dial of Ahaz onely, when the body of the Sun went forward, ſeeing nothing more is expreſly ſaid in the text, and the litteral ſenſe is to be taken in all places, if it be neither againſt the analogy of faith, nor any other place of Scripture, nor abſurd as this is not but rather more miraculous. But then it is not to be conceived, that the Sunne was at this time onely two hours high, but five, if we reckon, as is moſt probable, two degrees of the Dial to every hour: for ſo it might either go forward or backward ten degrees as was propounded, before the ſunne ſetting, the time of the degrees being kept. And if ſo, by that time the Sunne went down, the ſhadow was gon back juſt to the degree appointed, viz. to about eight of the clock in the morning, and then the Sunne ſetting appeared no more that day, whereas if the ſhadow had gone forward ten degrees in the like proportion of time, it had been no wonder, but that, which was eaſily and extraordinarily done daily, as Hezekiah ſaid. But I would have this taken, as ſpoken onely in way of confuting Lyra his reaſons ſeeing yet ſomething to encline me to the common tenet, viz. that the Sun went backward, and that is the expreſs text, Eſa. 38. 8. And the Sun returned ten degrees by the ſame degrees by which it deſcended. unleſs this ſhall be conſtrued of the Sunne appearing on the Dial onely, that is, the beams thereof. Some are altogether for an allegorical ſenſe here, as Rabanus, making theſe ten degrees of the Suns going backward, a figure of Chriſts going backward, or deſcending by ſo many degrees, ſaith, the firſt was his deſcending to an Angel. 2. In the Patriarks. 3. In giving the Law. 4. In Joſhua. 5. In the Judges. 6. In the Kings. 7. In the Prophets. 8. In the high Prieſts. 9. In his Incarnation. 10. In his Paſſion Yet the ſame authour in Lyra going upon the letter: ſenſe ſaith ten degrees were ten houres, wherefore the ſunne being within two houres of ſetting was brought back ten houres upon the ſudden to the Eaſt, and if it had gone forward ten houres it ſhould inſtantly have paſſed thoſe two houres, and ſo, there being no night beene carried to the ninth houre of the next day. But for ſo much as this had beene as great a miracle as the going backward and rather greater; why did Hezekiah refuſe it as being more eaſie to be done? he anſwereth, in an Iſland called Tyle beyond Britany and the North of Scythia divers dayes in ſummer there is of courſe no night, and ſo the ſunne is ſeen ſtill to goe forward, when it is at the Weſt, although to us in parts more ſoutherly it is never ſo. Others, ſaith Wolphius, allegorize to the nine degrees of Angels, and a tenth of ſoules glorified, beneath all which Chriſt, the Sun of righteouſneſſe deſcended, when he was made man, but leaving this he findeth an aptneſſe in this ſigne to the matter in hand. Hezekiah was as the ſunne to the kingdome of Iudah, therefore the ſuns going backward ten degrees did moſt aptly ſet forth his declined eſtate by this ſickneſſe almoſt to the extinction of ſo famous a light; but becauſe the ſunne having gone backward being cauſed ſo to doe by the Almighty power, in the courſe of nature would returne againe and goe as much and more forward; Hezekiah ſhould likewiſe be hereby aſſured to returne to his former health, and live rather longer a glorious king from hence forward, then he had hitherto done, for fourteene paſt, fifteene as he was now promiſed. Genebrard ſaith, that Hezekiah was ſtudious of the Mathematicks, and the Rabins to the ſame effect, that he reſtored the yeare by the intercalation of a day every third yeare in the moneth Adar, that anſwereth to our February, and if this were ſo, he had a ſigne moſt fitting for him.

Wolphius.

Now for the Prophets making him this offer, it was not out of any private motion, as if he at his pleaſure could doe ſo great a worke, but as he was moved by the ſpirit, for which cauſe having heard Hezekiahs anſwer he is ſaid to have prayed that this ſigne might be ſhewed, and then the ſhaddow went back upon the diall of Ahaz, which it is to be conceived ſtood ſo as that Hezekiah might ſee it. Touching dialls made by art, the world was long without them, at length, as Varro ſaith, they were deviſed by Anaximenes Mileſius amongſt the Lacedemonians, and by Marcus Valer. Meſſala amongſt the Romanes 477. yeares after the city built, and by Gods working of a miracle upon a diall at this time, this art was honoured and approved, and by conſequence the ſeven liberall Sciences, of which this is one.

And hitherto of the ſickneſſe and recovery of Hezekiah. Now although v. 12. the next thing ſpoken of is the king of Babylons ſending Embaſſadours to him, yet 2 Chron. 32, 25. he is before this taxed for ingratitude and pride, for which Gods wrath was greatly kindled againſt him, which notwithſtanding how it could be is a doubt, conſidering that Eſa. 38. 9. he is ſaid to have made a commemoration of Gods gracious dealing with him, in writing to his praiſe, as a laſting monument of his thankfulneſſe. For if he rendred not unto the Lord according to his dealing with him, but had his heart lifted up, as is there ſaid, what is to be thought of that his thankeſgiving? Sol. By his not rendring to the Lord is meant, that he gave not thanks unto him, but becauſe after his health reſtored, Sanneheribs army at his prayer deſtroied, and other great worldly bleſſings heaped upon him, recorded v. 27, 28, 29. his heart was lifted up, and he made oſtentation hereof to his own vain-glory, at the coming of the embaſſadours from Babylon unto him, ſhewing them in a vaunting manner all his treaſure, as being proud of that reſpect, which was ſhewed unto him by ſo great a king, and he ſhewed it, not as a bleſſing beſtowed upon him by the God of Iſrael, that he might be magnified and thought highly of by theſe heathens, but to ſet forth his own excellency, as if for ſome extraordinary merit in himſelf, his miraculous recovery and theſe bleſſings had befaln him. And what thanks ſoever a man giveth unto God in word, yea though he writes it to continue and to be publikely ſung alwayes in the ſanctuary in his behalf, as moſt probably was the caſe at this time, it is not counted a condigne rendring unto God, if the heart be any way ill affected, and not holy and humble, which God counteth the greateſt retribution which can bee made unto him, as appeareth Mich. 6. 6.

That which is then ſet forth 2 Chron. 32. 25. in way of blaming Hezekiah, is by anticipation; the proper place being after the Babylonian embaſſadours coming to him, v. 31. where it is ſaid, that God left him to try what was in his heart, and more fully 2 King. 20. 13, 14, &c. For the words here following, therefore the fierce wrath of the Lord was kindled againſt him, &c. have reference to that, which is there ſaid, viz. the threatning of the prophet Eſay, that all this treaſure ſhould be carried into Babylon, and the anſwer of the king ſubmitting himſelf to the will of God, for this is here called his humbling of himſelf, for which the adjourning of this judgement was made to the times following after his deceaſe. Yet it is to be conceived, that this was not the ſole cauſe; for Ahaz and other wicked kings of Iudah before had incenſed the Lord much more, and Manaſſeh, and Zedekiah, and Iechoniah, who reigned after, when the judgement was executed, but hereby the Note. coals of Gods wrath were again blown up, as they are by ſinne in the beſt, eſpecially, if extraordinary benefits be abuſed to their own vain ends, and not uſed to Gods glory, from whom they come. Touching the thankeſgiving made and written by Hezekiah, it is ſet forth Eſa. 38. 9, 10, &c. to v. 21. and by the laſt words thereof it ſeemeth to have been compiled to be uſed in the houſe of the Lord, not onely at his going up thither upon the third day before ſpoken of, but alſo at certain times as long as he lived.

V. 12. At that time Berodak Baladan, the ſonne of Baladan, king of Babylon, ſent letters with a gift unto Hezekiah, for he heard that he had been ſick.] 2 Chron. 32. 31. It is ſaid, The Oratours of the Princes of Babylon who ſent to enquire of the prodigy which was done in the earth. Eſa. 39. he is called Merodach Baladan, and it is not only ſaid, that he heard he had been ſick, but alſo recovered. But of what ſtock this Berodak or Merodak was, and how he attained to that kingdome, when as Eſarhaddon the ſon of Sanneherib, is ſaid to have reigned after him, may be a queſtion, ſeeing he that was king of Aſſyria, was king of Babylon alſo, as appeareth in Selmanaſar, who carried Iews away to Babylon, when he ſubdued the kingdome of the Funcii Chrono'. ten tribes, and brought men from thence to Samaria. But it is reſolved by ſome, that this Merodach was vice-roy of Babylon, as alſo his father Baladan had been, under the kings of Aſſyria, but now Sanneherib being dead and his chief ſtrength overthrown, and Eſarhaddon his ſonne young and tender, he waxed bold to take that kingdome abſolutely upon him, the Aſſyrian being ſhaken off, and to ſtrengthen himſelf the more, he ſought the friendſhip of other princes, which had been oppreſſed by the great tyrants of Aſſyria, amongſt whom Hezekiah being one, whoſe part God had ſpecially taken, and for whom he had done wonderfully in delivering him from his ſickneſſe, he ſpecially ſought his friendſhip, wherefore Genebrard Genebrard. in him placeth the beginning of the kingdome of Babylon. But R. Kimhi as Wolphius ſaith, holdeth him to have been the ſon of Eſarhaddon, and king both of Aſſyria and Babylon, which is improbable, both becauſe his title ſhould not then have been altered from king of Aſſyria, to king of Babylon, and the time of his ſending agreeth not, it being in the beginning of Eſarhaddons reign, and therefore not of his ſonnes, after he had reigned twelve years, as Chronologers ſay. But beſides this cauſe of Merodachs ſending to him, concealed in the ſacred hiſtorie, there are two other cauſes expreſſed, viz. to congratulate his recoverie, and to enquire Eccleſ. hiſt. of the prodigie, that was wrought thereabout. Comeſtor ſaith, that he ſent unto him to be his friend and fellow; for at that time both the Babylonians and Medes fell from Eſarhaddon, but the chief cauſe is held to be, for that the Chaldeans, his ſubjects, being Aſtrologers, not being able to yield any naturall reaſon of the extraordinarie length of one day by all their skill, were at length certified, that it was done for Hezekiah his ſake. This the king hearing, ſent to enquire the certaintie of it, and a preſent for honour to him, whom the Sunne, which they worſhipped in that countrey as a god, had ſo much honoured, in ſtaying the ordinarie courſe, and prolonging the day in token of the prolonging of his life. Hezekiah rejoiced at the coming of theſe Embaſſadours, not ſo much for the guift, but to ſee, that his friendſhip was highly eſteemed of by ſo mighty eſteemed of by ſo mighty a king, to be in league with whom, would be a great ſtrengthening to his kingdome againſt the Aſſyrians for time to come. And for the guift ſent, which doubtleſſe was no ſmall matter, but of great worth, as beſeeming the ſender, and the royall majeſtie, to whom it was ſent, it is to be underſtood, that it was and is common amongſt princes thus to honour each other, when they ſend out their embaſſadour, and that king hath thought himſelf mocked of old, to whom another prince ſending, ſent him no preſent. The Hebrew for rejoyced, as the vulgar Latin renders it, hath he heard them, but Eſa. 39. 2. it is rejoyced. Comeſtor addeth, he was again alſo puffed Eccleſ. hiſt.

up in his minde, affirming, that he ſinned once before in the ſame kinde, after his deliverance from Sannaherib, becauſe he ſhewed not himſelf ſufficiently thankfull, although, as Ioſephus ſaith, he offered many euchariſticall ſacrifices, yet becauſe he wrote no canticle of praiſe, as others of his fore-fathers upon ſuch great occaſions had done. Wherefore God pulled down his minde, that was lifted up by that great ſickneſſe, thus he; but as hath been already ſhewed he was much miſtaken, the time agreeing not. But now being left a little to himſelf to try what was in him, as is ſaid, 2 Chron. 32. 31. he was lifted up by all theſe honours done unto him, v. 25. and ſo in great vain-glory he ſhewed his treaſury, ſilver, and gold, and V. 13. precious ſpices, and oyl, and the houſe of his veſſels, &c. Some, ſaith Comeſtor, by the houſe of ſpices underſtand a cell in the temple, into which it was unlawfull to bring any heathens; but Epiphanius ſaith, it was a very long houſe made by Solomon, the entrance whereof was ſo cunningly contrived for ſecreſie, that it could not by the people be found, yea many Prieſts were ignorant of it, and here lay his treaſure and ſpices, then the corpſes of his progenitours, and after them of the high Prieſts and Prophets, which he denuded to them, and ſo defiled their dead bodies with the preſence of heathens, wherefore from that day he was made bar-ren, the contrary to which was true, ſeeing he begat Manaſſeh after, as his age being but twelve yeares at his deceaſe ſheweth. R. Solomon in Lyra ſaith, that he Lyra. ſhewed them the things, that were moſt ſecretly and reverently kept in the temple, viz. the annointing oyle for kings and high prieſts, and the two tables of the teſtimony and the law; and Ierom ſaith, that he ſhewed them not only his own trea- Hieronym. in ſury, but of the temple alſo, for that was in his power, following the Cald. who Eſa. for theſe words, In his whole kingdome, hath, in all his power. But it is not to be thought, that a godly king would goe ſo plainly againſt the law of God, whereby heathens were prohibited coming any nearer to the temple, then the court of the Gentiles; neither is any thing ſaid by him, to have beene ſhewed unto them, but whatſoever was in his houſe, yea Eſ. 39. 2. where more is ſaid, and in all his dominion, nothing is ſpoken of the Lords houſe, and if he had brought them in thither, certainly the Prophet would not have paſſed it over without a particular taxation. It was ſinne enough to ſtirre up the wrath of God to abuſe the favours of God done unto him above all other men unto pride and vain glory which he did at this time, and to comply ſo with heathen idolaters, from leagues and covenants with whom never redounded any good, but hurt unto the people of Iſrael. Yea, hereby he ſhewed ſome diſtruſt in God, who had done ſo mightily for him, and ſome truſt in forreign forces, of which God had ſo lately ſhewed him, that he ſtood in no need. And if Note.
there had been none other fault in him, but the abuſing of Gods ſingular bleſſings to puffe up himſelfe there with, it had been intollerable, it being no leſſe, then a Prov. 16. 4. ſacrilegious robbing of God, who doth all things for himſelfe and his owne glory, Prophet Eſay cometh unto him in the name of the Lord, and threatens him with the carrying away of all his treaſures into Babylon, of which he had ſaid before, that it was a countrey a farre off: for he ſaid unto Eſay, that the Babylonian Embaſſa-dours came from a farre countrey, the diſtance from Babylon to Ieruſalem was H. B. Patriarks travels.

600. miles. But it ſeemeth, that he upon this meſſage humbled himſelfe for this time, and all Ieruſalem with him, and had comfort, that thoſe evils ſhould not come upon the land in his dayes, but after his departure: for 2 Chron. 32. 26. ſomewhat is

is ſaid implying thus much, and here Hezekiah anſwereth the Prophet, as having a promiſe, that they ſhould not come, whileſt he lived, v. 19. The word of the Lord is good, which thou haſt ſpoken, ſeeing peace ſhall be in my dayes, Iunius, Is it not, ſith peace and ſtability ſhall be in my dayes? Junius. So likewiſe Hebrew, Is it not, if peace and truth be in my dayes. Vulg. Lat. Sit tamen pax et veritas in diebus meis. As if he had prayed ſo; Joſephus. and thus Ioſephus takes it, who ſaith, that the godly king was grieved at this meſſage, as unwilling, that his nation ſhould fall into that calamity; but ſeeing God had ſo determined, he prayed that he might paſſe the reſt of the time aſſigned to his life in peace. But the Hebrew verity being otherwiſe, I adhere to Pellican. my former expoſition, from which neither doth Pellican vary, for he findeth no praying here, but a ſubmiſſive reſting in the will of God, who, he knew was propitious, mercifull and holy in all his workes, and injurious to none. Wolphius Wolphius. thinketh, that he ſpake of peace all his dayes, as grounding upon a former promiſe, when Eſay comforted him by propheſying reſtitution to health and prolongation of life, and preſervation from his enemies: but ſeeing thoſe enemies are particularly named Aſſyrians, and here not the king of Aſſyria, but of Babylon is threatened to be ſent to vanquiſh the land, unleſſe he had ſome new promiſe, he could not Hierom. in Eſa. build his confidence upon that. Some Hebrew expoſitours as Ierom ſheweth upon *Iſa.*39. taxe Hezekiah here, as unlike unto Moſes, who was ſo affected to the people, as that he prayeth rather, then they they ſhould ſuffer, to be blotted out of Gods booke: but he contrariwiſe, as not paſſing for the miſeries of his people and poſterity is intent onely to his owne preſervation for his time in peace. But herein they doe moſt injuriouſly traduce this Saint of God, whoſe care and paines were alwayes ſo great for their good. And Ioſephus much better writeth of him, as grieved for them, but neceſſity ſubmitting to Gods will, as he would alſo have done doubtleſſe, although no exception had beene made of the terme of his life to be ſpent in peace. It was not therefore out of a diſlike of Hezekiah his anſwer that Eſay turneth to the people, chap. 40.1. ſaying, Comfort ye, comfort ye my people, &c. as theſe expoſitours would have it, but that they hearing of a captivity to come might not be overcome with griefe. Ambroſe alſo favoureth that of Ioſephus, ſaying, That juſt Hezekiah rejoyced not, that the miſery of captivity ſhould come upon his children, but he could not reſiſt Gods will, and therefore ſubmitted to it as a poore ſervant.

V.18. There is rather thed here to be noted, of what a good ſpirit Hezekiah was, in that he raged not, but patiently received this ſharpe meſſage from the Prophet, as godly Theodoſius bare the cenſure of Ambroſe, honouring him the more for it, in that he ſaid, he thought him onely worthy to be a Biſhop.

Whereas *v.*18. it is ſaid, They ſhall alſo take of thy ſonnes which thou ſhalt beget, and make them eunuchs in the court of the king of Babylon. It appeares, that in the fifteene yeares which he lived, he had more ſonnes beſides Manaſſeh, although mention be made of no more; or rather by his ſonnes are meant his grandchildren foure or five generations after, viz. the children of Iechoniah, who was the ſonne of Iehoiakim, the ſon of Joſiah, the ſon of Amon, the ſon of Manaſſeh his ſon, for theſe alſo came out of him, and were begotten by ſuch as he begat, and therefore may well be meant, when it is ſaid, which thou ſhalt beget. And if he had any other immediate ſonnes beſides Manaſſeh, it cannot be underſtood of them, becauſe they muſt needs be all dead long before the carrying away here ſpoken of, unto which from this time paſſed at the leaſt 100. yeares, ſeeing it was after that Mannaſſeh had reigned 55. Amon 2. Ioſiah 31. and Iehoiakim 11. for after him was Iehoiachin or Iechoniah. 2 *King.*24. who was carryed into Babylon, and other princes, who moſt probably were ſome of them of Hezekiah his poſterity, and then and not before was this propheſie fulfilled.

by the writer of the Kings. But 2 *Chron.*32.27. it is ſaid, after his recovery from his ſickneſs, that he attained to great treaſures of ſilver, gold, and precious ſtones, ſpices, and ſhields, and all deſirable ſtuffe, and ſtore-houſes for proviſion of wine and oyl, and ſtables of horſes and flocks, and cities, &c. all which or ſome of which, viz. treaſures, whereby he compaſſed the reſt, he had gotten before the coming of the Babylonian Embaſſadours unto him, after he was delivered from the danger of the Aſſyrians; for which cauſe, their coming followeth after this, *v.*31. as being not immediately after his recovery, but three or four years haply after, when Baladan had attained the kingdom of Babylon, and enjoyed it without any more oppoſition, from which moſt probably he was not free at the firſt. For he had exhauſted his treaſures ſo to pacifie Sanneherib, that without ſome time coming between to fill them again, he could not have had any ſuch glorious things to ſhew to the Babylonians at their coming, nor in ſo few years neither, but that the huge hoſte of the Aſſyrians being ſo deſtroyed, as hath been ſaid, and the ſpoils of the camp left unto him, he was doubtleſs hereby greatly enriched; and ſo by Gods bleſſing upon him for his piety, he ſoon encreaſed it much more, ſo that it was now a thing worth the ſhewing to great princes, what he had ſo extraordinarily heaped up together, although it were intolerable in him ſo to do to idolaters, who were Gods enemies, as unto his intimate friends, and joying to be counted ſuch to them, and to their lord the king of Babylon, as hath been already ſhewed. By the ſpices here ſaid to be ſhewed, ſaith Rabbi Solomon, ſome underſtand thoſe ſweet ſpices, in which the kings his progenitours were laid, and upon this reaſon they think, that he ſhewed them their ſepulchers, as hath been ſpoken before. But he better expoundeth them of ſweet ſpices, of which the incenſe was made to be burnt daily in the temple. Now as the Kings hath reference to the Chronicles of Judah, for the reſt of Hezekiah his acts, ſo 2 Chron. 32.32. hath reference to the viſion of Eſay, by whom ch. 36,37,38,39. the moſt memorable touching him are alſo ſet forth; but nothing of his riches, unleſs it be in ſpeaking of his ſhewing them to the Babylonian Embaſſadours: yet becauſe Eſay is more full in ſetting down ſome things, as alſo the Kings, he referreth to them both. And ſo concludeth with his death and honourable burial, in the upper part of the ſepulchers of Davids poſterity, all Judah and Jeruſalem doing him honour, by aſſembling from all parts to his burial, v. 33. which in the Kings is altogether omitted, it being onely ſaid, that he dyed, and Manſſeh his ſonne reigned in his ſtead, this other being left to the relation of another, who hath done it indeed briefly, but ſo as that we may conceive, he had no leſs love then wealth, by reaſon of his great piety, wherein he continued to the end, in that it was done ſo to him at his death, as to none of his progenitours, he was placed above all the houſe of David, as he exceeded them all in vertue; and therefore caſt not off the care of poſterity, as ſome have fondly imagined, but have been already confuted.

V. 1: *Aug. de civit. lib.*18.*c.*24.

Wolphius.

M*Anaſſeh was* 12 years old when he began to reign, and reigned 55. years, his mothers name was Hephſibah.] Numa, ſaith S. Auguſtine, reigned at the ſame time over Rome, who encreaſed ſo the number of the gods by making more, that he left no room for himſelf to be placed amongſt them, and Baladan the king of Babylon was alſo idolatrous, the Samian Sybilla was alſo of theſe times. The world then, as we may gather, was full of ſuperſtition, and the Princes of Judah being alwayes prone to the ſame, moſt probably wrought upon the youth of their king to favour this way, and the rather, for the league made by his father with the king of Babylon, whereby he became moſt wicked, as is hereafter ſhewed. Touching his mother, ſome Rabbins ſay, that ſhe was the daughter of the prophet Eſay, as Wolphius hath it; but becauſe he was ſo bad, ſhe that bare ſuch a ſonne is not ſet forth by the name of her father; to leave which to the inventers, Hephſibah ſignifieth, fieth, which pleaſeth me or is acceptable to me; whereby is intimated, that of what parentage ſoever ſhe came, ſhe was a good wife, and according to Hezekiah his heart, ſeeing names are not thus ſingularly commemorated in holy Scriptures, but becauſe they, that bear them, are really ſuch. Wherefore moſt probably, as Manaſſeh came of a good father, ſo likewiſe of a good mother, yet he degenerated, to Note. ſhew, that vertue is not hereditary. Notwithſtanding he lived long, and reigned V. 2. longer then any of the kings of Judah before him, amongſt whom none but Azariah attained to 52. but he to 55. but he ſpent a great part of his time in much miſery for his abominable wickedneſs, wherein he equalled the moſt idolatrous heathens. And in that which is ſaid touching this, firſt it is to be noted, that he was moſt contrary to his godly father, 2. The main parts of his wickedneſs are to be conſidered. For the firſt, whereas his father in the very beginning of his reign endeavoured by all means to ſet up the true worſhip of God, he contrariwiſe put that down; his father ſet the Prieſts and Levites in their order about the temple, he drave them from the temple, ſetting idols prieſts in their room; his father brought even ſome heathens by his piety to the true faith; he by his impiety corrupted many of the faithful; his father honoured much the Prophet Iſaiah, he, as hiſtory ſaith, ſawed him aſunder, having firſt diſhonoured his venerable age by ſcourges, although he were his neer kinſman; his father conſulted with God by his Prophets, but he with the devil by witchcraft; his father had the ſunne and ſtarrs obedient unto him, he worſhipped moſt baſely the ſunne, moon, and ſtars; his father by praying, and piety prevailed to keep away judgements from his people, he by his impiety brought judgements upon himſelf and them; wherefore his father obtained a glorious victory over his enemies to the encreaſe of his honour, no labour or pains in fighting being taken therefore, but he to his great infamy was overcome by his enemy and bound like a ſlave in chaines was carryed into Babylon. Somewhat to this effect alſo hath Joſephus. For the ſecond, his wicedneſs conſiſted of three parts; Idolatry, Homicide, and Magick.

V. 3. Firſt, he turned and built the high places, which Hezekiah his father had pulled
V. 4. down, and ſet up altars in the houſe of the Lord, as Ahaz his grandfather had done.] For by means of evil counſellours about him, who ſwayed him in his childhood, he was perſwaded, that his grandfather was wiſer then his father, and therefore preferred rather to follow the houſe of Ahab, of whom he was deſcended by the mothers ſide: for Ahaz was the ſon of Jotham, the ſon of Uzziah, the ſonne of Amaſiah, the ſon of Joaſh, the ſon of Ahaziah, whoſe mother was Athaliah the daughter of Amri, Ahabs father, who was the ſetter up of more idolatry in Iſrael, then any of his predeceſſours. Wherefore it being now a long time, ſince this ſuperſtition came up and was practiſed even in Judah, the young king might eaſily be made believe, that it was the old religion, and that of Hezekiah new, and ſo to 2 Chro.24.17. ſtand for it, this being put down: for ſo was Joas by the flattery of his courtiers carryed away after the death of Jehoiadah. But hereby the great men of Judah ſhewed, how hollow hearted they were, when as under Hezekiah they had ſhewed all forwardneſs againſt idolatry and for Gods pure worſhip; but now immediatly after his death having an opportunity, they ſoon diſcovered, that their hearts were all this while towards idols.

V. 5. And he ſet up altars in the two courts to all the hoſt of heaven] That is, according Vatablus. to Vatablus, in the inner court of the Levites, and the outer of the Iſraelites; thus defiling all holy places, both temple and courts, in the temple the altar ſet up moſt probably was ſuch an other as Ahaz had ſet up there before to the idol of Damaſcus, theſe in the courts were to the Planets, Saturne, Jupiter, Mars, Sol, &c. having ſeveral images with inſcriptions to make them known: and as Wolphius hath it, not to the Planets onely, but alſo to the fixed ſtarres, and the ſpirits in the aire.

V. 6. And he made his ſon to paſs thorow the fire.] Which he could not do at the firſt, becauſe being but twelve years old he had none, but having begun betimes in his idolatrous courſe, as he grew into more years, he grew ſtill worſe and worſe. Of this horible and moſt unnatural practice of idolaters to their dear children, ſee before upon chap. 16. 3. Yea he did not onely make groves, and ſet up the idol Baal, as is ſaid here, v. 3. but he brought in time that idol into the temple, waxing more audacious againſt God, who had given a ſtreight charge about putting his name there ſo, promiſing, that Iſrael ſhould never be moved out of his V. 7. place. But he nothing regarding this, together with his princes committed this bomination to remove the Lord, as it were, and to ſet up Baal there. In the text it is called the image of the grove, whereupon Vatablus ſaith, that it was an image of a grove, which he had planted, artificially carved; but Dionyſius better, the image which he had placed in a grove, which he would have worſhipped above all others, that is, the image of Baal. And it is ſaid, that the people being decei- V. 9.

forced them not at the firſt then, but ſought to allure them to his idolatry by ſetting up glorious images, and planting pleaſant groves, in which they might walke and delight themſelves, and when by this meanes he ſaw them come to a liking of this, he aſcended this height of impiety to pollute the temple it ſelfe. Neither is V. 10. 11. this all that is ſaid, to aggravate his wickedneſſe, but both he and they being admo-niſhed by prophets, they contemned it, and all the terrible threatenings, which V. 12. 13.

cauſe his law was thus manifeſtly tranſgreſſed, as alſo by cauſing his children to paſſe thorow the fire, which two are cenſured together, Levit. 20. 1, 2, 6, &c. But of theſe devilliſh practiſes ſee before upon Levit. 19. 31. There were two wayes Wolphius.
of the wizzards divining, the one called auſpicium, the other augurium: 1. By beholding their flying. 2. By hearing their ſinging, unto which they added a third, viz. aruſpicium, by looking into the entrailes. So Wolphius who entreateth at large of all ſorts of heathen ſuperſtitions.

blood, that he filled Ieruſalem therewith up to the brim. So that although at the firſt he drew men on by fair deceitfull means, yet afterwards it ſeemeth that he perſecuted, and tyrannically murthered ſuch prophets and other godly perſons, as oppoſed and would not conſent to his idolatries, and other abhominations: becauſe after the relation of Gods threatning againſt him by his prophet, made v. 10, 11, 12, 13, 14, 15. this followeth immediately of his rage and bloudſhed. Who they were that ſuffered under this tyrant, by name is not recorded, onely forſomuch as he is ſaid to have filled Ieruſalem with innocent bloud, alluding unto a floud filling all places where it cometh; we may gather, that many of the common people alſo were murthered, inſomuch, as that through the great numbers who were ſlain, there was as it were a ſea of bloud in the city; and it is generally held, according to Epiphanius, that the Prophet Eſay was one of them that ſuffered by being ſawn Epiphan. lib. de aſunder, and then buried under the oak Ragel. But the Rabbins more circumſtan- prophet. vita & tyrant commanded the tree, with him in the midſt of it, to be ſawn aſunder, to the ſawing of him it is pointed Heb. 11. 37. Lyra ſaith, that this hiſtory is ſet forth in a Lyra.

book called Iebamoth, thus; Becauſe Eſay was uncle to Manaſſeh by the mothers ſide, he durſt not deal with him as with other martyrs, but ſought occaſion againſt him from his writings, Eſa. 6. as hath been ſaid before, hereupon he was condemned to dye; then he prayed unto the Lord, and he cauſed a cedar to open unto him to hide him therein, but he not terrified with the miracle, cauſed him to be ſawn aſunder with an iron ſaw; according to ſome, with a woodden ſaw, to encreaſe his pain, and when he being thus tormented deſired drink, they would give him none, but God ſent ſome down miraculouſly into his mouth. But it is more probable, that Eſay was ſlain for his bold enveighing againſt the ſinnes of the king and his people, Eſa. 57. 3. where he calleth them witches children, and children

Joſephus prayed unto the Lord, &c.] Ioſephus for the Princes of the king of Aſſyria, hath, the Lyra. king of Babylon. But herein, ſaith Lyra, there is no difference; becauſe the King of Babylon, that now was, had been a ſubject of the king of Aſſyria, together with the princes there, but now they were revolted, & Babylon was an abſolute kingdom of it ſelf, as hath been ſhewed before. When he together with his princes, then are called princes of the king of Aſſyria, it is onely ſpoken as they were in times paſt, for that the princes of Babylon are meant, appeareth, becauſe he is ſaid to have been carried into Babylon, and theſe princes are not here ſimply ſaid in Hebrew, to be the princes of the Aſſyrian king, but the princes of the army which was his, viz.
when he came againſt Ieruſalem, for although they who were of the kingdome of Aſſyria were deſtroyed, yet theſe moſt probably eſcaped away alive, and now did no longer live under that kings obedience. The place where he was taken, was Junius. in a queachy place full of thorns and briars, to which Junius ſaith, he fled to hide 1 *Sam.*13.6. himſelf; for ſo did many of Iſrael in the dayes of Saul, for fear of the Philiſtims.
Hierom. in For the great miſery endured by Manaſſeh in Babylon, Jerom ſaith, that he was tradit.Hebr. put into a brazen veſſell full of holes, and therein tormented by fire put about it, wherefore he prayed earneſtly to all the gods, whom he had formerly ſerved, but having no help, he remembred what he had heard his father ſay of the God of Iſrael, that he onely was able to help in diſtreſſe, and would ſave all thoſe that called upon him, and therefore he ſought moſt earneſtly by praier unto him, and was delivered.
But this is generally ſleighted as a Rabinicall invention, becauſe it hath no ground in holy Scripture, and it is improbable, that being brought into this miſery, whileſt he was ſo zealous for his idols, who (it appeared now) could do him no good being in his own land, that he would ſeek unto them in a ſtrange land, to which they had ſuffered him their ſervitour to be carried away. Moreover, for the affliction Chryſoſt. opus endured by him in particular, Chryſoſtome ſaith, that he was fed but with ſo much imperf. in Math. barley bread in a day, and ſo much water mingled with vineger, as might keep him Hom. 1. alive, being all the while bound with chains in the priſon houſe. Which ſheweth, that the particular relations of his miſeries are but conjecturall, none being able to tell, what they were beſides impriſonment and bands, and this was miſery enough for a king to endure. If it be demanded, what quarrell had the king of Babylon or his princes againſt him, that they ſhould come thus againſt him, and uſe him ſo indignly? It is anſwered, that moſt probably he being waxed great, as the kings of Aſſyria had formerly been, was moved out of the ambition of his minde, when Hezekiah was dead, with whom he had contracted friendſhip, to think of ſubduing the land of Iudah, and getting that wonderfull great treaſure, which he heard by his embaſſadours was at Ieruſalem, and ſo ſent out ſome to take the king, which he thought they might eaſily do being young and improvident, and then he might propound his own conditions, before he were again reſtored, to pay him ſuch a ſumme of money down, and to be his tributary under a tribute of ſo much per annum; thus he. But God, who moderateth in all things, had another end in the coming of theſe men againſt him, viz. to puniſh him with grievous affliction, according to the grievouſneſſe of his ſinnes. But it is ſtrange, and different from all other hiſtories, which is here related, in that it is neither ſaid with what forces this expedition was made, nor how he was taken, nor whether being alone, or having any of his princes in his company, he were carried away. Wherefore the ſacred hiſtorian was only intent to the ſhewing of his puniſhment, as being the main thing to be lookt at for uſe, together with his repentance and deliverance, not regarding to ſpeak of other things concomitating the ſame. It is probable therefore, that all which was here done was extraordinary, and not like to any other invaſion or deliverance, any where recorded in holy Scripture. The King Manaſſeh haply being

being ſo horrible a ſinner and bloudſhedder, was ſtricken with inward terrour, as Cain had ſometime been, which made him to flee out of the city, there being no apparant cauſe, and to ſeek to hide himſelf amongſt thorns, and theſe princes at the ſame time being extraordinarily ſtirred up, came into the land of Iudah to get ſome rich prey, being drawn by the fame of the great wealth which was there, and having accidentally lighted upon Manaſſeh, they thinking him prey enough for that time, made him faſt with chaines, and ſo carried him into Babylon, without any other in his company, except Shebnah, who might alſo then be taken and carried away likewiſe, as is propheſied Eſa. 22. 17. according to Cyril. Gretſerus and ſome others, becauſe we never read of any king ſo carried away, will needs have ſome of the princes alſo to have been carried away with him, becauſe alſo the Lord is ſaid to have brought theſe princes againſt them, in the plurall number, & not againſt him in the ſingular, and good reaſon, that they who did partake with him in his ſinne, ſhould likewiſe partake with him in his puniſhment; eſpecially, ſeeing they moſt probably were the inſtigators of him to theſe evils, he being too young to ſet to ſuch works of himſelf. But becauſe the taking and carrying away of none but of him is ſpoken of, it is rather to be held, that he was alone, or at the leaſt without any conſiderable company, haply having but one or two with him, being for their paucity omitted without ſpeaking of them. Whereas ſome conjecture, that the city of Ieruſalem was now alſo taken, it is yet further from the truth, neither doth Ioſephus make mention of any ſuch thing, but ſaith, that Manaſſeh was taken by deceit, haply riding out for his recreation with few attendants, but when he ſaw the Aſſyrian princes, and the danger, wherein he was, he fled into a buſhy place, and lurking there for fear, was taken.

V. 13.

The Lord being prayed unto was entreated, and brought him back againe to his owne kingdome, &c.] As the hand of God was evidently in his carrying away ſo extraordinarily, ſo it was in his bringing back againe; for how or by what meanes this was done it is not ſaid: whereupon ſome conjecture, that it was miraculouſly. Ierom. in the Hebr. tradit. That it was by taking him up as Habbacuk Dan. adject. c. 14.35. by the haire of his head, and carrying him from Ieruſalem to Babylon and thence back againe to his owne place. Chryſoſt. op. imperf. That a fire being ſent by the Lord diſſolved his chaines and ſo he was delivered. But becauſe God hath many wayes to deliver ſuch as call upon him in diſtreſſe, which are unknown to us, the ſafeſt is to paſſe this over undetermined, onely we may be ſure, that he was extraordinarily delivered: and not as Benhadad ſometime had beene out of the hands of Ahab by humbling himſelfe to him and entering into covenants, for then it could not ſo properly have been ſaid, That the Lord brought him back. Moſt probably as he was carried away without battell firſt fought, the kingdome not being indammaged much hereby, ſo without ranſome or covenant for tribute he was returned againſt the will of the king of Babylon and his princes, moſt probably his chaines being loſened, and the priſon doore being opened in the night, as to Peter afterwards, Act. 12. and ſo he departing unſeene. In what yeare of his reign this was done is uncertaine, but the Hebrew Chronicle ſaith, that anno 22. ſome others anno 7. but that is more unprobable, ſeeing he was not by this account come to mans eſtate, when he was carried away, and all the evils that he did, and gods patience and ſending to admoniſh and threaten him imply a far longer time. Then he knew that the Lord was God] That is, experimentally by this judgement brought extraordinarily upon him, and by his extraordinary deliverance. He was not certainly ignorant of it before, but whileſt he lived in idolatry he was not reputed one that knew God, but now he reforming both knew and acknowledged him indeed. In Manaſſeh ſee the unſpeakable mercy of God towards man moſt ſinfull repenting, in that he having been ſo foule a ſinner, as that none was ever like him to the deſtruction of many in body by bloudy perſecution, and of many more doubtleſſe in ſoule by deceiving them, yet he was received to mercy, when he was greatly humbled, and fervently ſought to the Lord by prayer, for the comfort of all diſtreſſed ſinners, but not of audacious ones, who are bold preſuming upon mercy to run into and continue in any wickedneſſe. What words he uſed in praying is not recorded in the Hebrew text but onely in the Apocriphals in another language; V.19. but v. 19. it is ſaid, that his prayer is in the words of Cozi, that is, ſome booke not now extant, but not canonicall Scripture: Of which it is to be held that nothing hath periſhed, or ſhall periſh, whileſt the world laſteth, becauſe by Gods ſingular providence preſerved; whoſe it is the Hebrew Chronicle makes mention of Ozai as a Prophet, ſaying, Vnder the reign of Amon Shellum propheſied, who was high Prieſt and Ozai. By Ozai then is not meant Eſay, as ſome conjecture for he was dead long before Manaſſeh.

V.14. Afterwards Manaſſeh built the outward wall of the city of David, &c.] The Sacred Hiſtorian immediately after the returne of Manaſſeh from his captivity ſheweth his providence to defend himſelfe and his people againſt his enemies, out of whoſe hands he had eſcaped, and then his approving himſelfe to be truly converted Joſephus in the care that he took about religion. Ioſephus contrariwiſe ſaith, That he firſt reformed religion, and then went about thoſe works of defence, neither doth the Sacred Hiſtory plainly croſſe this, but onely relateth the one before the other, and it may be, as in ſome other things, not regarding order, ὕστερον πρότερον, the laſt firſt. For it is moſt probable, that Manaſſeh being brought home againe a convert, did without all delay prepare to offer unto God euchariſticall ſacrifices, and that he might rightly doe this, firſt tooke away the altars ſet up to idols and then erected the altar of the Lord in the proper place, and as he had before drawne the people to idolatry, ſo now he ſought by his godly exhortations to draw them to the Lord, becauſe that therein ſtood their greateſt ſafety, and this might ſoone be done; and then in due time the building of another wall for defence might the better be intended.
The city of David was Zion, the wall now built was firſt weſtward toward Gihon, a book of water in a valley there, then towards the fiſh-gate, which was eaſt, all theſe parts being compaſſed with a ſtrong wall round about, which lay loweſt. And it is moſt likely, that whileſt the Prieſts and Levites were buſied with ſome workmen to help about the temple, others were employed about preparing materials for the wall.

V.17. As in the dayes of other godly kings, who alſo maintained the true religion, ſo

And of Manaſſeh no more is ſaid, but references are made to other bookes and 2 King. 21.18. writings, and Amon his ſonne ſucceeded him. But 2 King. 21.18. he is ſaid to have beene buried in the garden of his houſe, which was the garden of Uzzah, appointing Junius. it thus by his laſt will and teſtament, as Iunius conjectureth, as counting himſelfe unworthy for his ſinnes to be laid in the ſepulchre of the kings of Iudah.
Toſtatus ſaith, that the people would not ſuffer him to be buried amongſt the other kings for his great wickedneſſe paſt, and indeed although he humbled himſelfe and prayed, and was to his kingdome reſtored, yet his wickedneſſe was ſtill remembered and puniſhed afterwards, 2 King. 23.26. & 24.3. It was forgiven to him, and no further puniſhed in his perſon, but in his poſterity, that renewed it, to deterre all men from ſuch profligate wickedneſſe.

Who this Uzzah was from whom this garden is named, is not ſhewed by any that I have ſeene but for ſo much as inheritances paſſed not from one to another family, he was ſome man of the family of David, whoſe garden came to the king, for want of another heire, unleſſe by Uzzah be meant Uzziah the king, who because he died a leper was buried in a field belonging to the kings, 2 Chron. 26.23.
being haply made a garden and for his being buryed there called by his name.

appeareth, that he was borne long after his fathers converſion and ſo educated in the worſhip of the true God all his dayes hitherto. Wherefore it is the more ſtrange, which is there related of him: He did evil in the ſight of the Lord, and walked in all the wayes in which his father had walked, worſhipping thoſe gods, &c.

ſeeing he turned not wizard, nor ſhed innocent bloud, that we read of, but onely in idolatry followed his father? Chryſoſtome ſaith, that he ſinned more, becauſe he more, becauſe he burnt the bookes of the law, which is the more probable, becauſe a book of the law being found amongſt the rubbiſh in the dayes of Ioſiah was brought unto him, as moſt rare. This alſo made his ſinne the greater becauſe he was taught by his fathers example, but contemned or perverted it: laſtly, whereas Manaſſeh repented, he did not, but died in his ſinnes, as 2 Chron. 33.23.

IOſiah was eight years old when he began to reign, and reigned 31 years, &c.] And V. 1.
And he is alſo ſet forth by his mothers name and parentage, which was Iedidiah, ſignifying the beloved of God, and it ſeemeth that ſhe had not this name by chance, but the divine providence appointing it, becauſe ſhe bare ſo excellent a ſonne, Ioſiah, ſignifying the ſalvation of God, as he was named before in the time of Ieroboam, and propheſied 344. years before he was born; and indeed by him was Iſrael ſaved all his time, both ſpiritually by being delivered from the bondage of idolatry, and corporally ſaved from the invaſion of forreign enemies.

V. 2. He did that which was right in the ſight of the Lord, &c.] As his father was moſt wicked, he was moſt godly, for which cauſe he is compared with the firſt king, who was notable for godlineſſe, even David, from whoſe wayes he is ſaid not to have declined; that is, his wayes of ſincere ſeeking to promote the worſhip and ſervice of the true God onely. Whereas v. 3. he paſſeth immediatly from this to repairing of the temple anno 18. of his reign, omitting to ſay what good he did before.

2 Chro. 34. 3. This defect is ſupplied 2 Chr. 34. 3. In the 8 year of his reign he being yet a child, he began to ſeek the Lord, and in the 12, he cleanſed Iudah and Ieruſalem, from the high places, groves, and images, &c. It ſeemeth, that he was godly brought up, in that he began ſo ſoon to declare himſelf, what courſe he would take, viz. follow on in the ſteps of David; which is meant, when he ſaith, that he then began to ſeek the Lord. Before this he was too young to make any ſuch expreſſion, and in that he did it now being but ſixteen years old, it appears that the grace of God wrought betimes in his heart, and other youth ſhould hereby be ſtirred up to do the like.
Note. Such an other was our Henry the 5th, who being diſſolute before, ſuddenly turned ſaint, being very young; and Edward the ſixt was another very Ioſiah. In the 12 year, when he was but 20, he ſought to reform others under his dominion, by demoliſhing all idols and their appurtenances in all places, yea in thus doing he proceeded ſo farre, that he beat the images and altars of Baal to duſt, and burnt Baals prieſts bones upon them; and paſſing out of the bounds of the kingdome of Iudah, he purged the cities alſo of Manaſſeh, Ephraim, Simeon, and Nephtali, yea all the parts of the land of Iſrael. And how hee proceeded in doing this, is more particularly ſhewed, and more largely, 2 King. 23. 4. although this relation be there miſplaced. For it followeth after the repairing of the temple and the covenant making, in the eighteenth, &c. of Ioſiah, whereas this was done from the 12 to the eighteenth, wherefore it ſeemeth that the writer of the Kings regarded not order ſo much, but onely to ſet truly down the particulars done. And the writer of the Chronicles putting things in order, regarded not ſo much to relate every particular, as being a thing done before, and therefore is ſo brief, as that without any mention making of purging the temple, wherewith indeed this godly king is ſaid to have begun, 2 King. 23. 4. he paſſeth on to the worke of his eighteenth year, wherein order was taken for repairing the temple. That we may then more fully underſtand how Ioſiah proceeded, in purging Iudah and Ieruſalem, we muſt look back from the Chronicles to the 2 Kings 23. 4. He commanded firſt Hilkiah the prieſt and other prieſts, to carry out of the houſe of the Lord, all the inſtruments of Baal, &c. and burnt them, and carried the aſhes thereof to Bethel, which was, as Junius noteth, under the dominion of the kings of Iudah, as being taken from Ieroboam, by Abijam the ſonne of Rehoboam, 2 Chron 13. 19. and becauſe it was by Ieroboam made a place of abhominable idolatry, this godly king to diſgrace it the more, cauſed this baſe duſt to be carried thither, as to a moſt prophane place, and ſoon after upon the altar there, burnt mens bones, and then brake it down and burnt it to aſhes, v. 15. What theſe veſſels were, it is not ſaid, but it may be conceived, that as for the ſervice of the Lord there were precious veſſels of gold and ſilver, as cenſers, baſons, diſhes, bowles, ſpoons, &c. ſo there were many ſuch for ſuperſtitious uſes about Baal, and the hoſte of heaven. Yet as precious as they were, Ioſiah thought them not fit to be put to any other uſe, then to be burnt to powder, as the curſed goods of Iericho, that there might remain no remembrance of them, for the entangling of others afterwards. And the like care is hereby commended to all godly princes, and not to do as Manaſſeh, when he turned to remove appurtenances of idolatry onely, and to caſt them out, ſeeing ſo they may ſoon be brought in again, as thoſe that he caſt out were by Amon, but utterly to aboliſh them. Moreover in ſpeaking of the veſſels made to Baal, it is added, and to the grove, which was, ſaith Wolphius, a place of pleaſure near to the Lords houſe, in one of the courts, where men and women met together and ſatisfied their fleſhly luſts under the the ſhade of the trees planted there. But more probably, by grove here is meant the image of the grove before ſpoken of 2 King. 21. 7. becauſe veſſels were not made to groves, but to idols, for the ſervice of which, groves uſed to be planted where they were worſhipped. 2 Chron. 34. 4. The duſt of this burning, which is ſaid to have been carried to Bethel, is carried and ſtrewed upon dead mens graves, that is, the graves of idolaters, to ſhew the baſeneſſe both of idols and idolaters, and what they ſhall come unto, viz. to be as the duſt, which is troden under foot, that none might be infatuated thus any more, to worſhip any ſuch baſe and refuſe ſtuffe.

2 King. 23. 5. And he cauſed to ceaſe the wizards, &c. or prieſts of the idols.] Hebr. כמרים ſometime rendred one of theſe wayes by Ierom, and ſometime another; ſome, ſaith Wolphius, think that the word cometh from burning, becauſe they carried fire to burn incenſe to their idols. Pagninus deriveth the word from נכמר, to be blacked, becauſe idols prieſts did put on black garments. Whatſoever they were, it is certain, that they were the ſervitors of idols, being ſet up and having maintenance from the wicked kings of Iudah, to do this impious ſervice, like unto which are Jeſuites and Monks, to whom maintenance hath been given from princes and great perſons, who were ſuperſtitious, to perform blinde devotions, whereby they thought good would redound to their ſouls, and to their whole families. Note. But as Joſiah cauſed them to ceaſe doing ſo any more, diſſolving thoſe neſts of unclean birds, and converting their means doubtleſſe to better uſes; ſo ſhould all Chriſtian kings do, that would come into favour with God.

V. 6. He made the grove alſo to be taken out of the houſe of the Lord, and burnt it in the valley of Chedron, &c.] This grove is called the idol of the grove, ch. 21. 7. which Manaſſeh made, touching which ſee there; it is not to be underſtood as properly ſpoken of a grove planted with trees, but of an image called the grove, or grove image, becauſe brought out of a grove thither; which is alſo intimated, in that it was carried as other images and veſſels, and burnt in Chedron, and the duſt thereof was ſtrewed upon mens graves, whereas not duſt, but aſhes come of the burning of trees. And indeed it cannot be conceived, how a grove ſhould be in the houſe of the Lord, or in ſo ſhort a time, for Amon ſtood but two years, neither did he any other thing, but renew the idolatry of his father Manaſſeh, who planted no grove there, but ſet up the image of the grove, which alſo after his repentance, he is ſaid to have caſt out, 2 Chron. 33. 15.

Verſ. 7. He deſtroyed alſo the houſes of maſculine harlots or Sodomites, Junius Junius. The ſtewes in the houſe of the Lord. The Vulgar Lat. The litle houſes of the effeminate. Lyra. That is, ſaith Lyra, of the prieſts of that idol, who are ſo called, becauſe they were gelt. But of this ſee before in the time of Aſa, 1 King. 15. 12. and of Iehoſhaphat, chap. 22. 47. Where women weaved little houſes to the grove. That is, ſaith Lyra, curtaines, wherewith being encloſed as in little houſes they proſtituted themſelves to ſuch as came unto them to the honour of the idol, as the prieſts commanded them, holding therefore that they did well, for ſo much as they did not ſo out of luſt, but in obedience. Oh a nation blindly lead, that could be made beleeve they did well, when they conſented to ſuch foule and abominable ſinning, and therefore ſuch as needed purgation at this time. Note. Neither is it improbable, ſeeing Popiſh prieſts at this day have the faith of ſilly women as much ſubjected to them, as thoſe idolatrous prieſts had.

Verſ. 8. And bringing the prieſts out of the cities of Iudah, he defiled the high places, where they burnt incenſe from Gebah to Beerſhebah.] That is, from one end of the kingdome of Iudah to another, for Gebah was the fartheſt city Northward in the tribe of Benjamin, as Junius noteth from 1 King. 15. 16. and Beerſheba Junius. in the tribe of Judah Southward, Judg. 20. 1. [And the high places of the gates] That is, not ſparing the idols of any, but deſtroying even thoſe, that were ſet up by great men, and rulers, whoſe judgement ſeats were in the gates of the cities and there they had ſet up altars, amongſt whom Iehoſhuah governour of the city Ieruſalem is named as the chiefe. Wolphius thinketh, that the prieſts, who Wolphius. are ſaid to have offered incenſe in the high places, did it to idols, but Lyra better, Lyra.

to the Lord, yet becauſe the temple was the onely place, they were cauſed to leave thoſe places, they being now deſtroyed, which divers godly kings had before ſpared, and permitted ſacrificing in them; which they would not doubtleſſe have done, unleſſe the ſacrificing there had been to the Lord, as Manaſſeh after his converſion, and Aſa, who is ſaid in the Chronicles to have deſtroyed the high places, but 2 King. 15. the people are ſaid ſtill to have ſacrificed in them, he deſtroyed thoſe, that were made to idols, but permitted thoſe wherein it was ſacrificed to the Lord. Moreover, that which here followeth, viz. that they had portions of food allowed them to live upon after this, ſheweth that they offered not to idols, for if they had done ſo, they had been idols prieſts; and ſo moſt probably ſhould have beene ſlaine, as other idolatrous prieſts were, v. 20. He ſlew all the prieſts of the high places. But theſe were onely from henceforth put from their miniſtery for that their offence, but had maintenance out of the prieſts meanes allowed unto them, as long as they lived, but no more, I ſuppoſe, then neceſſary for their ſuſtenance, becauſe otherwiſe they ſhould have ſuffered onely in their honour, but being for this eaſed of the burden of his ſervice, it would have been counted as no Note. puniſhment for their errour paſt. After this example ſuch as are taken from the executing of the office of the Popiſh prieſthood, ought to be judged unfit to be imployed in the reformed, if without them enough others may be had: if not, ſuch as turne, may be imployed, but the reſt not, ſeeing there is no agreement be- 2 *Cor.*6.16. twixt God and idols.

V.10. Verſ. 10. He alſo defiled Tophet in the valley of the ſon of Hinnom.] That is, a pleaſant place nigh unto Ieruſalem, dedicated to the idol Moloch, where they uſed to make their very children to paſſe through the fire, being called Tophet, ſignifying tympanum a taber, becauſe the prieſts of that idol played upon tabers at the time of ſacrificing, that the noiſe of the children crying which were offered, might not be heard, as is more at large ſhewed upon Levit. 18. 21. and in the hiſtory of Ahaz. And he is ſaid to have defiled this place, that is, ſaith Pellican, by filling Pellican. it with dead mens bones, that it might be unfit for ſacrificing there any more, ſee verſ. 14.

V. 11. Verſ. 11. He alſo tooke away the horſes, which the kings of Iudah had given to the Sunne, &c.] That is, ſome idolatrous kings of them. But whether theſe were images of horſes onely and of a chariot, wherein the heathen thought the Sunne to be drawne about; or very horſes drawing a chariot in honour of the Sunne, is doubted. Chriſtian expoſitours for the moſt part hold the firſt, R. Solomon the ſecond, ſaying, That every morning ſome were carryed out in that chariot at the Sun riſing towards it to ſalute the Sunne in the kings name. Wolphius conjectureth, Wolphius. that the image of the Sunne was placed in a glorious chariot, and that horſes being kept for the purpoſe were at certaine times made to draw it about in honour of the Sunne, which he groundeth upon Macrobius, who ſaith, That there was amongſt the Heliopolitans a golden image of Apollo, or the Sunne without a beard carried about in a chariot after the manner of the images of the gods, which were carryed in pompe at the time of the Circenſian playes. And this ſeemeth to me moſt probable, becauſe it is ſaid, The kings gave them to the Sunne, not made them, as if they had beene images, and he cauſed them to ceaſe, as ſpeaking of things living, as before of idols prieſts, v. 5. whom no man doubteth, but that he ſlew them, and why ſhould we not then in like manner hold, that here the killing of theſe horſes dedicated to ſuch ſuperſtition is meant, and the rather becauſe he is mediately ſaid to have burnt the chariot with fire, and why not the horſes alſo, if they had been onely images of horſes? The place, where this idolatry was done was at the entering of the Lords houſe, that is, Eaſtward, as thought moſt apt for the Sunnes riſing there, and yet not very neare that houſe, becauſe it is ſaid to have been in the ſuburbs, at the chamber of Nethanmelech.

Junius. This idolatry Iunius noteth out of Strabo to have beene derived from the Perſians, and he ſaith, They were the ſuburbs of the city of David, that is, Sion, where the Idol ſtood.

V. 12. Verſ. 12. And the altars which were upon the roofe of Ahaz his parlour, which the kings of Iudah had made.] So exceſſive was this Ahaz in multiplying places of idolatry, that he ſet up ſome on the top of his owne houſe, and moſt probably Amon the ſonne of Manaſſeh did the like, and Manaſſeh alſo, for which it is ſaid, [which the kings of Iudah had made] but Ioſiah pulleth them downe, and the altars ſet up firſt by Manaſſeh in the courts of the Lords houſe, and reſtored againe after that they had been by him upon his repentance caſt out, by Amon his ſon.

V. 13. The high places alſo, which were before Ieruſalem ſet up by Solomon, &c.] Of Solomons ſetting up of theſe high places ſee before, 1 King. 11.7. and what idols thoſe were to the honour of whom he ſet them up. And the deſtroying of theſe is ſpecially named, becauſe this fact argued a notable reſolution againſt all that might be ſaid in regard of Solomons wiſdome, who ſet them up, Art thou wiſer then Solomon? Ioſiah cared not what might be ſaid, ſeeing he did that, which true zeale and piety required. Note. And in his example we are taught not to be moved to impugne the leſſe any ſuperſtition in the Church, becauſe men moſt eminent for wiſdome and learning have long agoe brought it in, uſed, and countenanced it; for if it be a corruption, true piety will not be hereby hindered from beating it downe, ſeeing in the wiſeſt there is ſome folly, and in the moſt holy ſome blemiſhes which we muſt take heed of, although we reverence them for the excellencies that were in them.

It ſhall ſeem ſtrange, that theſe abhominations were put down no ſooner in the dayes of ſome other godly king his predeceſſour, as of Aſa, Iehoſhaphat, or Hezekiah? It is to be held, that although they were godly and zealous, yet God had one all that while in his minde called Ioſiah, to bring into the world, who ſhould in purging the Church ſome what exceed them all, that if after this they ſhould fall to idolatrie again, they might the more juſtly be given over into the hands of their enemies as deſperate, as indeed they were. Note. And herein haply was figured out, what ſhould be done in theſe latter dayes of the Goſpel, in which a great reformation of religion hath been made, but it ſhall come to more perfection yet, the Iewes being alſo converted; and when after this a relapſe ſhall be made again, deſtruction by the Lords laſt coming to judgement ſhall ſoon follow. This doubt alſo touching former godly kings, why they ſuffered theſe abhominations to ſtand in their dayes, hath been further reſolved upon. 2 King. 18.4. Of theſe high places it is ſaid, as of Tophet, v. 10. he defiled them; and to expreſſe how, v. 14. he is ſaid to have filled the places, where idols were worſhipped, with dead mens bones.

V. 15. And he deſtroyed the altar at Bethel, which Ieroboam had made.] What power he had thus to do, ſeeing Bethel was in the kingdome of Iſrael, over which, according to the firſt diviſion of the two kingdomes, the houſe of David had no dominion, ſee before upon v. 4. But forſomuch as v. 19. he is ſaid to have deſtroyed idolatrie alſo, in all the cities of Samaria, and 2 Chron. 34.6,7. in Simeon and Manaſſeh, Ephraim, and Nephthalim, and even all over Iſrael, which were ſubject to the Aſſyrians, it is apparant, that his zeal carried him in his holy warre againſt idolatrie, not onely throughout his kingdome of Iudah, and other parts actually under his dominion, but alſo through all other parts, where any Iſraelites yet dwelt, as belonging anciently to the houſe of David, and without doubt being now willing to ſubject themſelves to that houſe again, or brought under by his power, which thoſe poor people were not able to reſiſt. Onely it is probable, that he bauked the citie of Samaria it ſelf, as being inhabited by ſtrangers. Junius. Iunius thinketh, that Ephraim Manaſſeh, &c. in this place are meant onely ſuch as in thoſe tribes were willing, becauſe in the dayes of Hezekiah his grandfather, it is ſaid, that many of them came to the paſſeover to Ieruſalem. But in ſuch places doubtleſſe, they would of themſelves have beaten down idolatrie, and Ioſiah ſhould not have needed to come amongſt them for that purpoſe. Wherefore I think rather, that he did this whether they of the place were willing or unwilling, not without ſome reluctation and danger, which might follow to him from the king of Babylon, or Aſſyria, when he ſhould hear of his bold attempt amongſt a people ſubject unto him, in a matter of ſo great conſequence, viz. the alteration of religion, which commonly beareth more ſway with conſcionable men, then any other thing. This then ſhewed a moſt great courage in Ioſiah, carrying through all difficulties; and the difficultie of doing this will appear the greater, if we conſider how long idolatrie had continued in the kingdome of Iſrael to take the deepeſt rooting; viz. even from the beginning of that kingdome, in which there was never any other king but an idolater. Touching the altar at Bethel in particular, it is noted, that his deſtroying that was propheſied of in Ieroboams time 1 King. 13. and alſo the burning of mens bones firſt upon it, which was now fulfilled by Ioſiah his taking them out of their ſepulchres and burning them there, thus to defile and make unfit for any ſuch worſhip for ever this place, which had been formerly this way ſo groſſely abuſed. Whoſe bones theſe were it is not ſaid, 2 Chron. 34. 5. he is ſaid, to have burnt prieſts bones upon their altars; whereby we may gather, that theſe were the bones of idolatrous prieſts, who had ſerved there in their life time; and if any ſhall think hardly of this fact againſt the bones of the dead, which had no ſenſe of that which was done unto them, it is juſtified by the propheſie, wherby he was appointed ſo to do, and the Lord would have it ſo done, to ſhew the abomination wherin he had idols ſervitors, in that he provided Note. that they ſhould have no reſt in their graves, as others commonly have, but be diſgraced to the uttermoſt; and the burning of their bones after death, was a demonſtration of their burning in hell fire, to which, idolatry and other foul wickedneſſes do make all men liable. And this judgement was juſt, that they who had ſacrificed beaſts to the devill, ſhould for their beſtiall ſtupidity ſhewed herein, be themſelves ſacrificed as beaſts; the devill being thus diſhonoured in his ſervitors, where they him moſt had honoured. Whereas the Antichriſtian ſect have ſome time done the like, againſt the oppugners of idols and Antichriſt, as againſt Robert Groſted biſhop of Lincoln, and Bucer, it was by a zeal, but not according to knowledge, as in thoſe Joh. 16. 1. of whom Chriſt ſpeaketh, the time ſhall come, that they which kill you ſhall think that they do God ſervice. For the time that this was propheſied of, it was above 300 years before, as hath been already noted, and not till now accompliſhed, whereby

V. 17. And he ſaid, What title is that which I ſee? the men of the place ſaid, it is the ſepulchre of the man of God, &c.] Becauſe Ioſiah noted this ſepulchre above all the

R. Solomon. ſtatus, that he was moved by the inſtinct of the ſpirit to note it, that his bones might reſt in quiet. R. Solomon, that bryars growing about the other ſepulchres, here grew balm; for the Rabbins have inventions for all things. However, it was noted and declared, what ſepulchre it was, and it was left untouched; and thus the old prophet, who had deceived this, reſted in quiet alſo, ſeeing he was laid in the ſame ſepulchre. But the greateſt wonder is, that the men of that place ſo well knowing this, were not moved to abdicate idolatrous worſhip. But moſt probably they beleeved not, till they ſaw it fulfilled.

V. 19. From thence the king going on to Samaria her cities, deſtroyed all the high places, and burnt the prieſts upon their altars. 2 Chron. 34. 7. He is ſaid, to have deſtroyed all the idols throughout all the land of Iſrael; that is, where the Iſraelites inhabited, with whom he had to do. But in Samaria, where ſtrangers inhabited that were of other nations, it is not likely that he medled: becauſe alſo it is ſaid, 2 King. 17. 41. They feared the Lord, but ſerved idols, both fathers, and children, and childrens children to this day. Then he returned to Ieruſalem.

All this being done from the twelfth of Ioſiah to his eighteenth year, that is, in ſixe years, in which time alſo it ſeemeth, that a collection was made for the repairing of the temple, now the godly king taketh order for this work. 2 King. 22. 3.
2 King. 22. 3. In the eighteenth year of his reign, he ſent Shaphan to the houſe of the Lord, to bid Hilkiah the high Prieſt prepare the mony, which the porters had gathered of the people, &c. Nothing had been done for the reparation of the temple, that we reade of, ſince the time of Ioaſh and Iehoiadah, the high Prieſt, which was before this 234 years, 18 of Ioaſh, Amaziah 29, Vzziah 52, Iotham 16, Ahaz 15, Hezekiah 29, Manaſſeh 55, Amon 2, Ioſiah 18. Wherefore it is probable, that it was in great decay again, which being eſpied then in the twelfth year of his reign, the temple was purged, and order, as is here intimated, was preſently taken to collect moneys for this work, as had been done before under Ioaſh, 2 *Kin.*12.4. where the ſame is ſaid, that is here, of putting the moneys collected into the hands of overſeers of the work, and not requiring an account, and therefore ſhall not need to be here expounded again. 2 *Chron.*34.8. Onely it is to be underſtood, that 2 Chron. 34. 8. things are more exactly ſet down, for it is ſaid not onely that Shaphan the Scribe was ſent, but alſo with him Maaſiah the governour of the city, and Ioaſh the recorder, to confirm the houſe of the Lord, ſo Iunius; but the vulgar Latin; to repair; reſpecting rather the ſenſe, then the proper ſignification of the word.

V.9. Who came to Hilkiah and delivered unto him the moneys gathered of the Manaſſites, Ephraimites, and all Iſrael and Iudah by the Levites the porters, when they returned to Jeruſalem.] Whereby it appeareth, that there was not a cheſt ſet with an hole, as in Ioaſh his time to put moneys in, but that whileſt Ioſiah went about deſtroying idols and altars in all places, they went about gathering moneys for this worke. And in ſpeaking of the work to be done, he addeth, Which is not in Kings: and for the roofe of the houſes which the kings of Iudah had deſtroyed] 11. Junius. That is, as Junius conjectureth, of the Prieſts and Levites houſes about the temple, which haply Manaſſeh, when he perſecuted and ſlew the prieſts oppoſing him in his idolatry threw downe, and Amon likewiſe, if he upon his repentance repaired them againe. V. 12. Moreover it is here more expreſſe, to whom the moneys for this work were delivered without calling them to an account, becauſe they were moſt faithfull, viz. the overſeers of the work, Iaſaph and Obadiah, Levites, Merarites, &c. Pellican. Note. And ſuch, ſaith Pellican, ought much more to be made Biſhops, that is, overſeers of the ſpirit: building under the Goſpel, and not any unfaithfull, or not throughly approved for their piety and good conſcience.

V.14. And when they brought forth the money which had been brought into the houſe of the Lord, Hilkiah found the booke of the Law, &c.] It ſeemeth, that the Levites, who gathered theſe moneys, v. 9. brought them to the high prieſt and ſo they were laid up in the treaſury of the temple, untill the kings officers coming, they were before them brought forth againe by the care of the high prieſt, as had beene done in Ioaſh his time, that they together might take order with the overſeers of the worke to have all things done herewith, that were needfull about the temple. But whereas in Ioaſh his time beſides reparations, that were done, divers gold and ſilver veſſels alſo are ſaid to have been made of the overplus money, 2 *Chron.*24.14. here nothing is ſpoken of them although ſome, becauſe the word conflatur pecunia, is uſed in the Vulgar Lat. hold it to be obſcurely intimated, becauſe that word is uſed to ſet forth the making of veſſels of ſilver, but Iunius renders it better, abſolue, and if the making of it out into veſſels were meant, what ſhould there have beene for the reparations? It is moſt probable, that Hezekiah reigning ſo lately, from whoſe time no veſſels were taken out of the temple, he left it ſufficiently furniſhed, being a king of ſo great wealth, as he was, and ſo there was at this time no need of ſupplying theſe, although Ioſephus, who is in many things of little credit, ſaith the contrary. Salliam.

Touching the book of the Law ſaid here at this time to be found accidentally as Hilkiah took out the money out of the cheſt in the treaſury, it may ſeeme ſtrange, that it ſhould be ſpoken of as ſo rare, ſeeing ſuch a book was appointed to be kept alwayes in the Arke, and alſo by the king, that he might continually read therein: *Exod.*25.16. *Deut.*17. ſome of the Hebrews ſay, that Amon had burnt the books of the Law, which he could finde, in ſo much as it was thought, that they had all periſhed; and if it were ſo, no marvaile, although this being found was produced, as a thing ſo rare and preſently carryed to the king. How ever, it is certaine, that ſo few books of the Law remained in the land, by what meanes ſoever they were deſtroyed, that neither the high prieſt, nor the great Princes of Iudah knew, where to finde one at that time, till that Hilkiah lighted accidentally upon this which haply his predeceſſour ceſſour had hidden here from wicked Amon, and then dying left it, no man knowing thereof. For it may be conceived, that there were in thoſe dayes very few ſuch bookes, before that any thing was done againſt them, becauſe we read not of any but that put in the Arke, and a copy before the prieſts, the Levites, and another written out of that for the kings uſe, *Deut.*17.15,16. Of the Levites copy ſee alſo, *Deut.*3.19. and how it was ordained, that they ſhould reade out of this book to the people at the feaſt of tabernacles, and the Law ſhould be written in plaſter upon ſtone in a publique place, where every one might read it. In proceſſe of time notwithſtanding it ſeemeth, that they were multiplyed ſo, that in every Synagogue there was one under the hand of the Rector or Ruler of the Synagogue, becauſe it is ſaid, that Moſes was read in their Synagogue every Sabbath day, and becauſe this reading and expounding, (which commonly went together for which it is ſaid, Moſes is preached when he is read; and Ezra is ſaid to have done thus) was by the prieſts; it is ſaid, The prieſts lips ſhall preſerve knowledge, and they ſhall enquire the law at his mouth. The ten Commandements were indeed at the firſt made common, for every father was bidden to write them upon the poſts of his houſe, and to talke of them to his children continually, that they alſo might know them, but all the books of Moſes here called the book of the law were more rare, as may be gathered from that which hath been ſaid, till that afterwards divers copies being written out, every Synagogue was furniſhed with one, and moſt probably ſome, that were godly diſpoſed, were at the charge to have them in their private houſes. If it had beene ſo yet in Amons time, he could not ſo eaſily have deprived the Church of this treaſure, and now that one was preſerved in the treaſury unknowne to any man living, it was the wonderfull providence of him that was the Authour of this bleſſed book, that although heaven and earth ſhall paſſe away, yet not one jot or title of the Law ſhould periſh till all be fulfilled. And whereas not onely the books of the Law doe ſo much abound amongſt us, but of the Goſpel alſo at this day, we ſee, how much we are bound to God, if the commonneſſe of theſe divine books make us not to ſleight and neglect them.

2 *King.*22.8.
Hieronym.
R. Solomon.

The book thus found by the high prieſt was by him delivered to Shaphan, who carryed it to the king, and after relation made of the moneys taken and delivered for the building, he told him of this book, and read it before him; and when Joſiah the king heard it he rent his garments, &c. The place in which he read, that troubled the good king ſo much, was as Ierom conjectureth, *Deut.*8.9. but there be many Chapters more in that book conteining terrible threatenings againſt tranſgreſſours of the Law, in hearing any of which, and conſidering the wickedneſſe of that land a tender heart could not but be ſmitten. For both his fathers had foulely ſinned and the people by groſſe idolatryes, which never goe unaccompanied with many other abominations, for which he ſaw, that grievous judgements hanged over the land, and therefore he ſent immediately to enquire of the Lord by Huldah, a Propheteſſe, by what means they might be prevented, and moſt probably that ſhe might pray for the averting of them, as Hezekiah had formerly ſent unto Eſay, when the kingdome was in danger by Sanneherib, the king of Aſſyria. Of rending garments to ſhew the ſorrow of the hart hath been ſpoken before, but for the perſon, to whom he ſent, it may ſeeme ſtrange, that it was not to Ieremy rather, being a Prophet of more note and a man, then to a woman: for that he had begun to propheſie five yeares before this appeareth, Ier. 1. 2. even in anno 13. of Joſiah, whereas this was done anno 18. ſo that they doe ill, who bring a reaſon of this from his minority, ſaying, that he had not yet begun, or being but young was not ſo venerable. And as ill doth R. Solomon in ſaying, that the king feared to ſend for him, becauſe he thought he would be more rigid; but a woman, who is by nature more tenderly affected, more milde. For both the king knew, that either of them would ſpeake, as God directed without varying any jot therefrom, for even ſo Balaam himſelfe had done; and being ſo caſt downe by hearing the book read, he doubted not certainly, but that from either of them both he ſhould heare of comfort.

The cauſe then of his ſending to Huldah rather then to Ieremiah was, for that ſhe dwelt nearer, even in ſome part of Ieruſalem. For ſhe is ſaid to have been the wife of Shallum the keeper of the wardrop and to have dwelt in Ieruſalem in Miſhneh, for ſo the Septuagint read it, reteining the Hebrew word, but the Vulgar Lat. and other expoſitours render it [in ſecunda] that is, either the ſecond gate of the wall, as Jerom, or upon the ſecond wall; for Hezekiah built another wall, as Lyra, or the ſecond part of the city, as ſome others dividing it either into two or into foure parts, as Wolphius ſaith. But Ieremiah his dwelling was at Anathoth in Benjamin about two miles from Ieruſalem. And haply he was at this time further off, reproving and threatning ſinne in another part of the land of Iſrael, to which he was ſent. And it was not without a ſpeciall providence, that they went to her, that this weaker ſexe might not be deſpiſed; but forſomuch, as ſometime God hath vouchſafed to make women inſtruments of revealing his will touching things to come, as well as men, as Deborah before, and Miriam the ſiſter of Moſes, and Hannah after, &c. they might according to their good endowments, have their due honour, and that marriage might not be vilified ſo much as it is, amongſt popiſh teachers, ſeeing it hath pleaſed God to inſpire with his ſpirit, even married women, and men; for ſome of the prophets were married men, and the high Prieſt alſo, who oft times propheſied, as high Prieſt of that time, as Caiaphas did. Whereas Wolphius ſeeketh a proof of propheteſſes under the new Teſtament, from 1 *Cor.*11. where it is ſaid, A woman praying or propheſying with her head uncovered; ſaying, that although other women muſt in the congregation be ſilent, yet hereby it is ſhewed, that ſuch as had the ſpirit of propheſie, were left at liberty to ſpeak there; he is in this contrary to the current of other expoſitours, who generally hold, that they are ſpoken of as propheſying, that are preſent at the propheſying of the word. And although women have propheſied even under the new Teſtament, yet it hath not been publikely in the congregation, but privately.

Note.

Hieron.lib.2. cont. Pelagium.

But to return again to Huldah, ſome Hebrews think, that Shellum her husband was uncle to Ieremiah his father; whereas alſo ſome expound the wardrope of the prieſts, others expound it of the king, and Jerom gathereth yet ſomewhat more from their going to her a woman, viz. that this was done to the reproach of men in thoſe dayes, and to ſhew, that there was not a good man, who was worthy to be conſulted with. But how this can ſtand, ſeeing Ieremiah lived then, and Baruch, and Zephaniah, I cannot ſee.

V. 15.

Say to the man that ſent you unto me, &c.] She doth not ſay [to the man] without adding any word to ſet forth his dignity, out of a minde neglecting to give honour to ſo great a perſon, but as Gods deputy ſhe onely uttereth the words of God, with whom there is no reſpect of perſons, or giving of titles, but the king is as another man. Yet when ſhe cometh to ſpeak comfort to him, ſhe altereth her phraſe, and ſaith; But to the king of Iudah, &c. v. 18. To intimate, that although a king is not made by his dignity to differ from another ordinary man before God, yet when he is godly, he ſhall be honoured even before him, as he is, with the title of a King, or the Captain of my people, according to the name whereby God calleth Hezekiah to Eſay, when he ſent him unto him. Her ſaying unto him from the Lord, conſiſteth of two parts; Firſt of a threatning to the place and to the inhabitants, of all the judgements contained in the book, which ſhould not be turned away, together with the reaſon, becauſe they forſook the Lord, and offered incenſe to other gods, this being the greateſt provocation of all others, and therefore ſolely mentioned, although they were full of other wickedneſſes alſo, as all other idolaters are. And ſhe ſpeaketh of that which was written in the book for the credit thereof, that we might know all things to be moſt true and certain, which are herein written, and ſo tremble at hearing the judgements threatned in this book. And ſhe threatneth theſe judgements without any hope of reverſing them, becauſe the Lord, who put theſe words into her mouth, ſaw into the wicked hearts of the people, although when the king made a reformation, they ſeemed to conſent unto it. For that their hearts were ſtill bent to idolatry, which was now deſtroyed, appeareth, becauſe Ioſiah was no ſooner dead, but the kingdome returned to the former vomit, doing as in the worſt dayes of Manaſſeh, both by idolatry and ſhedding innocent cent bloud, chap. 24. 3. and then they fell into the hands of the king of Babylon, according to this threatning, and others before going. Otherwiſe, if their hearts had been as Ioſiahs, they ſhould not have been threatned with the abiding of Gods judgments upon them, without any means of eſcape, Note. ſeeing he is gracious to all that truly repent; even when his threatnings are moſt peremptory and terrible, as to Nineveh, and Manaſſeh, although not amending when he was threatned, yet amending afterwards, his compaſſion was extended towards him, to take him out of his miſerable captivity, and reſtore him to his kingdome, as hath been before ſhewed.

V. 18. The ſecond part of her ſaying, was touching comfort to godly Ioſiah, becauſe his heart melted at the hearing of the threatnings of the law, he humbled himſelf, rent his garments, and wept, and prayed, as is implyed, in that the Lord ſaith, I have heard; the bringing of theſe judgements ſhould be reſpited during his life time, who he promiſeth, ſhall be gathered to his fathers in peace. Touching which laſt clauſe, if it be doubted, the common anſwer is, that although Ioſiah thirteen years after fell by the ſword of the king of Egypt, yet it may truly be ſaid, that he died in peace; that is, the kingdome enjoying peace, and not being annoyed with war by any enemies, but remaining free from the miſeries which warres bring, to the end of his daies: becauſe that king of Egypt moved not warre againſt him, but profeſſed the contrary, and whereas he periſhed by his ſword, it was by his own ſeeking, neither did he any more hoſtile act againſt the kingdome of Iudah, when 2 Chron. 36. 2. he was ſlain, untill three moneths after, when the time was come that judgements ſhould begin to work againſt that place, for the peoples horrible wickedneſſes. Lyra. Moreover, as Lyra hath it, he is counted to dye in peace, that dieth, before he ſeeth the deſtruction of his people and true religion, which to wiſe men are ſo grievous, that they prefer dying, before living to ſee ſuch things; as it is ſaid, 1 Machab. 3. and it is worthy the remembring to this purpoſe, that Titus the Romane Emperour ſaid to certain prieſts of the Iews, who eſcaped hardly from the burning of the Temple, and craved of him to grant them their lives, he commanded, that they ſhould be ſlain, ſaying, that they were of degenerous mindes, who deſired to overlive their temple and god. He alſo ſaith, that he died in peace, becauſe in full aſſurance to be ſaved everlaſtingly, forſomuch as he was a true ſaint of God. But the former doth beſt agree, becauſe the peace ſpoken of was not internall, but externall; the kingdome not being infeſted by any warres, as it ſhould be afterwards, when ſo holy a king being gone, and not another good one left to ſtand in the gap, judgements ſhould have full ſcope to enter in. And theſe words, that thy eyes may not ſee all the evils which I ſhall bring upon this place, do plainly ſhow this to be the meaning. Note. Whence note, what benefit cometh by the godly and zealous, it is by ſuch, that all the kingdome is preſerved from ruine, ſeeing it was kept off from Ieruſalem, for Ioſiah his ſake whileſt he lived, but ſo ſoon as he was dead, without any long delay, the floud-gates of Gods judgements were ſet open upon it.

CHAP. XXIII.

V. 1, 2. IOſiah hearing the Lords anſwer, immediately gathereth all the people of Iudah and Ieruſalem, before the houſe of the Lord, both great and ſmall, and having read the words of the book in their hearing, they entred into a covenant to keep theſe laws, with all their heart, and not to ſinne againſt them any more. Yea, as is added 2 Chron. 34. 33. he reſted not in this, but removed all abhominations out of all Iſrael, and cauſed all in all parts to follow the Lord all his dayes. The godly king thought it neceſſarie, when the land was in ſo great danger, to binde himſelf and the people by oath, from going after idols any more, as being a courſe taken before by Aſa, 2 Chron. 15. 12. and by Iehoiadah, ch. 23. 16. and by Hezekiah, ch. 29. 10. grounding doubtleſſe upon that fact of Moſes, after the giving of the law, who

cauſed

cauſed the people to make a covenant, to keep the things therein contained, confirming it by ſprinkling bloud upon them. For the tye of a covenant is ſo ſacred, and ſo ſtrongly binding, as that none but ſuch as are deſperately mad upon ſinning, dare break it, becauſe whoſo breaketh it, diſſolveth the bands of his ſouls mariage with God, and is actually divorced, and ſo excluded from all benefit of his protection from miſeries here or hereafter.

Jer. 3. 10.

Now Ioſiah is ſaid to have made this covenant with all his heart, and the people did outwardly all binde themſelves alſo, but diſſemblingly, as appeareth by Ieremiah his complaint, that they turned not with all their heart, but faſly, or deceitfully; for which he ſaith, that rebellious Iſrael was juſtified before Iudah, becauſe Iudah added to all her abominations hypocriſie, and therefore chap. 4. he biddeth them to breake up the fallow ground of their hearts and not to ſowe amongſt thornes; that is, having ſtill an impious and perfidious heart. If it be demanded why Ioſiah did thus now, ſeeing for his owne time he was by the promiſe of God ſecured, and afterwards the threatening was ſo peremptory, that there was no hope of preventing the judgements? Anſw. When any promiſe is made, the faithfull know, that tacitly it is implyed, that they ſhould with all diligence uſe all good meanes to obteine it, and when judgements are threatened, as againſt Niniveh, they may be by true repentance averted. Wherefore Ioſiah forbeareth not to doe his beſt to make ſure the promiſe, and if it might be, to avert the judgements threatened againſt the land.

V. 21.

And for this cauſe next unto the covenant he calleth to the keeping of a paſſeover in a moſt ſolemne and religious manner. v. 21. For although here from the 4 v. hitherto the purging of the temple, &c. from all idolatrous pollution commeth betweene, yet, as hath been before ſhewed, it went before and followed not after the making of the covenant, and therefore of all that, it hath been already ſpoken. And 2 *Chron.*35.1. the keeping of this paſſeover is ſet forth immediately after the making of the covenant and that moſt amply, whereas here it is onely mentioned moſt briefly. But there is 1. mention made of the time, the fourteenth day of the firſt moneth. 2. Of the prieſts, that miniſtered about it. 3. Of the Levites, that killed and fleaed the ſacrifices. 4. Of the number of kids and lambes out of the flock given by the king, v. 7. 5. Of the number given by the princes of the Prieſts and Levites, *v.*8,9. 6. Of their boyling for all the people and for the prieſts and themſelves, who were buſied about ſacrificing till night, *v.*13,14. 7. Of the Levites the muſicians, who ſtood to play upon inſtruments of muſick, v. 15. 8. Of the continuance of this ſolemnity, viz. ſeven dayes, v. 17. 9. This paſſeover is praiſed above all, that had beene kept, ſince Samuels time, v. 18. 10. It is ſaid to have beene kept anno 18. of Ioſiah his reigne, v. 19. that is, the ſame yeare, that the repairing of the temple was made. Yet here alſo this paſſeover is in like manner praiſed and before others preferred, that had been kept, ſince the dayes of the Iudges, and the time is alſo ſet down, viz. anno 18. *v.*22.23.

2 *Chron.*39.

V. 3.

But whereas 2 *Chron.*35.3. it is ſaid, And he ſaid to the Levites giving underſtanding to all Iſrael, ſanctifying them to the Lord, put the holy arke in the houſe which Solomon built, &c. There is no burden for you to carry upon the ſhoulder now, ſerve the Lord your God and his people Iſrael.] It may be demanded, where the Arke now was, and whether out of this houſe, and when it was carryed out, becauſe we never reade, that it was carryed out ſince the time that Solomon placed it there. Ierom ſaith, that it was carryed out by Ahaz, when he ſet up idolatry in the Lords houſe and ſet in the houſe of Shellum, the husband of Huldah the Propheteſſe, where it continued, till that Ioſiah cauſed it at this time to be fetched away by the Levites into the Lords houſe, being the proper place thereof: and Cajetan, that the wicked kings of Iudah moſt probably remembering, what dammage was done to the Philiſtims, when the Arke ſtood by Dagon, their idol, durſt not let it ſtand in the temple, when they worſhipped idols there, but cauſed it to be carried out into ſome other place. And the kings ſending to Huldah the propheteſſe to conſult with the Lord is thought by ſome to favour the relation of Ierom, that it ſtood in her husbands houſe. Lyra having recited that, which Ierom hath, ſaith, that in an Hebrew Gloſſe it is ſaid, that the Arke was not carried in Ahaz his time out of the temple, but when Manaſſeh ſet up an idol, he removed the Arke to another place in the temple, that he might make roome for that idol to be placed there, and ſo it was not brought at this time from any other houſe, but from ſome other part of the temple to the moſt holy place, where moſt properly it ought to ſtand. But he excepteth againſt both theſe, againſt the firſt, becauſe Hezekiah reigning after Ahaz, who was ſo full of zeale, would not doubtleſſe have ſuffered the Arke in any other place all the time of his reigne, and againſt the ſecond, becauſe the Levites might not come into the temple, but the prieſts onely, and therefore, if it had ſtood in any part of the temple out of the proper place, Ioſiah would have ſpoken to them and not to the Levites to remove it in. And he reſolveth, that it was carried out by Manaſſeh, and now at Ioſiah his appointment brought by the Levites to the Temple, of whom the Prieſts receiving it, carryed it into the moſt holy place. But againſt this it may as well be excepted, becauſe Manaſſeh was converted and lived many yeares after, in which time it is not to be conceived, but that if he had carryed out the Arke before, he would then have brought it in again. Wherefore, if it were now brought in, that conjecture ſeemeth the beſt to me, whereby it is held, that Amon the ſonne of Manaſſeh, that was worſe then his father, proceeded to this height of impiety to cauſe the Arke to be carryed out, and it having ſtood ſo till he was cut of and during the time of Ioſiah his minority, and till he had found the booke of the Law, he now appointed it to be brought and ſet in its place, where it ſhould reſt; neither ſhould the Levites, as in times paſt be troubled with carrying it upon their ſhoulders any more; ſo that they might the more freely attend upon their other miniſtration. But Iunius admits not of any ſuch ſenſe of the words, as may imply, that the Arke had been carryed out, and was now brought in againe: for he rendreth them thus. And he ſaid to all Iſrael preparing the holy things of the Lord, put them before the Arke in this houſe, &c. Which reading although I approve not, (becauſe I have before rendred them otherwiſe verbatim according to the Hebrew text, neither can the words well beare it, ſeeing there is no word ſignifying preparing, or before the Arke, but plainly put the Arke in the houſe, and it is improper to ſay of the ſacrifices, which muſt be meant by the holy things, if it be ſo rendred, put them in the houſe, ſith they came no nearer then the court, (where the altar to ſacrifice upon ſtood) yet I cannot but approve of that opinion, whereby it is held, that the Arke was not hitherto removed out of the houſe where it ſhould ſtand, ſince the time that it was placed by Solomon, ſo that it needed not now any carrying in, as moſt expoſitours imagine, becauſe the carrying it out in the moſt corrupt times is no where ſpoken of, whereas if it had been, doubtleſſe it ſhould not have been paſſed over in ſilence, being an impiety ſo remarkable, and the manner of bringing it in with all ſolemnity (as was requiſite,) would have followed, whereas nothing is ſaid hereof: laſtly, as Pellican hath it, the Prophets of theſe times moſt probably would have earneſtly called for the reſtoring of it to the place, if it had been taken out, ſeeing no ſacrificing could be acceptable, or ſeeking unto God, but before the Arke. But whereas he hereupon inferreth a fault to be in this place through the negligence of the Scribes, it is by no meanes to be given way unto, as being of dangerous conſequence, as I have ſometimes ſaid before. If it be demanded then, how could he bid them ſet it in the houſe, if it were never carryed out, but ſtood there already? I anſwer, the word תנו ſet or put doth not onely ſignifie thus much, but alſo ſuffer or permit it, for the word נתן whereof it cometh, hath all theſe ſignifications, wherefore if we render it, ſuffer the holy Ark in the houſe, the meaning will be nothing elſe, but as the next words imply, the Levites were ſince Solomons time exempt from this work of carrying the Ark upon their ſhoulders, ſeeing it was to ſtand fixedly in the moſt holy place, therefore as they might by reaſon hereof, he biddeth them now to attend wholly upon the ſervice of this paſcall ſolemnity. For the firſt words of this verſe the Vulgar Lat. hath, At whoſe inſtruction all Iſrael was ſanctified: reſpecting rather the ſenſe, then the tranſlating of the words: ſeeing they are therefore ſaid to ſanctifie them, becauſe they made them underſtand how this was to be done, done, and the truth is ſaid to ſanctifie, becauſe when a man being inſtructed herein receiveth it, he is renewed unto holineſſe thereby, Joh. 17. 17.

V. 4. Whereas v. 4. he biddeth them according to the diviſions of their families made by David and Solomon, to prepare for the people, as was appointed by Moſes; the meaning is, according to their diviſions into ſeverall families, 1 Chron. 26. they ſhould kill the lambs for the paſſeover to be kept by all Iſrael, preparing for each family a lamb, for ſo Moſes appointed, Exod. 12. They did this indeed themſelves by the firſt inſtitution, every one in his own family, becauſe they wanted a publike place to come unto; but now, there being a temple, this feaſt muſt be kept before it, and becauſe in the publike place, to which all aſſembled together, the publike Miniſters muſt do this ſervice for all, as is ſhewed v. 11, 12. that they did; and it is not to be doubted, but as Pellican hath it, that the Levites being preſent, taught Pellican.
them the right order and ceremonies to be obſerved in eating the paſſeover, that they might not erre hereabout, and how prepared, being ſanctified from all uncleanneſſe, they ought to come unto it, ſee alſo for this verſ. 6.

V. 7. For the number of cattle given now to furniſh this ſolemnitie, they were exceeding many, viz. of ſmall cattle out of the flocks 30000 given by the King, and of greater out of the heard 3000, &c. and theſe are ſaid to have been given to the people; the godly King, and Princes after his example, and the Princes of the Prieſts and Levites alſo, thus providing, that the paſſeover being no burthen to them, becauſe their flocks were not hereby diminiſhed, they might the more cheerfully keep it. And all theſe cattle thus given, were partly ſpent by ſeverall families, according to the inſtitution, and partly in euchariſticall ſacrifices, a great part whereof went every of theſe dayes to the offerers to feaſt and make merry withall. The blood, which the prieſts are ſaid here to have ſprinkled, was upon the altar, as Levit. 3. and whereas the Levites fleaed them, it was not becauſe their office required it, but for neceſſitie in reſpect of the multitude of ſacrifices, as before in Hezekiah his time, chap. 29. 34. whereby it appears, that this ought to have been done by the prieſts, but now as need required, the levites holp them herein.

V. 13. And they ſod the Paſſeover, &c.] The vulgar Latin, they roſted it. And this indeed doth beſt agree with the ordinance of Moſes, Exod. 12. 8. But the word here uſed, doth firſt and moſt properly ſignifie to ſethe, for it is בשל, but as Pagninus noteth, it ſometime ſignifieth to roſte, and ſo it muſt be underſtood here, becauſe the paſch raw or ſodden is forbidden, Exod. 12. 8, 9. whereas this here is ſaid to have been done, as was appointed by Moſes. And the other holy things were ſodden in pots, that is, the fleſh of the ſacrifices, for ſo it ought to be.

V. 14. All Iſrael being provided for thus by the Levites, they finally provided for themſelves and the prieſts, who ate the paſſeover laſt of all, becauſe they had no leiſure for ſacrificing till night, and for the Levites, Muſitians, and Porters, who kept them V. 15. all this while to their ſtations, the muſitians to ſing and ſound over the ſacrifices, and the porters to keep the doors.

V. 18. In concluding this hiſtory it is ſaid, that ſuch a paſſeover as this had not been kept ſince the dayes of Samuel, by any of the kings of Iſrael, 2 King. 23. 22. from the dayes of the Iudges, by any of the Kings of Iſrael or Iudah; both to the ſame effect, becauſe Samuel was the laſt of the Iudges, but in Kings not onely the Kings of Iſrael, but of Iſrael and Iudah are ſpoken of; becauſe paſſeovers had been kept, not onely whileſt all Iſrael was united under one king, but alſo after it was divided, by godly kings that reigned over Iudah in particular. Whereas the time is extended to the dayes of the Iudges, Lyra noteth, that no paſſeover is commemorated to have Lyra.
been kept in the time of the Iudges, but onely in the time of Ioſhuah, Ioſh. 5. 9. but that paſſeovers were kept from year to year, when they had godly Iudges or Kings, is not to be doubted, although not commemorated, ſith it is not the manner of ſacred hiſtorians to ſet down the ſolemn feaſts, which were commonly kept of courſe, but when there was ſomewhat extraordinary in the keeping of them, as in the time of Hezekiah, and now in the time of Ioſiah. For that in Hezekiah his dayes was extraordinary for the time, the ſecond moneth, and the keeping of it ſeven and ſeven dayes, the congregating not onely of Iudah, but of the other kingdome alſo to it, viz. many tribes thereof, and the great number of cattle then offered, viz. 1000 bullocks, and 7000 leſſer cattle by the King, and 1000 bullocks, and 10000 leſſer cattle by the Princes, and the moſt joyfull keeping of this feaſt, like the joy in Solomons dayes, 2 Chron. 30. 26. And this in Ioſiah his time was yet more extraordinary, becauſe it is ſaid, none like unto it had been kept before, and therefore neither in the time of Hezekiah. But wherein did this exceed that? Anſw. Firſt in the time, this being kept the firſt moneth, as was primarily appointed that in the ſecond through the neceſſitie of the time. Secondly, in the univerſality of the congregation gathered to this out of all Iſrael, for he brought them all to follow the Lord, ch. 34. 33. Whereas in Hezekiah his time, ſome onely are ſaid to have come out of the tribes of the kingdome of Iſrael, to that paſſeover. Thirdly, in the ſanctitie of all that came, for they were taught by the Levites firſt to do this; whereas at that were many out of the tribes of Iſrael eating in their uncleanneſſe, but Hezekiah prayed for them, and ſo it was forgiven. Fourthly, now were all the claſſes of the Levites employed, in preparing and killing even that, which was for the eating of all Iſrael; then they killed onely, and for the unclean only. Fiftly, the ſingers and players upon inſtruments, kept them to their ſtations all day, the Levites providing for them alſo, but then not, as we reade of. Sixtly, in the number of cattle given by the king to the keeping of this ſolemnitie 30000 ſmall cattle, and 3000 oxen, whereas by Hezekiah, only 1000 and 7000 were given. But whereas Ioſephus will have the preference to be in his keeping it more exactly, according to the ordinances of Moſes, he is not to be heard, becauſe this were a derogation to David, Hezekiah, and other godly kings, as if they had not in ſo materiall a point of religion kept them to the rules preſcribed. If any man ſhall wonder, why the keeping of the paſſeover was made ſo great account of, when as it conſiſted of nothing, but eating, and burning fat in the fire. It is to be underſtood, that the thankfulneſſe to God for their deliverance out of Egypt expreſſed hereby, was the thing in eſteem, and faith in Ieſus Chriſt, of whom this was a figure, and obedience to Gods will, when as other nations ſacrificed to falſe gods, in abhorring from that, and ſacrificing aboundantly to the true God. And obedience, faith and thankeſgivings, in ſolemne manner are ſtill the duties moſt acceptable; ſo that there be no ſparing of coſt withall in contributing to the maintenance of that which tendeth to his praiſe, or charitie to his poor.

2 King. 13. 22. Although there was not ſuch a Paſſeover as this, &c.] The vulgar Latin, for there was not, &c. But כי here uſed, ſignifieth both for and although, but it agreeth better with the words following, v. 26. Yet God turned not away from his wrath, &c. to render it with Iunius, although. For ſo it is, as if he had ſaid, all the means that might be, were uſed by godly Ioſiah, in keeping a moſt exact paſſeover, and purging the church from all pollutions, yet he turned not away, &c. And here is ſubjoyned a recitall of things formerly done by him in reforming, v. 24. He took away the wizards, ſoothſayers, and images, &c. and v. 25. there was no king like him, &c. Shewing, that all this is to be underſtood as ſpoken together, that it might appear, how reſolutely the Lord was bent to bring his judgements, whatſoever was now done tending to a pacification, and therfore that it agreeth beſt to render the word, although.

V. 25. But how is it ſaid, there was no King like unto him, that turned to the Lord with all his heart, &c.] Whereas 2 King. 18. 5. the ſame is ſaid of Hezekiah? In ſatiſfying this doubt, enough hath been already ſaid upon that place, the things being ſhewed, wherein Hezekiah did ſo, as that none other did like him, and the things on the other ſide, wherein Ioſiah was without his peer.

V. 26. Laſtly, if it be demanded why it is ſaid, that he was not turned from the fierceneſſe of his wrath, to which he was provoked againſt Iudah by the provocations of Manaſſeh, notwithſtanding? Pellican anſwereth, that Manaſſeh his ſins did onely lye covered all the time of Ioſiah, till by his wicked poſteritie and the Iews, who now turned but feignedly from them, they were uncovered, and vengeance ſent down therefore even to the making of all their ceremoniall worſhip, which they had ſo much abuſed, ceaſe, ſo as that it was never perfectly reſtored again, but ſome of

of the divine glory henceforth diffuſed amongſt the Gentiles. Lyra ſaith, that the holineſſe of Ioſiah ſufficed not to expiate the wickedneſſe of his predeceſſours. But all this ſatisfieth not the doubt, ſeeing Manaſſeh was a convert, and againſt true converts their ſinnes are remembred no more. Hugo therefore expoundeth it thus, the provocations of Manaſſeh, wherein the people imitated him. The more full anſwer is, the provocations of Manaſſeh are in ſpeciall mentioned, not that they were not blotted out of Gods remembrance towards him, but becauſe they were in the higheſt degree (no king of Iudah doing ſo vilely before) and renewed with the liking of the people by his ſonne Amon, and God, who ſeeth into all hearts, ſaw that they were ſtill in their hearts, although outwardly they conformed themſelves to Ioſiah his minde for the time, ſeeing both Ieremy complaineth of this, ch. 3.9, 10. and their relapſe immediately after Ioſiah his death declared it. And becauſe Manaſſeh began to advance iniquity to this height, they are ſtill called his provocations, when as they were his now in name onely, but really theirs that feared not to act them over again after his ſevere chaſtiſement and repentance. Sin, we ſee by this, leaveth a ſcarre, although remitted, in the name of him that commits it, throughout all generations, as a perſonall foul ſinne did alſo to David, who greatly repented himſelf thereof, that if we would have a good name like a precious ointment, we may abhor from all ſuch ſinning, and flee even the corrupting that cometh hereunto by any folly, as by dead flies, which are but little, to a boxe of precious ointment.

V. 29.

H. B. Patr. travels.

In his dayes came Pharaoh Necho againſt the king of Aſſyria to the river Euphrates] 2 Chron.35.20. He went up againſt Charchemiſh. Which was a city of Syria, or rather Aſſyria 400. miles off from Ieruſalem ſtanding neare the river of Euphrates. The Aſſyrian Monarchy now declining, the king of Egypt truſting to his great power went forth to make warre againſt him, and becauſe he could not come thither without paſſing through the kingdome of Iudah in ſome part, Ioſiah either, becauſe he thought it not ſafe to ſuffer ſuch great forces, to paſſe through his countrey, as fearing leaſt under a colour of paſſing through they ſhould endeavour the poſſeſſing of it, or becauſe ſome amity had been ſometime betwixt the kings of Iudah and Aſſyria; or he feared by his ſuffering of the Egyptian army to goe quietly through his kingdome, to incurre the Aſſyrians diſpleaſure, as others thinke; but moſt improbably, ſeeing the friendſhip of king Ahaz with Aſſyria was long agoe broken off in the time of Hezekiah, and Joſiah had no reaſon to fear any king in the world, having a promiſe of peace in his time to the end. It was therefore a ſuſpition of treachery towards his land in Necho, that made him to goe out to oppoſe him, and an unwillingneſſe to have the Aſſyrian ſubdued, leſt the king of Babylon having no potent adverſary neare to reſiſt him, the effecting of that ſhould be haſtened, which had been threatened to Hezekiah, viz. the ſubduing of Ieruſalem to that proud king. But whatſoever cauſe outwardly there may ſeeme to have been, this his going againſt Necho to fall by his ſword was not without a divine providence ſecretly working, that he being taken out of the way roome might be made for Gods judgements for his ſake hitherto withheld, to enter amongſt a rebellious and hypocriticall people, of whom many ſecretly practiſed abominable idolatry even whileſt Ioſiah lived, as we may gather by the invectives of Ieremiah, chap. 5.7, &c.

2 Chron.35. 21,22.

The place, to which Ioſiah went againſt Necho is not here mentioned, nor what other paſſages were, before they met, betwixt him and Necho, but 2 *Chron.*35.22. It is ſaid to be the valley of Megiddo, and that Necho ſent firſt unto him to will him to forbeare, ſeeing his coming out was not againſt him, although he marched through the borders of his countrey, not without a command from God. So that it is to be conceived, that the king of Egypt hearing of Ioſiah his preparation to reſiſt him, ſent an Herald un to him with this meſſage, going on his journey in the meane ſeaſon, till he came to Megiddo, where Ioſiah encountered him and was ſlaine in the very beginning of the battell, as is intimated in ſaying, He ſlew him, when he ſaw him, v. 29. And in more words, 2 Chron. 35.21, 22. The darters ſmote Ioſiah, who had diſguiſedly thruſt himſelfe into the battell: then being carryed away in his charriot he died. Of Megiddo in the tribe of Manaſſeh, ſee *Ioſh.*17.11.

The place, wherein he died, was Ieruſalem, 44. miles from Megiddo, and he was greatly lamented by Iudah and Ieruſalem, and Ieremiah who wrote his lamentations upon his death, and the miſeries enſuing; and theſe lamentations they were 25. taught commonly to ſing both to put by the ſinging of other vaine ſongs, and that a daily remembrance being herein made of the vertues of Joſiah, all might be moved to the love hereof; and this took ſo as that it continued a cuſtome thus to doe to the time of the writing of this book, which ſerveth to commend unto us the ſinging of the like godly ſongs throughout all ages.

2 King. 23.30. Ioſiah being dead, Iehohaz his ſonne was anointed king in his ſtead being twenty three yeares of age, &c. This anointing of a king, that was heire apparant to the Junius. crowne, was extraordinary and needed not to have been done, ſaith Iunius, but onely becauſe the kingdome having been troubled by Pharaoh Necho, this was now uſed as a ſigne of putting it into his hands, as the right king to be by him defended Wolphius. againſt the Egyptians and all others. But, as Wolphius noteth, they did unwiſely herein ſo to neglect the victorer, whom they ſhould rather have ſought unto for peace and liberty to make them a new king: for this their fact could not but greatly provoke him, as the ſequele ſheweth, that it did, when returning from his warres againſt Aſhur he came and took Iehohaz and carryed him away bound in chaines unto Egypt, where he died, having reigned before his captivity but three moneths, and made Eliachim his brother king in his ſtead, turning his name to Iehojakim, who is ſaid to have been 25. yeares old, and therefore the elder brother to Iehohaz, and conſequently the right heire to the crowne, but he being injuriouſly refuſed, the younger was ſet up, and it ſucceeded accordingly. For both he was put downe and came to miſery, and the land had a mulct impoſed upon it for this preſumption, one hundred talents of ſilver, and a talent of gold, which, if we account to the talent as the Hebrews commonly do, 125. pound, amounteth to 12500. of ſilver, and of gold 2250.

This Iehohaz is otherwiſe called Shallum, that is, a recompence, Ier. 22.11. Or conſummation, although Ierom applyeth it rather to Zedekiah in whom the judgements threatned were conſummated; but becauſe Iehojakim is ſpoken of after this, and Zedekiah was after him, that cannot ſtand. The Hebrews by the name Shallum underſtand all the ſonnes of Ioſiah, either Iehohaz, Iehoiakim, or Zedekiah, becauſe they were all alike wicked and holpe towards the conſummating of the judgements, but it is plainly ſpoken of one particular Iehoahaz, as who began by his wickedneſſe to make way for the fulneſſe of Gods judgements to come after Ioſiah his death. And his dying in Egypt is propheſied of, and that he ſhould never returne into his owne land againe. The place where Necho took him, was Riblah in the land of Hamath, eighty miles from Ieruſalem in the tribe of Nephtali. Of Hamath, there ſee Ioſh. 19. 35. it was the uttermoſt boundary of the land of Canaan.
But how it happened, that Iehoahaz came to Riblah to be bound there, ſome conjecture moſt probably, that Iehoiakim his elder brother went to Necho thither, as he returned from Aſhur to complaine of the wrong that was done him, profering, if he would helpe him to the kingdome, to pay him a tribute, whereupon Necho ſent for Iehoahaz, under a pretence of compounding the matter betwixt the two brothers, and when he came within his power, bound him, and made Iehoiakim king, impoſing the money aforeſaid upon the land. But that we might know the cauſe, why Iehoahaz enjoyed the kingdome ſo ſhort a time, and came to ſuch miſery, and that it was not accidentall, it is ſaid, that he did evil, as his wicked forefathers had done, viz. Ahaz, Manaſſeh and Amon. His mothers name is alſo ſet downe, Hamutal the daughter of Ieremiah, not of the Prophet, for he was of Anathoth, yet it is likely, that the I*eremiah* of whom ſhe came, was godly, ſeeing I*oſiah* would not otherwiſe have matched himſelfe with her, and if ſo, he was a degenerating plant, and therefore the more worthy to be rooted up.

V. 34. The brother of Iehoahaz ſet up by Necho, was at the firſt called Eliakim, but he changed his name to Iehojakim, which he did, that it might alwayes be remembred that he was made king by him, the changing of names being a ſigne of their being obliged to thoſe that changed them for ſome great benefit, as Nebuchadnezzar, zar changed alſo the name of Zedekiah, when he made him king; and it was uſuall amongſt the Romans, when a man endued a ſervant with freedome, to change his name. But the change now made was but ſmall, for Eliakim ſignifieth, riſing, and Iehojakim, the riſing of the Lord, as Genebrard noteth out of the Hebrews, who, he ſaith, do uſe theſe two names promiſcuouſly, which may well be, for that there is no more difference, but as betwixt אל ſignifying God, and יהו, three of the four letters of the name Iehovah, the reſt of the word יקים being common to them both. But although either way he had in his name the moſt holy, yet in truth there was in him nothing leſſe, for he is ſaid to have been wicked as his fathers, and therefore in his dayes the judgements threatned from Babylon began to work, he not being ſuffered to ſit in the ſeat of royall Majeſtie above eleven years, but he began immediately to exact the moneys ceaſed for Pharaoh, as Manahem had alſo done once before for Phul the king of Aſſyria. Of his wickedneſſe Ezekiel ſpeaketh under the ſimilitude of a lion devouring men, as he doth alſo of his brother that reigned before him: and Jeremiah taxeth him with covetouſneſſe, and ambition, and other vices. Whereas Ezekiel calleth them princes of Iſrael, it was becauſe they reigned over Iſrael alſo in a great part, for ſo the geſtes of Ioſiah their father ſhew that they did.

Jer.22.13.

CHAP. XXIV.

V.1.

AGainſt Iehoiakim the Lord brought Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and he became his ſervant three years, then he rebelled againſt him, &c. 2 *Chr.*36.6. Nebuchadnezzar is called the king of Chaldea, and it is ſaid, that he took Iehoiakim and bound him, to be carried into Babylon together with the veſſels of the Lords houſe; ſo that Chaldea and Babylon were all one, Chaldea the country, and Babylon the chief city thereof, and this in the Chronicles is to be underſtood, as happening to Iehoiakim after his rebelling againſt the king of Babylon, when having been before for his ſinnes brought into his power, he had bound himſelf by oath to ſerve him, ſo Pellican. Yet ſome will have it meant of his firſt coming into his power, when they ſay he was carried away, but upon agreement ſoon returned. And forſmuch as when he was bound to be carried away, the precious veſſels of the Lords houſe were carried away alſo, and this is not ſaid to have been done anno 7 of Nebuchadnezzar, Ier. 52.28. for of the three carryings away there mentioned, that was the firſt; and the ſeventh of Nebuchadnezzar was the eleventh of Iehoiakim. But Dan. 1, 2. part of the holy veſſels were carryed away Anno 3. of I*ehoiakim*, it is plaine that the binding of I*ehoiakim* to be carryed away was Anno 3. of his reigne, but upon compoſition he came backe againe to rule as tributary to the king of Babylon, and ſo did till that rebelling he was within a few yeares after deſtroyed by the Chaldees and others coming againſt him, in Ieruſalem, and caſt out of the gates thereof like an aſſe unlamented by any, Ier. 22.19, This is indeed in Kings for brevities ſake paſſed over, the coming of Chaldean robbers againſt Iudah being onely ſpoken of, but plainly ſhewed to be ſo in I*eremiah*, wherefore Nebuchadnezzars coming is not mentioned here any more, but that he being dead, his childe was immediately ſet up to reigne after him, whereas, if he had fallen by the ſword of Nebuchadnezzar, he would doubtleſſe have taken order for a ſucceſſour, as well as he did, when he carried away I*ehoiakim* ſoone after. In what yeare of Iehoiakim Nebuchadnezzar came firſt againſt him, it is not here ſaid, but Dan.1.1. In the third yeare of I*ehoiakim* concerning which a queſtion ariſeth, becauſe Ier.25.1. the firſt yeare of Nebuchadnezzar is ſaid to be the fourth of I*ehoiakim*, whereas by Daniel it ſhould be in the third, and his ſecond in his fourth. Some anſwer, that the third and fourth yeare are ſo neare together, if by the third we underſtand the latter end of it, that the firſt of Nebuchadnezzar might be ſaid to be either his third, or fourth.

Vatablus.

But out of Beroſus it may otherwiſe be reſolved thus, that Nebuchadnezzar came Beroſus.

came againſt Iehoiakim a year before his fathers death, and ſo the firſt year of his reign was the fourth of Iehoiakim; For he ſaith, that Nebuchadnezzar ſenior, hearing of the revolt of thoſe in Syria, he being unable through age, ſent out his ſonne Nebuchadnezzar againſt him, and died before his return; then he having overcome his enemies, returned, and was made king in the room of his father. In the third year of Iehoiakim then, Nebuchadnezzar not being yet crowned, but ſoon after made king of Babylon, for which he is now ſo called, came and ſubdued, and bound, and made him his tributary; which is meant, when it is ſaid, he ſerved him three years, that is, paying tribute unto him. Hitherto, it ſeemeth that he had continued under Necho king of Egypt, who firſt ſet him up, and when he had thus long ſerved the Babylonian, moſt probably Necho inſtigating him hereunto, by promiſing him ayd, he denied him tribute, and then was troubled with Chaldees, and other robbers, and moſt probably deſtroyed by them.

At what time alſo, to make it the more probable, that Egypt was his ſtay, to which he truſted in revolting from the king of Babylon, it is ſaid here v. 9. that from the Egyptian king was taken away at the ſame time, whatſoever was betwixt the river of Egypt and Euphrates. Whereas Ier. 46. 2. the Egyptian forces are ſaid to have been ſmitten by him, anno 4. of Iehoiakim, that is ſaid to have been done at Charchemiſh, where Necho was fighting againſt the Babylonians; but this about the time that Iehoiakim periſhed. Thoſe warres were begun in the laſt year of Ioſiah, and having continued till the fourth of Iehoiakim, Necho was able to ſtand no longer, but his forces were then overthrown, yet it ſeemeth, that after this he practiſed again with Iehoiakim againſt Nebuchadnezzar, wherefore now he both ſent ſome to cut off Iehoiakim, and ſubdued a great part of the Egyptians domi-V. 2. nions alſo. And to effect this utter overthrow of Iehoiakim, it is ſaid v. 2. that the Lord ſent againſt him troops of the Chaldees, Syrians, Moabites, and Ammonites, and againſt Iudah, as he had threatned by his prophets, that is, Huldah and Ieremy, V. 3. ch. 14, 15, &c. From whoſe mouth it is ſaid to have come, to take Iudah away for Junius. the ſinnes of Manaſſeh, according to all which he had done. Iunius renders it, for the like ſinnes to thoſe which Manaſſeh had done, holding a trajection to be in the words.
As alſo, Gen. 5. 29. Iudg. 18. 31. עשה׳ בחטאת מנשה ככל אשר, that is, verbatim, in the ſinne of Manaſſeh, according to all Which he did. Which is plainly meant of the kingdome of Iudah thus waſted, when as the ſinnes of Manaſſeh were again acted over therein, as the words [according to all which] do imply. For it is as if it had been ſaid, as the Lord had threatned ſo he did, viz. took away Iudah, when they ſinned like Manaſſeh, doing according to all that, which he had done, yea filling Ieruſalem alſo with innocent bloud, which is intimated in comparing Iehoahaz and I*ehoiakim* to lions devouring men, as hath beene already ſaid, and the ſhedding of innocent bloud is expreſly laid to the charge of I*ehoiakim*, Ier. 22. 17.
For if theſe judgements had beene ſent ſimply for the ſinnes of Manaſſeh, that pro-Ezek.36.9. verbe had been juſtly taken up, The fathers have eaten ſoWer grapes, and the chil- drens teeth are ſet on edge. From which, as great injuſtice the Lord vindicateth himſelfe. Wherefore not thoſe perſonall evil acts done by Manaſſeh are here meant, for he repenting thereof was forgiven; but the men of Iudah never repenting, but diſſemblingly had them ſtill remembered againſt them, as coadjutours in ſo evil works, and now the ſtay which held them in from running to the like wickedneſſe being taken away, viz. godly I*oſiah*, they returning with the ſwine to wallow in the mire were ſeverely judged, as they were wel worthy.

V. 6. I*ehoiakim* being dead, I*ehoiakim* his ſonne was made king, being eighteene years
V. 8. old, and reigned onely three moneths, &c. 2 Chron. 36.9. He is ſaid to be eight yeares old, when he began to reigne. This is commonly reſolved by ſaying, that 2 Chro. 36.9. the Chronicles mention the time, when he began to reigne with his father, which was in the ſecond yeare of his reigne, and if ſo he were but eight then, he was eighteene when his father being dead he began to reign alone, according to Kings.
And this is the more probable, becauſe the times were troubleſome, and I*ehoiakim* might think it neceſſary to ſettle his ſonne in the kingdome before his death, that there might be leſſe danger in ſetting up another, before him, which was a thing ſo lately done in his younger brother I*ehoahaz*, he himſelfe being kept from it. But becauſe no ſuch thing is ſpoken of, as his reigning together with his father, all this is but a conjecturall. I*unius* therefore by this word [He,] When he began to reigne, Junius.

underſtandeth not I*ehoiakin*, but I*ehoiakim* his father, he was eight then, but now eighte[illegible], alleadging the like touching Ahaz, 2 King.16.1. but then he muſt needs be in his nineteenth at his fathers death, ſeeing he reigned eleven yeares, but it may be that the firſt yeare of his eleven was but part of a yeare, and ſo is not here reckoned. But the words are the ſame which are uſed in Kings, במלכו when he reigned, and therefore it ſeemeth, that the ſame [He] is to be underſtood in both places, yet no better way of reſolving this having been by any other found out, I reſt in this, not thinking it ſafe to admit of the reſolution of ſome, that here was a fault in the ſcribe, eight being written for eighteene, for which cauſe in one Septuagint tranſlation it is eighteene, as in Kings. Of the wickedneſſe of this king read more, Ier.22. for which he is threatened to be delivered into his enemies hands, and was delivered, as we ſee here, v. 12. and 2 Chron. 36.10. the time is V. 10,11,12.
noted to be the turning of the yeare, that is, moſt probably, in the Spring time, when kings uſed to goe forth to warre. And it is here ſaid, that Nebuchadnezzar firſt ſent his ſervants and beſieged Ieruſalem, then he came in perſon, and the king fearing ruine both to himſelfe and the city, came forth unto him with his mother and courtiers, &c. But for what cauſe he then invaded that land it is not ſaid, onely Ioſephus ſaith, that fearing the young king would ſeeke to revenge his fathers death, Joſephus.
and ignominious caſting out of Ieruſalem unburied, done by Nebuchadnezzar, he thought it not ſafe to ſuffer him to reigne, and therefore came againſt him, carryed him away to Babylon, and ſet up another to reigne in his ſtead; and ſome thinke, that he having firſt made him king, ſoone repented and returned thus againe. But forſomuch as it no where appeareth that Nebuchadnezzar was at the death of his father, as hath been partly noted before, neither is he ſaid to have ſet up his ſonne, and it is improbable, thar having done it, he would without ſome new cauſe ſo ſoone reverſe that act of his; it is rather to be held, that Iehojakim having rebelled againſt him, but by ſome troupes of his Chaldees already ſlaine; he heard that his ſonne tooke the kingdome upon him, and at this he being offended, as making account that it was in his owne power onely to ſet up a king there, ſince he had ſubdued that kingdome, he thus ſendeth his forces againſt him, &c. but on Gods part the cauſe why he ſent Nebuchadnezzar againſt him was his wickedneſſe, he did that which was evill, even as his father had done. V.9.

V. 12.

Then I*ehoiakin* coming forth and yeelding himſelfe to Nebuchadnezzar was taken and carryed into Babylon together with his mother, wives and courtiers, Junius.
and all the beſt of the people, and artificers 10000. and the whole ſumme being firſt by a prolepſis ſet downe together, they are immediately diſtinguiſhed into 7000. mighty men, 1000. artificers and warriours, whoſe number is not expreſſed, but to make up the foreſaid ſumme muſt needs be 2000. ſo I*unius*. Others as Wolphius hath it, will have the whole number carried away 18000. viz. 10000. Wolphius.
of the common ſort, 7000. of the better ſort, and 1000. artificers, and I*oſephus* Joſeph.Antiq. l.10.9. hath it, 18032. but in this ſumme there is a manifeſt miſtaking, for in I*oſephus* it is 10000. and 832. this laſt number being added out of I*eremiah* 52. where it is that anno 18. he carryed away 832. theſe two then, which were ten yeares after one another, are by I*oſephus* put together. I aſſent therefore rather to I*unius*, that although here be two numberings of them, that were carryed away, yet the ſecond is but to ſhew more diſtinctly, of what ſorts the 10000. firſt ſpoken of were. But becauſe I*er*.52.28. it is ſaid, that the people carryed away, anno 7. of Nebuchadnezzar were 3023. where both the number mentioned is much leſſe then this, and the yeare agreeth not the eighth being ſpoken of here, but there the ſeventh, and therefore there were either more carryings away captive, then theſe mentioned by I*eremiah* whoſe purpoſe ſeemeth to be to ſumme up all together, or the Scripture is contradictory to it ſelfe. To this the ſame I*unius* and ſome others anſwer, that the 3000. there ſpoken of were onely of Ieruſalem, thoſe of the reſt of the kingdome of Iudah being omitted, which were about 7000. more, and that this carrying away was at the latter end of the ſeventh and the beginning of the eighth, and therefore ſaid by I*eremiah* to have been anno 7. by Kings, anno 8. but the ſolution, I take it, will be more cleare, if it be ſaid, that when I*ehoiakim* dyed, the troupes of Chaldees and others ſent by the king of Babylon carryed away that leſſer number, and this was anno 7. but when he came againſt I*ehoiakin* in perſon the greater number was carryed away the yeare following, which was the eighth, and that it was in another yeare may be gathered from Chronicles, where it is ſaid in the turning of the year, and it is likely, becauſe this was plainly ſet forth, 2 King.24. Ieremiah omitted it, as alſo, that captivity anno 3. of Iehojakim, being left to be recorded Dan.1.1. Some thinke, that Iehojakim coming out to Nebuchadnezzar, was not to yield himſelfe into his hands, but being required ſo to doe under a pretence of receiving conditions of peace, but when the king of Babylon had him in his power, he held him, and carryed him away captive ; but others contrariwiſe more probably, that ſeeing the danger wherein the whole city and kingdome was, he voluntarily yielded himſelfe, hoping thus that it ſhould be preſerved, wherein he did the part of a good king, as Ioſephus commends him in ſpeaking of this, and to make this the more probable, he was better entreated then his ſucceſſour Zedekiah, that ſtood out and would never yield, although moved to it by the Prophet Ieremiah. But he upon the like motion yielded, as is intimated, Ier. 24. 5. where the Lord ſaith, that he ſent them into Chaldea, who were then carryed away, and would bring them againe as good figges, ſee alſo Ierem.29.2,3,4. The ſame king by Ierem.22. is called ſometime Iechoniah, ſometime Choniah, whereby it ſeemeth, that he had two names, and it is threatened, that none of his children ſhould ſit upon the throne for his wickedneſſe, and accordingly it came to paſſe, for Zedekiah his uncle, a third ſonne of Ioſiah was made king in his ſtead. Thus as Wolphius noteth, his yielding as the prophet moved him brought upon him great calamities at the firſt, but in the end he was not without a reward of this his obedience and piety towards his countrey, when Evilmerodack the ſonne of Nebuchadnezzar lifted up his head, and ſet him at his owne table that others might not feare to obey the motions that come from God, but whatſoever they ſee, they are like to ſuffer for thus doing, be comforted by looking at the end, which ſhall be comfortable ; and that Kings in particular may practice the like piety towards their countreys in the time of danger, doing what they can, although it may ſeeme a diſparagement unto them, that ſo many thouſands committed to their government may not be brought to miſery, they being as their ſheepe, of whom they are made ſhepherds, and therefore ought to be ready as the good ſhepherd to lay downe their life for them.

V.13. And he took away all the treaſures of the Lords houſe and of the kings, and all the golden veſſels that Solomon had made.] It may ſeeme, that there could be none of the golden veſſels made by Solomon remaining at this time to be carryed away, becauſe all the treaſures of the Lords houſe were taken away long before in the time of Rehoboam the ſonne of Solomon, 2 Chron.12.9 And if under the name of ſuch treaſures the veſſels were not comprehended, they are expreſly ſaid to have beene carryed away in the time of Amaziah, 2 Chron. 25. 24. To ſay nothing of theſe treaſures againe exhauſted in the time of Hezekiah, 2 King.18.15.16. But it is anſwered, that they are called the veſſels of Solomon, becauſe they were made like unto them, and ſo as God had directed Solomon. This was propheſied of to Hezekiah by Eſay above an hundred yeares before, and now fulfilled after ſo long a time to ſhew the truth of God, that we may beleeve ; and it is to be noted, that Ieruſalem was now puniſhed in that, whereof they were proud and vain-glorious to make oſtentation of it, that our precious things may not puffe us up, leſt God be hereby provoked to ſtrip us likewiſe, and bring us to miſery.

Note.

V.14. Wolphius. Junius. And he carryed away all Ieruſalem, and all the mighty men, and all carpenters and Smithes, &c.] The Vulgar Lat. for Smiths, hath incluſores, by which word, ſaith Wolphius, the Hebrews underſtand thoſe that were ſhut into the towres to keepe them, but becauſe they are rather to be thought to come under the name of warriours, he preferreth the other reading of Iunius, Smithes. But for as much as the word מסגר ſignifieth, ſhut up, or ſhutters up, it ſeemeth rather to be meant of porters, as ſome expound it, for they ſhut up the gates, and by all Ieruſalem, underſtand ſome of all ſorts, wherefore Junius reads it, He carried out of Ieruſalem, all the princes, &c. inſtead of theſe words, He carryed away all Jeruſalem, and all the princes. Whereas, 2 *Chron.*36.10. it is ſaid, that Nebuchadnezzar ſending carryed him into Babylon, it is not to be underſtood, that he ſent firſt, but followed in perſon, and then tooke and carryed him away as is ſaid, 2 *King.*24.

V. 17. And he made Matthaniah his uncle king in his ſtead, and turned his name to Zedekiah] The reaſon of this change, ſaith Lyra, was, becauſe Zedekiah ſignifieth the juſtice of God; and Nebuchadnezzar when he made him king cauſed him to ſweare to be juſt and true unto him, in paying him tribute and having nothing to doe with the Egyptian, which is alſo in part expreſly ſaid, 2 *Chron.*36.13. and by giving him this name he would as ſhew his authority over him, ſo hereby put him continually in minde of his duty, that when he ſhould rebell contrary to this oath, he might appeare to be the more odious and worthy to come into his enemies hands, as alſo was to be expected for his other abominations. He had the ſame mother with Iehoiakim, and ſinned like him, but his father Ioſiah is not once here mentioned, becauſe he was unworthy of that honour, to be ſtyled the ſonne of ſo godly a king. This king was ſo wicked, that notwithſtanding his oath to Nebuchadnezzar he rebelled againſt him, and 2 Chron. 36.12. He humbled not himſelfe before the face of Ieremiah at the word of the Lord. Of which word ſee Ier. 37.2. 38.17,18. The Prophet warned him doubtleſſe not to rebell, and when he had rebelled and the city was beſieged, not to ſtand out againſt him, but to yeild. And through his rebellion and obſtinacy the judgements of God by the Babylonians were haſtened againſt him and his people of Iudah and Ieruſalem. Lyra.

CHAP. XXV.

V. 1, 2. How great the army beſieging Jeruſalem was, ſee *Jer.*34.1.

ZEdekiah rebelling againſt his lord, began by him to be beſieged in his city Ieruſalem anno 9 of his reign, and anno 11 the city was taken; the ſiege began the tenth moneth, the tenth day, and the city was taken the fourth moneth the ninth day. Here it is onely ſaid, the ninth day of the moneth, but Ier. 39. 2. thus fully, the fourth moneth the ninth day. Whence alſo the reaſon may be gathered, why it was ſo long before the city could be taken, viz. Nebuchadnezzar heard when he was in this ſiege, of the coming of Pharaoh king of Egypt againſt him, whereby he was conſtrained for a time to withdraw his forces, but the Egyptians being ſoon overcome, he returned to the ſiege again, I*er*. 37.5. The time wherein the city was beſieged, was alſo revealed to Zechariah in Babylon, ch. 24. 1. the tenth moneth, the tenth day, which uſed to be a day of humiliation, for the making of an attonement, Levit. 16. but now their wickedneſſe was grown to that height, that God would be reconciled to them no more.

V. 4.

The city being broken into by the Chaldees, the warriours flee out by a back gate and the king alſo, but is taken and brought to the king of Babylon in Riblah, and there his children being firſt ſlain before him, his eyes were put out, and he was carried bound into Babylon. The ſiege then, as appears by this deſcription, laſted long, viz. eighteen moneths, whereby a great famine was firſt cauſed in the city, before the winning of it, inſomuch that mothers boiled and ate their own children, as both Lament. 4. and Ioſephus do declare, who alſo ſaith, that the peſtilence was in the city, according to Ier. 20. 16. The gate by which they fled, is ſaid to have been that which led to the Kings gardens, and towards Iericho by the way of the wilderneſſe, that is, by a way moſt ſecret and unfrequented, and the Hebrews ſay, that here was a way under the ground leading to Iericho, Ioſephus in a deepe valley betweene mountaines, yet the king could not eſcape the puniſhment threatened unto him for his ſoule wickedneſſe.

Joſephus.

V. 6. Wolphius.

v. 6. It is ſaid, They gave judgement upon him, that is, as ſome thinke, when he was brought before Nebuchadnezzar in Riblah, a city in Syria, he having firſt upbraided him by his perfidiouſneſſe, committed him to his judges to be puniſhed, as they ſhould finde him worthy, and by their ſentence, his children being firſt ſlain before his face, to vexe him the more (for as Ieſephus ſaith, when he fled by that ſecret way out of the city, he took them with him) his eyes were put out, as unworthy to ſee or enjoy the comfort of the light any more, the eyes of whoſe minde had been put out long before, ſo that he could not ſee to follow the ſafe counſell of the prophet, rather then the flattering counſell of his princes. A puniſhment oft inflicted by enemies, as alſo upon Sampſon by the Philiſtims, upon Conſtantinus Copronymus by his unnaturall mother Irene, upon Robert Duke of Normandy by his brother Henry the firſt King of England, and upon the ſonne of Trebellius king of the Bulgarians, to whom his father had committed the kingdome to be maintained in the Chriſtian faith, but he forſaking this ſet up idolatry, wherefore he reſuming the kingdome again, put out his eyes, as unworthy to enjoy the comfort of the light, who had put out the moſt glorious light amongſt his people, viz. the light of Truth.

Joſephus.

Thus Zedekiah was carried captive into Babylon as Ieremiah had propheſied, but yet never ſaw Babylon, as Ezekiel had ſaid, that he ſhould not. So Ioſephus, who ſaith, that hereupon he hardened himſelf againſt the counſell of Ieremiah to yield to Nebuchadnezzar. The Author of the Chronicles chap. 36 14. in ſpeaking of the cauſe of this judgement addeth, after that he had ſpoken of the ſinnes of Zedekiah.

2 *Chron.*36.14.

The princes of the prieſts and of the people ſinned greatly, doing after the abominations of the heathen, and polluting the Lords houſe. And when he ſent unto them by his ſervants, they mocked, &c. So that ſinne was now grown to the full, not onely in the court, but alſo in the country, and in the clergy alſo both through the univerſality of it, they did according to all the abominations of the heathen, and the contempt of admonition, touching which, it is not only ſaid that they mocked at his meſſengers; but alſo deſpiſed his words, as cauſing to erre by his prophets, or deceiving; thus it is in Hebrew. The vulgar Latin, they ſet light by his words, and mocked his prophets. Junius.

Iunius, they ſaid, they were led about by his prophets. The word is, מתעתעים making to erre, or made to erre. The ſcoffe which they put upon the prophets was, that they were deceivers, and falſe prophets, and thus they went on, till the wrath of God burnt againſt them, and there could be no healing, that is, of the land thus ſick of ſinne, till it was utterly deſtroyed and laid waſte, and not of their ſouls, which when they were upon this grievous puniſhment, being made penitent in any of them might be ſaved everlaſtingly.

2 King.25.8. And hitherto is ſhewed what was done in the fourth moneth of the eleventh yeare of Zedekiah. Now the authour of Kings ſaith, The fifth moneth, the ſeventh day (that was the nineteenth yeare of Nebuchadnezzar) came Nebuzaradan, &c.] Which is doubtleſſe ſo punctually ſet downe that reckoning from hence forward by the yeares of the Babylonian kings, we might know in what time the end of the ſeventy yeares captivity propheſied of, Ier. 25. 11. *ch.*29. 10. expired. As for the difference, which ſeemeth to be from this Ieremiah 52. 12. ſaying, The fifth month, the tenth day, it is nothing, for here is noted the time of his coming, there of his burning the temple three dayes after. From whence he came it is not ſaid, but moſt probably king Nebuchadnezzar ſtaying yet at Ribiah after a moneths deliberation, ſent him with a company of butcherly executioners back to Ieruſalem to make his ſpoile there, for which he is called præfectus laniorum, maſter of butchers, as Wolphius renders it, but Iunius, præfectus ſatellitum, captaine of the guard; Vulg. Lat. princeps exercitus. But טבחים, which is the word here uſed cometh of טבח, to kill, and therefore moſt aptly may be rendered by butchers, the ſouldiers over whom he was, being for their cruelty and abundance of bloudſhed thus termed in diſgrace. But to returne to the foreſaid time, there is a difference amongſt expoſitors, ſome holding, that it began at the carrying away of Iehoiakim, eleven yeares before and ſome at this time; and Wolphius ſaith, that ſome make a third time, when Iehoiakim was ſlaine, when the Chaldees began firſt to carry away captives, ending this and that of Iehoiakin the firſt of Cyrus, the other the ſecond of Darius, the limits of each conteining within them ſeventy yeares. They that will have the time begin at Iehoiakin, alledge the Epiſtle of Ieremiah ſent to thoſe of the captivitie, comforting them by promiſing a returne, after that they had beene in Babylon ſeventy yeares, and this Epiſtle was ſent by the meſſengers of Zedekiah, therefore not to thoſe, who were carryed away with him, but before with Iehoiakin, and this they ſtrengthen farther from Ezech. 1.2. and 40. 1. where a reckoning is made by the yeares from the carrying away of Iehoiakim, the fift and twenty five, and from Matth. 1. 11. where the captivitie is reckoned to begin at Iehoiakim. But in the ſame 40. of Ezek. there are two reckonings, one from Iehoiakim, another from the deſtruction of the city, betwixt which two a diſtance is put off eleven yeares, the firſt was the time of the captivities beginning, the other of the deſolation, whereby Ieremiah beginneth the time of account, chap. 25. 11. and therefore from thence doubtleſſe, according to the opinion of others, we are to reckon and that was the time of carrying away Zedekiah, and this they further confirme out of 2 Chron. 36. 21. and Dan. 9. 2. For the Epiſtle ſent by Ieremiah to thoſe in captivity, it muſt be expounded by the propheſie preceding, when they had been ſeventy yeares in Babylon, that is, who were carryed away both firſt and laſt, for he by the ſpirit foreſeeing this, ſpeakes of it, as being the captivity fully made, from whence they were to reckon and not from that already paſt, and then the ſeventy yeares expired, anno 1. of Cyrus king of the Perſians, and of Darius, who although he be ſaid, *Dan.*6. firſt to have reigned, after the Babylonian kingdome deſtroyed, yet his reigne was very ſhort, viz. but one whole yeare, before he died, and Cyrus his ſonne in law was king immediately after the next yeare. The deſtruction of Babylon then was the terme of the deſolation, and a new kings beginning to reigne, who was of another nation, the beginning of their promiſed deliverance. But if we reckon from the deſolation happening anno 19. of Nebuchadnezzar who reigned 43. yeares, in his time there were after it, 24. Funcii Chrono'. Evilmerodach his ſonne, 30. Regaſſar the next king, 3. Labaſſardac the next 6. and Balſhazzars, 5. Darius, 1. altogether 69. we ſhall finde, that the ſeventieth was the firſt of Cyrus, and ſo their deliverance was the ſame yeare, that it was promiſed.

V.9. To returne to Nebuzaradan, He burnt the houſe of the Lord, and the kings houſe, &c.] It is a received opinion amongſt many ancient fathers, that now alſo the holy Scriptures were burnt, and that God inſpired Ezra to write and ſet them forth perfectly again, and this is grounded upon 4. Ezra 14.21,22,&c. But Athanaſius Athanaſ. in Synopſi. ſaith, When the ſacred books periſhed by the incury of the people and the long captivity, Ezra being a very induſtrious and diligent reader and lover of the truth kept them all by him and afterwards brought them forth for the common good, and ſo in a manner preſerved them being delivered from deſtruction. It is ſaid alſo, that Daniel by reading Dan. 9. Jeremiah found the time of the captivity to be at an end, when 70. years were expired. And Ioſephus ſaith, that the Prophet Eſay was by Daniel ſhewed to Cyrus, Ioſeph.l.11.c.1. Theodoret in Dan. wherein it was propheſied of him by name 200. yeares before, by which he was the more moved to let the people goe, ſo Theodoret ſaith, that for the familiarity, which he had with him, he ſhewed him the Propheſie of Eſay, and was unto him the authour of returning the captivity. Neither is there any mention in canonicall Scripture made any where of the burning of all the holy Scriptures, which would not doubtleſſe have beene omitted, or paſſed over unlamented by Ieremiah, if Nehem.8. it had been ſo. Laſtly, Ezra himſelfe is ſaid to have read the Scriptures to the people, and other Levites read therein alſo, but it is not ſaid, that he indited them over againe, but onely read them and gave the ſenſe. Wherefore it is not probable, that all the bookes of holy Scripture were now ſuffered to periſh, but ſome copy was ſtill by a ſingular providence preſerved, and this being done by Ezra, he was therefore counted the reſtorer of them, being in no other hands then to be found.

2 Chro.36.17. But to returne to the burning of the Lords houſe, 2 Chron. 36. 17. before this it is ſaid, That they ſlew their young men in the Sanctuary and ſpared no age, and they took out and carryed into Babylon all the veſſels of the Lords houſe, both great and ſmall. This is inſerted to ſhew the extremity of their miſery, ſuch as fled to the ſanctuary thinking to be protected by the holineſſe of that place, were cruelly ſlaine notwithſtanding, neither were young children, or virgins, who are moſt commonly ſpared, exempt from the Chaldees fury. And for the carrying away of the veſſels of the Lords houſe, it is here ſet downe when they were taken out of that houſe, 2 King.25.13,14,15. After the burning, when they were carryed away into Babel, a more particular enumeration being made of them.

V. 11. But the reſt of the people, which remained in the city, and which fled to the king of Babylon he carryed away, &c.] The warriours were before ſaid to have fled out of the city, when the king fled, and leaving him alone to have ſhifted for themſelves, ſome others both young and old fled to the temple for ſafeguard, and were ſlaine there; all the reſt, who either ſtayed in the city and yielded, or had fled before out to Nebuchadnezzar, as Ieremiah had oft counſelled the king to doe, were carryed away into Babylon to be ſervants to the Chaldees, except ſome poore people, who they thought would either be a burden to them rather then a benefit, or more beneficiall being left to till and husband the ground for their uſe, theſe were left ſtill in the land to be vine dreſſers and husbandmen, moſt probably by their labours to raiſe ſomewhat, out of which a yearely tribute might be paid to the King.

V. 13. The brazen pillers and the baſes, and the brazen ſea, &c. The Chaldees brak down and carryed into Babel, &c. 2 Chron.36.18. it is added, the treaſures alſo of the Lords houſe and the kings, and of the princes] And here, whatſoever veſſels were of ſilver or gold they carryed away, and the height of the pillers is ſet downe, 18 cubits, and the weight of all brazen things ineſtimable.

V. 18. He alſo took Serajah the chiefe prieſt, and Zephaniah the ſecond, and the three porters, &c.] And theſe being brought to Nebuchadnezzar in Riblath were all ſlaine there. Moſt probably theſe men had hidden themſelves, thinking thus to eſcape the Chaldees hands, but when the temple & all the principal buildings of the city were fiered, they could lye hid no longer, and becauſe they were men of note, the captain would not ſlay them himſelfe, as he had done the common ſort which yeilded not, but reſerved them to receive their judgemēt from the king himſelf, who for their rebellion put them now to death alſo. Laſtly, becauſe the poore people remaining muſt needs have an head to governe them or elſe confuſion would follow, Gedaliah V. 22. the ſon of Abikam is ſet over them, and moreover ſome Chaldees, as it ſeemeth, v. 18. were left to ſee, that all things might be ordered for the beſt for the king. Of this Gedaliah nothing is recorded amongſt Writers, but that he was a good man and loving. For which cauſe the captaines of the army, who fled out of Ieruſalem when it was taken, and there men reſorted to him to Mizpah, where he kept in the borders of Iudah and Benjamine, being a citie famous of old, as Gilgal, in both which Samuel is ſaid to have judged the people. The captaines, that came 1 Sam. 7.15. to Gedaliah, were Iſhmael, Iohanan, Serajah, and Iaazaniah. To whom he ſware V. 26. for their aſſurance. Becauſe probably when they came unto him and ſaw ſome Chaldean ſouldiers there ſtill, they feared, that they were left to take ſuch Iewes, as ſhould after the departure of Nebuchadnezzar come out of their hiding places, and ſend them captive to Babylon or ſlay them, as others had been ſerved before. Therefore to ſecure them he ſware unto them, and Ier. 40. 10. He ſpake com- Ier. 40.10. fortably unto them, bidding them gather the Summer fruits, the vines and olives, for now it was the ſixt moneth, wherein they were uſually ripe; and if any ſhall wonder, that any fruits remained to be gathered and were not ſpoyled by the Chaldee ſouldiers, who had been ſo long in that countrey, it is to be conceived, that they ſpared them, as not knowing what uſe they ſhould have need to make of them. It is alſo further by Ieremiah added, that all the Iewes amongſt the Ammo- Chap. 40.11. nites, Moabites, Edomites, &c. came to Gedaliah, and gathered much fruit, neither doth he omit, but ſpeake more fully in the firſt place of his owne coming to him, Chap. 40. 4, 5, 6. as Nebuzaradan had appointed.

Then Iſhmael who was of the kings ſeede, and ten men with him came and ſmote V. 25. Gedaliah, and the Iewes and Chaldeans, that were with him.] This is more fully ſet forth, Ier. 40. 13. where Iohanan the ſonne of Careah and all the captains are ſaid to have come out of the field, that is, from gathering of the Summer fruits, and to have certified Gedaliah, that Iſhmael was ſent by the king of the Ammonites to ſlay him, but he not beleeving it, no not when Iohanan told him of it againe ſecretly, and would have cut off Iſhmael, before he ſhould commit ſuch an heinous and dangerous fact, whereby all the Iewes remaining ſhould come in perill, as ſheepe without a ſhepherd, without all feare received him, and ten men of the kings of Ammon with him, eating and drinking together; and as Ioſephus hath it, when Ioſephus. they were heavie with wine and ſleeping, they fell upon him and his company and ſlew them all. Why Iſhmael did thus is not ſaid, but it may well be conjectured, that he did it out of envie to ſee Gedaliah thus preferred before himſelfe, who was of the blood royall. And this was done the ſeventh moneth to the extreme griefe and terrour of all the Iewes that remained, before two moneths of his government were fully expired, becauſe they feared, that the Chaldees would come againe and deſtroy them all for this fact. And it is thought by ſome of great judge- Hieronym. ment, that in this moneth the Iewes kept a faſt therefore during the time of the Cyrillus. deſolation of their land, as alſo the fourth moneth, becauſe in the fourth the city was broken up, and in the fifth becauſe the temple and city were burnt in the fifth, and in the tenth moneth, becauſe in the tenth Nebuchadnezzar firſt beſieged Ieruſalem. For of all theſe mention is made, Zech. 8. 19. it being promiſed, that they ſhould be turned into times of rejoycing at their returne from captivity.

Then all the people aroſe and went into Egypt, &c.] Before this it is ſhewed, Ier. V. 29. 41. 4, 5. that there came eighty men from Shechem, Shiloh and Samaria their beards Ier. 41.5. ſhaven, and garments rent, &c. And it is ſaid, that they came knowing nothing that had been done againſt Gedaliah, for they came the ſecond day after, directing their courſe to the houſe of the Lord, with an offering to be made at the leaſt in that place, for they could not well be ignorant, that the temple was now burnt. To meet theſe men, Iſhmael went out diſſembling ſorrow, alſo for the ruining of the city and temple, and brought them into Mezpah by the way to ſee Gedaliah, and when he had them in the city he ſlew them alſo; moſt probably, becauſe they loved Gedaliah, whom he envied; and he caſt their dead bodies, as alſo others whom he had ſlain, into a pit made ſometime by Aſa, of whom it is ſaid, 1 King 15. 22. that he built of the ſtones carried from Ramah, Gebah and Mizpah, haply trenching ſome of part of it with a great trench, like a pit, for the greater ſtrength. Jer. 41. 10. And this being done, he took the remnant of the people and the kings daughters, that were with Gedaliah and carried them away captive towards the Ammonites countrey. But Iohanan and the other captains in the field now hearing, what he had done, went with their men againſt him, and he with eight of his company fleeing away, the captives were all brought back again, and the whole company came to Bethlehem, to paſſe from thence into Egypt. But before they went the captains ſpake to Ieremiah, to crave the Lords direction for them, promiſing Chap. 42. to obey. This Ieremiah did, and after ten dayes gave them an anſwer, that they ſhould not go into Egypt, threatning them, if they did, with deſtruction, if not Chap. 43. promiſing them ſafetie. But they obeyed not, but told Ieremiah that he lied unto them, and ſo in contempt of that which he ſaid, went into Egypt, carrying him away with them alſo. Thus the propheſie, which was of a deſolation of the whole land for 70. years took effect, a divine providence ſecretly working with their obſtinacie, that no word ſpoken by the Lord, might at any time fall to the ground.

2 Chron. 36. 20. In 2 Chron, 36. 20. It is concluded with Nebuzaradans carrying away of captives, and their continuance in Babylon till the Perſian Monarchie began, that the propheſie of Ieremiah might be fulfilled, of the lands enjoying her Sabbaths 70 years, of which times beginning and ending, ſee before upon this, 2 King. 25. Then finally, it is ſhewed, that Cyrus king of the Perſians in the firſt year of his reign, made a proclamation throughout all his kingdome, for the return of the Iews, with which the book of Ezra beginneth. and therefore the explanation hereof I deferre, till I come to Ezra.

2 King. 25. 30. But before this captivitie ended, viz. anno 37 of Iehoiakins captivitie, it is ſaid, 2 King. 25. 30. that in the twelfth moneth of that year, the 27 day, Evilmerodach lifted up the head of Iehoiakin in the firſt year of his reign out of priſon, and ſpake comfortably to him, and lifted up his throne above the thrones of the reſt of the kings, &c. Wolphius. See the ſame alſo Ier. 52. 31. but there the 25 day of the moneth is put for the 27 here. Wolphius ſaith, that by the Rabbins it is thus reconciled; Nebuchadnezzar died the 25 day, and being buried the 26 day, his ſon Evilmerodach coming to the crown the 27 day, cauſed his dead bodie to be taken up again, and drag'd about the ſtreets, that it might appear to all men, that he was verily dead, and then cauſing it to be cut in pieces, it was given to the vultures to be devoured, that he might be ſure, that he could never live again to put him by, as he had once done, when after his ſeven years living amongſt the beaſts of the field, he returned to his kingdome, and put his ſonne Evilmerodach in priſon, who in that time had taken the kingdome upon him. Now becauſe Evilmerodach haply being at his fathers death in priſon with him, ſpake comfortably to him, and promiſed him deliverance; Ieremiah ſets down this as the day, but becauſe he was not fully delivered till two dayes after, when Evilmerodach had obtained the kingdome, here it is ſet down the ſeven and twentieth day. But Wolphius himſelfe bringeth another ſolution, viz. that Evilmerodach held a conſultation about his deliverance, and propounded it the 25 day, but it was not actually performed, till the 27. Some others, he was loſed from his bands the 25, and the funerall rites being performed the 26 day, in the 27 he was fully delivered. But who ſhall accurately compare the places together, will rather encline to think, that Ieremiah ſetteth forth the day of his coming out of priſon, and the Kings, the day of his being ſo preferred, above other captive kings then in Babylon, becauſe, in Ieremiah it is ſaid, he lifted up his head bringing him out of priſon; but in the Kings, he lifted up his head from the priſon houſe, intimating two degrees of favour done to him.

Firſt, in freeing him from priſon, for this was one lifting up of his head. Secondly, in raiſing him from being a priſoner to royall Majeſtie, and maintaining him accordingly all his dayes, for this was another lifting up of his head, being now out of priſon. What moved Evilmerodach to ſhew this great favour to Iehojakin is not ſaid, in any of both theſe places, but if that be true, which the Rabbins report, that Evilmerodach was by his father Nebuchadnezzar put into the ſame priſon where Iehoiakin lay, it may eaſily be conjectured, that ſome friendſhip that grew between them in that time was the cauſe, and Iehoiakins acquainting him with his firſt voluntarie putting of himſelf into Nebuchadnezzars hands, hoping, that he would not have dealt ſo hardly with him. For this could not but work upon a good nature, to ſeek to make him ſome amends in doing him a greater favor, then to any of the kings about him. But if we would know the true efficient cauſe, it was Gods ſingular providence, whereby this was brought to paſſe for the verifying of his word, and the encouraging of all kings and men to obey his prophets, as Iehoiakin did in ſo freely yielding himſelf to the king of Babylon, that his citie Ieruſalem and the temple might be ſpared. For Ier. 24. 5. I*ehoiakin* and the Iews, who were carried away with him, are ſaid to have been ſent away by the Lord, and to have been beloved as good figs, and choſen to have good done unto them, whereas they that were carried away afterwards under Zedekiah were as evill figs, that could not be eaten, and therefore condemned to diſperſion and deſtruction. It was long indeed, before this good was fulfilled to Iehoiakin, and his captived ſubjects, but now at the end of 37 years it was performed. For although nothing be ſaid of his ſubjects here, but of him onely, yet it cannot be thought, but he faring thus well, they participated with him in the comfort. And for the ſtory before going of Nebuchadnezzar, and of his body being cut in pieces and given to the vultures, there ſeemeth to be ſome ground for it, Eſa. 14.19, 20. where it is threatned, that he ſhould not, as all other kings, enjoy the honour of a ſepulture, but his dead corps ſhould be caſt out. Evilmerodach is by ſome expounded Iunior Merodach, by others fooliſh Merodach, becauſe he was drawn, as ſome ſuppoſe, by Daniel, who was gracious at the court of the king of Babylon, to do for Iehoiakin and his people, according to the word of the Lord by the prophet Ieremiah, for this prophane men count ſimplicitie. But if for this reaſon he had been ſo called, the pen-man of the Scripture would not in following ſuch unworthy authors ſo have called him. I hold therefore rather with the former reaſon, that he was Merodach the younger, becauſe there was another of the ſame name before.

And here is an end of the hiſtory of the kings of Iudah, who came of David, but not an end of his poſterity, which continued untill Chriſt, the promiſed ſeed of David, as is declared *Matth.*1.12. where twelve generations more are named after Jechonias, the firſt whereof are Shealtiel and Zerubabel, but 1 *Chron.*3.17. Shealtiel, Pedaiah, and Zerubabel. But of this Genealogie ſee enough upon Matth. 1.

To conclude, I have in explaining the hiſtory of the Kings, ſo interlaced the Chronicles alſo, from Saul and David, *cha.*10, 11. throughout, that both thoſe books are with the ſame labour explained alſo, and the ſeeming differences reconciled, ſo that here is nothing paſſed over but onely genealogies from Adam to Abraham, and from Abraham to Iſhmael, and to Iſaac, and Iacob, and his iſſue; and the captivitie and their return from it. All which was done by Ezra, as Iunius ſaith, together with the following ſupplement of the hiſtory of the Kings of Iudah, being for the moſt part omitted in the hiſtory of the Kings, or ſo briefly delivered, that the reader could not thereby onely be acquainted with many memorable things concerning them and their times. And the genealogies being for the moſt part ſuch, as in divers places of the holy Scripture have been already ſet forth, and containing onely names, ſhall not need to be any further inſiſted upon. Wherefore leaving theſe books, I will haſten towards the book called Ezra, and ſhew ſo farre as I can finde any light, what followed after the laſt captivitie under Zedekiah, to the Iews return therefrom, and at and about their return, and after before the comming of CHRIST.

Onely whereas ſome think it not probable, that the Chronicles were written by 1 Chron. 3.19, 20, &c. Ezra, becauſe nine genealogies are mentioned after Zorubbabel, unto which Ezra could not live. I grant indeed, if Ezra had been contemporanean with Zorubbabel, he could not in the courſe of nature have lived ſo long, but forſomuch as he came after Zorubbabel about 78 years, as is ſhewed, ch. 7. Ezra 7. For he was anno 1°. of Cyrus, and Ezra, anno 7°. of Artaxerxes Longimanus, and for ought we know, might live 30 or forty years after, and if ſo he attained to above 100 years after Zorobabels coming to Ieruſalem, and if he grant that he had a ſon then, he alſo might have a ſonne ſoon after his coming thither, ſo that here are two generations, and who doubts but that in a hundred years and odde there might be ſeven generations more, ſeeing Kings amongſt the Iews may be noted to have begotten at thirteen or fourteen years of age, ſo prolifious were that people, by Gods ſingular bleſſing to make good his promiſe to Abraham. But if Ezra lived not altogether ſo long, this argueth not, that the book was not written by him, no more then that Deuteronomy was not written by Moſes; becauſe his death and ſomething after it is therein recorded. For as that was done by another hand, as God in his providence appointed; ſo might two or three genealogies be by ſome other added to Ezras, and yet the book may be ſaid to be written by him.

And it is thought that the books of the Chronicles, were written laſt of all others of the old teſtament, yea, after the books called Ezra; becauſe by the Hebrews they are placed after it.

Ezra, The Preface.

BEſides this there are two other Books, which goe under the name of Ezra, or Eſdras, called the 3 and 4 of Eſdras: but thoſe, as Jerome ſayth, are apochryphall, whoſe words are, let no man be moved at this, that I have tranſlated one Book of Eſdras onely, neyther let him be delighted with the dreames of the 3 and 4 which are apochryphall. Becauſe alſo amongſt the Hebrews the words of Ezra and Nehemiah are put together in one Book, and thoſe things, which are not amongſt them neyther, be of the 24 Elders, are to be caſt far off. Where by Elders, Lyra ſayth well, are meant the 24 Canonicall Books of the old Teſtament in alluding to Apoc. 4. This then is the only undoubted Book written by that learned and famous Prieſt Ezra, that hereby we might know, what hapned unto the people of God after licenſe given them to return from their captivity in Babylon thence forward unto the 19 yeer of Artaxerxes, Mnemon, as Junius noteth, which was 146 yeers. For Cyrus and Cambyſes reigned 9 yeers, the Magi 1 Darius Hiſtaſpis 36, Xerxes 22, Artaxerxes Longimani 40, Darius Nothus 19, Artaxerxes Mnemon 19. For in the ſeventh yeare of his reigne, Ezra came out of Babylon, Chap. 7. 7, 8. and the Book of Nehemiah is begun Anno 20, of the ſame King. He wrote indeed, as Junius ſaith, and is moſt probable, the books of the Chronicles, but after them this book of his onely is acknowledged Canonicall, and no more. For the reckoning of the time ſee more in theſe Kings ſeverall reigns, what happened after the Jewes hardening of themſelves againſt Jeremiah his Propheſying, to goe down into Egypt, when Iſhmael had treacherouſly ſlain Gedaliah, which was the firſt year after the Temple and Jeruſalem deſtroyed, is not recorded in Holy Writ, but onely that Jeremiah perſiſted to inveigh againſt their ſins, and to threaten their deſtruction by Nebuchadnezer: For to ſhew this he tooke great ſtones being in Taphnes, and hid them neerer to Pharoahs gate, ſaying, that Nebuchadnezar ſet his throne upon thoſe ſtones. And when the Jews came to dwell not onely at Taphnes, but alſo in other Cities of Egypt, and followed the manners of the Egyptians in Migdol, Noph and Pathros, in ſacrificing to their gods, he threatned them again with deſtruction for theſe abominations, which is ſuppoſed to have been Anno 2, of their comming into Egypt, hereupon, they impatient of his reproofs ſtoned him to death, as is commonly held amongſt ancient writers, as Epiphanius de vita Jeremiæ, adding that he was buried in the place where Pharoahs houſe ſtood. Dorothæus alſo having written of his ſtoning to death, addeth, that the Egyptians did him the honour to bury him in the place where Pharoahs houſe ſtood, for the benefits by him done unto them. And Iſidor ſaith, that Jeremiah prayed for the Egyptians, that the Serpents which annoyed their Countrey might be taken away and prevailed, wherefore when the Jews had cruelly ſlain him, they buryed him honourably neer the Kings Palace. Jerom alſo and Tertullian, and all the Martyrologies both Greek and Latine conſent herein. Jeremiah being martyred, the Jews in Egypt eſcaped not long after the judgements threatned againſt them. For in the fifth yeare after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem, ſaith Ioſephus, which was the 23 of Nebuchadnezar, he with great forces invaded Cœloſyria, which being ſubdued, he fought againſt the Ammonites and Moabites, and having brought them under alſo, he haſtily invaded Egypt, killing the King that then reigned there, and ſetting up another, and carrying the Jews away into Babylon, whom he found there. And haply Baruch the the Scribe of Ieremiah, was one that was carryed amongſt them, becauſe he writes of himſelfe as being in Babylon, Baruch 1. yet ſome thinke that Ieremiah being ſlain, he ſtayed not in Egypt, but went voluntarily away. Touching Zedekiah the King, nothing more is ſaid after his carrying away into Babylon. But Ier. 34.4,5. It it is ſaid, that he ſhould be carryed into Babylon, yet not to die by the ſword, but in peace, and that they ſhould make a burning for him after the manner of the Kings that had reigned before him. And ſo Ioſephus ſaith, that Nebuchadnezar kept him in priſon, indeed, as long as he lived, but then buried him, being lifted up with the Kingly pomp of a funerall. At what time this was, is uncertain, but moſt probably, the pain of the loſſe of his eyes, and griefe for his children ſlain, his Countreyes and his own miſeries, ſuffered him not long to live after. But to return to Nebuchadnezar, he having enlarged his Empire unto Syria, Egypt, Ammon and Moab proceeded ſtill to conquer more Countreyes, as it muſt needs be granted, becauſe Ier. 25.20,21,&c. many more Countries are named which he ſhould ſubdue, and finally, ver. 25. Elam, that is, Perſia, and Media, and ver. 26. All the Kings of the North both far and nigh: by the far, we may underſtand the Arminians and Hircanians, which inhabited Meſopotamia, and by the nigh, the Aſſyrians inhabiting Nineveh, ſo that Nebuchadnezar ceaſes not warring till he had ſubdued all Nations, and which is moſt remarkable, the Ninevites, Aſſyrians, under whoſe Dominion the Babylonians had formerly been, untill the great overthrow of Sanaherib before Jeruſalem in Hezekiahs dayes, are now brought under by the King of Babylon, which did ſo greatly puff him up with pride, as we may ſee in Daniel, for with the ſpoils of that rich and goodly City Nineveh, he built and inriched Babylon, ſo as that now Nineveh being put down, there was no City equall to it in all the World. And of this deſtruction of Nineveh, Nahum propheſied, which happened above a hundred years after Ionah his preaching amongſt them.

Dan. 3.

When Nebuchadnezar had thus ſubdued all Nations, he dreamed that admirable dream recorded Dan. 2. For although it be ſaid, Anno 2 of his reign, yet it is not to be underſtood of his reign reckoning from his beginning after his fathers death, for then he had not ſubdued all Nations, but of his univerſall Empire, from the beginning whereof, as more glorious by far, he would thenceforth have his reign counted, wherefore Ioſephus ſaith, that it was Anno 2, after his conqueſt of Egypt, and this then muſt be, Anno 25 of his reign, reckoning from the beginning, ſeeing he had then reigned 23. And this is generally followed by all Expoſitours, but Theodoret and Ierom proveth, that it cannot be meant of his ſecond year, reckoning from the beginning of his reign over Babylon, becauſe three years after his attaining to the Crown, and conquering and carrying Captives from Iudea, amongſt whom Daniel was one, were expired before this, as will appear to him that compares, Dan. 1.5. with ver. 18,19,&c. ſeeing Daniel and his brethren were kept firſt three years, and then brought before the King, wherefore it muſt needs be the ſecond yeare of his univerſall Empire, and not of his reign over Babylon, and that was about ſeven years after the deſtruction of Jeruſalem. Not long after, as is ſuppoſed, about three years Nebuchadnezar made that monſterous image of gold, 60 cubits high, and ſix cubits broad, which he would have all men to worſhip, ſome think, that thereby he might be worſhipped, but others more probably, to pleaſe his gods, whom he was told by his Caldees, that he had greatly offended, by attributing ſo much to the God of Daniel, ſome, to croſſe that which was repreſented to him in his dream, the head whereof was of gold, the breaſt of ſilver, &c. to ſhew that his Empire ſhould never ſuffer any alteration, but be always golden from the head to the foot: Howſoever he ſhewed hereby his great lenity, in that being a little while before a convert, he now fell to Idolatry again, and his great pride in being at ſuch exceſſive coſt in making ſo mighty and vaſt an Image all of gold, to which muſt needs go many thouſand talents. And it may well be thought, that ſuch of the Caldees as envied the honour of Ananias, Azarias, and Miſael, put the King on to the making of this Image, that by this means they might be pulled down.

Plutarch.

About the 14 year after the captivity under Zedekiah, Solon was made the Law-giver of Athens by a common conſent, by reaſon of the miſeries wherein they were all referring to him the ſole power of Law in a King, whereupon hee made many good Laws, and inſtituted two Senates, one of the Areopagie, who were Judges, and the other of 400 Senators, repealing the bloudy Laws of Draco, who had made ſtealing of apples, or pears, and idleneſſe, capitall; appointing death onely for murther. In the 16 yeare of the deſolation, that is, Anno 27 of Jehojakims captivity, Ezekiel propheſied of Nebuchadnezars ſervice done againſt Tyrus, and not long after he was martyred by the then Judge of the Jews in Babylon, for inveighing againſt their idolatry, ſo Epiphanius, & Dorethæus, and Chryſoſtom opus imperfect. in Matth. ſaith; upon Chap. 23. I ſent Eſay unto you and yee ſawed him, and Ieremiah you ſtoned to death, and Ezekiels brains yee cauſed to be daſht out, by drawing him againſt the ſtones.

Epiphanius.
Dorothæus.

About the ſame time alſo, moſt probably, Nebuchadnezar had his ſecond Dream of a great tree, which Daniel expounded of him, ſhewing that he ſhould be driven from amongſt men, and living amongſt the beaſts ſeven years, which within twelve moneths came to paſſe accordingly; and in that time he is ſaid, to have eaten graſſe with the beaſts, and then his underſtanding was reſtored unto him, and he came again to his Kingdom, and within one yeare dyed. All which Hiſtory is by ſome turned into an allegory, as not ſeeing how it can be hiſtorically true, that a King ſhould live amongſt beaſts, lying and feeding as they doe ſeven years together, becauſe alſo in the Caldee Hiſtories no mention is made hereof. But we muſt certainly, as Ierom ſaith, hold it to be an hiſtory of that which was truly done, or elſe the verity of any other hiſtoricall narration in holy Writ may as well be called in queſtion, and ſo the Scripture it ſelfe ſhall be uncertain. And why ſhould we doubt of Gods power to deprive him of his underſtanding for a time, and to make him to turn wilde, and to run out amongſt the beaſts, going upon all foure, and feeding as they did, and to ſuſtain his life all the time that hee did ſo, ſeeing many Eremites have lived upon herbs and roots, 50 or 60 years, and lyen in dens or under trees in the open aire. And for the Caldee Hiſtories, it is not altogether untouched in them: for Euſebius ſaith, that one Alpheus a writer of the Aſſyrian Hiſtory, writeth thus, Megaſthenes ſaith that Nebuchadnezar was ſtronger then Hercules, and having ſubdued all Aſia, as far as the Armenians, he returned home, and was by God ſtricken with madneſſe, &c. The next remarkable thing happening in theſe 70 years was, Jechonia his freeing from priſon, and preferment in Evilmerodachs Court, who ſucceded his father Nebuchadnezar in the Kingdom, of which ſee before, upon 2 Kings 25.27. and this was Anno 26 of Jeruſalems deſolation, for it was Anno 37 of his captivity, that is, 11 years before this time began. And how long Evilmerodach reigned, hath alſo been ſhewed upon 2 Kings 25.9. and the Kings that ſucceded him till the firſt of Cyrus. Yet ſome there are that mention onely three Kings of Babylon, that reigned in the time of this captivity, viz. Nebuchadnezar 25, Evilmerodach 23, and Belſhazzar 21. as Theodoret, Sulpitius, Euſebius, Heb.Chron. Cap. 28. Genebrard and the rather becauſe no more are ſpoken of in the Sacred Hiſtory, nor, Ier. 27.7. but Nebuchadnezar and his ſon, and ſons ſon. In the dayes of Evilmerodach ſome think that thoſe things happened which are related of Bell and the Dragon, confounded by Daniel, and of Daniels caſting into, and abiding in the lyons den ſix dayes, when Habacuk was brought miraculouſly to him with food. But one thing makes againſt the credit of that Hiſtory, as Iunius noteth, viz. that Daniel is ſaid to have been a familiar friend of Cyrus, and after that, that theſe things followed, which could not be in the Perſians, but Babylonians times.

Euſeb.l.9. de præpar. Evan.

Anno 26.

Anno 30 of Ieruſalems deſolation, there was one Ezra or Eſdras, who complained before God of the miſeries of his people, and had divers revelations as he ſaith, but he was not this Ezra, for he was not yet borne, ſeeing from hence to the end of the captivity were 40 years, from thence to the ſeventh of Artaxerxes when this Ezra came to Ieruſalem 134 years, as appears by the computation before going, that none may be deceived by the name, to regard the contents of that book, which the moſt learned have never eſteemed of. But from hence we learn that Salathiel the ſonne of Iehojakim, was now Prince of the Jews, becauſe Chap 5.16. he is called by this name, & it is ſaid that he came unto him, ſo that Iehojakim was now dead three or foure years after his deliverance from priſon, and it ſeems that Salathiel his ſonne ſucceeded in his Princely honour through the ſame Evilmerodachs favour. About 20 years after this Evilmerodach was ſlain by his ſiſters husband, called Niglíſſoroor, ſo Beroſus and Ioſephus, and then he reigned in his ſtead foure years. From hence forward, that is, from Anno 48 of Ieruſalems deſolation, we read not in ſacred Hiſtory of any other Babylonish King till Belſhazzar, although both Funccius and ſome others, place others between, as Regaſſar and Labaſardac. But to ſay nothing of them of whom we are ignorant, and if any thing memorable were in the times of any ſuch Kings done, it is not recorded in the firſt year of Belſhazzar, Daniel had his Viſion of Chap. 7. of foure beaſts, one headed like a Lyon, two like a Bear, three like a Leopard, four more terrible then any of theſe with iron teeth, repreſenting four Monarchies of the World, and their deſtruction at the laſt day.

In the third year of Belſhazzar, Daniel had another Viſion of a Ram and a Goat having one great horne, which when it was broken off, foure ſprung up inſtead of it, whereby the Perſian Monarchy was ſet forth, and the Grecian after Alexander divided into foure, amongſt whom Antiochus Epiphanes is ſpecially ſet forth, as exerciſing moſt cruelty towards Gods peculiar people. From hence there being 18 years ſtill to come of the 70, the ſacred Hiſtory ſaith nothing of that which was done in any of them: But becauſe Cyrus is here ſaid to have reigned at the expiration of this time and to have been upon his firſt year, and yet Dan. 6. Belſhazzar being ſlain, it is ſaid that Darius reigned, it will be neceſſary before we come to ſpeake of the liberty given by Cyrus, to ſay ſomwhat of this mighty King, and of his geſts before his comming to the Kingdom of Babylon. He was the ſon of Aſtiages his daughter, who was King of the Medes and Perſians, but before he was borne, Aſtiages dreamed that he ſaw a vine growing out of his daughters belly, which overſpread all Aſia, and being told by his Wizards, that hereby was ſhewed that ſhee ſhould beare a ſon that ſhould reign over all Aſia, and put him from his Kingdom, he thought to prevent this by adopting Darius a Kinſman, that he might ſucceed him in his Kingdome, becauſe he had no ſonne but a daughter onely, whoſe iſſue he would not have come to that honour. Then he gave his daughter in marriage, not to a great man, becauſe the ſonne that ſhee ſhould have by the helpe of his kinſmen ſhould aſpire to the Crown, but to an ordinary Souldier, and when ſhee had a ſonne by him, he cauſed the infant to be brought unto him, and delivered it to Harpagus one of his Nobles to be ſlain. But he fearing that the Kingdom might afterwards come to the mother durſt not doe it, but caſt it in a Wood, into which there came, by a ſingular providence, a Bitch which gave ſuck, and ſucked and defended the infant from the fowls and beaſts til that the Kings ſhepheard accidentally found it, and brought it home to his wife to be nouriſhed up. The child thus preſerved and growing up to a lad of ſome bigneſſe, was in playing choſen by other lads to be their King, and behaved himſelf ſo ſeverely towards ſuch as offended, as that they complained to their parents, and their parents to the King. Hereupon the King ſent for him, by whom he being asked, why he dealt ſo with them, anſwered with an undaunted courage, that hee did it, as their King. Aſtiages admiring the lad, as not likely to be of a ſhepherds race, ſent for the ſhepherd and of him learned the truth, and ſo came to know, that this was his daughters ſon. Yet his wrath was pacified towards the lad, ſuppoſing the prediction to have been already fulfilled in his being King of the boyes, and he delivered him to the ſame Harpagus to be brought up. But for his diſobedience formerly, hee cauſed his ſonne ſecretly to be murthered. This comming to his knowledge, he yet wiſely diſſembled his anger againſt the King, till that divers years after, the King having committed an Armie to him to goe againſt his enemies, hee perſwaded them to make Cyrus King in way of revenge for his ſonne; Aſtiages hearing this gathered an Army, and fought againſt Cyrus, and at the firſt prevailed, but at the next encounter was overcome by Cyrus, who ſo moderately uſed his victory, that he ſuffered his Grand-father to continue King of the Hircanians, and Darius his Uncle King of the Medes, he holding the Kingdom of the Perſians onely during their lives, but afterwards conditioning to enjoy all.

The name Cyrus was firſt given unto him by Harpagus, when he made him King, for before he was called Spectaticus, that is, Catulus, or Whelpe, becauſe a Bitch nouriſhed him. When Cyrus was grown to this greatneſſe, Crœſus King of the Lydians being in a moſt rich and proſperous condition, for he had ſubdued unto himſelfe 14 Nations in Halim in Aſia, as Herodotus ſayth, would not ſuffer Cyrus quietly to enjoy his Kingdom, but paſſing over the River, which divided their Kingdoms, hee made war upon him, and when they had fought fiercely on both ſides one day, they were parted by the comming on of the night, neyther part prevayling, but many on both ſides being ſlain. Crœſus then retyring to Sardis, ſent to the Egyptians and Babylonians, with whom he was in league, for aid, not once ſuſpecting, that Cyrus would come againſt him in his chief City, with whom hee had fought in open field with equall ſucceſſe, wherefore hee appointed his Confederates to come unto him not till the fifth moneth after. But Cyrus with all ſpeed gathering his forces together went againſt Sardis. Crœſus hearing of his comming called together his Lydians, who were then counted the valianteſt men in all Aſia, and the beſt horſmen. Cyrus againſt them commeth with many Camels, whoſe ſight or ſmell horſes cannot endure, and ſo brake the order of their battell. Then the Lydians leaving their horſes fought on foot, but at length were put to flight, and ſo the City was beſieged, and within fourteen days taken, and Crœſus the King taken. Cyrus then condemned him to be burnt to death, but when hee was ſet upon the pile of wood prepared, and fire was now putting to, hee cryed, Solon, Solon, at which words Cyrus cauſed him to be broughr unto him, and asking the cauſe of his ſo crying out upon Solon, he ſayd, That wiſe Solon upon a time denyed him in the midſt of all his wealth and proſperity to be happy, ſaying, He knew not, what ſhould happen to him before he died. Cyrus hearing this, and and withall conſidering his own caſe and the uncertainty of theſe worldly things, ſpared him and made him his Counſellour, doing many things both in warre and peace by his advice. Not long after Cyrus appointing Harpagus to fight againſt the Ionians and Eolians, went himſelf againſt the upper parts of Aſia, and having ſubdued all, he laſtly bent his forces againſt the Egyptians and Babylon, which was the ſeat of the greateſt Monarch in the World, where Belſhazzar the ſon of Evilmerodach now reigned by Herodotus called Labinitus. But before hee could come thither, he muſt neceſſarily paſſe the River Gindes, which runneth into the River Tigris. This River Gindes, not being paſſable on horsback, but by boat only, Cyrus deviſed by making 365 ditches to carry the water away, being offended for one horſe in attempting to paſſe over was drowned there, and about this work was ſpent one whole yeare. Then he went on with a mighty Armie and beſieged Babylon, but they within the City at the firſt derided him, as thinking themſelves ſafe againſt all the Forces of the world. For Babylon called the great City, was ſo great and ſtrong, as that it was held to be invincible. The ſituation of it was in a plain foure ſquare, every ſide being 120 furlongs, according to Herodotus, Pliny, and Philoſtratus, but Diodorus Siculus makes the whole compaſſe to be but 365 furlongs, the reaſon of wich difference happily was, for that Diodorus deſcribes it as it was firſt built by Semiramis, Herodotus as it was inlarged by Nebuchadnezar, and if it were 120 furlongs long and broad, that was 15 miles either way, it was a monſterous City, and about all this length and breadth was a wall of incredible thickneſſe, viz. 50 cubits thick, that is, 75 foot, and 200 cubits high, ſaith Herodotus, beyond all credit, yea, and he addeth of the Kings cubits, one of which is longer then the ordinary by three fingers, ſo that ſix chariots might goe abreaſt upon the wall. But Diodorus more moderately, 32 foot thick, and 50 cubits high, ſo that two chariots might ſafely paſſe by one another upon it. Without the wall was a ditch full of water, out of which the bytuminous ſtuffe, wherewith the brick for the wall was made was digged, 100 foot broad, and as much ſpace of ground was between the wall and ditch for gardens and orchards. There were 100 gates of braſſe, and as many Towers, and the great River Euphrates ran through the midſt of the City, ſo that hereby it was divided into two, and on each ſide of the river there was a wall as thick as the other, and in the midſt a bridge 30 foot broad of five furlongs, and yet the river, as Strabo ſaith, was but one one furlong broad. The invincible ſtrength and greatneſſe of this City at the firſt, ſtounded Cyrus, when he heard alſo that they had brought in proviſion for more then 20 years, for he thought to force them to yeeld through famine. But there being nigh a place made ſomtime by Samramis to hold water 1200 furlongs ſquare, and 35 foot deep, he ſent his men to ſcoure it, and making great trenches, dreaned the waters of Euphrates into it, placing his men ſome at one end of the City, and ſome at the other, that they might be ready to enter when the water ſhould be falne ſo low that they might wade through, which they did accordingly, and took the City, after that in one night the water was let out into the drains before prepared. And it fell out ſo, that the ſame night the Babylonians were generally drunken, having kept a great feſtivall the day before, of which Cyrus not being ignorant, choſe that time purpoſely for this exploit. The Hebrews ſay that Belſhazzar the King knowing of the Propheſie of their deliverance from their captivity, and ſuppoſing the time to be now expired, and therefore their hopes fruſtrated, made that day his great Feaſt commemorated Dan.5. and in way of inſulting over the God of Iſrael, cauſed the precious veſſels of the houſe of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezar had carryed away to be brought fourth, and carowſed in them together with his Princes and Concubines, but vengeance preſently befell him therefore. However whether it were a Feaſt made for this cauſe, or according to their uſuall manner at that time of the yeere to the honour, of ſome Idoll, it ſeemeth, that they ſlighted much the danger, in which they were, in that they would not for it intermit their uſuall feaſting and making merry unto ſuch exceſſe. But Ier.51.11. God certainly had an hand in it, who had by Jeremiah foretold many particulars now happening long before, as firſt, that the Kings of the

If it ſhall ſeem that the Prophet erred ſomewhat in that hee ſpake of the Kings of the Medes, that ſhould do this exploit, whereas it was the Perſian King, it is eaſily reſolved, Cyrus was ſo the King of Perſia, that he was King of the Medes alſo, Darius, that thereby his permiſſion reigned, not being counted the King of that people, becauſe but for a ſhort time, as appears before, and then the Kingdom was to come to Cyrus and his iſſue. Thus the King of Babylon was ſlain, and Cyrus became an univerſall Monarch, and yet ſuffered Darius, to whom he had given the kingdome of the Medes before to reigne, here alſo during his life, as being his Uncle, but within one yeer he dyed, and Cyrus reigned, as it is here ſayd, and gave the Jews leave to return to Ieruſalem juſt at the time before propheſied of, that is, at the end of ſeventy yeers. And thus we may ſee the reaſon of Daniels ſpeaking of none but Darius reigning after Babylon deſtroyed, till chap.10. where hee mentions Cyrus, and why Ezra omitting him altogether, ſpeaks only of Cyrus. And how Daniel underſtanding by the propheſie of Ieremiah, that the time was now come, prayed unto God for deliverance, ſee Dan.9.

CHAP. I.

Verſ.1. IN the firſt yeare of Cyrus, that the word of the Lord by Jeremiah might be fulfilled, he ſtirred up the ſpirit of Cyrus, &c. What the word of the Lord was, Jer.25. and chap.29. hath been enough ſpoken of before. For his ſtirring up of Cyrus to give the Jews this liberty. Joſephus ſayth, that he was moved to this by Ioſephus. Theodor. reading Eſ.44.21,22,23. Theodoret, that Daniel having ſome familiarity with him by reaſon of the great grace done unto him by his Uncle Darius, in ſetting him over all the Kingdom, ſhewed him that propheſie, wherein hee was named long before he was born (for it was 170 yeers before this) and it was foretold of him him, as of the ſervant of God, that he ſhould take order for the building of Ieruſalem and of the Temple, and that Ieruſalem ſhould then be inhabited again, and that the waters of Babylon ſhould be dryed up. And it may well be thought, that by reading this propheſie ſo plainly intimating a ſpirit above all the gods of the Heathen, for the knowledge of things to come, and by thoſe things that had hapned about Daniel, he being preſerved in the Lions den, and having expounded the writing upon the wall to Belſhazzar, which none of the Magitians could do, he was not only ſtirred up to this, but atteined to ſuch knowledge of the true God, as that he worſhipped and ſerved him.

Verſ.2. For he calleth him the Lord God of Heaven, &c. and aſcribing unto him his ample dominion over all the Kingdoms of the earth, for he ſayth, that hee had given them unto him, hereby acknowledging both, that all are the Lords and at his diſpoſing, and that he got them not by his own power, but by Gods providence, whoſe will therefore revealed in the propheſie of Eſay, hee would apply himſelfe diligently to do in providing for the rebuilding of his houſe at Ieruſalem, ſo long ago ruined. By all the Kingdoms of the earth given unto him, underſtand all the kingdoms of Aſia, that waſt part of the earth, where he reigned, for in other parts he reigned not. For the piety in this King and care about building the houſe of the Lord, Pellican doubteth not to call him a type of Chriſt. Pellican.

Verſ.3. Who is there amongſt you of all his people? the Lord be with him, and let him go up to Ieruſalem, &c. Here he acknowledging the Jews to be Gods peculiar people, giveth liberty to all, that would, to return, wiſhing proſperity unto them, and Verſe 4. ſuch as would not, but continue ſtill in thoſe lands hee required by this his Edict to give to ſuch, as could go, neceſſaries for their journey, and gifts for the houſe of the Lord, which they that went, ſhould build. For he ſuppoſed, that the poorer ſort would be readieſt to go and labour in that work, and that many of the richer, who had ſetled themſelves in the Countreys, where they lived, would ſtay there ſtill, wherefore it was neceſſary, that they ſhould be holpen by theſe. Whereas he ſayth, he is the God that dwelleth at Ieruſalem, it is not to be conceived, that he thought him properly the God of that place, becauſe hee ſayd before, that hee was the God of Heaven, but hereby he declared a moſt true faith touching God, viz. that the God, who appointed a Temple to be built him at Ieruſalem, and his worſhip to be mayntained there, as he preſcribed, was the only true God of Heaven, who ruleth over all the World, neyther are any of thoſe, whom the Heathens worſhip, true Gods, but dumbe Idols. Thus by Gods providence a King of the Gentiles, to the ſhame of the Kings of Iudah, provided for the building of that Temple to the honour of God, which by their ſins had been pulled down, a very figure of that, which was done under the Goſpell, when the Gentiles being intent to the building of the ſpirituall Temple, gave occaſion to provoke the Jews to jealouſie, as is ſayd, *Rom.*10.19. And when they corrupted and oppugned the true faith, he confeſſed it, as the Gentiles alſo under the Goſpel did.

Verſ.5.6. Then aroſe the chief of their fathers Families of Judah and Benjamin, &c. whom their neighbours confirmed with veſſe's of ſilver, with gold, &c. So many of the Jews, as whoſe hearts God ſtirred up, went to Ieruſalem to build, and with them many more of the poorer ſort, who had not of their own wherewithall to defray the charges of the journey, theſe, their neighbours, that is, the rich Jews, who ſtayed ſtill did help with their ſilver and gold, and cattell or beaſts to beare burthens, but according to ſome, as Lyra ſayth, the Gentiles amongſt whom they dwelt, for the reſpect, which they bare to Cyrus, who commanded it, holpe them with theſe things. And I ſee not, but that it may well be thought, that they were holpen both by the one and the other. Lyra.

Verſ.7.8. And King Cyrus himſelf brought forth the veſſels of the houſe of the Lord, which Nebuchadnezar had carryed away 70 yeers before, by the hands of Mithredates his Treaſurer, and delivered them to Sheſhbazzar, Prince of the Jews. Who this Sheſhbazzar was is not agreed, for whereas Expoſitors commonly ſay, that he was otherwiſe called Zorobabel, which name followeth here, *chap.*2.2. and *chap.*3.8. Iunius approveth it not, but upon ſuch a reaſon, as I conceive not of, viz. becauſe *chap.*25. Thainai and his companions in their letters to Darius would Iunius.

not have omitted to mention the Nation, to load the Jews cauſe with more hatred. But to prove, that he was the ſame man, who was otherwiſe called Zorobabel the ſon of Shealtiel, the ſon of Iechoniah, let it be conſidered, that after this Sheſhbazzar is named no more, in ſpeaking eyther of thoſe that went to Ieruſalem, *chap.*2. or of the prime builders there, *chap.*3. and 4. but only *chap.*5.14. where certain Perſian Princes write to Darius, what the Iews ſayd was decreed by Cyrus that name is again mentioned, and that Sheſhbaſhazzar layd the foundation of the Lords houſe, *verſ.*16. whereas, *chap.*3.8. it is plainly ſayd, that Zorobabel did it, thus proving him to be the ſame man. Hee was by the Perſians then called Sheſhbazzar, but by the Hebrews Zorobabel, that is, a ſtranger to Babel, becauſe it was hoped, that in his time they ſhould again depart from Babylon, to go to Ieruſalem. Yet the Hebrews by Sheſhbazzar underſtand Daniel, whereas Dan.1. indeed the name given him in Babylon was Belſhazzar, and he ſpeaks of himſelf Dan.10.1. as being ſtill in Babylon, Anno 3 of Cyrus, whereas this man took charge of the precious veſſels carrying to Ieruſalem, and carried them, *verſ.*11. whereas it is ſayd, *verſ.*5. that the chiefe of the tribe of Iudah and Benjamin, and ſo many as whoſe hearts God ſtirred up, aroſe to go to Ieruſalem, it is to be underſtood, ſo Iunius. many of other tribes, as Iunius noteth, 1 *Chron.*9.3. and Lyra likewiſe, who ſayth, Lyra. That many of other tribes were joyned to the kingdome of Iudah in Ioſiah his time, 2 *Chron.*34. and ſo they were together carried away captive into Babylon, and returned together. Whereas their riſing up to goe is ſpoken of, as if they had gone immediatly after the liberty given, Comeſtor ſayth, That they made ſuch Schol.hiſt. ſlow haſte, that they went not, till the third yeere after, when Zachariah and Haggai by their propheſying ſtirred them up. And this hee ſeemeth to ground Ierom. upon Ierom, who ſayth, That the ſeventh yeare of the ſeventh Decad was the firſt of Cyrus, and ſo in his third, full ſeventy yeares were expired. But whereas hee ſayth, That they went not, till they were ſtirred up by Zachary and Haggai, this agreeth not to the foreſaid time, becauſe their propheſying was many years after, Iunius. viz. the ſecond of Darius, Ezra 2.24. 5.1. that is, as Iunius ſayth, of Darius Nothus betwixt which and the firſt of Cyrus were 107 yeares. But according to others, it was Darius Hiſtaſpis, and ſo the building was hindered but ſixteen or ſeventeen yeares. I ſee no reaſon therefore why we ſhould follow Comeſtor herein, but hold rather, that ſo ſoon as they had leave given them by Cyrus, they prepa- Pellican. red to return, and returned, as is here ſaid. And yet, as Pellican ſayth, All that were godly returned not, as Daniel and Mordecai, &c. for by a divine providence ſome ſuch were held ſtill in Babylon, that by their means others who remayned, might be upheld in the knowledge and worſhip of the true God, and many of the Gentiles converted.

Verſ.9. In reckoning up the veſſels of Gold and Silver belonging to the Temple, about 2500 being numbred, it is ſayd, they all were 5400, becauſe it was thought good Lyra. not to give the particular ſums firſt, of all the kinds, to avoid tediouſneſſe, ſo Lyra. Yet in the Greek of Sixtus, there are reckoned up by their kinds 5496. Ioſe- The Allegory. phus hath 4210. All that which is ſayd in this Chapter is morally, or rather allegorically applyed thus by Lyra. Cyrus figured out Chriſt Jeſus, being therefore called Chriſtus Domini, Eſay 45. For as he proclaimed liberty, when God had given him all kingdoms, to all Gods people to goe and build the Temple: ſo Chriſt having all power given unto him in heaven and in earth, as he ſayd, gave liberty to the captives by ſin, and then the chiefe of their Fathers Families roſe up, that is, the twelve Apoſtles, and the ſeventy Diſciples and others, who were moved by the Lord to this work amongſt the Gentiles, by preaching and working miracles to build up the ſpirituall Temple, being holpen by their neighbours, when as the people, amongſt whom they preached, ſold and brought in the price of their poſſeſſions and layd them downe at the Apoſtles feet. The precious veſſels of the Temple which Nebuchadnezar had carryed away, and put in the Temple of his gods, now reſtored by Cyrus, figured out men, whom the Devill had uſed as his inſtruments to ſerve ſin in former times, now by Chriſt reſtored to their right uſe, viz. to ſerve God in holineſſe, &c.

becauſe in Hebrew it is, The children of the promiſe, I rather aſſent to Lyra, as alſo Iunius.
Hugo doth : for they are ſaid to be the children of a promiſe, who are the natives thereof, and not who have dwelt in ſuch a Province, and been kept there, although a long time, unleſſe it ſhall be thought that they of ver. 59. were of ſome other Province of the Caldees, for then more probably theſe were of the ſterity in future times, for that they were the firſt, that ſhewed their love to the holy City and Temple in returning from a Country, where they had been ſo long ſetled, and now were well, having a King that was ſo well affected towards them, to a place void and deſolate, ver. 2. which came with Zorobabel, Jeſhuah, Verſ.2.

Nehemiah, &c. Zorobabel is here firſt named, as being the Prince of the Jews, as hath been already ſhewed in ſpeaking of Sheſhbazzar, which was but another name of the ſame man. But when the ſetting up of the Altar commeth to be ſpoken of, Chap. 3. ver. 2. Ieſhuah the Prieſt is firſt named, and then Zorobabel, but ver. 8. the order is again altered, Zorobabel and Ieſhuah. Lyra in his Prologue Lyra.
upon Ezra ſaith, that howſoever their names are placed, the High Prieſt was now and from hence forward the chiefe Governour of Iudea, for which he alleageth Zacharia 6.11,13. where crowns of gold are appointed to be made, and to be ſet upon the head of Ieſhuah the High Prieſt, and he is ſet upon a Throne, and therein to rule, ſo that now he ſaith, there was a third forme of Government, the firſt having been by Judges, the ſecond by Kings, the third was by Prieſts, and under this the people were better reſtrained from idolatry, then under either of thoſe two, ſeeing idolatry was no more after this by the Jews ſet up in that land. But this by ſaying, that in the particulars are put onely the men of three Tribes that Lyra.

ther Tribes, who returned with them, as hath been before noted. Iunius, that Iunius.
they who could not finde their Genealogies, who were not ſummed up before, make up this number. But ſeeing there be ſo few families of them ſpoke of, it is improbable that they ſhould amount to ſo great a ſumme, rather both they, and ſo many of other Tribes as were mixed amongſt them together make up this ſumme. The Hebrew Chronicle alſo ſaith, that the men of other Tribes come under the generall number. Theſe alſo were amongſt thoſe that went up from Verſ.59.
Thelmelaeh, Telcharſeha, Cherub, Adan, and Immer, &c. Theſe are the names it ſelfe, but becauſe they could not ſhew their Genealogies, it was uncertain whether they were Iſraelites or not, for which cauſe certain poſſeſſions could not be aſſigned unto them in that Land, but being of the ſame faith, they were not rejected, whether they were Iſraelites or ſtrangers, but received into their ſociety.

Verſ.6. Onely ſuch as ſaid that they were of the Prieſts, but could not ſhew their that he is commonly held to have been Nehemiah, ſeeing he is expreſly ſet forth by this name, Nehem. 8.10. he was Hatharſhatha. But becauſe Nehemiah came not to Jeruſalem till many years after, he could not be meant here, but he who in the Caldee tongue, was for his authority called ſo, that now was appointed, as Prince, and that was Zorobabel, or Sheſhbazzar. For although the Iews had now liberty given them to return, yet they were never more after this captivity a free, but a tributary people, either to the Perſians, Greeks, or Romans, ſo that the onely difference was, in the time of their captivity they ſerved a forreign Nation in another Land, but after their return in their own Land. For Cyrus made Chap.5.14. Sheſhbazzar Prince firſt, and Artaxerxes Nehemiah, and then Ezra afterwards, Ioſephus. High Prieſt was the chiefe Governour it is uncertain, although Ioſephus ſaith, that the High Prieſt was, untill the time of the Aſſamonei who wreſted the government from him, and Lyra following Ioſephus, as hath been already ſhewed, but certain it is that ſomtimes the chiefe authority was in the High Prieſt alſo.

when God was conſulted withall, as ſome hold, was taken for an anſwer, in way of granting the thing deſired. But thus ſay the Hebrews, they never did more after the Babyloniſh captivity, and therefore this touching thoſe that could not ſhew their Genealogie, was never reſolved.

Cyrus took order for all this building, commanding that it ſhould be done at his coſt and charges, as appeareth, Chap.6.4. whereupon occaſion, his Ordinance is recited, it may be demanded, why the chiefe of the Iews contributed towards it?
Anſ. Some thinke to make the building larger then was propounded by that King, but it is more probable becauſe he took order onely for the timber and ſtone work, that this contribution or offering was made for the adorning and beautifying of it, and to ſupply it with many utenſils about it, that were neceſſary.

from day to day, as was appointed, Numb. 29. 13. And this they did although the heathen dwelling round about them made them afraid, as envying at theſe their proceedings, for the enmity which they bare through the inſtigation of Satan, against the true God and his worſhip. And, as they did at the feaſt of Tabernacles, ſo they did daily, as was appointed by the Law, morning and evening, beginning the firſt day of the moneth, and ſo going on from day to day, and on the new Verſ.6.

were ancient wept to ſee how much this Temple was like to come ſhort of that which Solomon had built before, but was by Nebuchadnezar deſtroyed for their ſins. For ſo indeed it muſt needs doe, ſeeing Solomon who built the former abounded both with riches and people, and they that ſate now to the work, were a company of poor exiles, who wanted the means which he enjoyed : yet Hag. 2. 8. they are comforted with this, that the glory of the Temple by them now built, ſhould be greater then the glory of that, which Lyra expoundeth as ſayd, becauſe Lyra.
the ſtate that they were in being conſidered, it was more admirable, that ſuch an houſe be built by them now, then one more magnificent by Solomon then. But for ſo much, as it is ſpoken not of the preſent but of the future times, The glory of this houſe ſhall be greater, he yeeldeth this other reaſon, viz. becauſe the Law was taught in the Temple of Solomon, whereby none ſhall live, but in this the Goſpel of life and peace by Chriſt and his Apoſtles, And this indeed is the trueſt, and moſt evidently proving, that Chriſt is not yet to come, but already come, ſeeing otherwiſe this can never be verified, for ſo much as the Temple built by Zorobabel and Jeſhuah, was long agoe deſtroyed by the Romans.

CHAP. IV.

THE foundation of the Temple was no ſooner laid, but the Jews enemies Verſ.1. hearing thereof came to Zorobabel, and offered to joyne with them in this Verſ.2. building, alleaging, that ſince the dayes of Eſarhaddon the King of Aſſyria, who Verſ.3.

them, and alleaged the decree of Cyrus, that the Jews onely ſhould build it, for which cauſe they ſought to hinder them as much as they could, and did hinder the building of the Temple all the dayes of Cyrus, that it went no farther forward all his dayes, nor after his deceaſe till the reigne of Darius, that is, Darius Hiſtaſpis, Verſ.5. who ſucceeded Cambyſes, otherwiſe called Ahaſhuerus, or Artaxerxes, ver. 6, 7.
For Cyrus having reigned after the Monarchy of thoſe parts attained, nine years, was ſlain by Thomiris Queen of the Maſſagetes, having committed his Kingdom to his ſon Cambyſes when he went to that war, then he having reigned eight years, the Magi obteined the Kingdom ſeven moneths, after whom being ſlain, this Darius was choſen King by the neighing of his horſe, ſo that the work was intermitted about 19 years. In the time of Cyrus, becauſe he was buſied with divers wars with the Lydians, who revolted from him, after that he had ſubdued them, and that by the means of Pactias, to whom he had committed the treaſure of Crœſus, taken there to carry to Ecbatana, his chief City. For hereby he animated the Lydians againſt Cyrus, and went and beſieged Sardis the chiefe City of the Countrey, which was by him committed to one Tabulus to keepe ; Cyrus therefore fought againſt the Lydians, and overcame them the ſecond time, and would have deſtroyed Sardis, but that Crœſus deſired him rather to take all Herodotus.

Armes away from them only, and to forbid them to have any hereafter, and inſtead of exerciſing themſelves therein, to uſe playing upon inſtruments of Muſique, perſwading him, that thus they would ſoon grow effeminate and no more dangerous for rebellion. And ſo indeed it proved, the moſt warlike people of that Countrey becomming moſt womaniſh and unfit for War. 2 Hee had Wars with the Maſſagetes, againſt whom he by the advice of Crœſus uſed this policy, he ſent a weak part of his Army againſt them, for hee had therein 200000 men, who were inſtructed, to leave in their tents, when they ſhould flee before the Maſſagetes good ſtore of wine and other proviſion, and having done ſo, the third part of the Maſſagetes Army which only was employed againſt them, having overcome them, and taken their tents, ate and drank abundantly, and thereupon fell into a dead ſleep, then the Perſians returning ſlue and took them all, and took Spargapiſes, the ſon of Thomiris their Queen. Hereupon ſhe rayled againſt Cyrus, and bad him return ſpeedily into his own Countrey, upbrayding him with his deceit, and threatned for his bloud-thirſtineſſe to kill him with bloud ſoone, if he did not. And ſo, he contemning all that ſhee ſayd, ſhee proceeded to battell againſt him and ſlue him, and all his men, not leaving one alive to tell the news, and having found him amongſt the dead cut off his head, and filled a veſſell with bloud and caſt it in ſaying, Satisfie thy ſelf now with bloud, which thou haſt ſo much thirſted after. By reaſon of theſe Wars Cyrus could no more, whilſt he lived, intend the building of the Temple, and therefore the enemies of the Jews neere about them might eaſily hinder it all his days. So that great Monarch having been King of Perſia 20 or 21 years, and nine years over all the Kingdoms round about him, fell with his whole Army through the prowesſe of a woman. And when Cambyſes attained the Kingdom after him, the Samaritans wrought ſo with thoſe, that were great about him, that he would not ſuffer the Iews to go foward in this building during his reigne. But to returne to the enemies, that hindered the building, becauſe they might not be permitted to build amongſt them. They are 2 Kings 17. thought to be the Samaritans, that is, the people placed in Samaria by the King of Aſſyria, when he had carryed Iſrael away captive, from which time they ſay, that they ſacrificed to none other God, but to the Lord. Whereas they ſay, that they were brought thither by Eſarhaddon, who was ſon to Sennacherib, and when 2 Kings 19. he was ſlain, reigned in his ſtead, but Salmanaſar a Predeceſſour of Sennacherib brought thoſe thither, that dwelt in Samaria according to the ſacred Hiſtory. Lyra and others ſay, that theſe were another company ſent over, after that the other were, many of them deſtroyed by Lyons, together with a Prieſt to inſtruct them in the ſervice of the true God, after which they are ſayd to have feared the Lord, but to have ſerved their Idols ſtill. Wherefore they ſayd untruly, that they ſacrificed to none other, but to their god, as alſo when they offered to build with them, they did it but in diſſimulation, that they might have an intereſt in the Temple to bring in their Idolotry thither alſo, which Zorobabel ſuſpected, and therefore denyed their joyning vvith him and his Ievvs. And with what an ill minde they made this attempt, appeareth in that they practiced againſt this building to hinder it ſo ſoon Pellican. as they were denyed. Pellican obſerveth hence, that we ought not to have communion with ſuch, as worſhip not God ſincerely, that is, which worſhip God ſo, as that they ſerve Idols alſo, and this was reaſon enough to reject their motion, but Note. becauſe Zorobabel would not provoke them, he paſſing this over in ſilence, alleageth only the Kings Decree. And upon this ground Papiſts refuſe to have communion with Proteſtants, whom they count Hereticks, but they themſelves are far more aptly reſembled by the Samaritans for their manifeſt Idolatry both practized by them, and commanded by their ſecond Nicen Councell.

Verſ. 5. It is ſayd, that they might hinder this work, they hyred Counſellours againſt Ioſephus. them, that is, as Joſephus hath it, they by Bribes corrupted ſuch officers, as were by King Cyrus appointed to defray the charges out of his treaſury, that they deviſed ſome excuſes to Cyrus, and ſo held their hands, when he by reaſon of his diſtractions had no leyſure to look ſo narrowly into it, whereby it came to paſſe, that their hands were weakned, and this work, although it did not utterly ceaſſe, went but ſlowly forward, untill the death of Cyrus. But hee being dead, and A-

And divers other peoples are numbred, vvhich vvrote to the ſame effect vvith them, as the Dinaans, Aparſatheans, &c. vvhom the noble Aſnappar is ſaid to have brought and placed in Samaria. In ſome Tranſlations, ſayth Lyra, it is Salmanaſar, but in Hebrevv it is Aſnappar, and he is held to be the ſame vvith Eſachaddon, vvho is ſaid, *ver.*2, to have brought them thither, they being tvvo names, of one and the ſame man, vvhereas theſe people are ſaid to have dvvelt beyond the river, the river Euphrates is meant, for that vvas betvveen the land of Judea and Aſſyria.

Verſ.9,10.

Verſ.12.

Now in their Letter they gave the King to underſtand that the Jews were about building the City Jeruſalem, and if they were ſuffered ſo to doe, there would be danger that he ſhould have no more tribute paid unto him, yea, of loſing all that Province. Before this nothing is ſaid of building the City, but of the Temple onely, nor in the Proclamation of King Cyrus, but it is to be underſtood, that when the building of the Temple was permitted, the building of the City wherein it ſtood, was permitted alſo, or elſe, how ſhould the people have dwelt in it? And this, as ſeeming moſt materiall to theſe Samaritans to move the King withall, is laid to their charge, the Temple not being once mentioned, as being a work about which they did little, ſince that by their enemies conſpiring againſt them, they had the charges at the firſt allowed by Cyrus kept back. Ver. 15. They will the King that the Records may be ſearched, that thereby the rebellions of the Jews againſt others his predeceſſors might appeare to make their preſent accuſation the more probable. For Kings had their Chronicles in all Countreyes, wherein all memorable things were recorded, and therein was ſet down their rebellions againſt former Kings of Aſſyria and Babylon, ever ſince the time of King Ahaz, who firſt inthralled his Kingdom to Tiglath Pileſer.

Verſ.15.

Verſ.18.

King Artaxerxes having read their Epiſtle, returneth anſwer, that it was true touching that which they had written unto him, the Jews had always been rebellious, and in times paſt had mighty Kings of their own, who reigned far and wide, and took tribute, that is, David and Solomon, and therefore he commanded, that they ſhould not ſuffer them to build any more, &c.

Verſ. 23.

And ſo they accordingly, by force kept the Jews from building the City, and thus the Temples building alſo was hindered, although not by the King forbidden, unleſſe as a part of the City, but howſoever it was hindered, it ſeemeth by that which is ſaid, Chap. 5. 16. that it was not altogether intermitted, no not at this time, of this Artaxerxes or Cambyſes: Euſebius ſayth, that he was called the ſecond Nebuchadnezzar, as he might well be, becauſe of his enmity againſt the Jews, in that as he deſtroyed the City and Temple, ſo this man would not ſuffer the re-building of it. And by the Hiſtory written of him by Herodotus and Juſtin, it appeareth that he was a man moſt ambitious of dominion, a contemner of all Religion, and a cruell Tyrant, and was judged accordingly. For firſt he took occaſion to quarrell with Amaſis King of Egypt about his daughter, and fought againſt and ſubdued Egypt, deſtroying their Idols, and particularly cauſing their god Apis by the Prieſts thereof to be brought unto him, which was a choiſe bullock rarely marked, kept in a Temple, and deriding their ſuperſtition, he with his ſword thruſt it into the ſide, of which wound it languiſhed and dyed. Then he ſent to ſpoile the Temple of Jupiter Ammon in Lybia, but they that were ſent by him were deſtroyed by a tempeſt of ſand over-whelming them. After this, he alſo fraudulently ſent a preſent to the King of Ethiopia, pretending a deſire of amity, Euſeb. Chron.

but intending thus to make him ſecure, and then to invade him. But that King wiſely ſeeing into his end, told his Embaſſadours plainly thereof, and returned unto him a bow, bidding them to ſay unto him, that he were beſt to forbeare comming thither, untill the Perſians were able to bend that bow, and then alſo to increaſe his number. For the Ethiopians, called Macrobians for their long life, were mighty men, being nine or ten foot high. Cambyſes, notwithſtanding, bent his courſe towards Ethiopia, but through want of victuals by the way, he was conſtrained to kill the horſe for meat, and then every tenth man, and ſo with great loſſe and ſhame to return into Egypt again. For his cruelty, it appears by theſe few examples. His brother Smerdis being preſent when the bow was brought from the King of Ethiopia, attempted to draw it, which he did within three inches, but none elſe could doe the like, wherefore the King being jealous of him, leaſt he ſhould aſpire to the Kingdom, ſent him away, and a man after him to kill him, which was done accordingly. He alſo having a luſt to his own ſiſter, would take her to wife, but becauſe he knew that the Perſians would not endure it, he firſt called the Judges, and demanded of them, whether he might not by the Laws of the Perſians marry her. They fearing his diſpleaſure, ſaid, there was no Law whereby ſuch a thing might be done, but by the Perſians Law, the King might doe what he pleaſed, and ſo he marryed her; but within a while when he was with her, beholding a lyon put out to a maſty dog, to fight with him, who having torne, and almoſt kild him, another dog, fellow to that which was in danger eſpying it, brake looſe from the place where he was tyed, and run and helped his fellow, and ſo together they overcame the lyon: he laughed to ſee this ſport, but ſhee wept, and being by him asked the cauſe, ſhee anſwered, ſhee wept to ſee that the poor lyon had no brother to helpe him, whereupon he fell into a rage, as thinking himſelfe thus taxed for his brothers death and ſlew her. Prexaſpes alſo whom he had with him as his Counſellour, being asked what the people ſaid of him, and anſwering, that the common ſpeech was, that he was too much given to drinking, he was ſo moved at this his freedom to admoniſh him, which he thought for his familiarity with him, that he might be bold to doe, as that hee cauſed his ſon to be brought forth, and ſet for a marke to ſhoot at, ſaying, hereby thou ſhalt perceive whether I be a man intemperate, and troubled in my head or not. If I ſhoot and hit thy ſonne into the heart, then it will appear that I am ſober, and it is falſe which the Perſians ſay of me, and having ſhot, he cauſed his body preſently to be ripped, and finding that he had pierced his heart, he rejoyced greatly, neither durſt the father ſay any other, but praiſe his skill, in ſuch ſlavery are the moſt familiar friends of Tyrants unto them. After this alſo he put Crœſus from him, who was bold to reprove him for killing twelve of the Perſians, for which he bent his bow to ſhoot at him, but he perceiving it, avoided out of the room: then he commanded one to kill him, this being by Crœſus perceived, he wrought ſo with him, that he was content that he ſhould hide himſelfe, untill that the King asked again after him, and if when he ſpake of him, he ſhould deſire his company, he ſhould bring him forth unto him alive, but if otherwiſe he ſhould declare again his pleaſure was that he ſhould die, he ſhould yeeld himſelfe to death. Now, it ſo happned, that the King asked after him as deſiring him, then the man to whom the charge had been given to kill him, ſaid, that he was ſtill alive, of which Cambyſes was glad, and receiving him again into his grace, hee cauſed the other that ſaved him contrary to his command, to be put to death. Beſides theſe, he cruelly kild unjuſtly many more. But at laſt, it came to him according to his demerits; for one Smerdis a Magus, to whom he had committed the Government of Perſia, in his abſence, tooke the Kingdom upon him, giving it out that he was Smerdis the Kings brother, being alſo moſt like unto him in favour and perſon. The King hearing this, called the man unto him, to whom he had committed the killing of his brother Smerdis, and examines him again about it, he affirmed, that he had buried him with his own hands, and ſo being ſatisfied touching that, he haſtned againſt the uſurper, but in taking horſe, his ſword fell out of the ſcabbard, and wounded him mortally on his ſide, where he had ſtab'd Apis before. Then he cals together his Nobles, and certifies them, that Smerdis his his brother was certainly dead, and therefore he that now uſurped was another man, that they might not ſuffer him in the throne, and ſo he dyed : and this was thought by the Egyptians to have befalne him as a juſt judgement for his contempt of the gods. And indeed in a man, either of no Religion, or of a falſe Religion, it is no marvaill to ſee vengeance comming upon him for his contempt, even of ſuperſtition, becauſe ſuch are without God in the world, and ſo under the power of the Devill, by him to be carried headlong to deſtruction, that ruleth in them.

Note.

Thus then it appeareth that Darius came not immediately to the Crown after Artaxerxes, but Smerdes a uſurper having firſt held it ſeven moneths according to Herodatus. For the manner how he was cut off, he ſayth it was thus. At the firſt the man to whom the King had given a charge to murther his brother, after the King Artaxerxes his death denyed it utterly, as fearing, that if he ſhould confeſſe it, his life might be in danger. Hereupon the Smerdes now reigning, was ſuffered to ſit upon the throne in quiet, yet when the Princes ſaw that he kept himſelſe ſo ſecret, that none of them could ſee him in a long time, they began to marvail at it, for although the Perſian Kings holding it a point of royall ſtate, not to be often ſeen of the people, yet the Princes ſomtimes were admitted into his ſight : Therefore it not neing now ſo done unto them, they much ſuſpected that he was not the right Smerdes of the bloud Royall, who now reigned, and one of them eſpecially called Othanes, Uncle to Cambyſes, being deſirous to ſift out the truth, ſent by a ſecret meſſenger to his daughter Phædima, who had been one of Cambyſes his wives, and now was taken by this Magus, as alſo the reſt of his wives were, deſiring her to let him underſtand whether this were that Smerdes indeed, which was Cambyſes his brother, but ſhee returning anſwer that ſhee knew not, for ſhee had never ſeen that brother of the King, he willed her to aske Atoſſa the daughter of Cyrus that queſtion. But when ſhe anſwered again that ſhe was kept from her, and ſo were all the wives of Cambyſes, that they never could come one at another : he yet deviſed another way to finde it out, and that was this. He called to minde, that Smerdes the Maguto loſt his eares once by the command of Cambyſes. He willed his daughter therefore, once more, when he ſlept by her, to feele whether this Smerdes had any eares or no, and when ſhee had thus done, and certified him of the truth, he being reſolved that he was an uſurper, and calling two other Princes into Counſel with him, diſcloſed the matter unto him, then unto thoſe three were joyned three more, who agreed together to enter the Palace by night, and to kill ſuch of the Guard as reſiſted them, till they ſhould come at the King, and did ſo upon ſuch a ſodain, that they found little reſiſtance, till that by the noiſe which was made in the Court, his two brothers ſtarted up, and took one a bow and arrows, and the other a ſpeare to reſiſt them, but they being ſoon quelled, they came to the Uſurper and ſlew him, defending himſelfe with the leg of a golden chaire ſtanding in his bed chamber. Then after conſultation, they agreed together for the Government of the Kingdom, to chooſe a new King, and it was done thus. A certain place was appointed, for all the Princes to meet together, early in the morning before the Sun, and hee whoſe horſe neighed firſt after the Sun riſing ſhould be King, for the Perſians were worſhippers of the Sun, and to the Sun uſed to ſacrifice horſes. Therefore the horſe of Darius neighing firſt, he was immediately ſaluted as King by all the reſt. And this was Darius, the ſonne of Hiſtaſpis, concerning whom being but 20 years old, and ſo thought to be too young to goe to war, Cyrus had dreame in his laſt expedition againſt the Maſſagetes, that be ſaw him having upon his ſhoulders two wings, which covered all Aſia and Europe. This he taking to portend his atteining to the Monarchie over both theſe parts, called Hiſtaſpis his father to him, and told him that he much ſuſpected his ſonne for rebellion, and therefore would have him return home forthwith, and look to him that he attempted nothing, threatning at his return to call him to an account. But this dream took not effect till this time, being nine or ten years after. Darius being thus made King, the reſt of the conſpirators made him to agree to theſe two conditions. 1 That he ſhould take no wife but of their daughters. 2 That it ſhould be lawfull for any of them at any time, to come and ſpeak with him, without any meſſengers going between; unleſſe he were in private with his wife, Intafernes therefore after he had fulfilled one condition in marrying Phadima the daughter of Othenes, went to ſpeak with him, and paſſing on till he came at the porter, he vvould have entered into the room where Darius was, but being told by the porter, and him that brought anſwer from the King, that he was then with his wife, and therefore not to be ſpoken with, he took them two in a rage, and cut off their ears and noſes, and putting bridles about their necks let them goe, becauſe he thought that he was deluded by them. They being thus deformed, went into the King, and when he underſtood vvhat was done, and by whom, he firſt feared that it was done by the conſent of the reſt of the Princes, as meaning to rebell againſt him. But upon inquiry finding that Intafernes was the ſole agent, and that none of them had any knowledge thereof, he ſent immediately, and cauſed Intafernes with all his houſe to be put in priſon, intending to puniſh them all with death. But his wife ſeeing the danger wherein her husband and his whole houſe ſtood, went to the Court, and ceaſſed not by her tears to importune him ſo; as that he granted her the life of one of the houſe whom ſhee ſhould deſire, then ſhee deſiring her brother, the King would know the reaſon, why ſhee beg'd his life rather then her husbands, and ſhe anſwering, becauſe if her husband were dead ſhe might have another husband, and by him more children, but if her brother, ſhe could not have a brother again, the King was ſo well pleaſed herewith, that he granted her not onely his life, but alſo the life of her eldeſt ſonne, and cauſed all the reſt to be put to death. Darius being thus eſtabliſhed in the throne, the Temples building

Verſ.24. went not yet forward till the ſecond yeare of his reigne. Yet Joſephus ſaith, that Ioſephus. he had vowed, if he were King, that it ſhould be built, and that out of 3 Eſdras 4. where it is ſaid, that Zorababel ſtanding before Darius with two other young men, ſpake ſo wiſely beyond them, that the King bid him aske what he would, and it ſhould be done for him. Then he humbly deſired his Majeſty to remember his vow that he had made, if he were King to build Jeruſalem, and to reſtore the veſſels pertaining to the Temple, whereunto he immediately conſenting, gave bounteouſly to this work yearly till it were finiſhed, and ſent home the Jews remaining, and made them free, &c. Wherefore it is moſt probable that Zorobabel by the counſell of the High Prieſt, and elders of the Jews went over to Perſia, in the firſt year of the reigne of Darius, being full of hope now, that Artaxerxes was dead, who had been an enemy to all Religion, and Darius had attained to the Kingdom, that he ſhould prevail with him to further the building of the Temple. Eſpecially for that familiarity which he had with him in times paſt, when he lived in Babylon, and heard him make ſuch a vow, intimating the piety that was in him. And if the ſtory of that Eſdras be true, he thus prevailed, as hath beene ſaid, and the next year they fell afreſh to the building, as followeth, Chapter 5.

CHAP. V.

Verſ.1,2. THen, that is, Anno 2 of Darius propheſied Haggai and Zechariah, that they ſhould build, Zorobabel the Prince, and Jeſhuah the High Prieſt hereupon ſetting again upon the work. This ſeemeth to contradict the Hiſtory of Joſephus, and of 3 Eſdrai, becauſe if by the grant of King Darius, they returned to this building, then they ſhould not have needed Prophets to incite them, and to make them promiſes if they proceded in it, or to reprove them for their backwardneſſe to this work, as Haggai doth. For hovv could they have ſhevved more forvvardneſſe, then in ſending over to Darius, ſo ſoon as they heard, and ſo could conceive any hope to prevail for liberty to returne to this building againe? The propheſie therefore of Haggai being an invective againſt them for their backwerdneſſe, and a complaint that they rather intended their own private contentments then the building of the Lords Houſe, ſheweth that till they were excited by the Prophets, they had little zeale or care about this work, and that the encouragement which they had from Darius, came after an attempt made again in the time of Darius by the enemie to hinder it, appears here, Chap. 6, 7, 8. It is to be conceived then, that when theſe Prophets propheſied, both the Prince and people being cooled in the zeale by the oppoſition of enemies, ſat ſtill and ceaſſed working upon the Temple, and yet both built houſes for themſelves and followed the works of their husbandry and trades. For this Haggai intimateth when he ſaith, it is time for you to dwell in ſeiled houſes, &c. And yee carry out much ſeed, and reap but little, &c. That this was a fault, and worthy of reproof, appeareth, becauſe as was noted before, when Artaxerxes forbad the building of the City, he forbad not the Temples building alſo, but paſſed that over in ſilence, ſo that they were not by his command kept from this work, however their enemies might abuſe their authority to make them to ceaſſe from that alſo, if their words would doe it. But notwithſtanding theſe enemies oppoſition, they built them fair houſes to dwell in, it being no part of that Kings meaning that they ſhould be hindered here-from, but from bringing it into the forme of a City, by walling it, and making Forts therein. Wherefore if their zeal had been as great to the Lords houſe, as their care for their own private content, they would not doubt-leſſe ſo have neglected it, but taken as much liberty to re-build it as for their own dwellings. As need was therefore, God now ſtirreth them up by his Prophets, in a time, which he by his divine ſpirit knew to be moſt fit, and ſo they ſet to the work again. Yet Joſephus to make good what he hath ſaid, conceiveth that the Jews were afraid, notwithſtanding the Kings writing, that hee might change his minde, and therefore they needed Prophets to put them on, which is improbable, ſeeing the Laws of the Medes and Perſians altered not. But Thatnai Verſ. 3.

CHAP. VI.

THe Epiſtle of Thatnai and his Colleagues comming to King Darius, ſearch was made in the Annals, and it was found, that Cyrus ordained the rebuilding of the Lords houſe, and therefore King Darius giveth a charge to Thatnai, &c. that they interrupt them not, but further them by ſupplying neceſſaries out of the Kings Revenues there, threatning ſuch, as did otherwiſe with deſtruction, and imprecating all enemies to this work, or demoliſhers of it again, after it ſhould be built. Ioſephus. Beſides this, Joſephus ſayth, that there was another Epiſtle written by the Samaritans, wherein they ſought to move him againſt this building, by recounting the prolubition of Cambyſes, his predeceſſour: but ſeeing nothing is ſayd hereof in the ſacred Hiſtory, I paſſe this over. Darius having given ſuch incouragement to this Work, Verſ.14. it went forward with all ſpeed, till it was finiſhed according to the will of God, at the propheſying of Haggai and Zachariah, as Cyrus had appointed, and Darius and Artaxerxes, Verſ.15. and it was finiſhed the third day of the moneth Adar, the ſixth yeare of Darius. Ioſephus. Hereby Artaxerxes is to be underſtood the ſon of Darius, called Artaxerxes, ſo Joſephus, who will have Xerxes and Artaxerxes all one. But the truth is, Xerxes was the ſon of Darius, and reigned next after him, and then came Artaxerxes to the Crown two and twenty years after the Reign of Darius ended, but his name is here put downe together with Cyrus and Darius, by way of preoccupation, that wee might have at one view all the Contributors of the Perſian Kings to the Temple together, and the name of Cyrus by capitulation. And this Artaxerxes to diſtinguiſh him from the other, hath amongſt Hiſtorians the name of Artax. Longimani. Funccii Chronol. And Funccius ſayth, that this Darius Hiſtaſpis was otherwiſe called Ahaſhuerus, and was the husband of Heſter, to the confirmation of which maketh alſo that which is written of his Feaſt, and his 127 Provinces, 3 Eſdras 3. the ſame being ſaid of Ahaſhuerus, Heſter 1. but ſome others hold Artaxerxes Longimanus to have bin that Ahaſhuerus. The moneth Adar was the twelfth moneth, anſwering for the moſt part to our February, ſo Junius, Iunius. and that rightly, but whereas by Artaxerxes here ſpoken of, he underſtandeth Artaxerxes Mnemon, the ſon of Darius Nothus, hee greatly erreth, ſeeing betwixt him and this Darius were three Kings, as hee himſelf granteth. Xerxes, Artax. Longimani, and Darius Nothus, the firſt reigning 22, the ſecond 40, according to Funccius, 44, the third 26. unto which if 36 be added, which was the time of the Reigne of Darius Hiſtaſpis, nine of Cambyſes, and nine of Cyrus, of how long a time muſt the building and adorning of the Temple be with ſuch veſſels, as were to be uſed therein? (for more veſſels were by this King given to the houſe of the Lord, *chap.*7.19. Verily above 140 yeeres, which is improbable, and all the time of three Kings being 88 years muſt be granted to be paſſed over in ſilence. R. Solomon, ſayth Lyra, will have Darius and Artaxerxes one and the ſame man, affirming, that all Perſian Kings were called by the name, as the Egyptians of Pharaoh. The time then of building the Temple after this ſetting to the worke againe was but foure yeares, and ſome odde moneths, and from the beginning about 24 yeares. Whereas John 2.20. it is ſayd 46 yeares was this Temple in building, ſee the reſolution there. And it might haply be a common errour ariſing from the ignorance of the yeares, that theſe ſeverall Kings reigned eſpecially, if the firſt year of Cyrus his Reign, when hee provided for the building of the Temple, were taken for the firſt of his Reigne over Perſia: for ſo unto his Reigne of 30 years more then nine years of Artaxerxes being added, (for ſome ſay, that he reigned more) and ſix of Darius the totall will amount to 46 at the leaſt, when the building of the Temple was ſet upon again at the propheſying of Haggai, and it is to be noted, that this work brought with it a temporall bleſſing of great fruitfulneſſe. For to ſhew this, Hag.2.11. in the ninth moneth, which was three moneths after they began to build, and anſwers to our November in part, and in part to October, when the Grapes and Olives being all gathered, they uſed to make their Wine and Oyle, they are bidden to conſider what ſcarcity they had before, as is alſo ſpoken, chap.1. and what plenty now, Verſ.15,16,19. to be incouraged to go on in ſo godly a work, in hope of the like bleſſing to continue ſtill upon them: affirming, that the ſacrifices, which they offered before, were not offered to him, whilſt the building of the Temple lay neglected. Note. A notable ground of looking for a bleſſing in worldly things then only: when the edification of the Church in any land, and what conduceth moſt hereunto is attended firſt and chiefly, for till this be done, there is no expectation of proſperity in any thing.

The

Verſ.16. The building of the Temple being perfected, they proceeded to the Dedication with ſacrifices of all ſorts. But becauſe between this worke begun, and the time of finiſhing there hapned a revolt of Babylon from Darius, which was againe recovered by the moſt admirable ſtratagem that ever was deviſed, I cannot but inſert it, before I proceed further to tell of the Jews great ſolemnity. Darius having brought mighty forces againſt Babylon, was ſhot at from the Walls, and derided by them ſaying, That he might go away and come again, when a Muſe had foaled, to win Babylon. But when he had continued his ſiege 20 moneths, there was one Prince vvith him called Zopyrus, one of the ſeven that killed Smerdes the Uſurper before ſpoken of; who had a Mule that foaled, of vvhich being certified by his ſervants, he vvent to ſee it, and recounting the vvords of the Babylonians, hee gathered hereby, that the time vvas novv come to vvinne Babylon, and that he muſt be the man, by vvhoſe policy, vvherefore taking a knife, hee ſlit up his ovvn noſthrils, and cut off his ovvn eares, and ſo all bloudy preſented himſelf to Darius, to vvhom being amazed, at the ſight he opened his ſtratagem, viz. that he vvould go as a Run-avvay to the Wals of Babylon, and being taken, hee vvould handle the matter ſo, that he might get credit amongſt them, and have the government of their Army committed unto him, and then hee vvould have the King ten dayes after to aſſault one of the gates of the City vvith a thouſand of his meaneſt ſouldiers, and a fevv days after another gate with 2000, & after that another gate with 4000, at vvhich laſt time he ſhould place his Army under the Walls at tvvo other gates, vvhere he vvould let them in. Then he fled vvithout delay to the Babylonians, vvhere being taken by the Watch and brought in, he exclaimed upon Darius, ſaying, That becauſe hee perſvvaded him to rayſe his ſiege and not to teare time in abiding before a City invincible any longer, hee thus miſuſed him, for vvhich, if they would harken to him, he would both be revenged upon him, and help them to a famous victory over him, ſeeing he knew all his counſels. Hereupon they began to be ſomwhat moved, and at the day by him appointed, furniſhed him with an Army to defend the firſt gate before mentioned, wherein he behaved himſelfe ſo, that he ſlew 1000 men, at the next time, at another gate 2000, then 4000, whereby he came to be the onely man in authority in the City, and was extolled of all, till the day being come that he had appointed with Darius, hee ſet open thoſe two gates, which he had promiſed, and ſo Babylon was taken the ſecond time, and Zopyrus was rewarded with that City during his life, enjoying it free, and with many other honours. Herodotus. Iuſtinus. Thus Herodotus and Juſtinus, who alſo tell of another war made by him againſt the Sythians, about the fifth year of his reigne, to which he prepared 700000 men, and 600 ſhips, but returned with great loſſe of men and diſhonour, both becauſe he needleſly put himſelfe into this war, as may be conceived, and did a moſt cruell act at his enterance upon it againſt an old man, whoſe three ſonnes, he having taken to ſerve him in this war, he was by their father ſued unto, out of commiſeration to his old age, to let one of them ſtay with him for his comfort. The King replyed as if he had been moved, that none of them ſhould goe with him, but thereupon he immediately commanded their Captain to ſlay them all three. Wherefore when he was come to Scythia, and they continued not certain in any place, but flitted from one to another, he thinking that they fled from him, ſent to their King either to ſtand his ground and to give him battail, or elſe in acknowledgement of ſubjection, ſend him ſome of his earth and water. The Scythian King replyed, that he removed not from place to place, for fear of him, but according to their Countrey manner, who uſed not to ſtay long in a place, but he wiſhed him to depart out of his Countrey, or elſe he ſhould ſhortly receive a preſent from him, whereby he ſhould know his minde, and accordingly he ſent unto him, a Bird, a Mouſe, and a Frog, and five Arrows, which were by Gobrias a Prince with him, thus interpreted: Unleſſe they did preſently flee away as a Bird, or creepe into holes as a Mouſe, or get them on to the water as a Frog, he would with his Scythian Archers, utterly deſtroy his whole Army. This being heard he haſtened away, having loſt for want of proviſion, about 80000 men. Verſ.16. But to return to the Dedication of the Temple, they could not but do this with exceeding great joy, becauſe it had lyen ſo long demoliſhed, and was rebuilt with ſo great difficulty, and ſo much oppoſition, wherefore, notwithſtanding their great coſt in building, they all joyned as one man, now in making a ſolemne Dedication, by abundance of

After the Dedication, followed the Paſſeover, within little more then one moneth, and therefore it is here alſo commemorated: for the third day of the laſt moneth, the Temple being finiſhed, the Dedication was made, and the time of the Paſſeover occaſion hence to confirme his expoſition touching Artaxerxes; upon ver. 14. that he was Artaxerxes Mnemon, and not Longimani, the next unto Darius but one, becauſe he might well be called the King of Aſſyria, for ſo much as his father Darius Nothus made him King in his own life time, and he reigned many years together with him, the Kingdom being divided between them, Aſſyria to Artaxerxes, and Perſia to his father Darius. But how could this be a cauſe of their preſent rejoycing in the time of Darius Hiſtaſpis, when as hee reigned not ſo by the favour of his father, till certain Generations after? The reſolution therefore of Lyra. Lyra is better. Darius is meant by the King of Aſſyria here, and hee is thus called, becauſe Aſſyria a Kingdome famous of old was under his Dominion, ſo that hee might be called King of Perſia, or King of Aſſyria, as the French King, King of Navarre. Touching any thing elſe done in Herodotus. the Reigne of this Darius the ſacred Hiſtory ſayth nothing, but Herodotus noteth, how a foundation of warre with the Grecians was now layd, whereby in time the Monarchy of the Perſians was overthrowne. There was one Hiſtieus, Prince of the Mileſians, who having done a good office for Darius in his return from Scythia, by keeping the bridge of Iſtrus for him with his Army to paſſe over, was therefore bidden by the King to ask what he would and it ſhould be granted him.

He therefore asked a place neer Helleſpont, called Mercinus, where he might build a City, and this being granted, haſtned away about the Building. But Megabyſus a great Commander under Darius, being returned from his Wars, in which he had employed him, adviſed the King, that if Hiſtieus went forward in that Work, it would in time prove dangerous to the Perſian State, becauſe he was an induſtrious man, and the people thereabouts were rich, and well furniſhed with ſhipping, wherefore by his perſwaſion Darius ſent for him under a pretence of love, to have him as a moſt faithfull friend and Counſellour about him. But Hiſtieus returning to the King, left Ariſtagoras his Kinſman to govern in his ſtead, and after a while, ſecretly ſtirred him up to rebellion, ſignifying his minde upon the head of a man, whom he ſent unto him ſo characterized, that he might underſtand his meaning. Ariſtagoras hereupon ſought to ſtir up the Lacedemonians, but being by him rejected, he went to the Athenians, and prevailed with them, and the Ionians, peoples of Greece, ſo far that they joyning went againſt Sardis. Darius hearing of it, ſent forces againſt them, and compelled them to return home, but yet they ceaſſed not to fight againſt his people in other parts, till that with a great Army he overcame Ariſtagoras at Miletum, and he fleeing into Thracia, was ſlain there. And to Hiſtieus the King relating, how his people had dealt with him, he ſaid, that all this had happened through his abſence, wherefore, he deſired of him, that he might be ſent unto them again, and being gone, turned Captain of the Rebels. But after many battails fought, at length he was overcome by Harpagus a Perſian, at Leſbos, and a great part of his Army ſlain, and he being taken was hanged, and his head being cut off ſent to Suſis to

Darius, being poudered with ſalt, at the ſight whereof he being offended, chid the actors, becauſe they brought him not alive to his ſight, and commanded the head to be waſhed and buried, as being the head of a friend, that had formerly deſerved well of the Perſians. By theſe examples we may ſee the end of ſuch as are the authors of rebellion, vengeance at the laſt befals them to the cutting of them off, according to their demerits.

Note.

After this Mardonius a kinſman of Darius was ſent out with a mighty Army againſt the Athenians, thinking alſo to ſubdue all Grecia, but his Sea forces being deſtroyed to the number of 20000 by an extraordinary tempeſt, and his ſhips broken and battered, and he himſelfe being in a fight by land wounded, hee returned into Aſia. But certain years after this, Darius being perſwaded by one Hippias, the ſon of Piſiſtratus that fled from Athens to him, and put in minde by a ſervant daily of the wrongs done him by the Athenians at Sardis, whom hee had cauſed ever ſince to ſay theſe words once a day with a loud voyce unto him. O here! memento Athenienſium, rayſed a great Army, whereof, removing Mardonius for his former ill ſucceſſe, hee made Daris and Artaphernes Leaders, commanding them to go againſt Eretria and Athens, and to bring them bound unto him. Then in a ſhort time they ſubdued Eretria, being after ſix dayes fight betrayed unto them by two chief men of the City. After this they ſayled to Attica, and there being guided by Hippias to Marathon, a place moſt fit for horſmen, the Athenians came out thither to encounter with them, not being together with their aſſiſtants above 11000 men, under the conduct of ten chief Captaines, whereof Miltiades was one, but their enemies were according to ſome 600000, according to others 300000. The Athenians ſent to the Lacedemonians for helpe, but they came not to ayd them, till after the Battell ended, out of their ſuperſtitious uſe not to go forth to battell, till the full Moon. The Athenian Captains at the firſt conſidering, how much they were overmatcht in number, were divided in their opinions, ſome being for fight, and ſome againſt it. But Miltiades, who was for giving battell to them prevailing, the government of the Army being committed to him, after ſome rites performed to their gods, haſted forth to meet the Perſians who derided their raſh attempt, as making none other account, but that they ſhould eaſily overcome ſuch an handfull of men. But the Athenians although beaten before, the Perſians in the middle Battell prevailed in both the Wings, and having put thoſe to flight, that fought in the Wings of the Perſian Army, contracted themſelves into the middle and fought ſo valiantly, that at length they put their enemies in the middle Battell to flight alſo, and ſo purſued them to their ſhips, burning many of them. In this Battell fell ſcarce 200 of the Athenian Army, of the Perſians 6300, according to Juſtine, 200000, Daris alſo, one of the chief Captains was ſlain, and Hippias, the Run-away, who was the inſtigator to this War. Panſanias alſo ſayth, that in the fight there was ſeen a man in a Countrey habit with a ploughſtaff, beating down many of the Barbarians, and then vaniſht, which they accounted help ſent unto them from their gods. Darius hearing of this overthrow of his Army was more inraged againſt Athens, and all Greece, and therefore prepared far greater forces, intending to go thither in perſon. The Egyptians alſo revolted from him at tha[illegible]ime, whom he meant to ſubdue in the way. But his forces being in three or foure years prepared, hee dyed, having before his death declared his ſonne Xerxes King. For he being aged, and intending ſo long and dangerous a Voyage, his ſonnes fearing leaſt he ſhould dye, before his return, and that then contention would ariſe about the Kingdome, deſired him before his going to appoint one of them King after him. For he had two Broods one of three ſonnes, before he was King, and another of foure, after by Atoſſa, the daughter of Cyrus. The firſt-born of the three was Artabazanes, the firſt of the foure Xerxes, the one pleaded his Birth-right, the other the Nobility of his Mother, and afterwards, that he was born to him, when hee was a King, the other when he was a private man, whereupon D*arius* made Xerxes King, and it being done, the eldeſt Brother did ſo acquieſſe in his Fathers ſentence, as Juſtine noteth, that there was no diminution of love by this means made between them, but the one did proſecute the other with as much kindneſſe as ever before, an example to ſhame many Chri-

Chriſtians, who are at continuall deadly feud one againſt another not for a mighty kingdom, as that was, but for a petty Patrimony, after ſentence given againſt one of them. Xerxes being thus made king in the ſecond yeare of his Reign, began to prepare a mighty Army to go againſt the Athenians, and all Greece, in which preparation, before all things were ready, he ſpent five years & then ſet forth, firſt, to Sardis, then to Helleſpont, where the paſſage out of Aſia into Europe was narroweſt, viz. but 12 furlongs. His Army conſiſted of 2300000 and more, accordding to Herodotus, and his ſhips were 600, with his company hee filled both Sea and Land, and where they came, they are ſayd to have drunk up whole Rivers. At Sardis he was entertained by one Pythius a Sardian, and after abundance beſtowed in entertayning him and his company, hee told him, that hearing of his preparation to paſſe into Europe to Warre, hee had prepared a ſumme of money, which he would give unto him, and being asked how much it was, he anſwered 2000 talents of ſilver, and 4400000 pieces of Gold, wanting 7000. Xerxes replying, but what wilt thou live upon? if thou giveſt all this away, he anſwered, his Slaves and his Vineyards would ſuffice for his mayntenance. Then Xerxes being delighted with the anſwer, not onely refuſed to take it, but commanded, that 7000 pieces of gold ſhould be given him to make his gold up an even ſum, which was done accordingly. But afterwards, before he was gone over Helleſpont, the old man truſting to the favour which he thought now he had with him, intreated him to leave one of his five ſonnes, which he had in his Army, at home with him for his comfort: the Tyrant was ſo inraged, that he rated him for being ſo bold to make ſuch a demand, and commanded that ſonne of his, whom he deſired, to be forthwith cut in ſunder, and to be laid one part of his body on the one ſide of the way, and the other on the other, where the Armie was to paſſe, to deter all others from the like attempt. Then he comming to Helleſpont, cauſed a bridge of Boats to be made over the water, but being made, it was ſoon broken again, by the violence of the waves, for which he being wroth, put the overſeers of the work to death, and out of his pride cauſed Helleſpont to be beaten with 300 ſtripes. After this he ſet upon the ſame work again, and it being finiſhed, paſſed over with his whole Armie, having firſt offered a drinke offering, out of a golden viall, and caſt it into the ſea to pacifie Helleſpont again, which he had before chaſtened. Being gotten over, he came with his Army to Tempe, where was a ſtreight paſſage between the great mountains Olympus and Oſſa, in which had been placed 10000 Grecians from divers parts, a little before, to ſtop his paſſage, but being afraid of his huge Army, they were now gone, having firſt ſent unto him earth and water, as the manner of the Perſians was to require in token of ſubjection, wherefore all Theſſaly, where this ſtraight was preſently yeelded unto him. But as he was to paſſe further into Greece, there was another way ſtraiter then the former, to keepe which, Leonidas with 300 Lacedemonians came, and 5900 other Grecians. The King ſet his Medes firſt to fight with them, but they being ſlain by the Greeks, his Caſſians fought next with them, and laſtly, they being ſlain alſo, the moſt choice men of his Perſians, and when the darkneſſe of the night parted them for that day, they fought again with them next day, but with ſuch ill ſucceſſe, that the King deſpaired of winning the paſſage, till that by a certain Thracian he was told of another way over the mountains, by which he would lead his men, that they might come upon the backs of their enemies, to which he harkned, and next night ſent 10000 of his valiant Perſians that way. But the ſame night, Leonidas having exhorted his men, they took and refreſhed themſelves with meat, and went together into the Kings Camp, and ſlew very many, ſeeking for Xerxes, till the ariſing of the day, at which the Perſians, ſeeing how few they were, ſet upon them and ſlew them all. After this he went on without reſiſtance by land, great Cities and Towns being forſaken for fear of him, and all the beſt things carryed out of their ſhips at ſea, of vvhich they had 200 and upward. His Navie therefore ſet upon them, but partly by a great Tempeſt, many of his ſhips were broken, and partly by the valour of the Grecians, vvho that time got the victory. Then the King himſelfe leaving the Land, renued his forces, and vvent to ſea in perſon, but vvith as ill ſucceſſe, for his Forces vvere again overthrovvn, vvhich ſtrook ſuch terrour into him, leaſt the Grecian ſhips ſhould haſten to Helleſpont. and ſtop his paſſage home, that he forthvvith fled avvay alone, leaving the government of his vvhole Armie to his Uncle Mardonius. Then Mardonius preparing his forces by Land, firſt, vvent and took Athens, vvhich he might eaſily doe, becauſe it vvas left by the inhabitants, and ſent to the Athenians, vvhom he knevv to be moſt valiant, to try if by any means, or promiſe of great gifts he could dravv them to be aſſociates vvith the Perſians, but they denying, he fired their City, and vvent to fight againſt them, and the other Grecians, vvho vvere novv gathered together to the number of 110000, to fight for their Countrey at the City Pleteas. Here either Army deferring a time to come over a River to the other, becauſe their Wizards on both ſides, had forbidden it, as a ſigne of ill luck, at length, Mardonius, impatient of further delay, vvent over, and vvas overcome and ſlain, neither vvere any of the vvhole Army, which could be taken ſpared from death. And thus the rich Tents and ſpoyls of the Perſians came into the hands of the Grecians, wherein were abundance of ſilver and Golden veſſels, and tables and treſſels of Silver and Gold with other riches ineſtimable. Pauſanias the King forbad all men to take any of the ſpoyles, till part had been taken out to ſend to the Temples of their gods, then he cauſed a Supper to be prepared moſt ſumptuouſly ſet forth according to the Perſian manner, and another moſt frugall after the Grecian, to which he brought the Nobles and ſayd, What fools were the Perſians, when they lived in ſuch abundance, to come into Greece to loſe their lives in getting more? and having commended frugall living, and ſpoken againſt exceſſe, he parted the ſpoyls to each one according to his demerits, and the Athenians with their parts, fell to re-building of their ruined City, and finiſht it in a ſhort time. Xerxes being thus repulſed out of Greece, attempted War againſt thoſe parts no more, but growing ſlothfull and contemptible was at length ſlaine by Artabanus Captain of his Guard in his Bed; thinking by his owne greatneſſe, and the help of his ſeven ſons to obtein the Kingdome. Therefore, when hee had ſlain Xerxes, he haſtned cunningly to his younger ſon Artaxerxes, and told him, that his elder Brother Darius had ſlain his Father, that he might the ſooner come to the Crown, perſwading him to revenge it, offering the helpe of the Guard to do it, that he might thus with one work both revenge his Fathers death, and alſo obteine the Kingdome. Artaxerxes, hereupon, haſteneth with the Guard and doth execution upon his brother, then Artabanus thinking, that none now ſtood in his way but Artaxerxes to hinder him from the Kingdome; ſtrook at him and wounded him, yet ſo lightly, that he returning upon the Traytour againe, ran him through and ſlew him. And then was he King, having the name of Longimanus, becauſe one hand was larger then another, inſomuch, that with it he could touch his knees ſtanding upright.

he prepared, there being not a day odde, but juſt 70 Weeks of years then expired. Some others begin them not till the 20 year of Artaxerxes, when Nehemiah was ſent with authority to build the Wall of the City.

Verſ.1,2.

Touching Ezra, his Genealogy is firſt ſet down unto Aaron, in which are put in names, 1 Chron.6. there be many more unto Seraiah, here ſaid to be the father not of Ezra, for there are 20, and next unto him Jekozadak is put, and yet he was his only Progenitour more, but ſome others muſt come between, who are not named, ſeeing he is ſayd to have been carryed captive into Babylon under Nebuchadnezar, Verſe 15. and the ſame is affirmed of Seraiah, the chief Prieſt, his father, 2 Kings 25.18. and from that time, till this were paſſed 70 years of the Captivity, and ſince the firſt of Cyrus, where the Captivity ended, 92 being together, 162.

Verſ.6.

This Ezra, thus deſcended of the chief Prieſts, is ſayd to have been skilfull in the Law of God, which he gave by Moſes; and to be prompt herein: Some ſet him further forth, as the reſtorer of all ſacred Books which were loſt and a Prophet, yea the ſame, who is otherwiſe called Malachiah, the laſt of the ſmall Prophets. That he reſtored the holy Scriptures being all loſt, hath been amongſt ſome a common received opinion, but not true, as I have already ſhewed upon 2 Kings 25.9.

Chryſ. Hom.8. in Heb.
Theod. Præfat. in Pſal.

and Chryſoſtome ſayth, that out of the remaynders of the Scriptures he compoſed them again, and Theodoret, that the Scriptures being depraved in the time of the Captivity were by Ezra again reſtored. For when the Temple was burnt, the Scriptures doubtleſſe were but negligently kept, and there was need of ſome learned and induſtrious man to collect them together, and to purge them from corruptions, that might be crept into many copies, or rather into thoſe few that were of divers parts of the Bible, wherefore God ſtirred up Ezra to doe this worthy Work, who diligently collecting all together, made perfect this neceſſary treaſure of the Church. The Chronicles of the Hebrews ſayth, That 120 of the great Synagogue were aſſembled together after the Captivity, for amending of the ſacred Books after the Captivity, and that Jeſhuah, Zorobabel, Mordecai, Ezra, Daniel, Nehemiah, and the three laſt of the ſmall Prophets were over them. But how Zorobabel, that was Prince of the Jews 160 years before Ezra his time, and the reſt of that time ſhould be together with Ezra and Nehemiah, &c. I cannot ſee.

Hieron. Præfat. in 12 Prophet.

For Ezra his being a Prophet, and otherwiſe called the Prophet Malachy, there are that affirme and confirme it, as Jerom, ſaying, That the Hebrews have held him to be the ſame, and that the words of the Prophet Malachy intimates the ſame, where he ſayth, The Prieſts lips ſhall preſerve knowledge, and hee is a Meſſenger of the Lord of hoaſts, where the word ſetting forth a Prieſt Meſſenger is Malak, and what Prieſts lips did ſo preſerve knowledge, as his? Moreover, the time, ſayth he, doth agree, being next unto Haggai and Zachary, after whom there were no more Prophets till Chriſts comming, and the matter of Malachy inveighing againſt ſuch, as ſinned againſt the wife of their youth, whereas Ezra complaineth much of the like, and reformeth it, ſo likewiſe Remigius and Rupertus, and Ribera argueth for it, becauſe in Eccleſiaſticus 49. ſome being praiſed as excellent after the captivity, and Jeſhuah, and Zorobabel, and Nehemiah, no mention is made of Ezra, but of the 12 ſmall Prophets, ſo that if Ezra were not one of them, he being a man ſo famous, and of the ſame time, had injury done unto him, for that he was paſſed over in ſilence.

Cyrill.
R. Abraham.

But Cyrill denyeth, that he was Malachy, and ſo doth Lyra, Vatablus, &c. becauſe no certain argument can hence be drawn for it, and the Rabins, traditions are often found to be but their inventions, Saint Auguſtine alſo, and Chryſoſtome, diſtinguiſh him from Malachy, and R. Abraham ſpeaketh of him as another man, in his Cabbala Hiſtorica, where he ſayth, then dyed Ezra, Haggai, Zachariah and Malachiah, and ſo the gift of propheſying was taken away from Iſrael. Let the judicious reader follow, whether of theſe he pleaſeth, The King gave unto him, as the hand of his God, was upon him, all his petition, that is, God guiding him, as it were, with his hand to goe and aske of him, and the King to grant it. Some pretend another mediate cauſe, that is, his propheſying of victory to the King, in his expedition againſt the Egyptians, which fell out accordingly, for hereby Ezra came into ſuch eſtimation with him, that hee favoured him ſo greatly, as here is ſhewed, and ſpake ſo migmagnifically of him. Yet others think, that it was only the eſtimation, in which he was had for his great learning and piety amongſt his own Countreymen, that made him famous, and ſo he came to be taken notice of by the King, ſo Joſephus. However the Kings Letters do ſhew, that he was greatly affected towards him, for Verſe 12. he therein entituleth him, The expert Prieſt of the Law of the God of Heaven, and giveth leave to all the people of Iſrael within his Dominions, that would go with him to Jeruſalem, that he might there teach the Law of God, and to carry thither Silver and Gold; both which the King and his ſeven Counſellours offered, and any of the people of Iſrael inhabiting there, to buy Sacrifices therewith, &c. whereas, Verſe 16. it is ſayd, With all the Silver and Gold which thou findeſt in the Province of Babylon. This is to be underſtood, which any of his ſubjects would willingly contribute, namely, the Caldees, beſides that which the Jews in all parts ſhould give. For, as Lyra hath it, there were probably many, who by converſing with the Jews, came to the knowledge of the true God, and therefore would contribute to this work of his worſhip, and many Jews, who being now ſetled with their Families in thoſe parts could not return, yet ſent their gifts for the promoting of this ſervice. Moreover, the King put into this his Decree that his Receivers in thoſe parts ſhould furniſh him with all other neceſſaries even unto 100 talents of ſilver, 100 Cores or meaſures of Corne, 100 baths of Wine, and 100 baths of Oyle, &c. And he ordained, that all Prieſts, Levits, Singers, and Nethinims ſerving about the Temple ſhould be free from all tribute, and yet of theſe there were many thouſands. Here it is to be noted, that Heathen Kings being guided only by the light of Nature thought it fit to free the ſervants of God, who attended continually upon his worſhip, from taxes, which were impoſed upon others, and ſomewhat like unto this did Pharaoh to his Prieſts in the time of famine. Therefore Chriſtian Kings ſhould much more make the Church free, as did Edward the third by his Charter, and many other Kings of this Land, and to take away any priviledges of the Clergy cannot but be counted a ſin againſt the light of nature. Wherefore a care ought to be had by the higher powers, when the neceſſity of the Kingdom requires taxes to be impoſed upon all, to ſhew them ſome favour. The Nethinims according to Joſephus. were ſuch as in Joſhuah his time, were given unto the Levits to ſerve under them in hewing of wood and drawing of water for all the Congregation. Laſtly, the King alſo gave power to Ezra to conſtitute Judges and Prieſts to teach in all parts of the land, adding ſevere penalties to ſuch, as ſhould refuſe to obey his Conſtitutions. Ezra having this great incouragement, publiſhed, as Joſephus ſayth, and is moſt probable, the Kings Letters through out all Media, whereupon many gathered together unto him both Prieſts and people with no ſmall joy, bringing their goods with them to aſcend to Ieruſalem. Yet none returned with him, but of the two Tribes of Iudah and Benjamin, innumerable multitudes of the other ten Tribes ſtill tarrying behind, which were and ſtill are beyond Euphrates. Then they began to take their journey the firſt moneth of the yeare, and came to Ieruſalem the fifth moneth, which was in the ſeventh yeare of King Artaxerxes, the firſt day of the moneth: or rather it being propounded by Ezra, the firſt of the firſt moneth to return, when in ten days they had prepared for it, they ſet forward the 12 day of the moneth, as is preciſely noted, Chap. 8.31.

ten Tribes were carryed away, whence it followeth, that they were carryed with Iudah and Benjamin, and lived amongſt the men of thoſe Tribes in their Captivity; and alſo becauſe thoſe parts were ſo far off, that Levits could not have beene fetcht from thence in ſo ſhort a time, as was taken for this journey, viz. ſeven or eight days. For to the River they came the firſt day of the moneth, and theſe were not ſent for till three days after, and when they were brought a ſtay was ſtill made there to keep a Faſt, after which the veſſels dedicated unto the houſe of the Lord were weighed to certain Prieſts to deliver at Ieruſalem, and yet upon the 12 day of the ſame moneth they began their journey towards Ieruſalem, wherefore he ſubſcribeth rather to R. Solomon, who ſayth, that Caſphia was a place in Baby- following the more common received opinion, ſayth, that the place, from whence they came was ſituated in the upper part of Media, between Armenia and Hyr- cania, and that having the Kings Letters they might well be furniſht to travaile this great journey with ſwift beaſts in ſo ſhort a time, which yet I cannot ſee, how, becauſe they were ſo many, and to provide to bring them all with ſuch ſpeed muſt needs aske time, beſides the time of the meſſengers going and their comming. But to the other Caſphia, which was but 680 miles from Ieruſalem, and ſo not full 80 miles from the place in which they were, they might, if they made haſt, goe and come in the compaſſe of the time before ſpoken of. For that it was not 80 miles from them may be gathered, becauſe it was no further from thence to Ieruſa- lem, then from Babylon, as hath been already ſhewed upon Chap. 2.

Verſ.21. Then Ezra proclaimed a Faſt, that God might be moved to keep them in their travail, for he was aſhamed to aſk a Guard of the King, becauſe he had uſed ſpee-ches employing ſecurity under Gods protection, and ſo they came all ſafely to

CHAP. IX.

WHen things were brought to this paſſe, and now by the comming of this great Prieſt, who was armed with ſo great authority, all ſeemed to be well Verſ.1. with the Jews, behold, another occaſion of ſorrow is offered. The Princes came unto him, and told him of the unlawfull marriages which many had made with the daughters of Idolaters, and that not onely of the common ſort, but even of the Prieſts and Levites, and they ſay, that they had not ſepara-ted themſelves from the people of the land, and from their abominations, that is, of the Canaanite, the Perizzite, &c. Thus the vulgar Latine, but Iunius, accor- ding to the abominations of the Canaanite, &c. and ſo it is in Hebrew, the ſenſe is abominable, as being againſt the expreſſe charge given, Deut. 7. and the very high-way to Idolatry, in ſo much as that it may be thought, that theſe were not to their abominatious: Note, that it is not a ſmall evill, but an heatheniſh abomination, Note. for any of the people of God to marry with ſuch, he makes the member of Chriſt, the member of a ſpirituall harlot, which God abhorreth.

Touching theſe marriages, the Hebrews have a tradition, that ſome of their wives, wearied with the length of the journey, grew ſick, and ſome were ſo worne out with travell and deformed, that they put them away and tooke others of theſe Nations which pleaſed them better, and this they ſay was the reaſon of Malachiah his invective againſt them, for ſinning againſt the wives of their youth, and putting them away, Chap.2.14,15,16. for him they hold to be Ezra. But for ſo much as many of theſe wives had borne them children, as appeareth Chap.10. and this could not be in foure moneths, which was the time of their journey. Lyra well rejecteth this tradition, as a vain imagination: and it is ſaid, that the very Princes and Preſidents had done ſo, and Chap.10.18. the Prieſts and Levites themſelves.

If there be repentance in Iſrael, let us make a Covenant, but in Hebrew it is,
There is hope to Iſrael in this matter, meaning, becauſe they were all full of ſorrow a Prince amongſt the people, who in the name of all confeſſed their guiltineſſe, and exhorteth to the making of a Covenant, of putting all ſuch wives away (that Gods anger might be averted) and the children borne by them. Onely it appeareth by the catalogue of thoſe that had marryed ſtrange vvives here follovving, NEHE-

NEHEMIAH, CHAP. I.

THere being nothing of note recorded more ſince the eighth year of Artaxerxes, it is here ſhewed, that in the 20 yeare of his Reigne, Nehemiah the Kings Butler, but a Jew hearing of the evill caſe in which his Brethren were in Jeruſalem, and that the Wall of the City remayned broken down, obteined leave to go and build it.

- The words of Nehemiah the ſon of Hilkiah. Hereby it appears, that this Book was written by him, as alſo ſayth R. Solomon. Hee had notice of this in the moneth Caſleu, which was the ſame amongſt the Caldees, with our November. If it ſhall ſeeme ſtrange, that the Iews having been ſo long there, and having had one King before, viz. Darius to favour them beſides Cyrus, and now Artaxerxes 13 years, ſince his ſending of Ezra over to them, had not by this time done any thing towards the building of the Walls of the City: it is anſwered by Lyra, that they had no leave hitherto given them, but only to build the Temple. For firſt, Zerubbabel was ſent to do this by Cyrus, then there being an interruption by enemies, untill the Reigne of Darius, hee ſent likewiſe to have the Temple built and it was finiſhed, laſtly, Artaxerxes ſent Ezra to inſtruct the people, and to provide, that the ſervice of God in the Temple might be duly performed, and the Common-wealth there well governed, but for the building of the Walls of the City no order was yet taken. Wherefore howſoever, as was ſaid before upon Ezra 7. Funccius will have the 70 Weeks of Daniel begin, Anno 7 of this King, yet they are not indeed to be begun till this 20 yeare, becauſe no Decree to build the City came out, till now, ſo alſo many grave Authors ſhould, as Iulius Africanus, alleaged by *Ierome, Beda lib.3. allegi interpr. in Ezram. Nehemiah hearing of the evill caſe, wherein the City and the people were, wept, for being without a Wall, ſayth Comeſtor, Thieves came in the night and ſlue many of them: and faſted and prayed, and then three moneths after, viz. in the moneth Niſan, that is in our March, the ſame 20 year of the King, he petitioned for leave to go and build the Walls of Ieruſalem, and prevailed, ſo that the many days ſpoken of, wherein he mourned and faſted to prepare to the effectuall offering of his Petition were no leſſe then three moneths. Pellican contrary to all others, that I have ſeen, by Artaxerxes Will have none other underſtood, but Darius whom he maketh next ſucceſſour to Cyrus, and in the ſixth yeare of whoſe Reign the Temple was finiſht, and Ezra ſent over in his ſeventh, and Nehemiah in his 20. But to paſſe this over, as his manifeſt errour, the place, wherein Nehemiah was, when he did thus, was Suſis, the Metropolitan City of Perſia, built by Darius Hiſtaſpis for his Winter habitation, as Ecbatana was for the Summer.

I alſo have ſinned and my fathers houſe, to obtein mercy, he confeſſeth the ſins of the people, and his own ſins: for the beſt are not without ſin, although Lyra ſayth, that he confeſſed his own ſins, but only as a member of the ſame body, hee himſelfe being innocent, but the Jewiſh people, of whom hee was one, were wicked. But becauſe he nameth himſelf and his fathers houſe a part, as bearing a part in the ſins whereby God was provoked, it is rather to be held, that hee ſpake thus, as acknowledging himſelf to be a ſinner, as indeed even the beſt are. And in his beginning with confeſſion, we are taught the only way to prevaile for mercy, that is, to lay open our miſery and wickedneſſe before him that can heale us, as the ſick patient before the ſkilfull Phyſician.

agoe fulfilled in the dayes of Cyrus, who gave them leave to return, and of Darius, who eſtabliſhed the ſame decree, and of this Artaxerxes, who added to the favours formerly done unto them, in ſending Ezra 13 years agoe, yet it was not fully done according to every clauſe of the promiſe, which was alſo to doe good unto them, and to increaſe them more, and to make them excellent, Deut. 30. 5, 9. For they were now in reproach, and in much miſery, as Hanani related unto him, *ver.*3. and they had not yet attained to their ancient ſplendour of their City, in the high and ſtrong walls thereof, becauſe they ſtill lay ruinous ever ſince, that in the dayes of Nebuchadnezar they had been broken down. And this moſt probably made them a ſcorne to their enemies dwelling about them, of whoſe hatred a hint was given before, Ezra 4.

a long and happy life. Then he ſheweth that the thing which affected him with ſo much grief, vvas the deſolation of Jeruſalem, the place of the Sepulchres of his fathers, which he thus ſetteth forth to move the King the more, ſeeing even the Gentiles loved to have the places where their Anceſtours lay buried fairly built, but ſpecially the Egyptians, who when they dwelt in poor houſes living, yet had fair monuments for their dead bodies to lie in, becauſe they thought them to be their habitations for ever theſe but for a ſhort time. And what account the Jews made of buriall places, appears where our Lord compares the Phariſees to whited Verſ. 3. Sepulchres, which were fair outwardly, &c. The King hearing his anſwer asked him what his requeſt was, as being now ſo far from conceiving any anger upon any ſuſpition that he inclines to grant him his deſire, ſo eaſily doth the Lord turn the Kings heart, as the rivers of water, as Lyra noteth. But it ſeemeth, that his Lyra.

heart was before this towards Nehemiah, in that, as Pellican obſerveth, having Pellican. ſo many Nobles, he choſe Nehemiah to this Office about him, rather then any of them, and of his good will to the Jews, hee had given large teſtimony before in ſending Ezra, ſo as he did, Ezra 7.

ſayd, the King asked him and the Queen, or his Wife ſitting by him, but Lyra, that Lyra.
it might not be doubted, whether both asked the ſame queſtion, will have the ſignification of the Hebrew text to run thus, and the Queene ſat by him, but indeed the word is יושבת a participle ſitting, but in the ſame ſenſe, for her, ſitting by only is intended to be ſhewed, when the King ſpake, and not her ſpeaking alſo, and therefore when Nehemiah had ſet the time, which is not here expreſſed, but unto him to let Nehemiah go. Then he being animated by this grant, deſired alſo Verſ.7,8. a ſafe conduct, and timber out of the Kings Foreſt in thoſe parts for the building beyond Euphrates, to whom he deſired, that Letters of ſafe-conduct might be written, namely, the Princes of Syria. But for any thing, that ſhould now need building about the houſe of the Lord, it ſhould ſeem ſtrange, ſeeing Ezra but 13 yeares before had a large grant made unto him to do all things about the houſe, which he thought good. Some think, that it was to build the Porch higher, ſome to repair it being now again decayed, but the Hebrew text having it to board or cover the Palace, which is by the Temple, or houſe, it ſeemeth rather, to be meant of the Kings Palace, which ſtood neer unto the Temple. And it is to be noted, that when hee deſired timber out of the Kings Foreſt, the word Paradiſe is uſed, by which name probably Lybanus was meant, as moſt abounding with timber, and for the delight, which the King took in it, kept as a Garden. Then Nehe- Verſ.9.

his intention yet ſecret, till he ſaw, what poſſibility there was of effecting it, and that the rumour of it might not be ſpread abroad amongſt the enemies, till the work was in doing. And he ſayth, that he went by the gate of the valley, that is, Verſ.13. where that gate anciently ſtood, but now only a paſſage with ruines on each ſide, and it was Weſtward, and had the name from the valley, becauſe ſayth Junius, it ſtood at the foot of the Hill, whereupon the upper City was built. The Septuagint of Sixtus calleth it portam Galila, that is, the Gate of dead mens skuls, becauſe in the valley without there was the place, in which they were layd. Then that is, on the Eaſt part where the brook Kedron ran, and waſht away the filth of the City, brought out to that place. Here he brake off a piece of the wall, to try the ſoundneſſe or unſoundneſſe of that which remained of it, that he might know whether it ſhould need to be all pulled down, that a new foundation might fountain, and to the Kings fiſh-pool, where there was no room for the ruines, for his beaſts that he rod on, to paſſe. The gate of the fountain was that ſaith Junius, Chap.3.15. whereby men went out to the pool Siloah and Rogel. Here becauſe he could not ride on, he was forced to fetch a compaſſe, and ſo came up by the further ſide of the brook, till he returned again by the ſame gate, at which he went out.

he ſtirred them up to building, ſhewing them what had paſſed between him and Ioſephus. the King for their incouragement: And this he did, ſayth Joſephus, calling them together into the Temple, and his exhortation took ſuch effect, that with all cheerfulneſſe, they preſently fell to the work. But when Sanballat, Tobias, and Geſhem the Arabian heard, they mocked at us, and deſpiſed us, &c. Here beſides Sanballat and Tobias, mention is made of an Arabian, that is, the Toparch of Arabia, who together ſought to diſcourage them from this work, calling it a rebellion againſt the King. This deriſion of the Heathen, is again ſpoken of Chap. 4.
Now, they comming to Ieruſalem, when they heard what they went about, then at home amongſt themſelves, when the work went forward. For now Nehemiah Verſ.20. anſwered them, as preſent, ſaying, The God of heaven will proſper us, and we his ſervants will riſe and build, but yee have no part, &c. He vouchſafed not ſo much as to tell them of the Kings licence, ſo little did he feare them, but ſhakes them up as having nothing to do with this work about Ieruſalem, ſeeing it was not within any of their Principalities, but the government of that place was now committed unto him.

CHAP. III.

Verſ.1. THen Eliaſib, the chief Prieſt and his Kinſmen built the gate of the flock, Iunius. &c. This gate, ſayth Iunius, was on the South part in a valley before the Temple, where a Market uſed to be kept to ſell ſheepe for the ſervice of the Lyra. Temple, ſee more of it, Iohn 5.2. there was the pool of Betheſda, Lyra addeth moreover, that by this gate, the cattell which were for ſacrifice were brought in.
And that their preceeding in building, might be the more diſtinctly underſtood, he obſerveth that there were about Ieruſalem three walls, within the innermoſt of which dwelt the King and the Prieſts: within the ſecond, the Nobles and Prophets: and within the third, Artificers and other ſorts of people: and therefore the relation of the building, beginneth firſt with the outermoſt wall, wherein were ſix gates, and then proceeding to the ſecond, ver. 19. where Heſer the ſonne of Ieſhuah is ſaid to have built the ſecond meaſure, that is, the ſecond or middle wall: laſtly, to the third wall, ver. 28. where it is ſaid to be above, and it is begun with the horſe gate. That gate which was neareſt to the Temple, the Prieſts began firſt to build, to give example to the reſt, and not onely the gate, but alſo the wall to the centenary Tower, and the Tower of Hananeel, that is, according to the ſignification of the word, moſt probably, 100 Cubits. And they are ſaid, when they had finiſhed the gate, to have ſanctified it, that is, according to ſome, to have adorned it, and made it moſt beautifull, but according to others better, to have ſanctified it by prayer, from thence forward to be counted holy, as an appurtenance of the Temple, or rather feaſting and offering ſacrifice, when they had finiſhed it, as was wont to be done, when a new houſe was built, and it was dedicated. Next unto the Prieſts built the men of Iericho, that is, the wall, Verſ.2. as ſome think, becauſe that part was right over againſt their City. But the Fiſhgate Verſ.3. built the ſons of Haſſenaah: This was ſo called, ſayth Lyra, becauſe fiſhes comming Lyra.

from the ſea, were brought in at it: but now it is called the gate of David, becauſe it vvas nigh unto Sion, his City, but by the Sea underſtood, the Sea of Galilee.

Then built the men of Teknah, that is, of that place, of vvhich Amos vvas, but Verſ.5.

The old gate built, Joaada the ſonne of Phaſheah, &c. This, ſayth Lyra, vvas Verſ.6.

Salem.

From hence forward are ſayd to have built Melatiah the Gibeonite; Iadon the Verſ.7.
Meronothite, the Gibeonitis, and the men of Mizpah, even to the throne of the Prince on this ſide the River, according to Iunius his reading. But the vulgar Iunius.
Latine, For the Captain, which was in the Region beyond the River, expounded by Lyra, as being ſet awork by him although an Heathen, for the good will, which Lyra.
he bare to this work; whereby it ſhould ſeem, as Pellican gathereth, that he was Proſelyte. a Proſelyte. Hebrew it is לכסא פחת עבר הנהר to the throne of the Prince beyond the River. But if wee take כסא, as Pellican doth for a proper name, and ſo read it, unto the Prince Chiſſe beyond the River, it muſt be underſtood, unto that part, which he being a Prince of the Perſians beyond Euphrates, yet out of his piety was at the charge to build. If with Iunius wee ſhould underſtand, to the throne of the Prince, that is to the Hall, where the ſeat of judgment ſtood, what reaſon can be yielded of adding theſe words, beyond, or on this ſide the River, certainly none.

Then ſpeaking of the building of Huzziel and Chananiah, he ſayth, they left Verſ.8.
Ieruſalem whereſoever the wall was broad, as Iunius reads it, giving this for the Iunius. ſenſe, they were not carefull about repayring the middle Wall, whereby the upper City was divided from the nether. The vulgar Latine, they diſmiſſed Ieruſalem even to the wall of the broader ſtreet, which Pellican expoundeth only by ſaying, Pellican.
that there was a ſpacious place for a Market or Faire to be kept, Lyra, they diſmiſſed Lyra.
Ieruſalem, that is, they extended the Wall thereof. Hugo Cardinalis, they built the outward Wall ſo farre, as till they came, where the City was moſt ſpatious and of greateſt compaſſe. Hebrew, they left Ieruſalem even to the broad wall, that is, as it ſeemeth rather to me, they built ſo far, or went on ſo far in building, that they brought their work paſt the City on one ſide to a Wall, that becauſe of the greater thickneſſe and ſtrength remayned hitherto undemoliſhed, and ſo needed no building, which happily might be that, which Uzziah built ſo ſtrong, 2 Chron.26.9. and becauſe of the ſtrength more labour being required to beat it downe, the Caldees weary of the worke in demoliſhing the reſt left it untoucht.

Next built Rephaias Governour over half the tract of Ieruſalem, that is, ſayth Verſ.9.
Iunius, that part which belonged to Iudah, the vulgar Latine, Prince of a ſtreet Iunius.
of Ieruſalem, but Hebrew, it is of the half diviſion of Ieruſalem, by ſome underſtood of half a ſtreet, becauſe Shallum is ſayd to have been Prince of the other halfe, Verſe 12. but Iunius will have that other half to be underſtood of that part of the City, which belonged to the Benjamites, that is, the North part. Now Rephaias is ſayd to have built next unto Chenaniah, becauſe, although there was a ſpace betwixt their two buildings of the broad Wall, which needed no building, yet none came between them.

Verſ.10. At his ſide built Jedaiah, right over againſt his own houſe, he being moſt probably aſſigned to that part, becauſe it was thought, that he would build the ſtronger for his own ſecurity.

Verſ.11. Pellican. In the other meaſure repaired Malchia the ſon of Charim, &c. that is, ſayth Iunius, ſo much by meaſure, as Chattuſh laſt before ſpoken of had done. The vulgar Latine, the middle part built Malchia, which Pellican knoweth not, whether to expound of the wall or of the ſtreet, and if of the wall, whether of that before paſſed over, it being meant, that whereas it needed ſome repayring, he did that. But becauſe it is not in Hebrew, the middle part, but the other meaſure, it is to be thought, that Iunius expounds it beſt of the like quantity. And by ſome it is conceived, that there was a ſpace of wall between two Towres, to which this ſecond meaſure hath reference, and of this when the three before going had built part, the two following named in this Verſe built as much by meaſure, and the other Towre of Furnaces or Ovens alſo.

Verſ.12. Next built Shallum another Prince over the other half tract, &c. and his daughters. How this is to be underſtood, ſee before upon, Verſe 9. and his daughters are ſpoken of, as his heirs, becauſe he had no ſons, and the work being by him begun, haply he dyed, and left it to his daughters to finiſh.

Verſ.13. The gate of the valley built Chanum, together with the inhabitants of Zanoach, &c. Of the gate of the valley ſee before, Chap. 2. 13, as alſo of the gate of dunghils here named, being 1000 Cubits of.

Verſ.14. The gate of the dunghils built Melchias the ſonne of Rechab, Prince of the ſtreet Bethacharem. Of the Rechabites, read Ier. 35. how abſtemious they were, and obſervant of their fathers precepts in their rigid living. Of them the Eſſees are thought to have come that dwelt afterwards in this ſtreet, and from them the gate was called the gate of the Eſſenes. The ſtreet, that this Prince was over, ſayth Pellican. Pellican, had the name from Vines, which, it ſeemeth, abounded there, for Charem ſignifieth a Vineyard, and Beth an houſe, of which it is compounded.

Verſ.15. And the gate of the fountain built another Sellum, of which before, Chap. 2. 14. here was a Conduit to convey the water, it being next unto mount Zion, or the City of Verſ.16. Pellican. David. After him built Nehemias, that is another of this name, being Prince over half the ſtreet Bethzur, which Pellican ſayth, is not to be underſtood of a ſtreet in Ieruſalem, but of the Towne Bethzur: but it was plainly a ſtreet called by this name. And his work was drawn over againſt the Sepulchers of David, and the fiſh-pool built with great coſt, that is, of Hezekiah, 2 King 20. 20. even to the Iunius. houſe of the valiant, that is, ſayth Iunius, where the Warders of the City of David kept. Lyra. Lyra, where the Worthies of David and other ſucceſſively of the moſt valiant, who were there trained up to feats of Armes, that they might be ready and the more fit upon all occaſions to defend the City.

Verſ.19. Lyra. Pellican. Then built Heſer the Governour of Maſpeh another, or ſecond meaſure. Here ſayth Lyra, beginneth the building of the ſecond or middle Wall, but Pellican will have nothing elſe meant by the ſecond meaſure, but that the wall to be built being divided by equall meaſures, whereof one man was to build one and another another, this Heſer not contenting himſelf to build one only, builded two of them. But it is not ſayd, he built two meaſures, but the ſecond, wherefore that of Lyra ſeemeth more probable eſpecially becauſe theſe words the ſecond meaſure are often uſed, (from henceforward) but ſeldom in ſpeaking of the Wall hitherto Iunius. built, right over againſt the aſcent to the Armory Mikzohah, that is, ſayth Iunius, to a Towre or Munition, in a moſt high place of the City of David, called Mikzohah, as alſo 2 Chron. 26. 9. from the cragginesse thereof. But Mikzohah ſignifieth a corner, and therefore it may better be rendred, the aſcent of the corner Armory, Lyra. ſeeing the word Neſhek here uſed, ſignifieth Armes, the vulgar Latine, the aſcent of the moſt firme corner, ſo called, ſayth Lyra, becauſe two walls met here, and ſo it was moſt thick and ſtrong. But thus the reaſon of the ſtrength of this place, is not all ſhewed, for it was becauſe a Towre ſtood here wherein Armes lay.

Verſ.20. After him built with a burning mind Baruc, ſo Iunius, vulgar Latine, upon the Mount, built Baruck. But the word חרה here uſed doth not ſignifie any thing elſe but wrath or fury, and therefore it may beſt be read, cholerick or wrathfull Baruc, even to the gate of the houſe of Eliaſhib, the High-Prieſt, not, as ſome conceive to a gate of the City, ſuppoſing that the High-Prieſt had dwelt ſo, as that the entrance by that gate had been into the High-Prieſts houſe: but to the gate of his houſe, which was doubtleſſe a place of note for his eminencie, and very great, Verſ.21. becauſe the next man built no further, but all along behind it, and then came the part which the Prieſts built.

Verſ.22. Then built the Prieſts the men of the plaines, the vulgar Latine, men of the plaines of Jordan, adding the laſt word, which is not in the Hebrew Text for explanation. But it appeareth, *Chap.*12.28. to be a miſtaking, becauſe they are ſpoken of, as dwelling in the plains about Ieruſalem.

Verſ.24. Mention is made of another meaſure to Mikzoah and the former, that is, the other corner of the City of David, where ſtood a Towre alſo, as is ſaid of the other corner before, *ver.*19.

Verſ.25. Mention is made of the Kings houſe, joyning to the Court of the Priſon, of which ſee, *Jer.*32.2. Verſ.26. *ver.*26. But the Nethinims dwelt in Ophel, right over against the gate of waters. Ophel, ſayth Lyra, was a Towre neer the Temple and the Prieſts chambers, Lyra. and becauſe they miniſtred to the Prieſts wood and water, they were placed here, as was moſt convenient. Of the gate of waters, and the ſtreet before it, ſee again, *Chap.*8.2.

Verſ.28. Above, the gate of horſes built the Prieſts, the vulgar Latine, above at the gate. Here, ſayth Lyra, Lyra. began the third and innermoſt wall, where the Prieſts dwelt, and therefore they built it, every man againſt his own houſe. The gate of horſes was ſo called, becauſe, hitherto men might ride towards the Temple, but no nearer, when the King himſelfe came, he muſt alight here, and goe afoot to the Temple. Iunius and others, ſay nothing here of a third wall, but underſtand by this word, Iunius. above, the horſe gate to have ſtood in a deſcent upon the ground, riſing from which the Prieſts built.

Verſ.29. Then built Zadock and Shemahiah, &c. After the Prieſts ſpoken of in generall, here they are ſet forth by name, and it ſeemeth that they built on each ſide of Nehemiah, becauſe, *ver.*30. he ſayth, After me built Chananiah and Hanun, &c. Verſ.30. omitting, out of his modeſty, to ſpeake how great a part he built, yet *Chap.*4.16. and *Chap.*5.16. he ſayth, that he and his ſervants were in the work and built. The vulgar Latine, neither here, nor *ver.*31. where again it is ſaid, after me, doth render it ſo, but after him, as if nothing elſe were meant, but after the man next before ſpoken of. But in Hebrew it is, אחרי that is, after me, but that commonly vvhen the vvord ſignifieth after me, it is put vvithout a prick above the Jod, vvhereas here it hath one, and in the margin, to expreſſe the force of it, it is אחרו after him. But it is put both theſe vvayes, that Nehemiah might moſt covertly ſet forth his ovvn vvork, to avoid all ſhevv of vainglory. Here Chanum the ſonne of Tala is called the ſixt, as is ſuppoſed, becauſe hee had five brethren elder then himſelfe.

Verſ.31. It is ſaid, Right over againſt the gate of the commandement, ſo Iunius, the vulgar Latine contra portam judicialem, and the vvord המפקד ſignifieth a Governour, and moſt probably the gate, where the great Senate, called Synedrium, ſate is meant.

Verſ.32. Finally mention is made again of the gate of the flock, where the Goldſmiths and Apothecaries built, whereby we may gather, that the wall by this time was brought round about the City, ſeeing theſe laſt left where the firſt had begun, *ver.*1. Therefore as Pellican noteth againſt Lyra, there were not three walls now repaired, but one onely, and this was a great work, as the ſtate of the people then was, and as much as was needfull for the preſent. Pellican. But Lyra will have this underſtood of the middle, next unto which by the outward, theſe men dwelt, ſo maintaining his tenet touching three walls ſtill. All the gates here mentioned are but eight, yet there are that number 12, whereof foure Eaſtward, the Potters gate, the Water gate, the horſe gate, and the gate of the Flock: foure Weſtward, the corner gate, the gate of the valley, the dunghill gate, and the gate of the fountain: and foure Northward, the gate of Benjamin, the fiſh gate, the old gate, and the gate of Ephraim, for Southward the hill upon which the City ſtood, was ſo ſteep that there was no entrance in that part. And as the old, ſo the new Ieruſalem is ſet forth, as having 12 gates, *Revel.*21. but no more, but theſe eight needed repairing. Lyra. The Myſtery. Of theſe gates Lyra draweth ſix to an allegory, firſt laying it for a ground, that Ieruſalem which was now built, figured out Ieruſalem above, which is heaven, *Gal.*4. And then the gates leading into Ieruſalem, figured out the way leading to life, according to that of our Lord, Wilt thou enter ino life, keep the Commandements. And as theſe were both negative and affirmative, the one ſort ſerving to reſtrain from evill, the other to ſtir up to the doing of good, according to Pſal. 34.12. ſo there be three things, the conſideration whereof may reſtrain us from evill, and thirdly, to ſtir up to good. The firſt three are, Vitii fœtor, judicii terror, ſupplicii horror, ſet forth by the dunghill gate, the judiciall gate, and the gate of the valley, becauſe hell is below, for which the valley of Benhinnon is applyed hereunto. The ſecond and third are Decor operis, dulcor fœderis, valor muneris, becauſe to do good is comely, linketh unto God, and is rewarded in heaven, and theſe are ſet forth by the gate of David, who was comely, the gate of the fountain, becauſe by water the Covenant is entered into with God, and the gate of negotiatours who trafick and truck for gold and pearls. Thus he, but becauſe no gates ſerve onely to keepe out, but for entrance alſo, this allegory will not well hold, Beda. wherefore Beda betters makes Ieruſalem a figure of the Church, the building of the gates figuring out the Apoſtles, who taught the way to heaven, and that whereby errours may be kept out of the Church, as gates ſerve both to enter by, and to keepe out enemies, and the builders of the walls, other paſtors and teachers who watch continually, and are as a wall of defence about the Church. Nehemiah his particular regiſtring of the names of them all, figureth out the writing of their names in heaven, that they may be had in everlaſting remembrance, who help to the perfecting of this ſpirituall building. Pellican. Note. Morally Pellican ſheweth, that in theſe repairers of the gates and walls of Ieruſalem, thus accurately ſet forth to their praiſe in the Generations to come, they who doe the like for their native Countrey and Church, labouring to reform things amiſſe, and to repaire the decays of both are praiſed, and we are taught always to have them in remembrance, as moſt worthy inſtruments.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ.1. Note. But when* Sanballat heard that we built the wall, he was very angry and ſaid, &c. Of this Sanballat and Tobias, ſee before, *Chap.*2.10. Note, that this is the ſequell of ſeeking to repentance, the decays of Gods Church, the wicked are always mad at it, and deride and oppoſe it, as alſo ſome of the Tribes, in the dayes of godly Iehoſhaphat did, when they were building the wall. There were three impediments; as Lyra noteth, the firſt ſet forth in this Chapter, the ſecond, *Chap.*5. the third, *Chap.*6.

Verſ.2. What will theſe weak Iews do? He cals them ſo in contempt, as thinking them vvho vvere but lately come out of captivity unable to perform ſo great a vvork, ſhould they ſuffer them, that is, vvill the Gentiles ſuffer them? as the vulgar Latine expreſſeth it, although they vvere able to build it, Will they finiſh it in a day, and build it of burnt ſtones out of the rubbiſh? they add this as thinking it as ridiculous, as if men ſhould think to build ſo great a building in one day, and that of ſtones unfit for building, becauſe burnt in the dayes of Nebuchadnezar, and partly by reaſon of that burning, and partly by the vveather in ſo long a time, made unuſefull for building.

Verſ.3. Tobias to increaſe the deriſion, anſvvered, vvhen they have built, if a fox goe but upon their wall, he vvill breake it dovvn, and therefore vve need not care, let them build vvhat they can, their vvall vvill not be able to endure the leaſt force Verſ. 4. comming againſt it, of this Nehemiah complaineth to God, and prayeth him not Verſ.5. to cover their iniquity, that is, to forgive it. He prayeth not, ſayth Pellican here, oppugners of God, and enemies to his people, and ſo incorrigible, they might be lected not to build ſtill, yea, the heart of the people vvas provoked to the vvork, their ſcoffes made them the more earneſt in it, untill the vvall vvas halfe finiſhed.

Then their enemies Samaritans, Ammonites, Arabians, and Aſhdodeans, which Verſ.7. were of the Philiſtims, were greatly incenſed at the going on of this work about the Wall, and the repayring of the wide breaches thereof and aſſembled together to fight againſt the Iews.

Hereupon they did flee to God by Prayer, and ſet a watch night and day, that Verſ.9. they might not come upon them unawares. For God is firſt and chiefly to be ſought unto in danger, and then means of prevention are wiſely to be uſed.

But the Jews ſayd, the force of our burthen carryers is weakned, and there is Verſ.10. much earth, &c. After one impediment by the Jews enemies, here followeth another amongſt themſelves, they murmured for the labour in carrying ſo much rubbiſh away, as lay about the Wall, giving it impoſſible for them to perfect this building, having alſo ſo many enemies to interrupt them.

The enemies alſo according to their combination before ſpoken of, attempted Verſ.11. to come ſecretly upon them, eyther to ſlay them or to hinder their work, but they being forewarned of it by their friends abroad, ten times diſappointed them of Verſ.12. their enterprize by fitly placing armed men to encounter with them, if they had come, and Nehemiah made an exhortation to them not to feare, but to truſt in God, Verſ.13,14. and to fight manfully for their Countrey.

The enemies ſeeing that their enterprizes were diſcovered, God wrought ſo Verſ.15. hereupon with them, that they were confounded, and the Iews returned to the work, having for a time intermitted it for their neceſſary defence.

Yet they did not altogether leave their armes, for part of his young men laboured Verſ.16. in the worke, and part held ſhields with darts and bows, &c. thus Iunius, Iunius. but the Vulgar Latine, half of the young men did the work, and half was prepared Verſ.17,18. to the war, and ſpeares and ſhields, &c. And this agreeth more to the Hebrew, and to ſenſe, ſeeing the intent is not only to ſhew what his young men did, which could not be many, but what the workmen in generall did, who were young and luſty, and whereas he hath it ſhields with darts, Hebrew it is, holding both ſpeares, ſhields, and bows, ſo that neyther hath the vulgar Latine rendred it rightly in this clauſe nor ſenſibly, and the Princes after them in all the houſe of Judah, that is, following them ſome to the work, and ſome to their armes to order them, incourage and defend them.

Alſo the builders went to their work armed with ſwords girt unto their ſides and they ſounded with the Trumpet by Nehemiah, that is, when need required that they might come altogether to that part, where their enemies came to aſſault them. For ſo he yields the reaſon, why the Trumpet ſounded by him, verſ. 19,20. becauſe they were at the vvork of the Wall far aſunder, and he taking upon him as a Watchman carefully to foreſee the danger would give them warning in all parts by the ſound of the Trumpet.

Hee alſo provided, that there might be a vvatch by night, in vvhich hee and his Verſ.22.
friends and ſervants bare a part, not putting off their clothes, but only for vvaſhing.
Iunius, Cuique gladius ſuus & aqua eſto. Hebrevv, Every man put that into the water, that is, his garment, vvhen need required to be vvaſhed, but Iunius going upon another ſignification of the vvord שלחו, his ſvvord, reade it otherwiſe, as if the meaning vvere, let every one go vvith his ſvvord to the vvater, as Pagnin expounds it. But if the vvord be rendred, a ſword here is no more ſayd, but each man his ſvvord, the vvater. I hold it therefore better to follovv the vulgar Latine, but each put it off for waſhing, becauſe his purpoſe here is not but to ſhevv hovv they did to keep themſelves cleanly and from being naſty, ſeeing they did not at night put off their clothes, viz. by ſaying, that they put them off to be waſhed, either as was requiſite of courſe, or as the Law required, upon the contracting of any uncleanneſſe, myſtically by the enemies of this building, Heretickes The Myſtery.
and wicked men are ſet forth, who deride and ſeek by all means to hinder the ſpirituall building, that is, reformation of Doctrine and Manners, from which they are moſt averſe, the builders that complain of much earth, which muſt be dig'd and carried away, to lay a firme foundation, the ſpirituall builders who are wearied with labouring to remove earthly thoughts from mens minds, that they may be well founded upon the Rock Chriſt: the enemies plotting to come unawares upon them, the Devils ſtratagems to ſurprize mens ſouls unawares; their arming againſt them, the taking of the ſpirituall armour, Epheſ.6.12. The Labourers being armed, even when they wrought, the watchfulneſſe which ſhould be in all the people themſelves, beſides the watchfulneſſe of the Paſtours ſet to defend them: or, according to Pellican, the double work which ſpirituall builders have to doe, both of building up in grace, and impugning errour. And it is to be noted, ſayth Beda, that when Solomon built the Temple at the firſt, he did it without oppoſition, but now it having been deſtroyed for ſin, the rebuilding of it is with great difficulty, to ſhew that a mans firſt converſion is more eaſily wrought, but he being again drawn away to ſin, to bring him to be renewed by repentance, is of greater difficulty, becauſe it is more hard for him that hath once and again felt the pleaſures of ſinnes to refrain from them, then for him that hath not ſo deeply taſted thereof: They are like ſtones burnt in the Devils fire, as theſe in Nebuchadnezzars, making the enemies to deride the attempt of building herewith. And ſo ſome Hereticks ſpeak againſt ſuch, as in the time of perſecution have falne away, as if they could not be renewed by repentance, denying them therefore any admittance into the the Church, whereas indeed it is a work not impoſſible, but far more difficile. Laſtly, their watching by night, and not putting off their clothes, ſhewed the vigilancie of every faithfull perſon againſt ſin, out of the danger whereof it is ſo hard to be kept, for which cauſe we muſt always keep our ſpirituall armour about us, and never put it off either by day or night.

CHAP. V.

HEre is another great impediment in this building, a complaint is made by the poor of three things. 1 That for ſuſtenance they gave their ſons and daughters as ſervants to the rich. 2 Others ſold their poſſeſſions, that they might have wherewith to buy ſuſtenance, there was ſuch a famine. 3. Others were inforced to take up money upon uſe, to pay the Kings Tribute, and this they did, laying their fields and vineyards to pledge therefore. And to theſe ſtreights they ſeem to have been brought by their continuall attending upon the building, the works of husbandry being neglected, whereby they ſhould have gotten their living, touching tribute paying, although the Prieſts and Levites were by the King freed herefrom, Ezra 7. yet all others paid it. And partly by the charge that lay upon them for this, and partly for this building, the meaner ſort, which were the far greater part, waxed very poor, and were inforced thus to complain againſt the rich. Now they ſay, that their children were as their kinſmens children, free by Gods Ordinance, as being part of them that were delivered out of the Egyptiacall bondage, although they now being grown poor, were inforced to ſell them to the rich for ſervants.

Verſ.1,2.

3, 4.

Verſ.5.

Nehemiah hearing this was very wroth with ſuch miſerable men, as thus ſinned againſt charity towards their poor brethren: for they ought in this caſe to have lent money to them freely. And firſt hee reproved even the chiefeſt for this privatly, then a Congregation being called, publikely, ſaying, we, according to our power, redeem our brethren from the Gentiles, that have been ſold unto them, that is, ſo many as are able and fear God: for thus it is commanded, Levit.25. 47. and doe yee ſell your brethren that they ſhould be ſold unto us? that is, be redeemed by us, as the vulgar Latine hath it, and the meaning is, when ye out of your hard heartedneſſe, rather then lend gratis unto them, have enforced them for money to ſell themſelves unto you, that yee might for your advantage ſell them again, will yee commit ſuch an abſurdity, who are as neer unto them, as we are, as to expect, that wee ſhould give you your price for them to ſet them free again?

Verſ.6.

Verſ.8.

again? Thus he upbraids them by dealing as hardly with their brethren, as the Gentiles, and ſo fruſtrating the grace of God towards them in bringing them from amongſt the Gentiles in their own Country again, ſeeing they thus made them ſervile here, when as the Gentiles themſelves had diſmiſſed them freely. Wherefore he willeth them to conſider, what the Gentiles would ſay, when they ſhould heare of this to the diſgrace of them and of their Religion.

Verſ.10. Should I, my kinſmen, &c. exact money of them, &c. the vulgar Latine, we have lent them, as if he had ſpoken affirmatively, whereas the word uſed ſignifieth lending to uſury; which Nehemiah would not doubtleſſe doe, wherefore it is better rendred interrogatively, implying that both he, and all that belonged unto him, abhorred from doing thus, and therefore he moveth them to eaſe their poor brethren of this burthen, as indeed by the Law of God they ought to doe, ſeeing uſury to the poor is therein ſo ſtrictly forbidden. Then ſhewing how he would have them eaſe the poor, he ſayth, Verſ.11. Reſtore unto them their fields and vineyards, &c. that is, which are made over to you till the jubilee, to make amends for your former exactions, reſtore now again to the poor owners, as their need requireth, and the hundreth part that yee exact of them, that is monethly, ſo that every moneth they exacted one ſhilling for 100 ſhillings, that is, 12 ſhillings for twelve moneths, and for 100 pounds, 12 pounds. This alſo he requireth them to remit, whether it were to be paid in wine, oile, or corne, and to loſe the time which they had untill the yeare of releaſe, in their lands and houſes, as brotherly love required.

Verſ.12. And when they yeilded to doe thus, he curſed all that ſhould not indeed performe it, uſing for a forme his coat, which he ſhak't and ſaid, ſo let God ſhake all that doe it not, and make that from all their labours no good may come unto them, but that they may be as a tree, the fruit whereof is ſhaken off. Then the Prieſts being called for witneſſes, he adjured and ſware theſe men to it, that being done, in their preſence, who ſtood for God, they might think themſelves the more ſtrictly obliged. Pellican. Pellican ſayth, that by calling the Prieſts to be preſent at this Oath, he ſhewed that they ſhould be ſhaken, and excommunicated out of the houſe of God, and from the Congregation of his people. Salianus underſtandeth theſe words, I adjudged them, of the Prieſts, whom being guilty of the like ſin, he admoniſhed and adjured privately for honours ſake, when he firſt publikely dealt with other rich men.

Verſ.14. Nehemiah having this way, promoted the good of the poor Jews, ſheweth in the next place, that he refrained from taking ought of them all the time that hee continued Governour over them, which was twelve years, contrary to the manner of others, that had ruled there in times paſt, who lived upon them to the impoveriſhing of them the more. Wherefore it ſeemeth that he was a man of great wealth, as they commonly are that be in office about great Kings, and from him ſhould other Rulers take example to favour their Subjects in matters of charge, as much as they can, and not oppreſſe them to maintain themſelves in greater pomp, and worldly glory. Note.

Verſ.16. He alſo recordeth his own work, and his ſervants in helping to build the wall, not for oſtentation, but to ſhew how greatly the feare and love of God, to the honour of whom this was wrought in him, as P. afterwards ſpeaks of his labours, and forbearing to take maintenance, for the good of Gods Church being yet weak and poore, to draw on others for a more generall good, to doe likewiſe in the like caſe. 1 Cor. 9. Lyra. He meaneth, ſayth Lyra, that he wrought with his own hands to draw on others the more, when they ſhould ſee their Governour himſelf ſo intent to the work. Note. A notable example ſet to all in high place and authority, that they from hence might learn to go before others in doing that good, which they ſtirre up them to do. And he ſayth, that he purchaſed himſelf no field, that is, he kept not the ſurpluſage of his revenues to encreaſe his poſſeſſions withall, as rich men commonly do, but ſpent all for the publike good.

Verſ.17. Alſo 150 men of the Jews being Preſidents, and thoſe that came from the Gentils round about, came to my table, that is, they that for their publike offices ſhould have been maintained by the publike charge, I daily gave diet to, and to Samaritans ritans, Arabians, Philiſtims and Ammonites round about, that came upon occaſion Verſ.18. of buſines to Jeruſalem. Finally, he ſheweth, what his daily proviſion was, one oxe, ſix ſmaller beaſts many fowls, &c. in regard of all which he deſireth God to remember him for good, that is, according to Lyra, both of grace and glory, ſeeing that out of Charity to his people that were poor and brought low, he did all this that they might be the more ſpared from charges. The Morall. Morally in that Nehemiah required the chiefe amongſt them to doe nothing in way of charity towards their poor brethren, but that wherein he went before them in his own example, all Governours may learne it to be their duty to be the firſt and chief in doing the good, which they require others to doe. And in that, with ſhaking off his garment, he curſed thoſe that either were uncharitahle to the poor, or oppreſſed them, or went from the good profeſſion which they had made: Note, that whoſoever doth any of theſe things, muſt not expect to proſper, but be blaſted in all his goods and labours.

CHAP. VI.

THis let of building the wall being thus overcome, now ariſeth another, when then the wall was finiſhed, but not the gates of the City, for they remained yet imperfect. Verſ.1.2. Sanballat and other enemies of the Jews inhabiting neer unto them, and being Governours of thoſe parts ſent unto him to meet with them, that they might make a Covenant together, thinking to take an opportunity thus to kill him, and the place which they appointed was the valley of Omin, of which ſee Chap.11.35. R. Sol. ſayth, it was a place without Jeruſalem. whereby we may ſee into what dangers godly Governours come, through the malice of wicked enemies of the truth, when they endeavour to repair the walls of Jeruſalem, that is, to reform things amiſſe in the Church of God, Note. by reſtoring ſound Doctrine, wherein ſoever it hath been corrupted, but God will preſerve them as he did Nehemiah. And it is to be noted, that theſe enemies took their oportunity when the gates were not yet finiſhed, for if they could but yet have cauſed the work to ceaſe, all that was hitherto done had been vain.

Verſ. 3. But Nehemiah wiſely foreſeeing their drift, ſent them anſwer that he was about a great work, and if he ſhould come abroad to conſult with them, it would be hindered, but notwithſtanding he was urged by them to come foure times. Note. Prudence is neceſſary as well as innocency to ſee into the ſubtilties of our enemies. Note. For Nehemiah wiſely foreſeeing what theſe wicked Princes went about, would by no meanes be drawn to goe out of the City, in which he was in greateſt ſafety.

Verſ. 5. Then Sanballat ſent unto him the fifth time by a ſervant, writing ſomething to terrifie him, viz. that it was reported amongſt the Gentiles about, that when the Wall was finiſhed with the gates, the Iews meant to rebell, and he to make himſelf King, wherefore he willed him to come forth, that they might conſult together, pretending great good will towards him to give him advice, what were the beſt courſe for him to take to prevent the comming of this rumour to the Kings eare, and conſequently the danger that would enſue hereupon. Yet he wrot not ſo plainly, but that he left him doubtfull, whether this were the end of his ſending for him, or to get ſomwhat out of his own mouth, whereof he might accuſe him to the King, or elſe to conſpire with him.

Verſ.8. But Nehemiah having a good conſcience was nothing moved at this, but anſwered, that he feined this of his own head, that they being afraid, who were in the work, might break off from it, and therefore he applyed himſelfe the more earneſtly unto it, praying God to ſtrengthen their hands in the work.

Verſ.10. This policy of the enemies being thus fruſtrated, another device of theirs was, to ſuborne a falſe Prophet, to tell him, as if it had been from God revealed unto him, that they would come upon him in the night and ſlay him, which they might eaſily doe, becauſe the gates of the City were not as yet perfected, and it was no doubt, but that they would be ready enough to doe ſo, for the hatred which they conceived againſt him, in regard of his attempt to fortifie Jeruſalem, and becauſe of his contempt ſhewed towards them. Therefore he perſwaded him to goe with him into the Temple, which was as a fort, that he might there be ſafe. This falſe Prophet was Shemahiah, who came of Delaiah, of whom ſee, 1 Chron. 24.18. he was one of the principall Prieſts of the 23 courſe, and he is ſaid to have been ſhut up, that is, one who ſequeſtred himſelfe from company, as being moſt ſtrict and holy in the courſe of his life, that he might be in the more eſtimation, as converſing the more with God, and by him graced with the ſpirit of Propheſie. Iunius. Junius renders it, detained, or held by vow to doe all that he could for the good of Nehemiah. It is moſt probable, that Nehemiah being ſent for to him, as to a man of God, came to his houſe, and there under a pretence of ſpeaking by Propheſie for his ſafety, he ſought to move him to make the Temple the place of his refuge, that ſo he lurking in ſecret for feare, all the Jews who were in the work, ſhould be terrified and ceaſe from building any more, to his great ignominy and diſgrace: or, Pellican. as Pellican hath it, he ſhould thus indanger that holy place, of being defiled with bloud, if they ſhould there be let in to him, as by the fraud of the ſame falſe prophet and his complices, they eaſily might.

Into the houſe of this Shemahiah, Nehemiah ſaith, that he went, as ſuppoſing him to be a friend, but when he heard him ſpeake to the effect aforeſaid, he eaſily diſcovered the contrary, and that he was one of the evill minded Jews, who held correſpondencie with the Samaritans againſt Nehemiah and the reſt. Vers.11. Therefore he anſwered him, Should ſuch a man as I flee, or, who being as I, can enter into the Temple and live? that is, ſhould I that have hitherto profeſſed ſo great confidence in God, and perſwaded others to doe the like, now diſtruſt his providence, and ſhew it by fleeing ſo ſhamefully to hid my ſelfe? ſurely if I ſhould doe thus, I might juſtly feare that God would protect me no longer, but give me over into the hands of my wicked enemies, to be ſlain for this my ſin againſt him.

Vers.12. Moreover he ſaith, that he underſtood, that God ſent him not, but that he diſſembled in ſpeaking thus, being hired unto it by Sanballat and Tobias for a reward, to draw him to ſin, that is, to doe ſo cowardly againſt that which the dignity of his place required, being Governour over all the people, that he might afterwards beare reproach for it. Whereas he ſaith, that he underſtood, &c. this is generally thought to have been by divine revelation, which came unto him after that hee had given him the repulſe, but it may as probably be held to have been by ſome faithfull man or men, who knew of the compact, and diſcovered it unto him.

Vers.14. This danger being thus eſcaped, Nehemiah prayeth God for this treachery to remember Sanballat, and Nohadiah a Propheteſſe, &c. viz. which joyned with Shemahiah in this diſſimulation, and together drew on others to pretend the ſame, whereby we may ſee how dangerous a plot this was, when not onely a man, but a woman alſo, and others came and ſpake unto him about the ſame thing, as Prophets ſent by God.

Vers.15. At length the wall was finiſhed the 25 day of Elul, the 52 day. The moneth Elul amongſt the Hebrews, anſwereth to our Auguſt in part, and in part to September, by 52 dayes he meaneth from the beginning of their working, Lyra. Vatablus. ſo Lyra, and all other Expoſitours almoſt, except Vatablus, who would have it 52 dayes after the Epiſtle ſent by Sanballat to Nehemiah, but certainly erroneouſly, becauſe the wall being all repaired before, they might well in far leſſe time have finiſhed the gates.

And it is to be noted, that the time which the wall was in building, is ſet down as wonderfully ſhort, that God might therefore be praiſed, by whoſe ſingular help it was done, notwithſtanding all the delayes cauſed by the enemies, in ſo few dayes, to intimate which, it is ſaid, that the enemies acknowledged that it was the work of God, which made their ſtomacks that were ſo ſtout, before now to quaile. *Vers.*16. Iosiphus. Joſephus therefore is far wide, when he ſayth, that the wall was in building two years, and three moneths, Euſebius. and Euſebius much wider, who reporteth the time to be 12 years, miſtaking, doubtleſſe, the time of Nehemiah his being Governour there, for the time of doing this work. And whereas ſome think that this building was in the laſt yeare of Nehemiah his Government there, Hieronym: as Jerome, who ſaith, he came to Jeruſalem, Anno 20 of Artaxerxes, and made an end of building the wall and City, Anno 32, which ſome others follow; becauſe the end of his comming was onely to build, and this being done he was to return again, it is to be conceived rather, that he ſet to the work in the firſt yeare, and finiſhed the wall, and from thence forward he intended the building of the City, as long as he ſtayed, which doth not diſagree from Jerom. Of this ſhort time in Dan. 9. building the wall, Daniel ſeemeth to Propheſie, when he ſaith that it ſhould be built again in anguſtiis temporum, in the ſtreights of time. If any man ſhall ſay, how could a wall of ſo great compaſſe be built in ſo few dayes, although God proſpered the work never ſo much: It is anſwered, that many thouſands laboured in it with all diligence, and the Princes alſo were preſent to ſtir them up, neither needed it building from the foundation, or in all parts, but repayring and building in moſt places, upon the old foundation.

Verſ. 17. Here another impediment or plot is mentioned, whereby Nehemiah is alſo indangered, which tendeth the more to the magnifying of Gods mercie in preſerving him, till all the work was finiſhed. There came ſome of the chiefe of the Jews, who were allyed to Tobiah by marriages, and therefore theſe were in covenant with him, confirmed by oath to doe what they could to betray Nehemiah to him and his fellows, and to hinder the building, and to this end there went Letters between them, from time to time, wherein the ſpeeches and counſels of Nehemiah were diſcovered, and they praiſed Tobiah unto Nehemiah, as meaning him no hurt, but ready to adviſe him for the beſt, that he might be drawn to goe out unto him as to a friend, that ſo he might be indangered.

The Allegory. For the Allegory of this, Beda ſaith, that theſe Samaritans figured out Hereticks, which deſire to be in league with the Orthodox, that by converſing with them, they may have advantage againſt them, and hinder the proceedings of the truth. Nehemiah his going into the houſe of Shemahiah, as of a friend, but he found him deceitfull, ſheweth how the Orthodox are aſſaulted, not onely without by known enemies, but alſo within by falſe brethren, feigning themſelves friends, of whom they muſt beware, as Nehemiah did of them. Laſtly, the wall finiſhed, the ſixth moneth, anſwered both unto the ſix dayes of Gods working to make the world, after which a reſt followed, and to the everlaſting reſt in heaven, after ſix ages of the world ſpent in toiſe and labour.

CHAP. VII.

Verſ. 1. Pellican. THE gates being now finiſhed in all points, as well as the wall, the Porters, Singers, and Levites were recounted, &c. Of Porters, ſayth Pellican, here, we may conceive a reaſon, viz. to keepe the gates, by opening and ſhutting them again in due time, and of the two Ananyes, Verſ. 2. to whom it is commanded to ſee this duly done, as ſuper-intendents over the Porters, and of others ſet every night as watchmen of the inhabitants neere to each gate, for more ſecurity, Verſ. 3. But what Singers and Levites ſhould do here I ſee not, unleſſe the Singers or players upon Inſtruments, were ſet to give notice of ſtrangers approaching to the City, and Levites ſate there to heare cauſes with other Judges. But it is more probable that theſe, both Porters, Singers, and other Levites, were now recounted to ſee if there were of them a number ſufficient to ſanctifie and dedicate the wall and gates being now fully finiſhed, the keepers of the gates, and their overſeers next ſpoken of, onely being imployed about the gates, becauſe, Chap. 12. 27. it is ſaid, that Levites were ſought from divers parts, for the dedication of the wall, both ſingers to praiſe God, and to exhilarate all that were preſent, and Prieſts and Levites to ſanctifie the wall, gates, and people, and ver. 45. mention is made of the porters then preſent alſo. The firſt Hanani, whom Nehemiah called his brother moſt probably is the ſame ſpoken of Chap. 1. who firſt told him in what caſe Jeruſalem was, the other a moſt approved honeſt man, in whom he might confide alſo to look diligently to this buſineſſe, there being ſo many, both open and ſecret enemies about the City. And he is called the keeper of the Houſe or Palace in Jeruſalem, intimating that he was a man of note. In that he being ſo highly commended, it is added, that he feared God more then others. Note, Note. that the feare of God is the ground of all goodneſſe and fidelity, he cannot ſafely have any matter of moment committed unto him, that doth not feare God. And when the gates were ſhut at night, he biddeth theſe to whom he committed the truſt, to feele with their hands, whether they were made faſt or no. The vulgar Latine and Greek, to ſee them ſhut and barred. And the keepers appointed were the inhabitants neere dwelling, but ver. 4. it is ſaid, their houſes were not Verſ.4. yet built in the City, therefore Lyra underſtands it of Tents or Cottages, wherein Lyra.

they for the preſent kept, when it is ſaid, every one right over againſt his houſe, but for ſo much as, Hag. 1. it is ſaid, they dwelt in ſeiled houſes, it is rather to be underſtood of whole rows of houſes, for the houſes yet built were but few, for the City he ſayth was large, but the people in it few, becauſe, as is moſt probable, the Heathen round about infeſted that place moſt, ſo that in other parts of the land they might more quietly follow their buſineſſes to get their living. Now for ſo much as here was the Temple, where onely Sacrifice might be offered, and this was the City which God profeſſed to owne more peculiarly, the good rulers Nehemiah Verſ.5. applyed his minde moſt ſeriouſly to ſtudy how it might be better peopled, after that it was thus fortified. Then God, he ſaith, putting it into his minde, hee gathered the Princes and Preſidents together, that the number and names of the Jews who returned out of captivity being taken, a certainty of them from either part of the Land, might be appointed to come and dwell there, and that was as is ſhewed, Chap. 11. every tenth man. Now when he went about this, a book came to his hands, wherein they were ſet down by their Generations, who came firſt to Jeruſalem with Zorobabel & Jeſhuah the High-Prieſt, of which numbring ſee Ezra 2. for this is the ſame verbatim, but onely that in the numbers of divers families, here are recounted in ſome fewer, and in ſome more then there. For example, the ſonnes of Arachi are there ſaid to be 775. ver. 5. here 652, the ſons of Phahath there 2812, ver.6. here 2818, the ſonnes of *Zatthu 945, ver.*8. here 845, &c. touching which difference we are not to hold with Pellican, that theſe Pellican. differences happened by the negligence of the Scribes who wrote out this Regiſter, for by this reaſon there would be no certainty of the truth in any copy, but rather with Junius and ſome others, that they, Ezra 2. were ſet down in Babylon, Iunius.
but the book which came to Nehemiahs hands was written when they were come into the Land of Judea, they gave their names to return whom Ezra recordeth, but ſome changing their mindes and not going, ſome dying by the way, and ſome comming in of ſome families, that had not given in their names, this cauſed a difference in the catalogue laſt written, and nothing elſe, for that it was not any part of Ezra his book, but another writing appeareth, becauſe it is ſaid, There was a Book found, wherein it was written: If it had been that of Ezra, he vvas then preſent, and ſo probably mention ſhould have been made of him, as giving this light into this matter, and it is not likely that his book being Canonicall Scripture, ſhould have lyen hid ſo by this time, being but 13 years, as that it ſhould novv come forth as a book accidentally found, and not one that all men knevv of.

CHAP. VIII.

BEcauſe Nehemiah had ſpoken before of his intent to gather the people together from all parts, that he might the better provide for the peopling of this City, he novv ſhevveth before the putting of that his purpoſe in execution, that in the ſeventh moneth, the firſt day of the moneth, the people came together Verſ.2,3. from all parts to Jeruſalem, yea, they vvere there aſſembled that day, to heare the book of the Lavv read by Ezra, becauſe that day vvas a feaſt of blovving Trumpets, according to the Lavv, Levit. 23. 24. and at ſuch times the Prieſts uſed to read and expound the Book of the Lavv unto them, yea this vvas commonly done Acts 15. every Sabbath day. The place vvhere, vvas the ſtreet by the vvater gate, that is, ſayth Lyra, the Court, into vvhich men aſſembled together to prayer and hearing of the Word, for this was right over againſt this gate, although not very nigh unto it, and reſembled a broad and ſpacious ſtreet, for which it was thus called.

And the people are ſaid to have come altogether, as one man, to ſhew their great diligence, and to give us example, as alſo, where it is ſaid, that both men and wo-which was a long time, whereas now the attention of many, will not reach unto it is not ſaid, but moſt probably the ten Commandements, and the threatnings Verſ.5,6,7. added thereunto to tranſgreſſours, and exhortations to obſerve and keepe them, becauſe the people are ſaid to have wept *verſ.*10. And as Ezra being aſſiſted with Prieſts on his right hand and left, read out of the book of the Law in one part of this Court, and bleſſed God, all the people ſtanding and lifting up their hands, and Verſ.8,9. then bowing their faces to the ground, and worſhipping ſaid, Amen: So certain Levites in another part, read the book of the Law diſtinctly to others of the people, for they could not all ſtand to heare one, being ſo many, and expounded Note. it unto them, that they might the better underſtand. A notable preſident ſhew-ing, both how the Scripture ſhould be read in the congregation, viz. with interpretation, and what reverence and affection ſhould be ſhewed by the people, in ſtanding, bowing, and ſaying, Amen, to the bleſſings and praiſes that are given to God by their teachers. And becauſe when Ezra diſpoſed himſelſe to read, and Lyra. teach the Law, he began with bleſſing of God: Lyra well noteth, that from his example we learn to begin our reading vvith prayer, and likevviſe our preaching at all times, as is commonly uſed by all our Miniſters.

Verſ.10. The people hearing the threatnings of the law for ſin, and knowing their own guiltineſſe wept for ſorrow, being moved the more by thinking upon their late ſufferings. But Nehemiah, Ezra, and the Levits forbade them to weepe, becauſe it was a day of joy, for ſuch was every new Moon, *Numb.*10.10. Here it is not to be conceived, that they ſpake altogether, for that had been a confuſion, but ſome in one part of the aſſembly and ſome in another, as was neceſſary, that in all parts Lyra. they might be heard. Whereas Lyra having ſomtime thus expounded it by & by recanteth, becauſe it is ſayd, they came together as one man, whereupon he inferreth, that they were not ſpoken to diviſion, but altogether as if they had bin one man, & ſo expoundeth Ezraes and the Levits ſpeaking, as if he only taught, & they aſſiſted him, by repreſſing the noyſe made amongſt the people by their weeping, I cannot herein aſſent unto him, becauſe it is expreſly ſayd, that the Levits alſo taught and gave the ſenſe, and both Nehemiah, he and they admoniſhed them to ceaſſe weeping at this time, &c. that is, each one where he might beſt be heard. Neyther did their comming together as one man hinder their being divided, when they were there, as neceſſity required, that they might heare the ſame things from divers teachers, which they could not all at once heare from one of the name Atherſata, ſee before Ezra 2.63.

Verſ.11,12. Alſo the people are bidden to goe home and make merry, and to give ſome of their good cheer to the poore, and the Levits eſpecially looked to the ſtilling of them, that they might not continue in lamenting. So wee ſee there is a time to laugh and to be merry as well as to weep, and we muſt rejoyce in God in dayes of Note. thankſgiving as well as weep in dayes of humiliation. And then do wee keepe times of rejoycing aright, when as we ſee our ſelves more liberally, ſo we feed the poore alſo, and thus it was appointed to be done at the Feaſt of Purim by Heſter, and Mordecai, and Chriſt commands it, Luke 14. Yet in all Feſtivalls, and always we muſt keep within the bounds of temperance.

Verſ.13. And the next day came the Princes of all the people and Prieſts and Levits to Ezra, &c. becauſe Ezra was moſt expert in expounding the Law, even they that taught other, came to learn of him, how ſome things, that were more doubtfull and difficult ſhould be underſtood, that they might be the better able to informe Note. the people. And here is a preſident given to men of underſtanding after hearing to enquire of the Preacher more, if they be unſatisfied, as touching the full knowledge of any thing by him taught.

Verſ.14. Then having found the law of keeping the Feaſt of Tabernacles the ſame moneth

moneth, they prepared for that alſo. But it is to be underſtood, that there were three times appointed in the Law to be kept holy in this moneth. 1 the Feaſt of blowing Trumpets, as Lyra ſayth, in remembrance of Iſaacks being delivered, when he was about to be ſacrificed, the firſt day. 2 In remembrance of the ſin of Idolatry cōmitted in the Wildernes with the golden Calf, & for the expiation thereof upon the 10 day, which was appointed to be a day of humiliation for ever. 3 In remembrance of their dwelling in tents for the ſpace of forty yeers, being all that time miraculouſly fed with Manna from Heaven, the 15 day. Now hee having ſhewed, that the firſt day was kept, omitteth to ſpeak of the next, touching which yet ſome think, that it is to be preſumed, that it was kept alſo, becauſe they had ſo good a guide, viz. Ezra, although here paſſed over in ſilence. Laſtly, hee ſheweth, that the Feaſt of Tabernacles of ſeven dayes continuance was kept, and Chap.9.1. a day of humiliation immediatly after thoſe dayes ended, for their great ſin in making marriages with Idolaters. For the Feaſt of Tabernacles beginning the 15 day, the ſeventh was the 21 and the eighth, wherein was alſo a ſolemne Aſſembly the 22, after which in the 23 day, they ſeparating themſelves from ſuch Wives as they heard by the Law read unto them, that they ought not to have taken, they came again together the 24 day to humble themſelves in faſting and prayer therefore. So that it ſeemeth, the tenth day was not at this time kept for humiliation, upon what occaſion we know not, but certainly there was ſome impediment neceſſarily hindring it, as the High Prieſts not being vvell, or accidentally polluted, or ſome other great cauſe, wherefore the 24 day was kept in ſtead thereof.

Verſ.18.

But to return to the Feaſt of Tabernacles now kept, it is ſayd here, that it was not ſo done, ſince the days of Joſhuah, the ſon of Nun, and the reaſon hereof is rendred, Verſe 19. becauſe now they kept holy ſeven dayes together, the Law being read and expounded unto them every of thoſe days, whereas by the Law made, *Levit.*23.39. they were required to reſt only the firſt day and the eighth, and they reſted now every day to attend unto the vvord through the great deſire, which they had unto it, that by hearing it day after day they might be brought to take better heed unto it to live accordingly, by the neglect vvhereof they had hitherto ſuffered ſo great miſery. Thus Junius, but Pellican referreth the preference made of this to the joy, which vvas novv greater, then at any time before by reaſon of their Walls nevv built, vvhich had lyen vvaſt ſo long, and their deliverance from their enemies round about, ſo that they might novv ſo quietly keep holy dayes to the Lord, vvhich they could not do in the long time of their captivity, viz. 70 years, nor ſince their return, becauſe the City lay open to the aſſaults of the Enemy untill this time. Lyra underſtands it both in reſpect of all Iſrael novv gathered together as one man, the like to vvhich hath not bin ſayd before, and in regard of the caſe vvherein they vvere being ſervants and tributaries to a forreigne King and poore, vvhereas formerly they vvere free, and rich, and proſperous, having mighty Kings of their ovvn, and it is as if it had been ſayd, never vvas ſuch a Feaſt of Tebernacles kept by Iſrael in ſo poor a caſe, and yet ſo unanimouſly conſenting about it. I think not for one, but for all theſe reſpects this Feaſt novv kept is thus preferred.

Iunius.

Lyra.

Verſ.19.

And the eighth day they made a gathering according to the right, ſo the vulgar Latine and Lyra, they gathered for neceſſaries about the Temple, Junius a day of Interdiction, but the Hebrew vvord here uſed is עצר, ſignifieth retention, and nothing elſe is hereby meant, but holding of the Congregation together, as the Lavv appointeth, for there muſt be an holy convocation the firſt, and againe the eighth day, vvherein no ſervile vvork muſt be done.

CHAP. IX.

Verſ.1.

AFter the Feaſt of Tabernacles kept vvith ſo much joy, novv follovveth a faſt, or day of humiliation for ſin the 24 day of the moneth, eſpecially for their ſin in marrying Idolatrous Wivves, from vvhom, to ſhevv their true penitency, they vvere novv ſeparated; And hereby, and by that Ezra 10, it ſeemeth meth, that this ſin cannot be ſufficiently repented of without ſuch a ſeparation. For although, 1 *Cor.*7. hee that hath an unbelieving Wife, is bidden not to part with her, unleſſe ſhe will, yet this is to be underſtood only of ſuch a couple as were formerly both Heathens, but at the hearing of the Goſpel one being converted, the other remayned an Heathen ſtill. For in ſuch a caſe it is not neceſſary to put her away, but onely when a man that is faithfull hath raſhly againſt Gods Law, marryed a woman, an idolatreſſe. The ceremonies in this day of their humiliation uſed were, faſting, ſackcloth, and earth upon them, which ſeemed in Verſ.2. thoſe times to ſhew the greatneſſe of their ſorrow. Then they confeſſed their ſins, and the ſins of their fathers, which is the onely way to obtain pardon; for if wee Prov.28.13. confeſſe our ſins and forſake them we ſhall have mercie. Then they, that is, the Verſ.3. people, ſtanding in their places, the Levites read in the Law, the fourth part of the day, and the fourth part confeſſed their ſins, the people ſtood for reverence, and whereas it is ſaid, the Levites read, the word Levites is underſtood by Junius, there being no more in the Text, but they being lifted up in their ſtation read, &c. But becauſe in the publike place, the Miniſters of God onely ought to act that part, of confeſſing and reading to the reſt, as appears, Chap. 2. 3. Joel 2. 17. it is to be underſtood, that they did ſo at this time, they onewhile ſet up ſome one amongſt them to read, and then another and another, while they confeſſed their ſins the Junius. fourth part of the day, that is, as Junius hath it, from the third houre to ſix, which was the time immediately following the morning ſacrifice, they read, and again, from the ſix to the ninth they confeſſed, which time the evening Sacrifice immediately followed. So that the day being divided into foure parts, two were ſpent in Verſ.2,3. offering the daily continuall ſacrifices, and two in reading, confeſſing of ſins, praiſe and prayer, as here followeth, ver. 4. The vulgar Latine then erreth, in which it is, foure times in the day, and foure times in the night, rather wee may hence gather, that after the morning ſacrifice ended, by nine of the clock in the forenoon, the Levites fell to reading till noon, and then fell to confeſſing of their ſins, which they ſaw, were againſt the Law, ſtanding up in their places, and uſing a long forme of confeſſion and prayer, till three in the afternoon, after which, the day was concluded with the evening ſacrifice, whereas the firſt part of this dayes holy work, ſeems to have been performed by the people, ver. 2, 3. it is ſo ſaid by a Prolepſis, uſuall in Scripture, the thing done being related in generall, then more explicitly and particularly. The meaning then is, they confeſſed their ſins, that is, ſuch of them as by their callings were a mouth to the reſt, and in like manner, it is to be conceived of their reading.

Verſ.4. The Levites, from an high place where they ſtood, crying unto God aloud, were Ieſhuah, Bani, Cadmiel, &c. They then firſt all together ſtood up to praiſe God, and to beſeech God that they might bleſſe him, and that he would exalt his own name. After which it ſeemeth that one alone, that he might be heard more diſtinctly, and underſtood of all, fell into a long and fervent Prayer, from ver. 6. to the end of the Chapter, & this is expreſly ſaid in the Septuagint & vulgar Latine, Verſ.6. to have been Ezra. And Ezra ſaid, thou art Lord alone, &c. but in Hebrew, no one particular is mentioned as ſpeaking alone, yet moſt probably it was ſo, leaſt all ſpeaking ſo long together, it ſhould make a confuſion: yet not Ezra, for he is not here named, but one of thoſe named in the Text, who be eight, and eight of whom it is not to be conceived that any ſtood up for cyphers, but confeſſed and read all, each one in his turn, moſt probably alſo expounding, though it be not mentioned of both theſe, ſee ſome grounds, 1 *Cor.*14.31. *Nehem.*8. *Act.*15.21.

In this Prayer firſt, the great works of God in creating all things are commemorated to his praiſe. 2 His ſingular grace to Abraham, in bringing him out of Ur of the Caldees, and promiſing the Land of Canaan unto him. 3 His mercie to them, his poſterity in Egypt. 4 His wonderfull acts in the Wilderneſſe towards them. 5 Their rebellions there. 6 His ſubduing Canaan unto them. 7 Their rebellions here. 8 His delivering them ſundry times when they cryed unto him. 9 Their rebellions renewed, and puniſhments by the Aſſyrians, to whom they were now ſervants, in regard of which they were now humbled before him. And to move the Lord the more effectually to mercie in delivering them again from forreign powers, they after this praying, add the making and ſealing of a Covenant unto God, to become his ſervants for all time to come.

CHAP. X.

Verſ.1,2,3,4, 5, &c. Verſ.9,10. Verſ.14,15.

HEre are the Princes, Prieſts, and Levites, firſt named, that ſealed the Covenant, unto ver.29. viz., Nehemiah the Kings Legat, and 22 Prieſts after him, then Levites 17. Verſ.9. that is, Princes or chiefe fathers of the Prieſts and Levites families, for others of them that ſealed are mentioned, ver. 28. Laſtly, Princes of the people 45. All theſe both ſubſcribed and ſealed, binding hereby all thoſe that were under them, and were witneſſes of the like Vow and Covenant made by all the reſt, both Prieſts, Levites, and people, men and women, that were preſent, ſo as that they could not but think themſelves moſt ſolemnly bound hereby. Here becauſe that after Nehemiah and the Prieſts ſpoken of, it is ſaid, theſe were Prieſts, ſome thinke that Nehemiah was a Prieſt alſo, but this evinceth it not, ſeeing a diſtinction is plainly made, in that he being named, it is immediately added to ſhew what he was, Atherſata, the Kings Legat or Deputy, whereas then after the reſt named, it is ſaid, theſe were Prieſts, this is to be underſtood onely of them that are named after him, over whom all, as over the Levites and Princes he was for the time ſet by the King as chiefe Governour. Moreover, if he had been a Prieſt, this would not doubtleſſe have been omitted, no more then it was when Ezra was before ſent over by the ſame King, Laſtly, he would have been one doubtleſſe, ſtanding amongſt the other Prieſts, to read and expound the Law, Chap. 8. if he alſo had been a Prieſt, ſeeing he was ſo pious. Here it may ſeeme ſtrange, that neither Ezra, nor Eliaſhib the High-Prieſt, as he is called, Chap, 3.1. are mentioned amongſt the Covenanters. But haply, as in the Covenant made formerly before Ezra, no Prieſts or Levites covenanted, but onely ſuch as had ſinned in taking ſtrange wives, ſo at this preſent ſome were not required to ſubſcribe, as being of moſt approved lives, and uudoubtedly ſet to walke in the wayes of God, as Ezra was. But Nehemiah would ſeale as the principall man, and leader to all others, or becauſe they covenant here, not onely to put away ſtrange wives, but alſo about other things, neceſſary for all to binde themſelves unto, ſome are named who were guiliy, but all others who were not mentioned onely in generall, ver. 28. amongſt whom Ezra and Eliaſhib may be underſtood.

Ezra 10.18.

Verſ.30.

Now the particulars, which they covenanted, were firſt to keep all the Laws given by Moſes, both Morall, Judiciall and Ceremoniall, both they and all ſuch as were under their juriſdiction, that is, by Gods help and grace, and ſo far forth as their authority could prevaile to cauſe all to do ſo.

2 To refrain from mixt marriages, which was a thing ſo much impugned by Law.

Verſ.31.

3 Not to buy or ſell upon the Sabbath, which was a worke forbidden in the fourth Commandement, and often ſpoken againſt by the Prophets.

4 To obſerve the ſeventh yeare as the Law commanded, by making it Sabbaticall.

Verſ. 32.

5 To pay for the uſe of the Sanctuary yearly the third part of a ſhekle, that is, as Verſe 33. is expreſſed, to buy burnt offerings for the Sabbaths, new Moons, and other Solemnities, and for the daily continuall ſacrifice and ſhew-bread. And this they ſpeak of, as a thing impoſed upon themſelves, becauſe this ſervice muſt be mayntained according to the Law, *Exod.*30. and *Numb.*28.29. but how otherwiſe, to provide for the mayntenance of it they could not tell. For whereas Exodus 30.12. halfe a ſhekle is appointed to be payd by every one when they were numbred, vvhich was to be layd up in the Sanctuary, that is, thought by Aben Ezra, not to have been ſufficient at this time, the people being ſo few, and therefore they added hereunto the third part of a ſhekle more. For although Iunius denyeth that half ſhekle to have been for this expence, becauſe Verſe 16. it was to be layd up in the Sanctuary for a Monument, yet it hath been ſhewed upon Exo- dus 30.12. that the ſacrifices, &c. were hereby to be mayntained, and that to this end this tribute was alſo rayſed yearly, which Iunius denyeth too, but the He- brews all conſent about it. And reaſon ſayth, it muſt needs be ſo, becauſe otherwiſe a charge was appointed, but not how or by whom it ſhould be borne. For the laying of it up in the Sanctuary, this is not to be imagined to have been done that it might perpetually lie there, but to be ſpent upon this ſervice as need re-was to be maintained, they caſt the lots of the Prieſts and Levites, and of the people for the wood of the offerings, that they ſhould bring it into the houſe of 1 Chron.24. had their turns aſſigned them by lot, which weeke every courſe of the 24 inſtituted by David, ſhould attend upon this ſervice, and becauſe the Levites were given to the Prieſts to ſerve under them about the Altar, they had their courſes appointed them alſo, that they might be ready to bring this wood at all times to them, and under the name Levites, he underſtands the Nethinims alſo, who were to ſerve under the Levites, by hewing and preparing the wood for them, for they were Ioſh.9. the Gibeonites mancipated by Joſhuah to this ſervice for ever. And the people are ſpoken of becauſe they were to finde wood for the Temple, and therefore they had Iunius. times by courſe aſſigned to them to bring it thither. But Iunius by the people un-derſtands the Nethinims, improperly, I thinke, becauſe not they, but the common ſort of the Iſraelites, called the Laity, are always meant by the word people.

Iunius.

Verſ.35. 6 They covenant to pay the firſt borne of the Land, and the firſt fruits of their fruits and trees. The word in Hebrew is the ſame, כקרי firſt borne, or firſt fruits, but when it hath reference to men or beaſts, it is rendered firſt borne, when would be more liberall in paying, the 40, or being poorer the 60 part. Now becauſe the firſt borne of the Land, were to be diſtinguiſhed into ſuch as muſt be re-borne of the Land, the firſt borne of men and beaſts, that is, of unclean beaſts, which muſt either be redeemed, or the neck thereof broken, and the firſt borne of Numb.18. neate and of ſheepe, all which were appointed to be paid for the Prieſts maintenance, together with certain parts of the Sacrifices, and things vowed. Of paying the firſt borne, the cauſe was Gods deſtroying of the firſt borne of the Egyptians, preſerving theirs, in thankfulneſſe for which they were injoyned this offering for ever after from yeare to yeare.

the Levits to pay the tithe of all the Land, for ſo the Law appointed, and the tithe of the tithe, was by them to be paid to the High-Prieſt, and the Levites, ſay they, ſhall have the tithe of all our labours in every City, in Hebrew, of all our ſervices, Iunius. Iunius renders it, of all our tillage, the vulgar Latine, of all our works, which comes neerer to the Originall, and hereby it appears, that tithe was paid without deduction, in conſideration of the husbandmans labour, yea, of the tradeſman, who had nothing elſe to pay. Verſ.38. And the ſonne of Aaron the Prieſt ſhall be Verſ.38. with the Levites, when tithe is given to the Levites: in Hebrew, in tithe to the Le- vites, or of the Levites, as the vulgar Latine, Iunius, when the Levites pay tithe, that is, the tithe of their tithes, as in the next words, appointing them to be brought into the ſtore-houſe of the Sanctuary, towards the maintenance of the Prieſts.
The meaning is, that the High-prieſt, who was ever the eldeſt ſonne of the family Numb.18.26, of Aaron, ſhould be preſent when tithes were paid to the Levites, and they paid 27,28. tithe out of them again, becauſe this tithe of the tithes, was to be altogether at his diſpoſing.

Verſ.39. To the chambers of ſtore ſhall all the children of Iſrael, and of Levi bring their offering of wine, and oyle, &c. That is, the offerings before ſpoken of, viz. their firſt fruits towards the Prieſts maintenance, which muſt be paid not onely by the people, but by the Levites alſo. And here it is appointed, that the veſſels which were of uſe in the ſervice of God ſhould be placed, and finally, they vow to maintain, about the Temple continually, Porters, Singers, Prieſts and Miniſters, alwayes, that the ſervice of the Lord may never more be intermitted. And in making this Covenant, they had the Law of God for their warrant, which commanded all theſe particulars, ſo that according to this preſident, a Covenant or proteſtation ſhould be onely of things ſpecified in the Word of God, they being named either generally, as in the time of ſome godly Kings, or particularly as here, that every one may underſtand, what he proteſteth to and doe accordingly.

CHAP. XI.

AFter theſe things thus done, to move God to be propitious unto them, they conſidering how few dwelt in Jeruſalem in reſpect of the greatneſſe of that City, the reaſon whereof is conceived to be, the enmity of the Nations round about to it, above all other parts, through which it was moſt dangerous dwelling there, caſt lots for the tenth man of all the Jews to come and dwell there, that this City might be better peopled, as being the ſeate of the Temple, and peculiarly choſen by God for them all to reſort unto, to keepe their ſolemne feaſts, and bring their ſacrifices thither. To ſhew how few yet dwelt there, it is ſaid, that Verſ.1. the Princes dwelt in Jeruſalem, but the people in other parts. But now by this means this City was well repleniſhed, and it is commonly noted, that beſides theſe there were others, that voluntarily offered to dwell there, becauſe, Verſ.2. it is ſaid, The people bleſſed all thoſe that offered themſelves willingly, &c. and that becauſe this Verſ.2. tended to the ſtrengthening of Jeruſalem the holy City, and ſhewed zeale in them to the ſervice of God, and to his glory.

Then the numbers of them that dwelt in Ieruſalem are ſet down, it being given Verſ.3. in a parentheſis, to underſtand, that the other parts of the land of Iudæa were inhabited by the reſidue of the Iſraelites, Prieſts, Levites, Nethinims, and the poſterity of Solomons ſervants, that is, thoſe of the Canaanites, Hivites, &c. who were not put to death, but made tributaries by Solomon, 1 King.9.29. And firſt the children Verſ.6. of Iudah now inhabiting Ieruſalem, were 468: Then the children of Benjamin, Verſ.8.

the families of Amaſſay and his brethren: Laſtly of the Levites 284. The totall Verſ.14.
of Prieſts and Levites 1476, and of Iudah and Benjamin 1396, ſo that there were Verſ.18. more Prieſts and Levites, then of the Lay people, which ſhewed their zeal then to be greateſt, for beſides theſe there were alſo 172 porters, who were all Levites. Verſ.19.
The reſidue of the people, both Iſraelites, Prieſts, Levites, and Nethinims, dwelt Verſ.20. in other Cities in their own poſſeſſions: for ſo God of old had diſtributed them amongſt the Tribes, that in all places they might have teachers of the Law of God amongſt them.

And Nethinims dwelt in Ophel, that is, not in the Towre in Ieruſalem, called Verſ.21.
by this name, but in a Village neere to Jeruſalem, that they might be the more Lyra. ready to give their attendance about the Temple, as their Office required: and the like is to be thought of Siaba and Gaſpha, ſo Pellican, but Iunius better, takes Pellican. theſe two for names of men that were over the Nethinims, and therefore renders Iunius. it, Siabah and Gaſpha were over the Nethinims, but the vulgar Latine, of the Nethinims, deceived Pellican, for in Hebrew it is, על כתנים Super Nethinæos, and ſo all others hitherto numbred, have in the end added to them their Preſidents or Prince, who ruled over them, ſee ver. 14, 16. and becauſe the Prince over the Levites is omitted before he is here next mentioned, ver. 22 being in the vulgar Verſ.22. latine called the Biſhop of the Levites, becauſe, as Lyra ſayth, he that is over Lyra.
Eccleſiaſticall perſons, is properly a Biſhop, if they be Prieſts, but here he granteth, that this name is improperly by extention of it, put upon the Ruler over Levites, the word therefore uſed in Hebrew is better, Præpoſitus, or the Preſident.

And he is ſaid to be Huzzi, of the poſterity of Aſaph the Muſitians over the work in the houſe of the Lord, in Hebrew, over againſt the work, or neere the work, or miniſtry of Gods houſe, the meaning is, that the children of Aſaph were ſet to ſing within the houſe, as other Levits before ſpoken of without, ver. 16. Laſtly, concluding about the Levits, hee ſaith, that this was done according Verſ.23. to the Kings Commandement, which Lyra would have underſtood of King David, 1 Chron. 24. but others better underſtanding it of King Artaxerxes, ſay, Iunius. that reference is herein had to Ezra 7.21, 22,24. where the liberality of that King for the maintenance of the ſervice of the Temple is ſet forth, for here it is ſaid, Verſ.24. the Kings command was, that each one of them ſhould have a certainty daily. Thus alſo R. Solomon. And to ſee this done, Petahiah, of the Tribe of Judah, was appointed by the King Artaxerxes, ample power being given him to take proviſion up for this purpoſe.

Verſ.25,26, 27,&c, From hence to the end of the Chapter, nothing elſe is ſhewed, but what other Townes and Cities were inhabited by other children of Iudah and of Benjamin.

CHAP. XII.

BEing now about to relate the Dedication of the Wall of Ieruſalem, hee firſt enumerateth the chief of the Prieſts and Levits, who were preſent at this work, beginning yet higher, Verſe 1,2. &c. with thoſe that came to Ieruſalem with Zorobabel and Ieſhuah, many yeares before, but 1 Chron. 9. there is a more exact catalogue of them, and therefore they are the more briefly here paſſed over: yet they are here commemorated together, that we might know what high Prieſts here were from the return out of captivity during the reigne of the Perſians even unto Alexander the Great. Whereas Ezra is here ſayd to be one of them, and yet Ezra 7.7. he telleth of himſelf that hee went to Ieruſalem the ſeventh of Lyra. Artaxerxes, Lyra ſayth, that having gone up to Ieruſalem, at the firſt he returned again to Babylon, to obtein more favour of the Perſian Kings, and having prevailed, he went again in this Kings ſeventh yeare. But becauſe that from the firſt going up to Ieruſalem, untill the ſeventh yeare of Artaxerxes were above ſeventy years, this is not ſo probable, becauſe ſo it muſt needs follow, that Ezra was now above 100 yeares old, becauſe men in thoſe days ſcarce lived ſo long, and if they lived, were decrepit and ſo unable for ſervice, as Ezra was not, Nehem. 8. I ſhould think therefore, that in this enumeration of thoſe, that came Zerubbabel, it is not meant, that Ezra was one, but as Iunius alſo hath it, two aſcendings to Ie- Iunius. ruſalem are here put together, one with Zorobabel, the other with Ezra many Verſ.10,11. yeares after. But an exact reckoning of the high Prieſts is made, Verſe 10. from Ieſhuah the firſt, that returned out of captivity to Ioiadahah, who is ſayd to have lived, till the time of Alexander the Great. And theſe were Ioiakim, Eliaſib, Ioiada, and Ionathan, the chief Prieſts and Levits, of whoſe times here follow in order, and firſt in the time of Ioiakim, Verſ. 12. 2 In the time of Eliaſib Verſ. 22. 3 In the time of Ionathan, his ſonnes ſonne, Verſ. 23. And theſe are ſayd to have Verſ.26. been in the time of Ioiakim, and Nehemiah, and Ezra, ſo that they out-lived three high Prieſts, and now were preſent at the Dedication of the City. Verſ.27,28. And other ordinary Levits were called from other parts to this Dedication.

Verſ. 30. Then the Prieſts and Levits clenſed themſelves firſt, and after that the people, the gates and the wall, that is, according to the legall rites of clenſing in caſe of uncleanneſſe contracted by the dead or otherwiſe. The clenſing of the Prieſts, Lyra. ſayth Lyra, was by faſting, abſtinence from their wines, and ſprinkling of the water made of the aſhes of a red Cow, of the people by ſprinkling only, and of the Levits both by it and one of the other. For more muſt be done to the clenſing of Prieſts then of Levits, and more of Levits then of the people. But becauſe the Prieſts and Levits clenſing of themſelves is firſt ſpoken of, then their clenſing of Note. the people, hee noteth well, that who ſo would reform others muſt firſt reforme himſelf, according to which Chriſt ſayth, Firſt, caſt the beame one of thine owne eye, and then thou ſhalt ſee, &c. And without clenſing no man is fit to beare a part, or to be preſent at the prayſing of God: for hereby a preparation to this Dedication was made

Then I made the Princes of Iudah to go upon the wall, &c. The Dedication Verſ.31. was made by two preceſſions of Prieſts, Levits, Princes, and all ſorts of people going upon the wall, and prayſing God with Trumpets, Voyces, and other Inſtruments of Muſicke, as they went along, one company right over againſt another on the right hand, which was towards the South, and on the left towards the North.

After the preceſſions followed ſacrificing in the houſe of the Lord, of which it Verſ.40,41.42,43. is ſayd, And two companyes of them that prayſed God, ſtood in the houſe of the Lord, &c. that is, the ſame companyes, that went before upon the wall, or ſome Princes prieſts, and Levits choſen out of them.

Laſtly, Treaſurers were at the ſame time appointed over the firſt fruits, and Verſ.44. tythes for the mayntenance of the prieſts and Levits, as David and Solomon had anciently appointed. And it is ſayd, that all the people gave portions to the Sing- Verſ.47. ers and porters, and ſanctified the Levits, and the Levits ſanctified the ſonnes of Lyra. Aaron, that is, ſayth Lyra, the people by paying tythes to them acknowledged their ſuperiority to God ward, and they likewiſe by paying tythe of their tythes to the prieſts, magnified them as their ſuperiours, as Abraham by paying tythe to Melchiſedeck, acknowledged him to be greater, as is ſhewed, Heb.7. But in the Hebrew text, it is not the people ſanctified the Levits, &c. but they ſanctified to the Levits, and the Levits to the ſonnes of Aaron, which was done by ſetting them apart as conſecrated for their uſes.

CHAP. XIII.

THe hiſtory of the acts of Nehemiah being hitherto ſet forth before his return to Artaxerxes, in the 12 yeare of his Principality granted him over Iſrael: now it is ſhewed, how he found things in Jeruſalem at another time of his comming thither, by a ſecond leave obtained of the King, ver.6. So that the firſt words here, In that time it was read in the Book of Moses, in the audience Verſ.1. of the people, &c. are to be underſtood of the time, when Nehemiah came again Iunius. from the King to Jeruſalem. The ſcope of this Chapter then is to ſhew, what abuſes crept in amongſt the Jews whilſt he was gone. which put him to a new Lyra. trouble at his comming again to reforme them, thus Junius, but Lyra ſaith, that by the time in which the Law was read, is meant, that Nehem.9. when as according to that which they found written, they ſeparated themſelves from tht Heathens. And then it is to be taken as a declaration more particularly made of that which was read at the ſame time againſt the Ammonites and Moabites in generall amongſt other Heathens with whom marriages were forbidden to be made. For there it is ſaid, that they ſeparated from all that were of another off-ſpring, but here, that it was read in the Law in particular, that an Ammonite or Moabite ſhould not come into the congregation, becauſe they were not the children Deut.23.3. of Iſrael, &c. And this is thus commemorated for an introduction to the fault committed by Eliaſib, by reaſon of a marriage made before by him with the family of Tobiah the Ammonite, as he is called Chap.2.10. and this was according to Pellican, by joyning his ſonne in marriage with the daughter of Tobiah, for hereby ſuch friendſhip came to be between them two, that Eliaſib being over the chambers of the houſe of the Lord, let him have a great chamber there, which was onely to lay proviſion in for the Temple, for which he was greatly too blame. And this was the firſt abuſe which crept in whilſt Nehemiah was abſent, whereat he was much moved when he came and ſaw it, as at a very grievous ſin, and therefore he immediately caſt out the utenſils of Tobiah, purged the chamber, and brought in ſuch things as were for the uſe of the Temple. Now the time when Nehemiah is ſaid to have come again and done this, is ſaid to be, at the end of Verſ.6. dayes, certain years being paſt, Junius, at the end of his dayes or life, ſayth Lyra, Iunius. Lyra.

when he now waxed old, he had a deſire to goe and reforme things amiſſe at Jeruſalem, and to die and lay his bones there, ſo likewiſe Funccius, the eighth yeare Funccius. after his return to Artaxerxes, which was alſo the laſt yeare of his reigne. But Vatablus and Genebrad ſay, that by the end of dayes is meant, the end of a yeare, which ſeemeth not to have bin ſo, becauſe Nehemiah at his departure from Jeruſalem to the King, left all things in good order, & now they were greatly out of order, yea, even ſo much, as one cannot think they could have been in ſo ſhort a time, as will appear by that which here followeth. For it was no ſmall, but a great chamber that Eliaſib made in this time for him, for ſo the word ſignifieth, which Verſ.9. is, שעי and not onely he prepared, but now the ſtuffe of Tobiah by Nehemiahs command being caſt out, and the room purged, the veſſels of the houſe of the Lord were laid in there.

Now beſides this, there was another great ſin committed, to the pejudice of Verſ.10. Gods worſhip, and to the breaking of the Covenant, to which whilſt Nehemiah was amongſt them, they had ſubſcribed and ſealed, Chap. 10. 39. For whereas they there bound themſelves to give portions to the Levites, and never to ſuffer the ſervice of the Lords houſe to goe down, they ſince gave none of thoſe portions unto them, by reaſon whereof they were gone, each man to his place in the Countrey, and ſo Gods ſervice was neglected at the Temple. He therefore, ſecondly, Verſ.11,12. gathered the Levites again together, and dealing ſharply with the Princes of the people, cauſed the tithes to be brought into their ſtorehouſe, and ſet ſome to overſee Verſ.14. and diſtribute them, praying that God would have in remembrance the good which he thus did, as he had prayed alſo before, Chap. 5. 19. Thirdly, finding that Verſ.15. ſome were grown very prophane, for he ſaw ſome treading wine-preſſes, and ſome carrying burthens of wares upon the Sabbath day, he conteſted againſt them, that is, challenged them as impious for thus doing, and provokers of Gods wrath againſt that place, as appeareth, ver. 17,18. He addeth alſo that they did not onely bring, but ſold, and ſo kept markets upon the Sabbaths, and there were certain Tyrians dwelling there, who kept theſe markets, and ſold at thoſe times unto the Jews thoſe wares. Whereby it appears that it was taken for a worke forbidden Note. by the fourth Commandement, upon the Sabbath to buy and ſell, for which Markets and Fairs upon our Chriſtian Sabbath, have been well put down in our Land. And to prevent the like doings for time to come, he cauſed the gates of Jeruſalem to be kept ſhut all the Sabbath day, that none might come in upon that Verſ.19. day any more with their wares, threatning ſuch with the ſtocks as came to Verſ. 22. the City notwithſtanding. And he charged the Levites to clenſe themſelves, and to look to the gates upon the Sabbath dayes.

Verſ.23. Fourthly, Seeing Jews who had marryed Ammonitiſh and Moabitiſh women, by whom they had children, that ſpake Aſhdodean and other Heathen Languages, he curſed and ſmote ſome of them, plucking off their haire, and adjuring them againſt ſuch marriages, and ſhewing the miſchiefe that had formerly come hereby. All which abuſes, and ſpecially the laſt, argueth ſtrongly that Nehemiah was abſent much more then a yeare before he returned to Ieruſalem, ſeeing ſtrange wives were in that time marryed, and children were borne of ſuch marriages, and grown up to bee able to ſpeake divers tongues.

Thus Nehemiah having told what hee did to the people ſinning by mixt Verſ.28. marriages, verſ. 28. hee telleth, that there was a ſonne of Iojadah the ſonne of Eliaſib the High-prieſt, who by ſuch a marriage became ſonne in law to Sanballat, the Horonite, him hee therefore chaced away, as committing a more foule ſin then the reſt, ſeeing he was more ſtreightly bound to keepe the Law, being a teacher thereof, and of a moſt holy function, and by ſuch an example others were corrupted. And not content to abdicate ſuch Chap.29. a monſter onely, he prayed to God againſt ſuch polluters of the Prieſtly office.
Note. Corruptio optimi eſt peſſima, and therefore no marvell, though Miniſters of the Goſpel being of ſcandalous lives, are now adayes moſt deteſted of all others. Ver.
Verſ.30. 30. Therefore I purged them from all ſtrange women, that is, by cauſing them to be put away, and ſet the Prieſts and Levites in order, every one in his Miniſtry, reforming the abuſe ſpoken of Verſ. 10.

Ester,

ESTER, CHAP. I.

Verſ.1.

IN the dayes of Ahaſhueroſh, who reigned from India to Ethiopia, over 127 Provinces. Which of the Perſian Kings Ahaſhueroſh was, is not agreed amongſt Expoſitours, For ſome, as Lyra ſaith, hold that he was the eighth from Cyrus, the next unto Darius Nothus. But this he confuteth, by reckoning the years which paſſed before that time, viz, in Cyrus his reigne 12, in Cambyſes 8, Darius Hiſtaſpis 36, Xerxes 20, Artaxerxes 40, Darius ſecundus, two moneths, Sogdianus 7, Darius Nothus 19, being altogether 135 before which Mordecay was borne, viz. before the Babyloniſh captivity, which laſted 70 years, as he proveth by the 11 Chapter of Eſter, being Apocryphall, and alſo Eſter 2.6. which is Canonicall, where it is ſaid, that he came into captivity with Jechoniah, and if ſo, then he muſt be much above 200 years old at the beginning of Ahaſhueroſh his reigne, and yet live and come to honour long after, which cannot be. Therefore ſome hold him to have been Artaxerxes, as Joſephus, but neither will the time permit this, ſeeing too many years paſſed from the captivity hithetto, viz. 156. He therefore ſubſcribeth to R. Solomon, who ſayth that he was the next King to Cyrus, but even thus alſo the years will not agree, becauſe from the captivity to that time were 82 years, and ſome years muſt needs be yeilded to have been on his back at the time of the captivity, and ſome after the beginning of this Kings reigne, and ſo he could not be leſſe when he was firſt promoted to honour by Ahaſhueroſh then 90 yeares old, an age too great for ſuch affairs, as were after this managed by him. Moreover, that Ahaſhueroſh, otherwiſe called Cambyſes, who reigned next after Cyrus, never had any love to the people of God, neither would he permit the Jews to proceed in building the Temple; whereas this Ahaſhueroſh having a Jew to his Queene, and Mordecai his Uncle in ſo much honour, would not doubtleſſe hinder them in a work which they ſo greatly deſired to doe. Funccius therefore holdeth that he was Darius Hiſtaſpis, as hath been already ſhewed, upon Ezra 6.14. But then we muſt not admit that Mordecai had a being in the time of the Babyloniſh captivity, according to Eſter. 11. except it were in the loynes of his father, as ſome ſay, whereunto alſo ſome light is given, Ezra 2.2. Inſome others but onely, that he was one of them that came out of it with Zorobabel, according to Ezra 2.2. As for his name differing, it was common for thoſe Kings to be called by divers names, as appeareth in his predeceſſour Artaxerxes, who was alſo called Ahaſhuerus. And to place this King next after Cyrus but one, will better agree with Mordecai's age, fit to govern under the King, as he did, Chap. 10. 2. then if we take Artaxerxes, the next after Xerxes to be the King Ahaſhueroſh here meant. For ſo accounting Mordecai but 20 at the time of his return out of captivity, he muſt needs be 94 at the leaſt, when this King began to reigne, although we reckon but 18 to Cyrus and Cambyſes, for add theſe unto his age of 20 at his return, and thereunto the yeares of Darius his reigne 36, and of Xerxes 20, and they altogether make 94. But allowing Darius Hiſtaſpis to be this Ahaſhueroſh, his years will very well agree, he being by this account at that time, not much above 40. But however, Funccius be herein backed by Carian, Buntingus, Samerius, &c, and by a concurrence of the times, the circumſtance of the feaſt, the largeneſſe of his Dominion, &c. all agreeing to this Darius, yet ſome except againſt it, averring, Artaxerxes Longimanus to be the man. Becauſe Herodotus who hath accurately written the ſtory of this Darius, and enumerated all his wives being five, yet he writeth nothing of Vaſhti, or any wife put away, or of Heſter or Haman in his time. 2 Becauſe the names Artaxerxes and Ahaſhueroſh, are promiſcuouſly uſed to ſet forth one and the ſame man, but not of Darius. But becauſe ſtronger objections lye againſt this opinion, as firſt, That ſome Provinces were falne from the Perſian Kings in the dayes of Xerxes, ſo that he could not be ſaid to reigne over 127 Provinces. Secondly, he was ſo much occupied in warre, and ſo long with the Grecians and Egyptians, &c. that he had no leaſure to attend to feaſting ſo many dayes together by his third yeare. 3 As was ſaid before, the age of Mordecai not agreeing, I hold rather to Funccius, affirming Darius Hiſtaſpis to be the man, although Herodotus omitteth this Hiſtory in his time, for ſo he doth alſo in the time of Artaxerxes: and for Joſephus, he in many places of his Hiſtory erreth ſo much, as that his relation touching this is but of uncertain credit. And for the exception taken to the name, it is of no moment, ſeeing all thoſe Kings had divers names, whereas ſome will have Darius Nothus and Ochus to be underſtood by Akaſhuerus, becauſe Ezra maketh no mention of Eſter, touching whom he would not certainly have been ſilent, if this hiſtory of her had happened in his time: this is of too little moment to weigh againſt the time, much leſſe agreeing then to Artaxerxes Longimanus, beſides that no memorable thing was done by him for the Jewes, as was by this Ahaſhuerus. Iunius differing from both theſe, will have Xerxes to be the man, becauſe that he in the ſecond yeare of his reigne, having brought Egypt to his obedience, might well now for joy thereof, make this great feaſt: and for Darius Hiſtaſpis he ſaith, that Herodotus reckoning up the Provinces that he reigned over, numbreth not ſo many. But ſeeing Xerxes had no more then Darius left him, this makes as well againſt him, as againſt his father.

And thus much for the deciſion of the queſtion about this King, now to proceed to his royall feaſting.

Verſ.2. When Ahaſhueroſh ſat upon his throne in the Palace of Shuſhan, in the third year of his reign he made a feaſt to all his Princes, &c, That in the Metropolitan City of the Perſian Kings, the vulgar Latine to expreſſe this hath it, Shuſhan was the beginning of his Kingdom, that is, ſayth Lyra, the chiefe City. Lyra. And he is ſaid now in his third year to have ſitten upon his Throne, becauſe he was now eſtabliſhed therein, and he made this royall feaſt to win the more love amongſt his Princes, by whoſe free election he had atteined that Kingdom, as was ſhewed before, and that his glory and wealth appearing herein, might make them all the more willingly to live in ſubjection to him, ſo royall and munificent a Prince. The time Verſ.4. of this feaſt was wonderfully long, viz. 180 dayes. aud when the time of the feaſt was ended, he invited all the people of Shuſhan both great and ſmall, to a feaſt of Verſ.5. ſeven dayes, in the entrance of the Kings garden, in Hebrew it is, In the fulfilling of theſe dayes: For whereas it may ſeeme, according to the common reading, When theſe dayes were fulfilled, that another time of 7 dayes feaſting is hereby ſet forth, for the Citizens of Shuſhan, and ſo many Expoſitours gather: The words in the Originall may well admit of another meaning, according to ſome, viz. that the feaſt time for the Princes yet continuing, upon the ſeven laſt dayes of thoſe 180 the inhabitants of Shuſhan were invited, and becauſe it was not fit for ſuch a miſcellany company of the common ſort to be feaſted in the Kings Palace, together with the Princes and greateſt men of the Kingdom, they were entertained without, but in moſt coſtly Tents and pleaſant places, that is, in the Kings garden, affording all manner of delights. And then the words may be expounded thus, when the time of this long continuing feaſt was now expiring, viz. in the laſt ſeven dayes thereof, he made a feaſt for all the inhabitants of the City, the Princes feaſt alſo continuing ſtill. And that it muſt needs be thus underſtood, is ſhewed, *ver.*11, where the King is ſaid to ſend for the Queen, to ſhew her beauty to the Princes and people at the end of theſe ſeven dayes, wherefore the Princes coutinued ſtill feaſting with him when this was done. But of all Expo-Lyra. ſitours, Lyra ſeemeth to me to erre moſt about theſe times of feaſting, in that he ſayth, that this feaſt was in preparing 180 dayes, but the feaſting was not till after theſe dayes expired, at which time both Princes and people were feaſted together ſeven dayes. Because there is a plain diſtinction made of the time and of the perſons feaſted, the firſt Princes, &c. 180 dayes, then of the Citizens ſeven dayes.

Verſ.6.

The place where this feaſt was kept, is ſaid to have been hanged with tapeſtry, white, green, and red, ſupported by pillars of marble, by ſtrings of ſilke, and ringles of ivory. There were alſo beds of gold and ſilver for the gueſts to ſit and eat upon, after the old manner, and the pavement was of Smarage and Marble of divers colours. And they drank in cups of gold, no man being compelled, but every one drinking what he pleaſed, and they had of the beſt wine. And it is ſaid, the Kings Commandement was that none ſhould be urged to drinke more then he pleaſed, that is, ſayth Joſephus, according to the cuſtome of the Perſians, who at other feſtivall times compelled men to drinke, but now the King forbad and provided that that cuſtom might not be followed. And Lyra well declaimeth againſt it, as moſt uncivill and unſeemly, and brought up firſt by Barbarians in Normandy, who came and depopulated that Countrey.

Verſ.10.

And whilſt the King was feaſting with the men, the Queen feaſted the women in the Kings Pallace, and at the end of the ſeven dayes, the King being merry with wine, ſent to have Queen Vaſhti brought unto him, &c. But ſhee refuſing to come by the advice of his ſeven Councellours, the chiefe Princes of Perſia and Media, ſhee was put away, and a decree made that every man ſhould rule in his own houſe, and this was publiſhed in all Provinces in their own tongue. Here Lyra excuſeth this Queen from contempt, holding that ſhee did it out of modeſty, which forbad the wives of Perſian Princes to be ſeen of any other men but their own husbands, ſo likewiſe Joſephus, who excepteth alſo thoſe of their family, yet Memuchan tooke it for a contempt, as it ſeemeth, and the King likewiſe, and therefore put her away.

Now whereas the ſeven Princes are deſcribed by this, that they ſaw the Kings face, it is commonly expounded, that they converſed familiarly with him, and were daily in his company. Of the ſeven Councellours of the Perſian Kings, ſee alſo Ezra 7.14. Aud thus a feaſt celebrated a long time with great pleaſure, ended in bitterneſſe, for which ſome condemne this Councel as moſt unjuſt, both becauſe the law and cuſtome of the Perſians, to preſerve modeſty in great women, was not regarded, and a greater puniſhment was inflicted, then this refuſall was worthy of, eſpecially ſeeing ſomtime the ſhewing of a mans wife that hath been very beautifull, hath cauſed deſtruction to the husband, as to Candaules the Lydian. But although this was fooliſhly done, and unjuſtly in reſpect of men, yet God had doubtleſſe an hand in it, both to turn the exceſſive pleaſure in this long vainglorious feaſt into pain, and to cauſe it to bring forth ſuch an unpleaſing effect, and to make way thus for Eſters preferment, and conſequently for the preſervation of his people Iſrael, as is hereafter declared.

The Myſtery.
Rabanus.

Gloſ. ord.

For the myſticall ſignification, Rabanus and others doubt not, but that under this Hiſtory, the myſtery of Chriſt and his Church is ſet forth, by Abaſhueroſh Chriſts reigning far and wide, by Vaſhti the Jewiſh Synagogue, by Eſter, the Church of the Gentiles, by Haman, the Devill, and by Mordecai, Paul and the other Apoſtles. More particularly, Abaſhueroſh making a great feaſt in his third yeare, ſetteth forth Chriſt in the third age of the world, making a ſpirituall feaſt by preaching the glad tydings of ſalvation to all the primitive believers, who as his Princes came thereunto, but towards the end of this feaſting time, all, both great and ſmall, inhabiting this royall City, that is, the Church, ſhall be feaſted, when all enemies of the Church ſhall be deſtroyed. For unto a feaſt is the preaching of the Goſpel compared, *Mat.*22, and it ſhould not ſeem ſtrange that an Heathen King ſhould be made a Type of Chriſt, ſeeing Cyrus alſo was one, and Solomon, that fell ſo fouly, and Samſon: For the Type lyeth not in the evill which was in any of them, but in ſome rare and excellent thing in them, as in this King munificence excelled and bounty towards all. The beſt wine of which the gueſts drank, and the bowles of gold, wherein ſet forth the greateſt refreſhing which is to the ſoule by the Goſpel, and the riches of faith wherein it commeth: The hangings ſo delightfull and coſtly, and the beds and pavements ſo precious, the beauty of the Church through the whiteneſſe of charity, the greenneſſe of faith that never fadeth, and the red of the bloud of Martyrs, and the firme foundation of the Church, and how the faithfull ſit here in heavenly places, as in beds of gold. Whereas no man was compelled to drink, this ſhewed, that none are againſt their wils made Chriſtians, but if thou wilt enter into life, ſayth Chriſt, goe ſell, &c. they onely that would, ſold their poſſeſſions, &c.

The Queen ſent for, but refuſing to come, did ſet forth the Church of the Jews, which was therefore put away, as ſhee by the advice of Memuchan, the laſt of the ſeven Councellours. For ſo the Jews were put away, as it were from being a people, when Paul, the laſt of the Apoſtles was made the mouth to pronounce, From henceforth we leave you, and goe to the Gentiles, and being now no longer a people, they are no ſpouſe to the great King Chriſt Jeſus, as Hoſ. 2.

CHAP. II.

W*Hen the anger of the King was pacified, he called to minde* Vaſhti, &c.
Verſ.1. That is, ſayth Joſephus, being grieved when he thought upon her beauty, Joſephus, lib. 11. antiq. and the great love which he formerly bare unto her, and upon the ſlight occaſion that he had taken to put her away, ſhee haply refuſing to come onely in modeſty, not out of contempt. For the decree he could not reverſe, neither durſt he for feare of the Princes that would not endure it ſo to be done, but would thereupon have been ready to rebell againſt him, to the indangering of his Crown, eſpecially, he being not of the Royall bloud. But when his ſervants about him Verſ.2. perceived his trouble, and the perplexity of his minde about this thing, they to remove it deviſed to make a pleaſing propoſition to him of another moſt beautifull woman, in whom he might moſt delight, by him to be choſen out of all the faireſt virgins in all his Dominions, whom he might make his Queen inſtead of Vaſhti. The King hearing this immediately agreed to it, and it was done accordingly.
Now amongſt others that were gathered together to the Kings Palace, Eſter was one, being Mordecai his Uncles daughter, a very beautifull virgin, Verſ.7. and under the government of Mordecai her kinſman, who after the death of her father and mother, adopted her for his daughter, whereas the vulgar Latine hath it, his brothers daughter, Sallianus and Serrar: themſelves confeſſe it to be an errour, ſuppoſing one word to be left out, viz. patris, ſeeing it ſhould have been his father's brothers daughter, as it is in the Greek. The family of which Mordecai came, was the ſame of which Saul came, viz. of Kiſh, of the tribe of Benjamin.
But whereas it is ſaid that hee was carried captive by Nebuchadnezzar, when Jechoniah King of Judah was carryed away to Babylon, this as was partly touched before, is to be underſtood in his fathers loyns, becauſe he muſt needs be then unborn, ſeeing the captivity laſted 70 years, and if he in perſon had been then carryed captive, and had been but ſeven years old, he was by the third yeare of Darius Hiſtaſpis here called Ahaſhueroſh, 98 years old at the leaſt, and ſo 102 by that time Eſter went into the King, for it was in the ſeventh yeare of his reigne, verſ. 16. which paſſed the age of man in thoſe times.

Or if that Artaxerxes who is called by Ezra Ahaſhueroſh be the King here meant, he muſt be above 90, which is as unprobable. Here he is alſo ſaid to Ioſephus. have been of Shuſhan, but brought firſt into Babylon, whereupon Ioſephus ſayth, that he dwelt in Babylon, when Eſter was taken for the King, but then for the love of her he removed to Shuſhan. But here it is ſaid, that he was then in Shuſhan.
Wherefore it ſeemeth, that although he was brought in his fathers loyns to Babylon, yet his dwelling was now in this City. The Virgins gathered together, of whom Eſter was one, are ſaid to be many, and by Ioſephus 400, which is not improbable, Verſ.8. the Provinces out of which, being 127, and they were under the hand of Hege, keeper of the women. In whoſe eyes, becauſe ſhe ſeemed good, and obteined grace with him, he ſpeedily gave her her purifying and her parts, &c. The vulgar Latine hath it, and the King commanded the Eunuch to give her, &c. which Lyra, Pellican, &c. following, apply therefore not to Hege, but to the King, as if theſe words, She found grace in his ſight, had been ſpoken of the King, whereas in-

indeed ſhe came not yet into his ſight, but as it is ſaid, verſ. 15. all that ſaw her praiſed her, ſo here, Hege was taken with her favour and beauty at her firſt comming, and did for his part all that he could to ſhew how well he conceived of her above all the reſt, preferring her alſo to the chiefe place in the womens houſe to abide in, till ſhee was prepared to goe in to the King. The parts given her were, for diet, ornament, and purifying. Now the acceptation which ſhee found beyond other Virgins with him, with all others that ſaw her, and finally with the King, was by a ſecret providence of God, ruling in all hearts, and making her more amiable, that ſhee might being thus advanced become an happy inſtrument to deliver his people from the danger of deſtruction plotted againſt them by wicked Haman.

Verſ.10. Lyra. But ſhee ſhewed not her kinred, for Mordecai had charged her not to doe it, becauſe, ſayth Lyra, the Jews were captives and ſervant, and therefore if ſhee had been known to be a Jew, it was likely that ſhee ſhould have been rejected. If it ſhall ſeeme ſtrange that ſhee ſhould be taken in without queſtioning about her kinred, it is to be ſuppoſed, that dwelling in Shuſhan ſhee was thought to have been a Perſian, as others commonly were who dwelt in that City, and therefore no queſtion was hereabout moved, and the rather becauſe her exceeding beauty was ſuch, that none had a deſire any way to hinder, but to further her advancement to the Kings ſociety, and alſo working in this matter, ſo as that they could doe no otherwiſe. And yet had her kinred been known, it was a royall race of which ſhee came, for Mordecai and ſhee were of the ſame family with King Saul.

Verſ.12. Lyra. For the manner of purifying the Virgins which were prepared for the King, it was ſix moneths with oile of myrrh, the vertue whereof, ſayth Lyra, was to mundifie the fleſh, and ſix moneths with ſweet ſpices, to make her fleſh to ſmell ſweet. Pellican. And good reaſon, ſaith Pellican, that it ſhould be thus done, and that ſhee ſhould be fed alſo with a finer diet, becauſe in thoſe Countreys womens bodies, without means firſt uſed, were not haply ſo delicate, and ſome others of a meaner condition might have had to doe with them before. Verſ.16. This being done, it was long yet before Eſters time came to goe in to the King, for ſhee went not till the tenth moneth, in the ſeventh yeare of his reigne, which was the fourth yeare after the putting away of Vaſhti. It ſeemeth then that of theſe Virgins, ſome were brought into the womens houſe to Hege before others, who having been, many of them, with the King before her, yet the King tooke no ſuch liking to any one, as to make her Queen as her, verſ. 17. it is ſaid, that he did to her. And this is ſaid by Joſephus, to have been done in the 12 moneth, that is, two moneths after the time of her firſt comming in unto him, but the Greek tranſlation makes her comming in to him to be in the 12 moneth.

Queſt. If it be demanded here, Was Eſter ſo godly a woman brought in to the King as an whore? or how happened it, that ſhee conſented to ſuch a marriage, ſeeing the Jews might not marry with heathen Idolatours.

Anſw. All the Virgins which came in to the King were his concubines, that is, wives of an inferiour ranke, which piety in a good woman did not abhor from in thoſe times, when Kings commonly had both wives aud concubines. And for her conſenting to marry with an Heathen, 1 He was none of the Nations prohibited. 2 He was not meerly Heathen, but was indued with ſome knowledge of the true God, whether he were Darius Hiſtaſpis, or Artaxerxes Longimanus, as their Hiſtories in Ezra and Nehemiah doe declare. 3 There was hope that ſhee might be a meanes to further him in piety, and not be corrupted by him, ſeeing it may be noted indeed, that men have been corrupted by marrying idolatrous wives, but women never by ſuch husbands, although it is true, that they are both alike forbidden, and Eſter 14. ſhee confeſſed that ſhee delighted not in this worldly glory, and accompanying an uncircumciſed man and a ſtranger, but was unto it neceſſitated. Therefore when ſhee went in to the King, ſhee asked nothing of Hege to ſet her forth the more, but took onely what he would have her, ſhewing that ſhee tooke no pleaſure herein, whereas other Virgins were very curious, to give him all the content that they could, and therefore would have all things that they could thinke upon to adorne them, yet ſhe had more grace in the eyes of all that ſaw her, becauſe ſhe was of her ſelfe very beautifull and withall modeſt, and of the beſt compoſed behaviour, and meek and ſilent, which are the greateſt ornaments of a woman, the Lord working alſo in the Kings heart, that he could make none other his Queen but her.

Verſ.18. When Ahaſhueroſh took Eſter to wife, and made her his Queen, hee for the greater glory of this his marriage, and the gracing of Eſter, made another royall feaſt to all his Princes and ſervants, and gave reſt to all Provinces and gifts, &c.
Ioſephus. of what continuance this feaſt was, it is not here ſaid, but Joſephus reports it to Lyra. be an whole moneth. The reſt which he gave, ſayth Lyra, is expounded by ſome to have been from labour, by others, from paying Tribute for a yeare, or halfe a yeare, which is the more probable, becauſe to ceaſe long from work would have been no benefit, but rather an hindrance to the common people, that lived upon their labour. It ſeemeth to me, becauſe it is added, And he gave gifts magnifically, that with theſe gifts he cauſed them in all his Provinces to make merry at this time, which that they might doe, they kept an Otium, and reſted for that time.
Junius renders it, dedit immunitatem, the Septuagint remiſſionem, others, tributorum ceſſationem, but the Hebrew word is reſt, implying reſt as at Feſtivals. The Iunius. word rendred gifts, is in Hebrew a gift, expounded by Junius, of ſome great gift given unto Eſter, after the Perſian manner, by others of the revenues of ſome City given unto her as a dowry. But becauſe the giving of nothing to her is expreſſed here, I rather hold with ſome others, that although it be a gift in the ſingular number, yet the word is not to be ſo reſtrained, but that under it, all the gifts which he bountifully gave to every Province are to be underſtood. Wherefore the meaning is, he gave a gift to each Province, according to the magnificence of a King, ſeeing to cauſe them to reſt and keepe Holy dayes for joy of this marriage had been nothing, unleſſe his bounty had been alſo extended towards them to beare them out herein.

Verſ.19. But whilſt the Virgins were gathered the ſecond time, and Mordecai ſat at the Lyra. Kings gate. Here Lyra, becauſe he could not ſee why otherwiſe there ſhould be a ſecond gathering together of the Virgins, ſayth, that the King was offended with Eſter, becauſe that asking her of her kinred ſhe would not declare it, inſo much that he cauſed a gathering together of more fair Virgins to be made, pretending, for this contempt, to make another Queen, and therefore it is ſaid, verſ.
Iunius. 20. that Eſter ſhewed not her kinred, &c. But Junius renders it, a gynicæo regis ad ſuas ſe ſingulæ reciperent, as if nothing elſe were meant, but their returning from the Court to their own homes: but for this purpoſe certainly it would not have been ſaid, that they were gathered together the ſecond time, but rather, when they were diſmiſſed. Vatablus conceiving that as Virgins were gathered together for Vatablus. the Kings ſecond marriage, ſo they had been for his firſt with Vaſhti, and therefore it is of this ſaid, as done the ſecond time, when that conſpiracie againſt the King happened, which is related, verſ. 21. But becauſe Eſter was at the time thereof Queen, and this ſecond gathering together, when ſhe was but yet in election, it cannot be ſo underſtood. But it is rather to be held, that the hiſtory of the conſpiracie, verſ. 21. doth nothing appertain to this time, when the Virgins were gathered together, neither is that congregating of them ſpoken of to intimate ſo much, but onely the conſtancie of Eſter in obeying Mordecai that had brought her up, not onely at the firſt taking of her into the Court, but alſo the third year of her being there, till ſhe came to be Queene and after, ſo that Mordecai as unknown in what relation he ſtood to the Queen, ſat yet as an ordinary man at Sallianus. the Kings gate. Thus Sallianus both confuting Vatablus and confirming his own. But againſt this maketh, verſ. 21. where it is ſaid, in thoſe dayes, plainly ſhewing this to have been the time ſpoken of, whilſt the Virgins being gathered together for this ſecond marriage, and Eſter amongſt them, Mordecai ſat at the Kings gate. It is therefore more probable, according to Vatablus that here is a deſcription of the time when the conſpiracie was made, yet it is not ſaid that Virgins were congregated the ſecond time, implying that it was ſo done once before, for that is uncertain, but when the King was to take a Queen unto him the ſecond time

time, and ſo it is as if it had been ſaid, when the Virgins were gathered, viz. the ſecond time that the King would take him a wife, he had put away Vaſhti the firſt; and now again Mordecai his ſitting there, and Eſter not bewraying her kinred, is repeated to make way to this relation of a conſpiracie that happened before the marriage, but was hitherto omitted, whereas it hath been objected, that Eſter was Queen, and ſhe went and told the King, when Mordecai had diſcloſed it to her, this makes nothing againſt it, becauſe it may well be thus underſtood. Mordecai knowing of this conſpiracie, when Eſter was yet a Virgin, but upon the top of her marriage, told her of it ſo ſoon as ſhe was accepted of by the King, and ſhe forthwith told it to the King. For that of Lyra, becauſe it is without ground, I paſſe it over.

Verſ.21.

In thoſe dayes two of the Courtiers Bigthan and Thereſh of the keepers of the Kings door were wroth,&c. The word here rendred by Junius, liminis, of the threſhould, whereby we may underſtand the doore may better, ſayth Lyra, be underſtood of the houſholdſtuffe, for the word ſignifieth both, and if they were keepers of the houſholdſtuffe, they might more eaſily come to kill the King, than if they were Porters. I follow the common reading, and if they kept his chamber door, who knoweth not, but that no ſuſpicion being had of them, they might eaſily come at the King: and it is the more probable that they were Porters, becauſe Mordecai ſitting at the Kings gate, moſt probably, by the acquaintance which he atteined to with them, came to the knowledge of their conſpiracie. And it is not to be doubted but that they kept their bloudy intention ſecret, communicating of it onely between themſelves. What was the cauſe of this their conſpiracie is not ſaid, but ſome think becauſe he rejected Vaſhti, ſome, becauſe Haman being a Macedonian moved them unto it, that the King being taken away, the Kingdom might be tranſlated to the Macedonians: and ſome, that the preferment of Mordecai was by them envied. Of which three the ſecond ſeemeth to be confirmed, becauſe *Chap.*12.6. it is ſaid, that Haman ſought the deſtruction of Mordecai for his bewraying of theſe two conſpiratours. But neither was Haman a Macedonian, but an Amalekite, neither was this the cauſe of his ſpleen againſt Mordecai, but becauſe he would not for reverence riſe up unto him, ſo that the adjections to Eſter thus plainly contradicting the authenticall Hiſtory, plainly ſhew the ignorance of him that made them. And for the laſt, Mordecai his preferment could not be the matter of provocation to theſe two, becauſe it was not till after this, ſeeing he yet ſate at the Kings gate, and the firſt beginning of his promotion was the recounting of his diſcovering this treaſon for which they were executed. There can then be no other reaſon imagined, but the putting away of Vaſhti, and the preparing for another marriage. At this therefore they haply took indignation, and would have killed him, but Mordecai being full of hope, that Eſter ſhould be Queen, that he together with her might come into favour at the Court, learning this treaſon out diſcovered it. For the means of his comming to the knowledge hereof, Joſephus ſaith, that one Pharnabazus a Jew, that ſerved one of theſe men, perceiving it, certified Mordecai of it. But R. Solomon that they ſpake of it between themſelves in the Tharſian tongue, not thinking that Mordecai, who ſat by, underſtood them, yet he not being ignorant of that tongue perceived it, and told the Queen, and ſhee the King, and ſo they were both, when it was found true, hanged, and this was entered into the Kings Annals by Mordecai his name.

Howſoever Mordecai came to the knowledge of it; there was certainly a divine providence in it, that thus a foundation might be laid to his future preferment for the common good of the Jews, being then the Church and people of God.

The Myſtery.

For the myſtery of theſe things, many Virgins gathered together, and put under the hand of Hege, prefigured many Churches of the Gentiles under the hands of faithfull Miniſters, amongſt whom one Eſter, that is, hidden, or Edeſſa, that is, obteining mercie, is chiefly beloved, to ſhew that amongſt the faithfull, called together for Chriſt out of all Countries, there is a ſelect company moſt gracious in his eyes, viz. which his Miniſters are beſt pleaſed with, and therefore are moſt intent to give her, even without asking, all ornaments of inſtruction that may beſt ſet her forth to this King, and ſhee is finally crowned, and great joy and feaſting and reſt is at this coronation in heaven amongſt the holy Angels, and this is at the end of the world, when there ſhall be a perpetuall Sabbath. And all this comes not from merit, but becauſe ſhee obtaineth mercie, for of grace we are ſaved. And to come in acceptably to Chriſt, prepared ſhee muſt be with ſweet ointment and ſpices to take away all offenſive corruption, which is, when ſhee is ſanctified by the ſpirit, and that compleatly. The reſt of them that are called together, when they have received the faith, goe into another houſe, that is goe aſtray by ſin, ſo as that unleſſe they be called home to Chriſt in particular by ſerious repentance, they never come into the Kings company any more, and theſe are a great number to one that ſtands, for which it ſtands us in hand, if we would be the beſt beloved, to be moſt godly, for thus the ſoule becomes exceeding fair, and if we have wickedly erred, to endeavour by earneſt prayer and repentance, that we may come in again. The conſpiratours againſt the King, ſet forth Hereticks, who conſpire to kill Chriſt in the hearts of the faithfull, by corrupting the faith, but the vigilant Paſtour ſet forth by Mordecai, findes it out, and ſo preventeth this miſchiefe, the true faith being upheld, and they hang in hell for it, but Mordecai his fidelity is put upon record, when a book of remembrance is written, and his promotion ſhall follow after, when to him that had the Talents and uſed them well, it ſhall be ſaid, well done good ſervant, thou haſt been faithfull in little, &c.

Mal.3.16.

CHAP. III.

1 Sam. 15.

Here is the Hiſtory of Haman, of Agags poſterity, who had beene King of the Amalekites, the moſt deadly enemies of the Jews, and being for this deſtroyed without partiality by Saul, both young and old, males and females, there was now an inveterate hatred in ſuch, as chanced to eſcape them, againſt all the Jewiſh Nation, which made Haman ſo readily to take occaſion againſt them for Mordecai his ſake, as here followeth. Whereas *Chap.*15. Lyra ſayth, that Haman is called a Macedonian, and troubleth himſelfe about reconciling it, this labour may well be ſaved, ſeeing hee is neyther ſo called there, but *Chap.*16.10. and if he were, it is not the only errour of thoſe adjections bewraying the ignorance of him, that wrote them, as hath been partly touched before. Pellican aſſenteth not to this, that Haman was an Amalekite, although deſcended of Agag, becauſe there might be a man of another Nation of the ſame name, but for ſo much as divers Nations have diverſity of names, and ſeldome is a name peculiar to a man of one Nation, given to one of another, although in the ſame Nation oftentimes it is, and hee gueſſeth not at any other Nation of which hee he might be, and the Amalekites of all Nations hated the Iews moſt, I ſhall ſtill hold according to the common opinion, that hee was an Amalekite. Unleſſe it may be thought according to ſome, that hee was by the fathers ſide a Macedonian, by the mothers a Perſian, being deſcended anciently of the Amalekites, and by place an Agagite: for Sulpitius ſayth, that he was a Perſian, and of Agag he is ſayd here to come. But why did the King ſo highly exalt him above all others? Anſ. Some imagine reaſons, but truly no reaſons can be given, but that which the King himſelf mentioneth, *Chap.*13.3. that he excelled all other men in wiſdom and fidelity, ſo Joſeph was advanced by Pharaoh, and Daniel by Darius, and Iechoniah by Evilmerodach, although not for the ſame, but a divers reaſon, 2 King.24.

Verſ.4. alone refuſed ſo to do, for he ſayd that he was a Iew. It may be demanded what this worſhip was, ſeeing that of bowing the knee hath been commonly uſed amongſt the Iews to great and honourable perſons, as of Jaacob to Eſau, ſeven times together, of David to Saul, Nathan to David, and of the Egyptians and Joſephs brethren to him. And Iſaack in bleſſing Jaacob ſayth, Let thy mothers ſonne bow unto thee. Anſ. It was not civill but divine, for ſo the Perſian Kings who would themſelves be worſhipped as Gods, moſt probably would have the ſame honour given to him, whom they pleaſed to advance, as their ſecond, and this is the cauſe alleaged by Mordecai himſelf of his refuſall, *Chap.*13.12. and according to this thoſe words of Mordecai, Verſe 4. are to be conſtrued, Hee told them that he was a Jew, that is, when he worſhipped not Haman as they did, that they might herein reſt ſatisfied, ſeeing it was commonly known that the Iews by their Laws might not worſhip any other, but the Lord their God, *Deut.*6.13. as it is rendred, *Matth.*4. Pallican contrariwiſe holdeth, that hee might have adored him, as men commonly did the King, but becauſe he thought this would be an humouring of him in his pride, hee refuſed, God ſingularly ſtirring him up thus to vex that proud Prince, that he might not have his ambitious deſire fulfilled, but be croſſed in his proud way to hinder his joy therein, and to make it ſeeme to him as nothing, and to make way to the magnifying of his power and his people, when upon occaſion hereof their deſtruction was ſought and they were ſo mightily deliverd. And if it be thus taken then, it is no example always to be imitated by others, and that muſt not be true, *Chap.*13.12. neyther muſt his telling them, that he was a Iew be taken, as having reference to Gods Laws but only as preparatory to the Hiſtory following of Hamans attempts againſt the Iews, when hee knew this, and ſo no reaſon can well be rendred, why he told them of what Nation he was, I adhere therefore to the firſt. And if it be ſayd, divine honour ſhould alſo have bin denyed to the King, which how can it be conceived, that others as worthy men as Mordecai did not give, as Nehemiah, Ezra, and Zorobabel, ſeeing they had acceſſe to the Kings of their times, and acceſſe none might have without ſuch adoration? Anſ. It is moſt probable, that thoſe Kings being favourers of thoſe Iews; diſpenſed with them, for their Religions ſake, and ſo might Mordecai, and probably was afterwards diſpenſed with by the *K*ing when he was advanced by him. But ſeeing the knee is bowed to *K*ings and other great perſons in doing them civill honour, what more was required to be done to Haman, if the adoration required to be done to him were divine? Anſ. There was doubtleſſe no more done unto him or to the *K*ing himſelfe, but yet it is ſayd to be divine and unlawfull, becauſe it was done in aknowledgment of ſome excellency ſuper-humane, yea, divine in them, as the pride of their hearts put them on to require. Lyra to the ſame effect having argued much about bowing the knees to men concludeth it to be lawfull, and that the ſin is only in the intention, when it is to honour man as a god. And for the like reaſon bowing the knee before an Image repreſentatively, a god is unlawfull and abominable, becauſe all worſhip done to that, which is ſet up meerly in relation to God is divine and ſo unlawfull and abominable: ſo that here is no place for civill worſhip, or δουλεία, but only for λατρεία, or divine. Some Hebrews ſay, that Hamans apparell had Images upon it, which they worſhipped that worſhipped him, and ſome that man may be bowed unto with one knee, but not with both, that being too much honour, and peculiar to God only. Some that he had an Image hanging about his neck, and ſome that Mordecai looked at him as an Amalekite againſt whom the Iews muſt always be, by Gods expreſſe command, *Exod.*17. and if ſo, then a Iew could not give honour to them.

Note.

Verſ.5,6.

Haman taking this refuſall of Mordecai for a contempt of him, ſoon ſet his thoughts a work to plot the deſtruction of him and all the Iews. But that he might attempt this with the better ſucceſſe, hee firſt cauſed Lots to be caſt before him in the firſt moneth, the moneth Niſan, the 12 year of Ahaſhuerus his Reigne, and thenceforward from moneth to moneth unto the twelfth called Adar, that is, from March to February, ſo that he was plotting this miſchief above ten moneths together, and to find out a good day, promiſing ſucceſſe to move the *K*ing about it, and to prevaile herein, and it ſeemeth, that hee found the 13 day of Adar out as the beſt for this bloudy execution. A Lot in the Perſian tongue is called Phur, in Hebrew Gorall. Pagninus derives it yet from פור an Hebrew word ſignifying to break or bruiſe, for which a Wine-preſſe is ſo called, and conſequently the veſſell, wherein Lots were caſt, and Metonym: the Lot it ſelf. Wherefore the vulgar Latine hath it Lots, in Hebrew Phur, and ſuperſtitious men were much addicted hereunto, thinking thereby to be directed in chooſing the beſt time for any enterprize, although by the example of Haman it appeareth to be plaine. He moſt probably wrote the names of the twelve moneths of the yeare in ſeverall papers, and put them together in a veſſell ſtirring them together, and then one blindfolded pulled one out, having before prayed to the gods, that the moneth which firſt came out, might be the moneth for this execution, and the moneth Adar, which was the laſt was drawn, and the ſame it ſeemeth, being done from moneth to moneth, that moneth ſtill comming out, at the laſt, when that moneth came, he by the like means found out what day of the moneth he ſhould ſend out to have it done, and lighted upon the 13 day thereof. And herein his diſcretion is backed by Expoſitours, in that he laboured to finde out a good day for his end, but never conſidered that the King might deny him his requeſt. But I ſee no cauſe, why we may not take his lot caſting to be for both; viz. to move the King with ſucceſſe and to deſtroy the Jews, ſeeing he both moved and prevailed, and ſent out Note. about the execution, doing all upon the ſame day. But it is worth the noting, that when this cruell tyrant thirſted ſo much after the bloud of the innocent Jews, he could not yet finde a time according to his own way to ſhed it, till almoſt a year after, ſo did the divine providence moderate even in his lots, and Eſter had been wife now to the King five years to confirme his love towards her the more, and Mordecai was ſo little ambitions, that he would not have her yet to diſcover her people, and his relation unto her, that he might have come to a better place then to ſit at the Kings gate amongſt the common ſort.

Verſ.8. Haman having by lot found out a fit day, immediately moved the King againſt the Jews, ſaying, that they were a people that had ſingular new rites by themſelves, that is, circumciſion, adoration towards Jeruſalem, and divers waſhings, and abſtinence from ſome meats as unclean, and that they contemned the Kings commands, as this of bowing to Haman, whereby it might be gathered how ſtubborn they would be if they ſhould be tryed in other things. And he ſayth, that they were diſperſed in all parts of his Dominions, intimating that they might eaſily be deſtroyed by the people in every placee where they lived, wherefore he beſought him, that a decree might be ſent out under his Signet, for the deſtroying of them, all their ſpoils being given to thoſe that did the execution. And leſt the damage which ſhould hereby come to the King ſhould make him averſe from this motion, ſeeing a great tribute was hereby paid by the Jews, he offered to pay into the Kings treaſury 10000 talents of ſilver in liew thereof.

Verſ.10. The King was no ſooner deſired, but without examining the truth of his allegations, he granted him liberty to doe what he would to them, ſo wiſe and faithfull did he count him to be, and that he might have authority to doe ſo, he gave him his Signet, wherewith he immediately ſealed letters written in to all parts in the Kings name, commanding this execution to be done upon men and women, Verſ.13. young and old, upon the 13 day of the moneth Adar, that is, in the yeare following, becauſe it required a long time before it could come to the knowledge of Hieronym: l.5. thoſe that dwelt in remote parts, for Epheſus ſcituated in the fartheſt parts of Aſia, as Herodotus ſaith, was a journey of three moneths and ſeven dayes, and India as far from thence, and Egypt likewiſe all under the Perſian King at this time, ſo that a years liberty was taken to ſend, and for the Jews enemies to prepare for their deſtruction, that they might be ſtrong enough, and ſufficiently armed againſt them, and the day of the moneth held now to be a fatall day for them kept for this enterprize without varying from it, leſt if it ſhould have been attempted upon any other day, it ſhould not have ſucceeded. Thus it ſeemeth that when Haman ſought out a fit day by lot, he intended it both to move the King, and to ſend out order for the execution and to have the ſaid execution done. And thus a great doubt, which I ſee moſt Expoſitours to paſſe over in ſilence, may be reſolved, viz. how the deſtruction of the Jews could be the ſame day in all parts that letters were wrote about it, and after this three dayes could be ſpent in faſting before it, and letters written two moneths after, viz. in the third moneth, time enough to prevent it, as they were, *Chap.*8.9. for betwixt the 13 day of the moneth Adar, in the 12 yeare of Ahaſhueroſh, to the 13 of Adar in his 13 yeare, there was time enough for all theſe things.

Verſ. 15. Things being thus ordered, the King and Haman were merry and feaſted, but the poor Jews in Shuſhan were full of perplexity, for there the Kings decree was firſt hanged up publikely that all might ſee it.

The Myſtery. Lyra.

By Haman thus exalted ſignifying iniquity wee may underſtand myſtically Nero, the firſt perſecuting Roman Emperour, and ſuch perſecutors as ſucceeded him, who being moſt highly advanced, would have divine honour done unto them and to their Idols, but Mordecai, that to the Chriſtian refuſing to doe it in Rome, by and by perſecution was ſtirred up againſt all Chriſtian people in all places, which made them full of ſorrow, although when they came to ſuffering for the truth, they were joyfull and patient, or if we underſtand the Pope by Haman it will better agree, for the Emperour advanced him as this great King did Haman, and he muſt by all be acknowledged Chriſts Vicar generall and adored. But the reformers refuſing ſo to doe are deſtined to deſtruction, the Emperour being ſtirred up againſt them, firſt in Babylon, then in Germany, yet God preſerved them, many of their enemies being deſtroyed by their hands.

CHAP. IV.

Verſ.1. Mordecai ſeeing what was done, rent his garments for ſorrow, after the manner of thoſe times, and put on ſackcloth for more humiliation, and cryed out againſt the injuſtice of this edict before the Court gate, but in he might not enter, nor any man in ſo baſe an habit. Pellican. Pellican ſayth, leaſt the King ſeeing and hearing him might be moved with compaſſion to poor men in ſuch diſtreſſe. Verſ.4. The news of this was ſoon brought to Queen Eſter by her maids and Eunuchs, for ſhee was kept in a cloſer place then they, not having the liberty of going abroad, as others had, becauſe the Perſians that were of higheſt quality, uſed ſo to keepe in their wives, and if they went forth at any time, they were carryed in a cloſe chariot, ſo as that none could ſee them. When ſhee heard it, ſhee ſent to Mordecai to take away his ſackcloth, and to put better apparrell upon him, that he might come into the Court again, Verſ.5,6. and he refuſing to take it, ſhee ſent Atach her ſervant to him, to know the cauſe of his thus doing. Verſ.7,8. And when he had declared it, he ſent him back again nnto her with a copie of the decree, and to require her to make interceſſion to the King for her people. Verſ.10. Shee ſent a reply that this ſhee could not doe, till ſhee were called unto him, which ſhee had not been now in 30 dayes, for otherwiſe to enter in to him was death, unleſſe he reached out his golden Scepter in token that he would have one to come in. Which proviſion was made for reverence to the King and his greatneſſe, and the more to ſecure his perſon from treacherous attempts. Lyra. Lyra thinketh that it was now onely ſo provided leaſt any ſhewing the King of the pitifull plaints of the Jews, hee ſhould reverſe the decree, and ſo he takes it as a policy of Haman. And for the Queens being ſo long from him, it is to be conceived, that he had many more wives and concubines, with whom he would company alſo at times, for his greater pleaſure in variety of women.

Verſ.12,13. Mordecai not reſting in this reply, ſent to her again, not to frame any excuſe, but to doe it, if not, he puts her in minde, that God had other ways to ſave his people, but ſhee with all her fathers houſe, muſt look by his juſt judgement to periſh, if ſhee would not adventure her ſelfe in this caſe of ſo great neceſſity to ſpeake for them, being the elect people of God, to whom ſo many gracious promiſes were made. He ſeemeth alſo for this her reply, to charge her with a neglect of all her brethren the Jews, as if ſhee cared not though they all were deſtroyed, ſo that ſhee might eſcape, in theſe words, Think not that thou onely ſhalt be preſerved in the Kings houſe. Wherefore now he would not have her to conceale her kinred any longer, but to diſcloſe of what ſtock ſhee came, that for her ſake all the Jews might fare the better.

Verſ.15,16. The Queen hearing this, to ſhew how deare her people the Jews were unto her, ſent to Mordecai again to gather the Jews together, to faſt and pray three dayes together night and day, promiſing that ſhee and her maids would doe likewiſe, and after this, ſhe would goe in to the King, though with the danger of her life. In extremity of danger, the holy woman fleeth to faſting and prayer, before ſhee would adventure her ſelfe, teaching us when we are to goe about any weighty Note. work of life and death, to prepare unto it likewiſe. And it is to be noted, that ſhee is the author of this counſell to Mordecai, who was as her father, when as he ought rather to have firſt adviſed to this courſe. But ſomtime the woman directs Verſ.17. the man, as alſo Saraah did Abraham, and he obeyed her voyce, and ſo did Mordecai Eſter, as God pleaſeth to imploy either to put on the other to doe for the beſt.

Lyra. Here Lyra, although it be expreſly ſaid, eat nothing, neither drink in three dayes, ſayth, that they did not certainly reſtain from all food ſo long a time, for in this there had been no diſcretion, but ſo little once in a day, as was counted nothing towards a good meale, as *Ethic, l.*2. And becauſe, Chap. 5. 1. Eſter is ſaid upon the third day to have gone in unto the King, ſome thinke that three dayes are to be underſtood ſynech-dochically, for two, and part of the third. How Eſter in this time prayed, and how Mordecai, ſee in the adjections to Eſter, Chap. 13, 14. which are in the Septuagint Xiſti, inſerted into *Chap.*4. Junius renders it, The third day being compleat or ended, but in Hebrew it is upon the third day.

The Myſtery. Myſtically, Mordecai his mourning, ſetteth forth the ſorrow of faithfull Paſtors for the flock, in the times of perſecution, when both they and the people pray earneſtly one for another, as Mordecai and Eſter did, and Paul for the Epheſians, and willed them to pray for him. And Mordecai cryeth at the Court gate, when Lyra. the Paſtor prayeth earneſtly in Gods houſe, whereas Lyra would have Eſter to repreſent the Church triumphant, and gathereth by Mordecai his ſeeking to her to petition the King, that we ſhould ſeeke to the Saints in heaven, and pray that in their praying for us they may prevaile, it is altogether from the ſcope of this place, unleſſe we will ſtraine Hiſtories to Allegories contrary to Scripture, ſeeing Eſay 63.16. Eſay rejects praying to any departed, and reſtrains it to God alone.

CHAP. V.

Verſ.1. QUeen Eſter being prepared by faſting and prayer, now adorneth her ſelfe royally, to put the more grace upon her, and to incline the Kings affection unto her, and ſo goeth into the inner Court, next to the place where the Kings Throne was right againſt the door, ſo that he might ſee ſuch as came in, and if he Verſ.2. pleaſed call any unto him, otherwiſe not one might preſume to enter upon pain of death, and he uſed to call by holding out his golden Scepter towards the party called.
To Eſter therefore, ſo ſoon as he ſaw her, he held out this Scepter, and ſhee drew neare and kiſſed it for reverence to the King, ſo that Eſters devotion was not without effect: for God being hereby inclined to pitty his people ready to periſh, inclined the Kings heart towards her ſo ſoon as he ſaw her, which is expreſly ſaid, Chap. 15. The Queen in her royall apparrell went with two maids through all the doors of the inner Court, leaning upon the one, and her train being born up by the other, but then ſeeing the King in his glory, looking with a terrible countenance ſhee fainted, and her colour changed, this the King ſeeing, God ſodainly changed his minde to mildneſſe, and deſcending from the Throne, imbraced Ioſephus. her and kiſſed her, &c. thus alſo Joſephus, but the Hebrew Text ſaith no more, but that he reached out his golden Scepter to her, and ſpake to her comfortably, Verſ.3. asking what her Petition was, and promiſed to grant it to the halfe of his Kingdom.
Verſ.4. She then deſired that he and Haman would come to a Banket which ſhe had prepared that day. And herein ſhe did wiſely, becauſe ſhe knew that the King delighted in feaſting and bankets, and therefore ſhe hoped by this means ſo to win him, that her requeſt ſhould be granted the more eaſily when he ſhould be merry with wine. Moreover, Haman was not then preſent, and ſo it was no fit time to open her requeſt, and others haply were preſent, who ſhe was unwilling ſhould heare it. But the Eunuchs were by and by ſent to haſten Haman to this feaſt, and ſo both the King and he came. But whether it were to a dinner or a ſupper ſome queſtion, they that are for a dinner urge the time that was after it the ſame day, for Haman to goe home and to conſult with his friends about Mordecai,
and

and to provide a gallows for him the ſame day: Joſephus ſayth, it was to a ſupper, but it is more probable that it was neyther, but a banket in the afternoon, as the manner is at this day, and after it Haman might well doe all thoſe things. Verſ.6. The King being merry with wine asketh her; what her Petition was, making a large promiſe as before. She again being by this ſecond offer further confirmed, yet wiſely deferreth to open it, till the next day partly, that Hamans fall might be the greater, from ſuch ſingular favours wherein he ſeemed to be both with the King and Queen, as none other Prince was, to the extraordinary rejoycing of his heart, to be put to ſuch an ignominious death, to the terrour of all ſuch enemies of the Jews as he was. And it is not to be doubted, but that a ſingular providence of God wrought herein, that the exaltation of Mordecai might intervene, as here followeth: for this could not but be taken by the Queen as bonum omen in reſpect of the Jews cauſe which ſhe had in hand, ſeeing he was a Jew, and the moſt of all others ſpighted by Haman, and deareſt to her, ſo that ſhe might the next day with more aſſurance proceed to her Petition.

Verſ.9. Haman by this ſecond invitement, was caſt into a fools paradiſe, for he went home moſt joyfully and told his wife and his friends of his ſurpaſſing glory, ſo as that the other Princes of the Empire might well envie him, but not one of them come neare him. But the more proud he grew upon this, the more irreſpective was Mordecai of him, for now he would not onely not bow the knee, but not riſe up unto him from the place where he ſate, becauſe he knew that he machinated the deſtruction both of him and his people. At this Haman was ſo vexed, that he had not ſo much joy of all his honour, as griefe and diſquiet in his minde therefore, ſo that all ſeemed nothing to him. Note. Such is the miſery of men in worldly honour, which ſheweth that it is not worthy the deſiring, for ſuch bitterneſſe is often mixed with it, by meanes even of the pooreſt and moſt abject, that there is no true pleaſure in it, and it is alſo moſt uncertain, and ſoon turned into the greateſt diſhonour, as is proved by this preſent example.

Verſ.14. His wife and other friends being made privie to this his griefe, adviſed him to cauſe preſently a gallows to be made 50 cubits high, that Mordecai might the next day be hanged upon it, and this was prepared accordingly. So Haman was let goe on in his malice, till it came to the higheſt, and Mordecai let come even to the pits brink, ſo that there was but one night betwixt him and a ſhamefull death, Note. and then opportunely God ſtrook in by his providence and ſaved him, and confounded the other, as the ſix and ſeventh Chapters ſheweth: and thus let every godly perſon comfort himſelfe againſt the practices of the malicious, when yet he ſeeth not how he may poſſibly eſcape, for God ſeeth, and let the proud and malicious feare, that when all things ſucceed according to their hearts deſire, for the effecting of their malicious ends, the miſchiefe which they plot againſt others, ſhall fall upon their own pates ſodainly.

The gallows was made ſo high, ſayth Lyra, to put Mordecai to the more ſhame, when he ſhould be hanged upon it to be ſeen by the more all about. Lyra.

The Myſtery. Myſtically, the Queens inviting the King to a banket, prefigured the Churches communicating with the King of Kings in the Lords Supper, unto which Haman alſo comming prefigured Julian the Apoſtate, who was at the firſt a Chriſtian, but he had a falſe heart towards Chriſtians who are the people of God, and perſecuted them all, in particular, his ſpleen was moſt againſt Baſilius a Biſhop, that would not obey his ſacrilegious commands, in ſo much as that he threatned at his return from fighting againſt the Perſians to deſtroy his City and people, but God by cutting him off firſt prevented it.

CHAP. VI.

IN the night before the ſecond feaſting day in the morning, whereof Mordecai ſhould have been hanged, God would not give Ahaſhueroſh any ſleepe. Wherefore as a means to bring him into a ſleep he would have the Annals read unto him, wherein the notable things happening in every Kings reigne were ſet down, and it was read to that which was recorded touching Mordecai, Chap. 2. 23. and this ſpecially, as tending to the comfort of his faithfull ſervant, God would have read and marked by the King at this time, not ſuffering any ſleep to come upon him till the morning. And having asked and heard, that nothing had been done to Mordecai in way of recompence for that his good ſervice, he ſtudied a while with himſelfe, what he ſhould doe for him. Then Haman comming into the inner Court, the King calls for him, and after ſome conſultation about the honour to be done to him, whom the King would honour, he ſtreightly charged him to doe it to Mordecai. And he having done it, with an heavie heart went home, ſorrowing and aſhamed, which is ſhewed in ſaying, with his head covered. And then both his Counſellours and wife and all could read his deſtiny, that if Mordecai, before whom he had begun to fall, were a Jew, he ſhould by his means be brought to utter ruine.

Lyra. Touching Mordecai not hitherto rewarded, Lyra ſayth, that he was upon that occaſion brought into the Court to wait for a reward, but it being now ſix years ſince, he had none. But this is contrary to the Text, Chap. 2. where it is ſaid, that he ſat at the Kings gate, before that he diſcovered the treaſon againſt the King, wherefore it is not to be thought that he waited there that he might be rewarded, but to be neare unto the Queen, that he might heare of her, and ſhee of him, and have directions from him from time to time, what to doe for the beſt, and that his exaltation came unexpectedly.

Verſ.4. The time of the night wearing away, and the day comming on, whilſt it was read unto him, and he talked with thoſe about him touching Mordecai, Haman commeth to the Court early, but to no good for him ſelfe, according to the proverb, Ioſephus. Early vp and never the nearer. At that inſtant, ſayth Ioſephus, the King asked his ſervants attending about him, what time of day it was, and they telling him that it was day light, he bad one ſee, which of his Counſellours was come, for hee thought long to adviſe with him about the rewarding of Mordecai: for as the ſame Author alſo ſayth, in reading ſome notable acts done by ſome others, had been recited before, and how each one was rewarded, but touching Mordecai, nothing was recorded to have been done for him, which made the King to aske about it, And in that the Courtiers about him anſwered nothing, but plainly, he had no reward, whereby the King might bethink himſelfe of ſome way of remuneration. It may well be noted, as a ſingular providence of God, ſeeing Note. Courtiers commonly envie the preferment of one another, as thinking it prejudiciall to their own, that none ſpake a word againſt him, as a Jew, and moſt undutifull to Prince Haman, ſo contrary to the Kings charge, which might have been a bar to him, to keep him from preferment.

To the King asking about his Counſellours, it was anſwered, that Haman Verſ.5. was come, and therefore when he had commanded him to be called in, he asked, what ſhould be done to the man whom the King would honour. He anſwered, Verſ.6,7,8. that he ſhould be clad with royall robes, he ſhould have the Crown ſet upon his head, and ride upon the Kings own horſe, &c. thinking nothing leſſe, then that the King would honour Mordecai, his enemy, yea, preſuming, that this ſhould be done to himſelfe, as being in greateſt favour. But now it falling out contrary, and the King giving him ſo great a charge to doe it preſently to Mordecai, without failing in any thing, he was ſo ſtricken, that without replying a word, he went and did as the King had commanded. But as Ioſephus hath it, when he came to Mordecai clad in ſackcloth, with a purple robe, Crown, and the Kings horſe, bidding him to put off his ſackcloth, and to put on that robe and Crown, he thinking that he mocked him, anſwered with indignation, Thou moſt wicked man, doeſt thou thus inſult over the miſerable, but when he had told him that indeed it was the Kings pleaſure that it ſhould thus be done to him, he put them on, and being mounted upon the horſe, he rod through the City, Haman proclaiming before him, Thus ſhall it be done to the man whom the King will honour. And it was the higheſt honour indeed that could be done to a man in this world, who was a ſubject, as Haman knew well enough, and therefore his ambition carryed him on Lyra. unto it, although in his ſeeking it, he miſerably failed. Hereby ſayth Lyra, he ſhewed, that he aſpired after the Kingdom, becauſe none elſe but the King, can have the Kings Crown put upon his head. Wherefore the King alſo, in anſwering to the things by him propounded, ſaid, take the robe and the horſe, as thou haſt ſaid, but of the Crown he makes no mention, it being hereby intimated, that he would honour no man ſo, no more then in ſetting him in his Throne, whereas, *Chap.*8.15. it is ſayd, that Mordecai came forth wearing a Crown of gold, that was another which a Prince might weare, but not the Kngs Crown.

Verſ.12. Haman having done to Mordecai as the King commanded, he returned to the Kings gate, but Haman with his head covered to his own houſe, as being now aſhamed to look any body in the face. For he had done that which vexed him extreamly, yet durſt he doe no otherwiſe, in ſuch awe had thoſe great Kings, the greateſt of their ſubjects. What Mordecai did with his royall robes and horſe after this it is not ſaid, but onely that he returned to his old place, and as ſome thinke, to his old habit again, but it is rather probable, that he now left that off, being full of hope, that as God had heard his Prayers to bring him out of danger, and to high honour, ſo he ſhould now be able to help his brethren the Jews out of theirs alſo. For the ornaments and the Kings horſe no doubt, but that he which brought them for Mordecai his uſe, took order to have them reſtored again. Verſ.13. Haman being come home ſo full of ſhame, found little comfort there; for his friends and wife hearing what had been done, ſayd, that if Mordecai before whom Lyra. he had begun to fall, were of the bloud of the Jews, he ſhould fall yet more before him. We need not here with the Hebrew gloſſe, cited by Lyra, deviſe this as a reaſon, why they ſayd ſo, viz. becauſe they had read in the Hiſtory of the Jews, which they had in the Perſian tongue, that God promiſed Abraham, that his ſeed ſhould be as the ſtars of heaven, and another time ſayd, that they ſhould be as the duſt of the earth, ſo that they hence gathered, that when they were not brought to nothing as the duſt, they ſhould be moſt highly exalted as the ſtars, for any man in reaſon could not but conjecture ſo much as they ſayd, all the premiſes conſidered, and haply they ſpake herein by an inſtinct of the Spirit, as Balaam had done for his greater terrour, before he came actually to ſuffer the greateſt extremity, unleſſe with ſome we ſhall imagine, theſe his friends to have been Wizzards, with whom he uſed to conſult, and into whoſe mouth the devill put this anſwer, for this is not improbable, ſeeing ſome ſuch were before uſed by him to caſt lots to finde out a luckie day.

Verſ.14. Whilſt they were thus talking, the Eunuchs came and haſtened Haman to Eſters feaſt, in Hebrew, They haſtened to make him goe, which implyeth, that he delayed, and would gladly have been excuſed, as fearing now that it would be a fatall feaſt to him.

The Myſtery: Myſtically, Ahaſhueroſh his not ſleeping, prefigured the Lords not ſleeping any longer, as now he may ſeem to doe, becauſe hee raiſeth not up himſelfe yet to reward the righteous, and to puniſh all the wicked. But the time ſhall come when he will not ſleep thus, but awake and remember the fidelity of the righteous, and honour them with robes and crowns of glory, making them to ride upon the heavens, as a moſt royall horſe, and that publikely in the view of the world, and then every Haman, that is, wicked man, ſhall be put to confuſion for ever.

CHAP. VII.

Verſ.1,2. THe King and Haman being come the ſecond day to Eſters feaſt, he asked again what her petition was. Verſ.3. Then ſhee declareth that it was for her life, and the life of her people, being ready otherwiſe all to periſh, and that vvas by the cruell Decree ſent out in the Kings name by Haman into all parts of the Empire, ſeeing all the Jevvs vvere thereby to be deſtroyed, vvithout excepting any, and ſo the Queen her ſelſe vvas alſo in danger, for ſo much as ſhee vvas a Jevv.

Verſ.4. Then ſhee amplifieth her Petition, by ſaying, that if they had been ſold for ſervants and hand-maids ſhee vvould have been ſilent, becauſe the enemy meditated nothing to the damage of the King, the vulgar Latine, but now he is our enemy, whoſe cruelty redounds to the King, the meaning is, that ſhe and her people would have patiently endured any abatement, if the Decree ſent out had been to no other end, but that they ſhould have been made bond ſlaves, money comming into the Kings coffers for them, that ſo he might not have been put to loſſe, as he muſt needs be by their deſtruction, whereby ſo many thouſand of his ſubjects muſt periſh at once, and ſo much Tribute which was now yearly received from theſe, be extinguiſhed, and he muſt loſe his dear wife, and faithfull ſubject Mordecai, by whoſe care he had once been preſerved. But now if they were thus taken away, what could be expected next but the loſſe of his own life and Kingdom alſo, by this enemies treachery, that he might attain unto it. So that Eſters petition when ſhe came to utter it, could not but greatly affect the King, to ſtir up his wrath againſt him that attempted this, whatſoever, and how dear ſoever unto him he was. And according to this expoſition, the King declareth the foulneſſe of Hamans attempt, in his letters written to reverſe the former, Chap. 16. 11, 12, 13, 14. that he thought thus to deſtroy Mordecai that ſaved him, and therefore was moſt dear unto him, and his beloved and innocent Queen, and to take his life away alſo, and to tranſlate his Kingdom to the Macedonians, according to his ſtyling of him, *Haman the Macedonian, Ver.*10.

Lyra. R. Solomon yet expounds this otherwiſe, as Lyra ſheweth, but rejects it, viz. he meditated nothing which ſtood with the profit of the King, but againſt it, becauſe if the Jews had been appointed by him to be ſold, much treaſure would have thus come in to the King, or if they had been made to work as ſervants for him, great profit might hence have redounded to him, as did ſomtimes to Pharoah, when by ſuch means he had diverſe ſtrong Cities built him, but by the utter deſtruction of them none at all.

Verſ.5. The King hearing the Queens complaint, enquired with all earneſtneſſe who this was, ſhe anſwered, wicked Haman, he was preſently confounded, and was no more able to look either King or Queen in the face.

Verſ.7. And becauſe the King could not endure to look upon him any more, as is moſt probable he went out into the garden in a great chafe, but by and by he returning

Verſ.8. again, and finding Haman upon the bed where the Queen ſate, laying hold upon her with ſuppliant hands to move her to mercie, his wrath being now ſo great that he conſtured all things to the worſt, he challenged him for going about to force her, and immediatly his face was covered, as ſome ſay, the manner was, when the King of Perſia was moſt highly offended, that he would not look upon ſuch a man any more, but would have him counted unworthy to look upon him, his face was covered, and this was a certain forerunner of being put to a ſhamefull death.

Verſ.9. The King then being told of the Gallows prepared by him for Mordecai, commanded that he ſhould be hanged thereon, that is, not unto death onely, but being fixed to it with nails, to abide there to his greater ignominy, to expreſſe which, the Septuagint renders it; let him be crucified, and ſo the curſe of Darius, Ezra 6.11. Let the timber of his houſe be taken, and let him be hanged by crucifying upon it, was in Haman fulfilled now, and ſoon after in his ſons, ſee alſo what the King ſayth of crucifying him, *Chap.*8.7.

Note. When the Queen petitioned againſt Haman, ſhee knew nothing of this Gallows, but it is to be noted, how that for the greater confuſion of the wicked, vvhen the time of their judgement commeth for one horrible ſin, God vvill have more brought to light, that they may the more condignly be deſtroyed. For this did not a little aggravate his ſinne, vvhich vvas brought to light by an Eunuch ſtanding by, that he had prepared to hang up Mordecai to the reproach of the King, to whom he had ſhewen ſo great fidelity to the ſaving of his life, and that at the time when the King would conſult what honour to doe unto him therefore. And upon this followed another, as it was taken, his attempting the oppreſſion of the Queen, and that in the Kings own houſe, before his face,

The Myſtery. Myſtically, by Hamans comming with the King to the feaſt, we may underſtand the wicked communicating with the Lord in the Euchariſt, but it is to their own judgement and damnation. Hamans petitioning to the Queen upbraided, as an oppreſſion of her, ſhewed that the petitions of the wicked ſuing for mercie at the laſt day, ſhall be ſo far from prevailing, as that they ſhall be taken for oppreſſions, the great Judge being hereby provoked to wrath the more.

CHAP. VIII.

Verſ.1. IN that day Ahaſhuetoſh gave to Eſter the houſe of Haman, as being forfeited to him by his heynous crimes, that is, all his eſtate, as it is commonly underſtood, Joſephus ſayth, all his ſubſtance, and ſhee ſet Mordecai over it, and when ſhee had made known that he was her uncles ſonne, to the King, he would have him enter in to ſtand before him, as one of his moſt honourable Counſellours, yea, and preferred him to be the chiefe of them all, as he had done Haman, in token whereof he committed his Ring, wherewith his letters uſed to be ſealed, unto him, as he had formerly done to Haman, but now had cauſed it to be taken away again for the great wickedneſſe which he found in him, and ſo Mordecai that ſate before at the Kings gate, as one of his Guard, as ſome think, was ſuddainly advanced to be Keeper of the Kings Seal, that is, Lord Chancellour of all the Empire, and ſo the ſecond to the King, and chief Ruler over the Queens eſtate. Note. Thus light ſomtimes breaks out of darkneſſe, the higheſt honour ſucceedeth the greateſt debaſement and miſery, for the comfort and confirmation of all Gods faithfull ſervants, with whom it ſhall be done likewiſe in the end, whereof not onely Mordecai, but alſo, Joſeph, Job, David, &c. have been made examples unto us.

Verſ.3. Haman being now hanged, and Mordecai advanced, Eſter falling down before the King with tears, he reached out his golden Scepter again unto her, and then ſhee petitioned, that the Letters written by Haman might be reverſed, by other Letters ſealed with the Kings Seal, that her people the Jews in all parts of the Empire, might thus be delivered out of danger, which was immediately granted, and ſo Letters were written, that the former Letters ſent out by the device of wicked Haman ſhould not ſtand, and becauſe, as Pellican ſayth, Pellican. it might be ſuppoſed, that ſome being moſt infeſt enemies of the Jews, would notwithſtanding theſe, beare themſelves upon the former, and ſo riſe in Arms to deſtroy the Jews at the day appointed, authority was by theſe letters given unto the Jews, to aſſemble together and uniting their forces to deſtroy ſuch enemies. For it could not be, but that they being a peculiar people, divers from all others, muſt needs have much hatred amongſt Idolaters, that gaped after an opportuuity of deſtroying them and their Religion, when they dwelt in other Kingdoms, as well as they had in times paſt, when they abode yet in their own.

Verſ.9. And theſe Letters of reverſe were written in the third moneth called Sinan, the 23 day, and ſo ſent abroad with all ſpeed throughout the Empire in their ſeverall languages, that all might underſtand them: ſo that from the writing of the former Letters unto the time of the writing of theſe had paſſed two moneths and ten days, wherein Haman triumphed and the Jews mourned, but now contrariwiſe, Haman being cut off, his wife, children, friends and all that in their hearts conſented to his wicked plot mourned, and the Jews rejoyced. If it be here demanded, why the ſending out of theſe Letters was ſo long deferred? It may be conceived, that after the power obtained, and Mordecai his exaltation, no more haſte was made, becauſe there was time enough before the day appointed in the firſt Letters for execution, viz. nine moneths.

But how could this new Decree be ſafely publiſhed now, ſeeing the enemies of the Jews were many, and it might be feared, that upon the hearing of it they might prevent that day, and riſe up againſt the Ievvs and kill them up before.

Sol. I vvill not anſvver to this vvith ſome, that either they vvere immediately upon the comming out of theſe Letters, taken and put by the Magiſtrates in ſafe cuſtody againſt that day, or that theſe Letters vvent ſecretly into every place, none knovving of them, but the Ievvs and Magiſtrates in every place. For ver. 11.

it is ſayd, that they ſhould deſtroy all their enemies that invaded them upon that day, wherefore they were not before in hold neither could they, becauſe they were not known till that time. And Verſ. 17. Many of the people of the Land turned Jews, becauſe the fear of the Jews was upon them, therefore they knew what Decree was ſent out againſt the Jews enemies. The true anſwer then is, that God, by whoſe power this was brought about, wrought in their hearts, that they durſt not ſtir till the day appointed, and the meanes whereby he thus contained them, was the Kings authority, whereby one day was ſet, which they durſt not tranſgreſſe for feare of the King, beyond whoſe decrees not one durſt goe, ſee ver.8. and becauſe the Jewiſh Nation was ſo magnified in Mordecai, they feared to doe any thing againſt it, and becauſe the Magiſtrates alſo every where tooke their part, Chap. 9.2,3. But yet it is to be thought, that many who were blinded with malice againſt the Jews, cared not for taking notice of theſe laſt Letters, and that they who went out with them were not ſo much directed to give all men notice, as the Jews in particular and their well willers, whom it moſt concerned to know it. But how can it be juſtified, that without any legall proceeding ſo many ſhould be Verſ.5. ſlain by their fellow ſubjects of the ſame Kingdom, and that not onely men, but their wives and children, as verſ. 11. amongſt whom ſome doubtleſſe were innocent? Sol. For ſlaying them without proceeding by Law, it was but as naturall reaſon bids any man to doe, when the ſupreme power eſpecially giveth leave, Vim vi repellere, to kill him, that would kill him. And for wives and children, ſeeing Gods hand was both in the motion, making for this, and executing the judgement. The juſtice thereof is not to be queſtioned, but he is to be looked at, that formerly would have all deſtroyed both male and female in Canaan, and deſtroyed them together in Egypt by his ſtupendious judgements.

Verſ. 15. Then Mordecai went forth attyred with ſilkes, and a Crown of gold, and great joy was in the City, that is, amongſt the Jews, verſ.16. and likewiſe in every Province, verſ.17. they that for feare turned Jews, did it by turning to their Religion, and becomming Proſelytes.

The Myſtery. Myſtically, Hamans houſe is given to Eſter, when Chriſtians poſſeſſe thoſe Countries which the Gentiles formerly poſſeſſed, and Mordecai commeth to ſtand in the preſence of the King, when faithfull ſouls departing hence, attain places in the Kingdome of heaven. Mordecai is ſet over Eſters houſe, when the righteous are exalted in the Church, and Eſter falleth down before the King, when the faithfull pray importunately for the deliverance of her brethren out of danger in time of perſecution, as prayers were made by the Church for Peter when he was in Priſon. Mordecai commeth forth in glorious apparell, when the Governours of the Church ſhine in vertue, and at the exaltation of ſuch, all the people of God rejoyce.

CHAP. IX.

Verſ.1. THe thirteenth day of the moneth Adar being come, the Iews did execution upon their enemies in all parts, neither durſt any of them reſiſt, ſeeing the very Verſ.2,3. Rulers in every place honoured the Iews, and ſo did not hinder but further them herein, through that awe in which they ſtood of Mordecai, who was ſo great and ſo famous. Wherefore, whilſt thouſands of their enemies were deſtroyed by their hands, not one of them periſhed.

The number of them which were ſlain in Shuſhan onely were 500, beſides the Verſ.6. ten ſonnes of Haman here named. But ſeeing it is ſayd, *Chap.*16.18. that Haman and all his family vvas hanged, vvhen the ſecond Decree for the Ievvs vvent out: Sallianus. Hovv could they be ſlain novv? Some labour to reconcile it by ſaying, that all the reſt vvere then hanged, both ſonnes, and daughters, and vvife, but theſe ten vvere kept in priſon to be novv executed, but hovv good a reconcilement this is, let the Reader judge, all his family vvas hanged, and yet ten ſonnes of his, vvho, moſt probably vvere the greateſt part, not, and the reſt hanged, vvithout any order before taken, but theſe not, till Eſter had deſired it in particular, after their death, ver.13. The truth is, that this and other errours, occurring in thoſe Chapters added evince, that they were not written by the inſpiration of the Spirit, but by ſome inconſiderate man, that had not ſuch a care to write onely the truth, and therefore neither they nor any other Apochryphalls are ſufficient for to ground our faith upon.

Verſ.9. It is further here recorded, as a thing worth the noting, that when the Jews had ſlain their enemies, they laid not their hands upon the prey, as they were allowed to doe, Chap.8.11. But they refrained, leſt it ſhould be thought, that they ſlew them not out of zeale for Gods glory (that his power might be magnified, who appeared hereby able to bring it thus about, that the day appointed for their deſtruction, was turned into a day of their deſtroying their enemies in ſo great numbers) but out of a greedy deſire of inriching themſelves with their ſpoils. Thus Lyra, but whereas he alſo addeth, and leſt the King ſhould be offended, if they ſhould have taken the ſpoils to themſelves, that ought to have gone into the Kings Treaſury, as confiſcated goods, it ſtandeth not with reaſon, ſith there could be no danger of ſuch offence taking, conſidering his free grant made unto them, and the like may be ſayd to that other reaſon yielded by Junius, becauſe they remembred the Law, that children ſhall not beare the iniquity of their fathers, for this is in caſe that the deſtroying of them be not particularly enjoyned, as in the caſe of Achan, the Canaanites, and in this preſent caſe, Chap.8.11. Lyra. Iunius.

Verſ.10,11. This deſtruction being made of the Jews enemies, upon the 13 day of the moneth Adar, the number of them that were ſlain in Shuſhan was indeed brought to the King, then he telling his Queen Eſter, that 500 men, had been ſlain that day in Shuſhan onely, and alſo Hamans ten ſonnes, asked her, what ſhee deſired more, then ſhee petitioned that the Iews might doe the next day as they had done that day, and that Hamans ſonne, might be hanged up, which was done accordingly, and ſo there fell in the City of Shuſhan 300 more upon the 14 day. Hamans ten ſonnes moſt probably were of the ſame malicious ſpirit againſt the Iews with their wicked father, and were counſellours alſo of evill things againſt them, and therfore the Queen would have the ſame diſgrace done unto them after they were dead. The Hebrews, as Lyra hath it, in their Cedar Olam, ſay, that that Hamans ſonnes were thus uſed, becauſe they were of the counſell of the Samaritans, who hindered the building of the Temple in the dayes of Cyrus his ſonne, whom they will have to be this Ahaſuerus, becauſe he is thus called, Eſter 4. but becauſe he reigned onely eight or nine years, and we have already heard in this book, of the 13 yeare of this King, that is, a manifeſt errour. They were not then hanged up for ſuch counſell giving, but becauſe their father had been the moſt notorious enemy of the Iews, to make the puniſhment of his family above all others the moſt notable. But was not this a moſt bloudy minde in Eſter, to deſire that another day ſhould be ſpent in killing and ſlaying? Sol. Haply ſhee was informed that many remained ſtill of the Iews enemies in that City, who would yet ſeeke to be revenged for the firſt dayes bloudſhed, and had ſpoken ſome threatning words to that effect, wherefore that the work of deſtroying their enemies might not be left imperfect, ſhee petitioned thus the ſecond time. Moreover, as Pellican ſayth, man is not ſo much to be looked at herein, as God whoſe judgements are always juſt, though ſomtimes ſecret. He moved both the King to make a ſecond offer to Eſter, and her to requeſt this, for the greater confuſion of the Iews wicked enemies, in the place, where by the inſtigation of Haman and his ſonnes, they had moſt probably carryed themſelves moſt inſolently againſt them. Lyra. Pellican.

Verſ.15. The ſlaughter made in Shuſhan in two dayes being thus diſtinctly recorded, the Hiſtory now proceedeth to ſhew, that in other parts of the Empire there were ſlain 75000, but no prey taken in any place, and that all upon one day, viz. the 13 of Adar, and ſo upon the 14, they in thoſe parts kept a day of feaſting and rejoycing, but they in Shuſhan upon the 15 day, becauſe they were buſied in ſlaying their enemies both upon the 13 and 14 dayes.

Verſ.19. The feſtivall being once voluntarily kept by all the Iews in all parts, Mordecai wrote it, and other things contained in this Hiſtory, in a book, and ſent it to the Iews diſperſed every where, enjoyning them to keepe the 14 and 15 of the moneth Adar from year to year, perpetually as dayes of feaſting and rejoycing, that the miraculous deliverance which God had wrought for them might never be forgotten. And hereupon Expoſitours generally gather, that Mordecai wrote this book of Eſter, and not ſhee, although it be called by her name, for it is thus called, onely, becauſe ſhee is the chiefe ſubject of this book.

Verſ.26. According to Mordecai his writing, the Jews bound themſelves and their children for ever to keepe the feaſt of Purim from year to year, and alſo all that were of their Religion. But becauſe no mention is here made of any thankſgiving that ſhould then be uſed, or commemoration made of the deliverance by reading this Hiſtory, or exhortation to truſt in God in all times of ſtreights, from the experience at this time had of his goodneſſe, but onely of feaſting and joy. Pellican. Pellican thinketh, that from hence to the end, what is written, came from the pen of ſome other man, who was not guided by the Spirit of God, but wrote after the manner of men. But to hold thus, touching any part of Canonicall Scripture, is of dangerous conſequence, ſeeing by the like reaſon, when any paſſage miſliketh us, we may ſay, this came not from the Spirit of God, and ſo all ſhall be made ſubject to mens cavils. 2 Tim.3.16. And we have a more ſure word to truſt unto, which ſayth, That all Scripture is of divine inſpiration, and the exception taken to this is very weake, for even feaſts ordained by God, are many of them not ſet forth with ſuch circumſtances of reading and exhortation as he ſpeaketh of, it being preſumed that at all ſuch times the piety in Gods people will ſtir them to theſe things, as whereunto they are obliged, upon all opportunities offered.

Verſ.28. After the writing ſent by Mordecai, a ſecond Epiſtle for further confirmation was alſo ſent both by Eſter and Mordecai, and this was done, as the Hebrew Chronicle ſayth, a yeare after the firſt, and hereby they were required, not onely to keepe a feſtivall, but before it always upon the 13 day, a faſt with weeping and crying, as they had done before their deliverance. And this ſeemeth not to be without ground in this ſecond Epiſtle, becauſe ver. 30, 31. Verſ.30,31. it is ſayd, that the Iews took upon them to keepe the Purim dayes with joy, and to obſerve and keepe faſtings and crying before them, and that this might never be forgotten, it was written in a book, *verſ.*32. Yet in the dayes of the Machabees, 2 Machab.15.37. the 13 uſed before to faſting, was turned upon a new occaſion into a day of feaſting alſo. And ſome write, that in times long after, the Iews uſed upon the dayes of Purim, when this Hiſtory was read, to make noiſes with voyces and knockings, as being moved with great indignation at the hearing of Hamans attempts, and then to take up a croſſe, repreſenting that whereupon Haman was hanged, and after they had ſome time carryed it about, to burn it. And not much unlike unto this, had they a cuſtome ſince the crucifying of our Lord, to carry about and burne a croſſe in deſpight of him and his Chriſtians, as may be gathered by the Decree of Arcadius, and Honorius Emperours, Cod. de Iudæis & cœlicolis. Let the Governours of Provinces forbid the Iews uſing to carry about a croſs, and burning it in remembrance of Hamans puniſhment, to the contempt of Chriſt and Chriſtians; ſo to doe any more, or to mingle any thing of ours with their rites, or elſe they ſhall not be permitted as hitherto they have been.

The Myſtery. Myſtically, by the execution done upon the Iews enemies, underſtand the deſtruction of all the wicked at the laſt day, for which there ſhall be perpetuall joy and gladneſſe in heaven, as is further expreſſed, Revel. 19.

CHAP. X.

Verſ.1. AFter this Ahaſhuerosh laid a Tribute upon the Countrey and Iſles of the Sea. This is thought generally by Expoſitours, to have been done to make preparation againſt Greece, the parts whereof having a long time held peace one with another, began now to be formidable to the Perſian King. But the Iews, as Junius conjectureth, were free from this tribute, Iunius. becauſe Herodotus writing of it ſayth, that a Countrey neare unto Arabia was exempt herefrom.

Verſ.3. As for Mordecai, as his preferment was great ſo he continued in it, being always dear to the King, and highly eſteemed of amongſt the Jews, as he was well worthy, for his conſtant indeavouring to procure good to all his ſeed, that is, to all his Nation.

The ſix Chapters added were made, as Lyra thinketh, by Joſephus, or ſome other eloquent man, who could eaſily deviſe both the forme of a Decree, firſt againſt the Jews, and then for them, and with more words ſet forth the hiſtory of the manner of Eſters going in to the King, feigning many things of his own, as alſo Jerom ſpeaketh. To leave them therefore, as alſo the other Books of Ezra or Eſdras, wee may couclude this Booke with the myſtery in Mordecay and Eſter. 1 In his refuſing to worſhip Haman, was prefigured, Chriſts refuſing to worſhip the Devill. 2 Mordecai diſcovered the two Eunuchs, who probably were ſet on by Haman that he might get the Empire, and ſo they were hanged, but Haman ſtill ſurvived to increaſe his malice, in like manner, Chriſt by his Doctrine diſcovered the machinations of the world and the fleſh againſt his Kingdom, ſo that they cannot deſtroy it, but are mortified to all the truly godly, the Devill yet, as Haman ſurviving, to practiſe againſt it. 3 Mordecai was honoured by his moſt deadly enemie, ſo Chriſt by the Devill, when he cryed out, I know thee who thou art, &c. 4 Mordecai was advanced, and Haman put down, when he laboured to hang Mordecai, ſo the Devill that was honoured formerly in Idols with divine honour, as Haman with kingly, after he had conſpired the death of Chriſt by crucifying, ſoon fell with his Idolatry by vertue of the Goſpel, and was made contemptible to all men, and Chriſt became in all places honourable. 5 Mordecai receiveth the Kings Seale, and power to reverſe Hamans Letters, by writing others inſtead thereof, ſo Chriſt put out the hand-writing that was againſt his people, and faſtened it to his croſſe. 6 Mordecai was arrayed in ſhining ſilks, and with a Crown of gold, ſo Chriſt his garments ſhone upon the Mount, and he was crowned as the great Kings ſonne, when the voyce came from heaven ſaying, This is my beloved ſonne. 7 Mordecai inſtituted a feaſt in remembrance of this deliverance, ſo Chriſt, the holy Communion.

Hieron. Prolog. in Eſt.

The Myſtery of Mordecai.

Col. 2.14.

2 Pet. 1.17.

Now touching Eſter, that which the Jeſuites apply in her to the Virgin Mary, may well be applyed to the Church, as being in the Church moſt true, but in the Virgin Mary, ſuppoſititious, onely without all ground for the moſt part. 1 Eſter obeyed Mordecai as her father, ſo the Church Chriſt even after ſo high an exaltation to be wife unto the great King of heaven. 2 Eſter was choſen of God to confound Haman, and to ſuccour the poore Jews ready to periſh, ſo the Church by prayer. 3 A great Feaſt was made at the marriage of Eſter, and tributes were remitted, ſo at the converſion of the Gentiles, there was a great Feaſt of joy, all mens ſins who were true beleevers, being forgiven them. 4 The King loved Eſter ſo, that he bid her aske what ſhe would, once, twice, thrice, ſo Chriſt loveth his Church, that he biddeth, Aske and yee ſhall have, 2 Seeke and yee ſhall finde, 3 Knock and it ſhall be opened to you. 5 Eſter obtained ſuch favour with the King, that when he was terrible to all others, yet he courteouſly received her approaching, ſo God being terrible to the Jews, and to all the wicked in his judgements, yet to the Church of the godly he is kinde and meeke. 6 Eſter wrote together with Mordecai, to ſtir up to praiſe God, and keepe a remembrance of his goodneſſe, ſo the Church ſeconds the charge given to all Gods people, always to remember the paſſions of Chriſt, by celebrating the moſt holy Feaſt of the Euchariſt for ever.

Anno Mundi 3539.

A CONTINUATION OF THE HISTORY,

From Anno 40 of ARTAXERXES, in which NEHEMIAH endeth, untill the comming of CHRIST JESUS.

Anno 3599. *Ioſephus Antiq. lib.*11.7.

Nothing is by any Hiſtorian recorded, touching the affairs of the Iews after Nehemiah, till the time of Ioannes, the ſonne of Iuda, the ſonne of Eliaſib the High-prieſt, who, ſayth Ioſephus, had a brother called Jeſus, to whom Bagoſes, the Generall of all the Perſian forces, being a friend promiſed to give him the High-prieſthood. Hereupon Jeſus carryed himſelfe inſolently againſt his brother in the Temple, provoking him ſo far, that he fell upon him and ſlew him in the Temple. Bagoſes hearing of this was wrath, and going to the Temple upbraided the High-prieſt by this bloudy fact committed in the very Temple, from the like unto which even Heathens abhorred, and therefore when they would have put him back from entring the Temple, leſt it ſhould thus be defiled, hee proceeded ſaying, it is not as much defiled by a body murthered and lying in it, as by my entrance? And by way of penalty he laid upon the Iews 50 drams to be paid every yeare for ſeven years, before they offered their daily ſacrifices. For the reckoning of the time to this I finde nothing in Ioſephus, but Funccius having given to Eliaſib the High-prieſt, that was in the time of Nehemiah, Chap. 13, 4. 41 years puts Iojadah for High-prieſt next unto him, inſtead of Iudas, as Ioſephus calls him, giving unto him 25 years, and after him to this his ſonne Ioannes 24 yeers, reckoning this horrible murther to have been committed, Anno 16 of his pontificality. And the next Duke after Nehemiah over Iudah Ioanna Ben Reſa, 53 yeers, beginning Anno 33 of Eliaſib, then Hircanus, 31, beginning Anno 21 of Ioannes the High-prieſt.

Artax. Anno 35

Contentions in Greece.

*Thucyd.l.*2. & 3.

Within this time Artaxerxes yet reigning over the Perſians, contentions aroſe amongſt the Græcians, whereupon a long war of 27 years followed, called the Peloponeſian warre. There had been indeed peace amongſt them 15 years, but now great ſtriſe aroſe betwixt the two chiefe Cities of Greece, Athens and Lacedemonia. The firſt occaſion whereof according to Thucydides was a conflict between the Thebans and the Bœtians the friends of the Athenians. For the Thebans entering into Platæa a City of Bœtia, tooke it eaſily, although they were but 300 by yeilding, becauſe the Platæans thought that they had been many more, againſt whom, comming upon them on the ſudden, they were unable to ſtand. But in the night, finding out that they were but few, they ſet upon them both men and women, and killing many, tooke 180 priſoners. Then other Thebans comming to reſcue their fellows, took many of the Platæans priſoners, and then agreed with the men of Platæa to exchange them for theirs, the Platæans fraudulently conſented, but would have theirs delivered firſt, promiſing, without delay, to deliver to the Thebans theirs, which they did indeed, but firſt having ſlain them all moſt perfidiouſly. Of this complaint being made to the Lacedemonians, they prepared to be revenged, ſetting out a ſtrong power under Archidamus their Generall and King. But he firſt ſent an Embaſſadour to Athens, the Athenians would not admit of him, nor heare him, unleſſe the forces brought into their confines were firſt withdrawn again. Then Pericles the Captain of the Athenians being glad of this opportunity, perſwaded them to war againſt the Lacedemonians, bringing thoſe things which they had in the fields into the City, and therefore defending themſelves by land, and in the meane ſeaſon to ſend out 100 ſhips againſt the Lacedemonians to Peloponeſus. And to move them the more, he put them in minde of their great power and wealth. And this he did that he might not be called to an account for 8000 talents of the common treaſure committed to his cuſtody, whereof he had waſted much. And according to his advice a Navy was ſent out, even when Archidamus was waſting their corn fields in their ſight, at which the Souldiers in the City had great indignation, that they might not goe out to fight with them. But the Lacedemonians hearing of the great Navy ſent out, returned at the end of the Summer to defend their own, Then a great peſtilence began amongſt the Athenians, deſtroying many of them, whereby they were much weakned, and Pericles made the more unable with his Navy to invade the Peloponeſians. And here Thucydides noteth, that when he was ſetting forth with this Navy the Sun had a great ecclipſe, at which the Governour of the ſhip in which Pericles was, being ſtricken into a feare, he caſting his coat before his face ſaid, that there was no more difference betwixt that which darkened the Sun and his face, but that it was greater. But he proved it by experience to be ominous when ſo many of his men were deſtroyed by this peſtilence. For hee was hereby compelled with the remainder of them to return to Athens, being able to doe nothing by this expedition. Then the Athenians were incenſed againſt him, as author of their miſeries, and putting him from his office, they laid a fine of many talents upon him, and ſent Embaſſadours to the Lacedemonians for peace, but they would not now conſent to any peace, wherefore they ſought againe to Pericles, as being thought the ableſt and wiſeſt Captain that they had, and hee with much perſwaſion uſed by Alcibiades his friend conſented to their requeſt. Then Phormio was ſent out to Peloponeſus with 20 ſhips, but the Plague raging amongſt his men, he returned again, when he had loſt above 1000 of them, and ſo two years ended, ſince the beginning of this warre.

A vilifier of ſignes given from Heaven.

Diodorus Siculus.

Thucydides.

In the third yeare Pericles dyed, and Archidamus with his Lacedemonians came againſt Platæa, and beſieged it, but not being able to take it, he returned, Towards winter, leaving the Bœtians and others to continue the ſiege. In the meane ſeaſon Xenophon ſent by the Athenians with an Armie againſt the Chalcedonians in Thracia confederates of the Lacedemonians, had no good ſucceſſe, but was compelled when he had loſt 400 men and three Captains, to return again to Athens. But the Peloponeſians had as ill ſucceſſe in other places.

In the fourth yeare the Iſle Leſbos revolted from the Athenians to the Lacedemonians, and Platæa was left by 200 of her inhabitants, who brake through the Army of their enemies beſieging them, and eſcaped to Athens. In the fifth yeare they of Mitelene, who had revolted from the Athenians, were brought again into their power, and then many of them were cut off, after that it had been firſt determined that they ſhould all have been ſlain. But the Platæans about the ſame time, which ſtill remained beſieged, deſparing of ſuccour from the Athenians, yeilded their City and themſelves to the mercie of their enemies, and when they were come into their power, they were ſeverally demanded, what good they had ever done to the Lacedemonians, for which they might be ſpared, and being not able to ſay that they had done any, they were all ſlain, and their women made ſlaves. A juſt reward for their treachery againſt the Thebans, ſpoken of before, in killing their men, and then delivering their dead bodies, after that they had agreed upon an exchange.

Note.

In the ſixth yeare of this war, the Peſtilence raged again amongſt the Athenians, and the Lacedemonians comming out to waſte the Atticke fields being of their confederates, were terrified with a great earthquake, and returned under Agis their King, the ſonne of Archidamus. In the ſeventh yeare Agis went out again with his Lacedemonians againſt the Attickes, but hearing within 15 dayes that a place called Pilus of great conſequence, at the further end of Peloponeſus was taken by the Athenians and fortified, they returned to Sparta, and from thence went with a Navy to recover Pilus, but there came a Navy of the Athenians thither alſo, betwixt whom a great battell being fought, the Athenians got the victory. But the Lacedemonians weary of theſe wars, ſued now to the Athenians for peace, and gave 60 ſhips for Hoſtages, whilſt they ſent to Athens about it, yet they prevailed not, and their ſhips were alſo kept from them, under a pretence that they had broken the truce. Then the warre was again renewed, and Cleon the Generall of the Athenians, was ſent to the Iſle Pilus, and after a long battell fought, the Lacedemonians, there being 292, yeilded to the Athenians, and were carryed away to Athens, at which all men wondered, becauſe they thought that they would all rather have dyed in battell then have yeilded. Being brought to Athens they were put in chaines, neither would the Athenians again deliver them, although they were ſought unto, or make any peace with the Lacedemonians.

Xerxes King of Perſia.

In the eighth yeare Xerxes, the ſonne of Artaxerxes ſucceeded his father in the Perſian Kingdom, after he had reigned 40 years. He had many other brothers, but they were all baſtards except himſelfe, and amongſt them, Secundianus or Sogdianus was one, and Ochus another. The one of theſe, viz. Sogdianus, being ambitious of the Kingdom, joyned an Eunuch, being a great man, called Pharmacias unto him, and they together ſlew Xerxes being drunken, when he had reigned but 45 dayes, ſo Cteſias, who alſo telleth of a ſtrange thing touching the chariot horſes appointed to draw the body of Artaxerxes away to the buriall, before the death of his ſonne Xerxes, they would by no means goe forward, being tryed again and again, but now his body being laid alſo into the ſame chariot, they went away with them both together moſt willingly, ſo that they ſtayed as it were, knowing that they had not till then, all their load.

Sogdianus King of Perſia.

Sogdianus being King after the death of Xerxes, began to exerciſe his cruelty firſt againſt Bagerazus an Eunuch, for he pickt a quarrell againſt him, becauſe his fathers corps was no ſooner carryed away, and cauſed him to be overwhelmed with ſtones therefore. But by this meanes, he purchaſed unto himſelfe great hatred, and for the death of his brother Xerxes. Then he ſending for his brother Ochus to come unto him, he delayed ſo to doe untill that he had gotten a great company about him, the Captain of Sogdianus his horſmen alſo falling to him, and the Preſident of Egypt, and the Preſident of Armenia. Then comming to Sogdianus, he feared, but Ochus ſwearing to him, and ſpeaking him faire, he came forth and was taken and caſt into aſhes, and ſo dyed, when he had reigned ſix moneths, and 15 dayes. Of this kinde of death they write thus, a Tower 50 cubits high being filled with aſhes, by an inſtrument in it turning round, he that was adjudged to death, was turned into them, and ſo dyed, and was buried altogether.

2 Machab. 13. 5.

To returne to the Athenians, they went this yeare with 60 ſhips, and tooke the Iſland Citheris, lying neere to the Lacedemonians, whereby the Lacedemonians were brought into great ſtreights, having their enemies now on both ſides of them, for Cithera was on the one ſide, and Pilus before ſpoken of on the other. But after this they attempting ſomwhat againſt Sicilia were fruſtrated by the joyning of the Sicilians together in one, who were before divided, ſo that by this means they were by them put to flight and returned home. The Athenians lifted up with their former victories, thought ſcorne of this repulſe, and puniſht the Captains that returned, ſome by fines and ſome by baniſhment, as if they had played the cowards, or been bribed to depart. But this their pride was pulled down ſoon after, when Braſidas a Captain of the Lacedemonians came into Thracia, and many of the parts thereabouts revolted from the Athenians unto him, becauſe he carryed himſelfe moſt juſtly and equally amongſt them. For hereby they were drawn to a deſire of the friendſhip of the Lacedemonians, thinking them all to be like unto this Braſidas, and on the contrary ſide they feared the Athenians aſpiring to a tyranny. The Bœtians alſo fought by Land againſt the Athenians, and ſlew of them 1000 men, and Hippocrates their Captain, and the Corinthians overcame Demoſthenes of Athens, killing and taking many of his men.

Thucyd.l.4.

Diodor. Siculus.

In this time Ochus having ſlain Sogdianus, reigned over the Perſians 19 years, changing his name to Darius, and ſo was commonly called Darius Nothus.

Ochus, or Darius, King of Perſia.

In the ninth yeare of the Peloponeſian warre a truce was made betwixt the Athenians and Lacedemonians, to continue for one yeare, but even in that time ſome Cities revolted from the Athenians to the Lacedemonians, which occaſioned much trouble.

In the 10 yeare a war began again at Amphipolis, Cleon being ſent as Captain by the Athenians, and Braſidas by the Lacedemonians, in which after a cruell fight, the victory fell to the Lacedemonians, and yet Braſidas dyed of his wounds therein received, and Cleon alſo was ſlain, and of his Athenians 600, of the Lacedemonians but ſeven. Braſidas, for the great eſtimation in which he was had for his vertue, was honourably buried in Amphipolis, and had a monument built for him, by the men of that City, who afterwards proſecuted him as one of the Heroes, with divine honour These two Captains being thus ſlain, both the Athenians and Lacedemonians were deſirous of peace, and concluded a peace for 50 yerres. But becauſe the Corinthians, and ſome others in Greece were not conſenting, they linking themſelves with the Argives, were enemies to them both, neither did the Athenians and Lacedemonians hold their peace long, but fell to variance again, and ſo the war was renewed: and aboot the 17 yeare of the Peloponeſian warre tranſlated into Sicily, where the Athenians having long fought unhappily with the Sicilians and Syracuſians aided by the Lacedemonians, were brought into great miſery, and all their armies were loſt in the ſpace of three years, and their treaſure waſted, yet repairing their forces again about Anno 21 of the ſaid warre they came to fight at Peloponeſus again, Anno 22. and then the victory fell firſt to the Lacedemonians, under the conduct of Hegeſandridas, but Alcibiades (who had long lived out of his Countrey amongſt the Perſians, for ſome diſtaſte taken againſt him) comming at the time of their fight with 20 ſhips, joyned himſelfe with the Athenians, and ſo the victory was turned to them, and they carryed away, according to ſome 30, according to others 10 ſhips of their enemies. Alcibiades having obtained ſo great a victory, went to Tiſſaphernes Governour of a province under Darius, of whom he had thought to have been had in honour for this exploit, but he cauſing him to be apprehended, caſt him into priſon in Sardis. But he ſoone found means to eſcape and came to Seſtus, where the Athenian navy lay, and there hearing that Pharnabazus and Mindarus a Spartan Captain were come together in Cizicum, he encouraged the Athenians to fight with alll courage againſt them, but he taking 40 ſhips went before to draw the enemies from their harbour. They ſeeing no more, immediately came forth with 60 ſhips, and fought with them till that Alcibiades feigning a flight to draw them further, gave a ſigne to the reſt as he had appointed, and then they comming to him, the Lacedemonians were ſoon overcome and put to flight. But Alcibiades following them till they came to land, and there fought a cruell battell, till that Mindarus was ſlain, and he got the City Cizicum and the whole Navy. But he ſtayed there onely 20 dayes, exacting of the Citizens great ſums of money, and ſo without doing them any further harme he departed. The Lacedemonians being much dejected by this great overthrow, were comforted by Pharnabazus, bidding them not be troubled for the loſſe of wood, for the King had abundance, of which they might make new ſhips, and ſo they did, being alſo maintained by the Kings treaſure in this work, and all the ſouldiers new coated, and pay given them for two moneths. But in the 24 yeare Alcibiades, having Thraſylus joyned with him went to Abydum, and there fought with Pharnabazus who came with many horſe-men in ayd of the Lacedemonians, and put them to flight. Anno 25 he went againſt Chalcedon, and then againſt Bizantium, both which was brought under his power. But fighting long againſt Bizantium in vain, hee uſed this police before that he could prevail, he feigned a loſing of the ſiege by withdrawing his ſhips, but when he had landed many of his men upon a place convenient to aſſaile the City on the other ſide, he returned with his ſhips in the night, in which time his land forces aſſaulting the City, all the Souldiers within were drawn thither, and in the mean ſeaſon, they in the ſhips with ſcaling ladders aſcending the walls had an eaſie entrance. But they were ſoon ſtrongly reſiſted, both by the Citizens and Lacedemonians, being there to aid them, till that Alcibiades had made it to be proclaimed, that he would not hurt any of the Bizantians, but the Lacedemonians onely. For hereupon they forbearing to fight more, the Lacedemonians were ſlain, who ſtill ſtood to it, all but 500 that tooke ſanctuary, and were carryed away to Athens. But in the mean ſeaſon, the Lacedemonians recovered the Iſle Pilus again.

Anno 26, Alcibiades being deſirous to return to his Countrey, from which he had been abſent now many years, came to Athens, where he was received with great honour, all the people thronging to ſee him, and then he was in ſuch eſteeme that they thought him fit to have all the government of their Armies committed to him, wherefore he went out again within a ſhort time with a navy of 100 ſhips, and ſo many men as he deſired. But not with that ſucceſſe which he had in times paſt, for he aſſayed to win two Cities, departing from either without prevailing. In the mean ſeaſon Lyſander was made Generall by Sea, for the Lacedemonians, and unto his aid, Cyrus alſo, the ſonne of Darius came with great ſtore of men and money, yet he durſt not goe againſt Alcibiades, lying then at Rhodes, and he at Epheſus, but kept his ſhips, being 70 in that Haven. Then Alcibiades hearing that Thraſybulus was beyond Heleſpont, he ſayled to him, committing his Navy in the mean ſeaſon to Antiochus, with a charge not to goe out to fight againſt Lyſander till his return. But he out of inſolencie with a couple of galleyes went by Lyſander at Epheſus, provoking him to fight. Wherefore he firſt ſent out a few ſhips againſt him, but more comming to his aid, more alſo came in of the Lacedemonians, and ſo Antiochus was overcome and ſlain, and 10 of the Athenian ſhips taken. Wherefore Alcibiades at his return ſeeing what was done, and conceiving how his credit at Athens would be hereby impared, immediately with thoſe ſhips which remained ſayled to Epheſus, but could not provoke Lyſander to fight. The Athenians hearing of their loſſe, began immediately by the inſtigation of ſome of Alcibiades his enemies, to vilifie him as much as before they had honoured him, and ſent to remove him from his Captainſhip, ſetting up 10 other Captains in his ſtead. But he being moved with indignation hereat, went away, and hired Thracians with his own money, and did great acts for the benefit of all Grecia, and tooke great ſpoiles from the Barbarians. But Lyſanders time of Admiralty being expired, the Lacedemonians ſent Calicratidas to govern over the Navy in his ſtead. He although a valiant and good man, and one that prevailed greatly againſt the Athenians at the firſt: for he fought againſt Conon their chiefe ſea Captain, and tooke many of his ſhips, driving him to a great ſtreight, where he was beſieged by ſea and land, and when he having given notice to Athens hereof, 10 ſhips were forthwith ſent to help him, he tooke them alſo, yet at length a great navy of above 100 ſhips being ſent by the Athenians to aid Conon, under eight Captains, he incountring with them periſhed in a cruell fight, wherein 10 Athenian ſhips were loſt, and many more of the Lacedemonians. But thoſe Captains returning to Athens were ill rewarded, for they were puniſht both in their goods and lives, becauſe they had left ſome of their fellows behind them, who were wracked and wounded, and ſome dead, taking no care of their buriall, which amongſt the Athenians was counted an heinous thing. But indeed as they anſwered for themſelves, they were beaten from them by a tempeſt, ſo that they could not. When Calicratidas was dead, Lyſander was made Generall again, Anno, 27. who having provided a mighty Navy, the Athenians alſo did the like, and came forth under Conon to fight with them. Lyſander politikely kept him in the Haven at Epheſus, and would not come forth to fight, although the Athenians by hovering about upon the ſea, daily provoked him. But he commanded ſome of his ſhips, when they went away, to obſerve them, which they did foure dayes, and by them Lyſander learning, that when they were at their own port, not far diſtant from him, they uſed to goe on ſhore to get proviſion, hee commanded that they ſhould obſerve them again when they went on ſhore, and then hold up a ſhield for a ſigne, which they did, and then he comming in with all his power, they in haſte returned to their ſhips, but in ſuch confuſion, and ſo unprepared through want of oares, that they were ſoon vanquiſhed, and all loſt ſaving one that eſcaped to Athens to bring the tydings, and eight with which the Captains remaining, fled into another Countrey for feare of the Athenians for this loſſe, if they ſhould come into their hands. There were 3000 taken, and when they were accuſed to have threatned the Lacedemonians, to cut off the right hands of ſuch as they ſhould take, and to caſt ſome down headlong from an high rock, they were all cut off except one Captain that had been againſt this cruell motion, and firſt of all one Captain that had made it, was put to a moſt cruell death. Lyſander then haſtened to Athens, being now without ſhips and Souldiers, beſieged them, and at length, forced them to yeild, and for ever after to come under the Lacedemonians, the government of Greece being in all places altered by Lyſander, and ſo an end was put to the Peloponeſian warre, and the pride and cruelty of the Athenians, who affected a tyranny over all Greece, was worthily pulled down and puniſhed, and eſpecially their ingratitude to Alcibiades, and tyranicall executing of the Captains before ſpoken of, whom they ought rather for their great valour and victory to have rewarded, ſo pride goeth before a fall, and juſtice ſleepeth not for ever.

Malum conſilium conſultori peſſimum.

The Athenians fall. Pride and cruelty puniſhed.

About this time Darius Nothus departing out of this life, appointed his ſonne Artaxerxes to be King, who was afterwards called Artaxerxes Mnemon, for the memorable acts that he did. Cyrus his other ſonne hoping verily, that by means of his mother, he ſhould have been made King, was greatly diſcontented hereat, and mediated how to kill him: But Artaxerxes having ſome intelligence of it, apprehended him, but at the intreaty of his mother, with many teares, he was ſent away to Lydia, to attend as Governour over the ſea affairs. The reaſon why he expected to have been made King was, becauſe although Artaxerxes were his elder brother, yet hee was borne to Darius before that he was King, Cyrus after.

Artax. Mnemon King of Perſia.

This yeare alſo Alcibiades was ſlain by the Perſians, at the inſtigation of the Lacedemonians their confederates, who thought, that the Athenians would not continue quietly in their obedience as long as he lived. The manner was thus, His houſe in which he was, as a friend amongſt them, was ſet on fire, he ſeeing this, woond the coverlet and blankets of his bed together, and having caſt them upon the flame, leapt down upon them with his drawn ſword in his hand, and ſo eſcaped burning, but when none of the Perſians were ſo hardy as to encounter with him, they yet purſued him, fleeing away with their arrows, till that he was wounded and ſlain. But to return to Cyrus, his brothers levity in diſmiſſing and preferring him, was ſo far from pacifying his minde, that he might reſt content with his eſtate, that he aſpired the more after the Kingdom, and ceaſed not to plot the deſtruction of Artaxerxes to this end. But he covered his intention, and onely Abſalom like, firſt by his courteſie to every man to win their love, and under divers pretences for the good of the Commonwealth) raiſed forces in divers places, And at length having by his large offers, drawn to him an Army of 13000 Græcians, he marched with them and 100000 Barbarians towards his brother. But Artaxerxes hearing of his preparations by Tiſſaphernes a Preſident of his, neare to Cyrus (although put out of his authority for Cyrus his ſake, to inlarge Cyrus his juriſdiction) he gathered an Army together of 1200000 foot, and 6000 horſe, and met with him at a place called Cumaxa beyond Euphrates. Then a bloudy battell begun, but the barbarous of the Kings Army, againſt whom the Græcians fought, were ſoon by them put to flight, yet the middle battell wherein the King was, ſtood un-aſſaulted, which Cyrus perceiving, ſet upon it with 600 choſen horſemen, having with him Clearchus a Græcian Captain. Now this battell conſiſted of 6000 horſemen about the King, and before them 600 foot: but Cyrus having ſoon overcome the footmen, ſet upon the horſemen, and made them alſo to flee. Then he would have had Clearchus to have gone with him immediately againſt the King, but he being very cautelous, leſt he and his men ſhould have been by this means invironed by the Perſians, purſued the horſe-men fleeing, but Cyrus preſſed on towards the King, and when he came in ſight of him, hee cryed out with aloud voice, This is the man, ran immediately at him, and piercing through his breaſtplate, wounded him, but another with a ſpeare, wounded Cyrus in the eye, then the King and Cyrus fighting together, and others comming in to the Kings aid, Cyrus was ſlain, and his head and right hand were preſently cut off.

Diodorus Siculus.

God againſt the treacherous.

In this battell, ſayth Diodorus, were ſlain on Artaxerxes his part, 15000, and on Cyrus his part, 3000, of the Græcians, a few were wounded, but none ſlain. Herein it appeareth that God is againſt the treacherous, to bring them to condigne puniſhment, how far ſo ever they may ſeeme to be from it. For in humane reaſon Artaxerxes was moſt likely to have been ſlain, for that he was firſt pierced by Cyrus his ſpear through his breaſtplate, he was alſo a man of greater courage, and had by his Græcian forces, put his enemies in a great part to flight, and by his own valour, and of a few about him, had broken the greateſt ſtrength of the King, and had not Clearchus the Græcian Captain then forſaken him, the King had been undoubtedly ſlain. But the divine juſtice wrought againſt him, when he was even come to the period of his victory, that all brothers and others might feare to be treacherous againſt their Prince. For no ſuch ever proſpered, but when any of their treacherous projects have taken effect, their Kingdom founded in bloud never continued, as we may ſee in Athaliah and divers Kings of Iſrael, atteining the Diadem by bloudſhed. When theſe Armies came firſt together to fight, Statica the wife of Artaxerxes, brake out into virulent ſpeeches againſt Paryſatis his mother, becauſe ſhe had delivered Cyrus to breed this great diſturbance, but ſhee to be revenged, tooke a courſe forthwith to poyſon her, and effected it in this manner. Shee cauſed a knife to be poiſoned on the one ſide onely, and herewith having divided a bird, whilſt they were at meat together, ſhee eate the one halfe and gave her the other, and ſo ſhe preſently dyed. But the fault being laid upon the Eunuchs who attended her, and Ginges a wanton, that was familiar with her they were put to a tormenting death for it, but ſhe eſcaped. After the battell ended, Paraſites exerciſed horrible cruelty againſt one Cates, who vaunted that he had ſlain Cyrus, for ſhe cauſed him to be tormented 10 dayes together, and then moulten braſſe to be put into his ears till he dyed. Artaxerxes alſo, put Metridates to as cruell a death, becauſe in his drunkenneſſe he vaunted that he ſlew Cyrus, which the King thought to be greatly derogatory to him, and would not have any take that honour from himſelf. For he cauſed him to be put between two boats, in the one being laid along with his face upward, and the other laid upon him, ſo as that all his body was covered, ſaving his head, hands, and feet, which hung out, then meat was given to him, and his eyes pickt, and honey and milke poured upon him, whereby ſwarms of flies were drawn to thoſe parts, lying to the Sun till he dyed. But becauſe they ceaſed not daily to feed him, whereby he was long in dying, the excrements comming from him, wherein he lay, bred worms in the mean ſeaſon, that eat into his body, to the great increaſe of his torment.

A cunning poyſoning.

The Barbarians cruelties.

The Barbarians perfidiouſneſſe.

The Græcians having loſt Cyrus, were in a great ſtreight, being in an enemies Countrey, and having no ſhips to return, and by the way to the ſea in continuall danger of the Barbarians, yet they tooke ther journey homeward, being led by Clearchus. Tiſſaphernes being unwilling that ſuch enemies ſhould eſcape, but not daring to enter battell againſt them, feigned himſelfe their friend, and ſware unto them for their more ſecurity, and ſo with a great Hoſt of men went along with them into the Countrey of Cyrus, and by the way, Clearchus and the other Captains came to have ſuch a confidence in him, that they feared no danger. They being come therefore together to his City, he permitted foure chiefe Captains, and 20 others, with 200 ſouldiers, by way of friendſhip to come in, and brought them to his Court, where the foure chiefe were called in, and the 20 within the gates, where they were forthwith all laid hold upon and ſlain, and then all the ſouldiers that were let into the City were deſtroyed. The other without ſeeing what was done, through many dangers in a long time, got home into their own Countrey.

Tiſſaphernes being now for his good ſervice made the Kings ſonne in Law, had the Lordſhip over which Cyrus had been, added to his own, whereby he growing very great, required the Jonians, being Græcians, dwelling in Aſia, that had been formerly ſubject to Cyrus, to yeild the like obedience to him; but they refuſed, and ſent to the Lacedemonians for helpe againſt him. To this they readily yeilded, being put on by thoſe their Countreymen who had been with Cyrus, and were now through many dangers returned. For they ſayd, that there was nothing amongſt the Perſians, but wealth, and pride, and women, and that they were not able to ſtand againſt the Græcians.

An Army then was ſent out by the Lacedemonians to help the Jonians under Thimbro, but when he ſatisfied not, becauſe he did no great matters, another Commander was ſent in his ſtead, called Dercillidas, and he called home, and grievouſly puniſhed for ſuffering his ſouldiers to prey upon the Jonians. Dercillidas being a man prudent and active, was much feared by Tiſſaphernes, and therefore he made his peace with him, and therefore leaving him he went to fight againſt another Preſident of the Perſian Kings, Pharnabazus, and when he alſo preferred peace with him for eight moneths, he went amongſt the Thracians for that time. And then returning again, he fonnd Tiſſaphernes and Pharnabazus joyned together with a great Armie againſt him, of 20000 foot, and 10000 horſmen, he not having above 7000, yet ſo ſenſible was Tiſſaphernes of the Græcians proweſſe, ſince the laſt battell againſt Artaxerxes, that he came to Propoſitions of peace, and then Dercillidas returned to Lacedemonia, to know the minde of his Citizens touching them and Tiſſaphernes to Artaxerxes, to ſee whether hee would conſent: But now Agis, the King of the Lacedemonians being aged, dyeth, and a contention aroſe between Ageſilaus his brother, and Leotychides, pretending that he was his ſonne; but it was objected, that he was the ſonne of Alcibiades, and not of Agis. And although he brought many witneſſes that Agis acknowledged him for his ſonne upon his death bed, and a Prieſt came warning the Lacedemonians from the Oracle, not to make a lame man their King, and Ageſilaus was lame, yet by the help of Lyſander he was made King, and another interpretation made of the Oracle, viz. that one lame in reſpect of his deſcent from Hercules, of whom the Lacedemonian Kings came, ſhould not be made.

Lyſander then moved the people to deſire that Ageſilaus might goe againſt the Perſians, which was done accordingly, and ſo preparation being made, he with Lyſander and 30 Counſellours, which he tooke along with him, paſſed into Aſia. Tiſſaphernes went to meete him, and there were propoſitions of peace made as before, that the Græcians in Jonia ſhould live according to their own Laws. But about this he agreed firſt to goe and conſult with the King, ſwearing to a truce for a certain time. But he ſware deceitfully, for he went to the King onely to procure great forces, and then came contrary to his oath to fight againſt the Græcians. Ageſilaus nothing diſmayed here at ſayd, that the gods he knew would help him, becauſe although he perceived before the fraud of Tiſſaphernes, yet he kept his oath, but then would be againſt Tiſſaphernes becauſe he was perjured. So a great battell was fought, and although Tiſſaphernes his Armie exceeded in number yet he was overthrown and put to flight, and the Perſian King being certified hereof was hereby much incenſed againſt him, and ſent and beheaded him. Thus the perjured wretch that had not feared to ſweare fraudulently twice, once to Clearchus before, and now to Ageſilaus, was juſtly cut off as hee was well worthy. In this time, it is alſo worth the noting, that Lyſander bearing himſelfe upon the Kings favour, for his good deſerts towards him, grew ſo ambitious, that he drew all ſuch as had ſuits to the King, to ſeeke him by his mediation, ſo that he had far greater companies of men following him, and attending at his houſe, then the King at his Court, yea, Ageſilaus was but as a private perſon in compariſon of him. But the King perceiving it, both denyed all ſuitors that came by him, and granted to ſuch as came without him, and when he was by Lyſander chalchallenged therefore, he anſwered that he dealt ſo with ſuch onely as would be greater then himſelſe, and ſo Lyſander, who would be of greateſt authority, and carryed it as a King, was not admitted to be ſo much as a mediator to a King. Much like doe the Papiſts daily to the Virgin Mary in greater multitudes frequenting her ſhrines then Chriſts, ſo that ſhee ſeemes to be the Queen, but Chriſt a private perſon. But let them looke to be dealt with, as they that came by Lyſander to Ageſilaus, that is, to be diſmiſſed without a grant, when ſuch as come without her mediation ſhall prevail. Tiſſaphernes being cut off, Tithrauſtes who ſucceeded him, ſent to Ageſilaus willing him to depart, ſeeing the author of theſe troubles was now cut off, and the Jonians ſhould now be permitted to live according to their Laws, paying of their accuſtomed Tribute. He anſwered, that hee could doe nothing, untill that he had anſwer about it from Lacedemonia, but in the mean ſeaſon he agreed to depart into Phrygia for 30 Talents and ſo did. Then having authority given him over the Sea forces, as well as over the Land, he regarded not to give anſwer to Tithrauſtes, but added unto his Land forces 120 ſhips, over which he ſet his wives brother. But Tithrauſtes being moved at this, ſent Timocrates a Rhodian with 50 Talents of gold to Thebes, Corinth, and other places in Greece, hereby to provoke the Governours there to fall from the Lacedemonians, which they did accordingly, and the Athenians, though not waged, joyned with them alſo, being in hope by this means to erect their State again, and thus great troubles begun again in Greece. But Ageſilaus, in the meane ſeaſon, prevailed greatly in Phrygia and Paphlagonia, and ſo comming againſt the Countrey of Pharnabazus, the Perſian tooke that alſo, but he ſoon came to an agreement with him, and departed out of his Countrey again, purpoſing to go on and ſubdue other Countreys of the Perſians, but the Lacedemonians being in this time indangered by the Athenians, Thebans, Argives, and Corinthians, to whom alſo the Spartans joyned themſelves under their Captain Conon, were inforced to ſend for Ageſilaus to his great griefe to return home, to which he immediatly prepared, leaving 4000 in Gariſons in the towns which he had taken. But before he could come to Lacedemonia, a cruell battell was fought, an whole day together, betwixt the Lacedemonians and thoſe that revolted from them, the victory falling to the Lacedemonians, there being ſlain of their enemies 2800, of them 1100.

The Sun horned as the Moon.

The news hereof being brought to Ageſilaus, and ſoon after that Conon with the help of Pharnabazus, had gotten a great victory over the Lacedemonians by Sea, he wiſely diſſembled it, and led on his Army towards his Countrey, the Sun appearing to him in the way like unto the two horned moon. Then comming to Bœtia, they of that Countrey, and the Lacedemonians with many more joyned unto him, and ſo he went and fought a bloudy battell againſt the Thebans, in which he received many wounds, but put them to flight. Then he dedicated to God the tithe of the ſpoyles which he had taken at Delos, not leſſe worth then 100 talents, and ſo was carryed home by water. But the Lacedemonians went on victoriouſly by land, from place to place, and Pharnabazus with Conon prevailed every where almoſt by ſea. Yet at length Teleutias being made Captain by ſea, knit the hearts of his ſouldiers ſo unto him by his offering to endure any hardſhip with them, that he thought now he might goe upon any deſperate attempt. And therefore having but 12 ſhips, he adventured upon the great Navy of the Athenians upon the ſodain, lying at the haven Periæum, the ſouldiers being for the moſt part gone aſhore for their pleaſure, and fearing nothing leſſe, wherefore he tooke their ſhips with eaſe, and having ſent them away to Ægina an Iſland neere, he went on and tooke many more as he met with them, ſome fiſhers, and ſome Merchants laden with wares, and by this means in a ſhort time, he grew ſo ſtrong, that he did the Athenians much miſchiefe. It was not long therefore after this, before that a peace was made again betwixt the Lacedemonians, Athenians, and their aſſociates, and with the Perſians alſo, becauſe that Artaxerxes had other wars to intend, ſo that he thought it the beſt way to be at peace with all the Græcians. But the peace amongſt the Græcians laſted not long, for wars again ſoon followed in divers places, untill that the Lacedemonians grew too mighty for them all. But yet neither did they continue long in that caſe, but the Thebans with their Confederates prevailed mightily againſt them, and ſlew many of them under their Captain Epaminondas, neither would a peace be made again in Greece as long as Artaxerxes lived, although the Athenians joyning with the Lacedemonians greatly ſought it. But the Thebans by Embaſſadours to the King, prevailing for a Decree, that the Athenians ſhould not help the Lacedemonians, and that divers other States ſhould ſeparate from them, otherwiſe he by his unreſiſtible forces would make war upon them, thought to attain to the Empire of all Græcia: but they were deceived, thoſe States not being moved by the threats of the King to leave the Lacedemonians, and not long after Artaxerxes Mnemon dyed, leaving his Kingdom to his ſonne Ochus, who called himſelfe Artaxerxes Ochus; when he had reigned according to ſome, 40 years, to ſome 36, and according to ſome, but 21, whereof 11 with his father Darius Nothus, ſuch diverſity is there amongſt Hiſtorians, about the time of this King. But going by the High-prieſts and Dukes of the Jews, according to Funccius, he dyed in the 16 yeare of Joannes his High-prieſthood, and Artaxerxes Ochus ſucceeded him, about which time, the ſaid Joannes ſlew his brother in the Temple, as hath been before declared. Artaxerxes Mnemon is reported to have been a peaceable King, but greatly taken with the love of over many women, for he had 360 concubines, and by them 115 ſonnes, yea he tooke his own daughter Atoſſa and Ameſtris his daughter taken from Tribazus, to whom he had formerly given her in marriage. Ochus having attained the Kingdom, as Juſtinus ſayth, by treacherouſly making away two brothers, that were in his fathers favour before him, leſt any of his brothers ſurviving ſhould trouble his reigne, ſlew them all, ſparing no age or ſex, and ſo made war againſt the Caduceans.

Heathen Marriages.

Touching the Græcian affairs, Epaminondas with his Thebans, when they could draw none on the Lacedemonians or Athenians ſide unto them, deſperately ſet upon Sparta, but Archidamus comming to the reſcue of the City, they were forced by a few to retire, although they were many. Then his time being neare, that he muſt leave his Captainſhip, leſt his glory ſhould be ecclipſed, which he had formerly gotten, he reſolved to fight againſt Mantinea, where the greateſt forces of his enemies were, and ſo, if he prevailed to doe away the diſhonour which he had formerly gotten by fighting without ſucceſſe, or elſe in fighting valiantly to dye. Wherefore he with all his forces drew neare to that City, and began to intrench his Army, which the enemies ſeeing, ſuppoſed that he would not yet fight againſt the City, but after the finiſhing of his trench, and therefore letting their Armes and horſes be here and there, they walked careleſly about. Epaminondas therefore when he ſaw it fall out according to his expectation, ſodainly drew out his Forces, went againſt them and ſlew many, whilſt they were getting their Armes and horſes, but at length when he had put them to flight, in purſuing them he was mortally wounded, and being carryed to his Tent, when the weapon was drawn out of him, dyed, rejoycing for the victory, although he in getting it loſt his life; and his father Xenophon being nothing daunted, when news was brought him of his death, ſayd, Novi me eum genuiſſe mortalem.

A ſtratagem of Epaminondas.

After this great battell, the Greeks in all parts grew weary of warre, and inclined to termes of peace, and agreeed to an univerſall peace, all but Lacedemonia, by reaſon of the Meſſenians, whom they would not have left free, ſeeing they had ſubdued and held them under now theſe 20 years. And by this means wars ſoon began again. At this time alſo there were great ſtirs in Perſia, for many of his Princes neare the ſea, revolted from him, and Taches the King of Ægypt revolted alſo, and asking help of the Lacedemonians, they ſent unto his ayd Ageſilaus their King with 1000 men compleatly armed, and when he came. Taches added to his number, 10000 more, and ſet forth his ſonne Nectanabus with 80000, which Armies, together with the Princes in Aſia that revolted, and their forces, would greatly have indangered the Kingdom of Perſia, but that they were ſoone divided amongſt themſelves, whereby all their preparations were fruſtrated. For Orontes to whoſe leading all the other Princes committed their forces, to regain the Kings favour, apprehended and ſent many of them bound to the King, and Reomithres who was ſet over the Navy, did the like. And when the King of Egypt was gone forth to war, being in Phœnicia, he heard that the man whom he had made Viceroy in his abſence, uſurped the Kingdom, and ſent to his ſonne Nactanabus to come back with his Forces to take his fathers Kingdom, which he immediately did, and then Taches fled to Artaxerxes, and craved pardon for his fault, which was both granted, and he made Generall of all the Forces to goe and fight againſt his ſonne. He came therefore to Ageſilaus, and ſo together they marched with their Armies towards his ſonne. But he comming forth with 100000 againſt him, Taches durſt not fight but withdrew himſelfe to a City, which yet when Nactanabus beſieged, Ageſilaus going forth againſt him, put him to flight, and reſtored Taches to his Kingdom again, but becauſe he was not made Generalll of all his Forces, he being ſought unto by Nactanabus, went to him, and removiug Taches again, made him King, being therefore rewarded with 230 Talents of ſilver, but in his return homeward he dyed, when he had reigned 41 years.

Euſeb. Chron.

Iuſtine.

And now we are come to the fourth yeare of Artaxerxes Ochus, wherein Philip the ſonne of Amyntas began to reigne over Macedonia, it will be neceſſary, becauſe Alexander the Great came of him, who ſubdued the Perſian Monarchy, and erected the Græcian, to looke back to the beginning of this Kingdom, and to ſhew the ſtate thereof in the dayes of this Philip. Caranus of the ſtock of Heraclidas was the firſt that united divers peoples into one, calling the whole Region Macedonia, being as, ſome ſay, directed thither by the Oracle, with many Græcians, and he reigned 28 years, him Cœnus ſucceeding reigned 12, then Turymas 38, then Perdicas 51, Argeus 38, Philip 30, then Eropus who came to the Kingdom being a childe, but there being war then between the Illyrians and Macedonians, in which the Macedonians were put to the worſt, they went again into the field carrying their King with them in his cradle, and ſo fighting the more couragiouſly, gave the Illyrians a great overthrow. Then, as Juſtinus ſayth, reigned Amyntas, but Euſebius putteth nine more before him, and this Amyntas was father to Philip. How weake the Kingdom of Macedonia was in his time and before, appeareth in that it was of no fame, but whilſt the wars were in Greece, they always ſought to joyne with the ſtrongeſt ſide, and when Amyntas was King, by the Illyrians comming againſt him, he was driven out of his Kingdom, and was without hope of recovering it again, till that he was by the Theſſalians and Spartans reſtored to it again, yet ſtill he was a tributary to the Illyrians, reigning firſt and laſt 18 years, and for his fideſity to the Illyrians, he gave them his youngeſt ſonne Philip for a pledge. Then he dying left foure ſonnes, Alexander, Alorites, Perdicas, and Philip, who being given for a pledge, was brought up at Thebes in good literature. Alexander ſucceeding in the Kingdom, was ſlain treacherouſly by Alorites, when he had reigned one yeare, and Alorites likewiſe by Perdicas, when he had reigned foure; then Perdicas having reigned ſix years, attempting to ſhake-off the Illyrian yoke, was ſlain in a cruell battell, and with him 4000 Macedonians. The Kingdom being by this means without a King Philip, by a wonderfull providence, eſcaping from Sparta, came and tooke the Kingdom upon him. yet at the firſt rather acting the part of a tutour to the ſonne of Perdicas a childe then of a King, till that neceſſity inforcing it, he being choſen and deſired by the people, reigned in Macedonia. But then he was in a very uncertain and dangerous eſtate by reaſon of other competitours, as Pauſanias a kinſman, who ſought the Kingdom by the help of the King of Thracia, and Argeus by help of the Athenians, with theſe therefore he agreed by gifts and fair promiſes in part, namely with the Pæonians, abettours of the ſaid Argeus, and when Argeus came, notwithſtanding with the Atheniaus to try the Macedonians whether they would revolt unto him, they refuſing, he retired, and being purſued by Philip, many of his men were ſlain. Philip then ſent to Athens, and becauſe he yeilded up Amphipolis unto them, of which they were greatly deſirous, he eaſily prevailed with them not to moleſt him any more. And as touching Pauſanias, he by ſending gifts to the King of Thracia, ſtayed him from comming againſt him. He was alſo a man apt to win good will, becauſe he was both of an excellent wit, and well ſpoken. Having therefore by theſe his gifts and ſpeeches made unto his Macedonians to incourage them, put them in good comfort and expectation of greater matters to be done by him for the good of that Kingdom, and by the propheſie which then went of the ſonnes of Amyntas, that one of them ſhould greatly inlarge that Kingdom, he firſt made war upon the Pæonians, taking the opportunity of their Kings death, becauſe they had formerly waſted the fields of the Macedonians, and ſubdued them, then he went againſt the Illyrians, the old enemies of his Kingdom, ſending firſt Embaſſadours to Bardiles their King requiring him to reſtore thoſe Cities, which had been formerly taken by the Illyrians from the Macedonians, which when he refuſed to doe, they came together to battell, Philip bringing with him an Army of 10000 foot, and 600 horſe. They fought valiantly on both ſides, but in the end Philip got the victory, and of the Illyrians there were ſlain 7000, wherefore the Illyrians were glad to ſue for peace, and when they had left all the Macedonian Towns, as was required, it was granted. After this he fought againſt Amphipolis and wan it, becauſe ſince his leaving of it, they being under the protection of the Athenians had ſhewed great enmity againſt him. Then he ſubdued Pydnah to the Olynthians, that he might enjoy their friendſhip, and Potidea alſo. After that he tooke Crenidas, which he called after his name Philippi. There he finding mines of gold by building works, brought them to be worth to him above, 1000 Talents per annum, and hereby being greatly inriched, he increaſed his Army. Then an opportunity offered it ſelfe, to draw him with his forces into Theſſalia, for Alexander Pheraus, the Tyrant being ſlain by his wife and brethren, and his ſaid brethren exerciſing the like tyranny, the Nobles of the Land called in Philip thither to ayd them againſt theſe tyrants, wherefore he went and ſubdued them, and by this means had the Theſſalian horſmen, which were the moſt excellent of all others, to aſſiſt him in his wars always after, both he and his ſonne Alexander, when he was dead. And now Philip tooke to wife Olympias, the daughter of Neoptolemus King of the Moloſſians, by whom he had his ſonne Alexander.
